Dear Chairman Tom Wheeler,

I believe it is time for internet service providers to be classified as common carriers. The high infrastructure costs for starting an ISP means that current providers have very little competition and have a natural monopoly on the market. I believe the best course of action to protect consumers and internet businesses is to treat ISPs the same way we regulate other natural monopolies like power companies and other utilities.

E-Commerce is quickly becoming the number one way companies do business and we cannot allow private monopolies to have complete control over such an important method of communication.

Please consider reclassifying broadband providers as Title II common carriers.

Thank You,
Jaime Moore
