I, Cody B. Rines, urge the FCC to leave the restrictions that protect net neutrality in place. Even if there is "no evidence to suggest" that service providers would take advantage of consumers, DO NOT allow them the opportunity. I beg you Folks of the FCC to do the thing that so many government agencies refuse to do: Serve the people. Keep net neutrality regulations in place and please stop profit driven political agendas from squeezing what little money the American people have from their pockets. Also, if you haven't had a chance to look around, people love their internet and are sick of corporate greed; they will lose what patience they have left if that is threatened in any way to put money in some executive's pocket.
