Dear Sirs

Brian Higgins and I also agree that the blackout rules of the National Football League are unfair to a community like Buffalo and unfair especially to older people who cannot attend games due to health and on low incomes. Buffalo is a disaster area due to loss of industry and income. If the average attendance was 67,000 people last year why not make a figure of three quarters of seating are a rule for attendance. If you lose the people who are unable to go to the football games you are hurting the Football industry and eventually interest in the game.

Sincerely Yours
Marcel De Monte
