Ms. Marlene H. Dortch, Secretary
Federal Communications Commission
445 Twelfth Street, SW
Washington, DC 20554

Via Electronic Filing

Re: GN Docket No. 14-28, Protecting and Promoting the Open Internet
GN Docket No. 10-127, Framework for Broadband Internet Service

Dear Ms. Dortch,

Enclosed please find the signatures and comments of thousands of Free Press activists urging the Federal Communications Commission to protect real Net Neutrality.

Since the FCC's proposed rules were announced we have seen a groundswell of public opposition to that proposal. We call on the FCC to abandon any unworkable rules based on compromised legal theories, and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers.

_____/s/_____
Craig Aaron
President and CEO
Free Press

Its everything.
—Candace Clement, Hadley, MA

Freedom
—Samuel Auger, Chicago, IL

Net Neutrality is being enacted throughout Europe. Shouldn't be hard to do the same here.
—Erik & Vicki Thauvin, Everett, WA

There's enough madness in the world as it is and this FCC shenanigans is just insane!
—William Busby, Los Angeles, CA

Freedom of Speech and Ideas
—Daniel McCoy, Woodland Hills, CA

WE ALL NEED EQUALITY AND FREEDOM TO LET OUR VOICES BE HEARD AND TO RESPECT US AS A CIVILIZATION!
—Theresa Manfreda, San Diego, CA

WE NEED TO DEFEND NET NEUTRALITY BECAUSE THE INTERNET IS ALL WE HAVE TO EXPAND OUR CONSCIOUSNESS!!
—Jonathan Apone, San Diego, CA

Because these companies should be classified as common carriers, one or two companies should not be able to have a monopoly on this, internet is a needed necessity like a telephone now, and many people still cant afford it.
—Dane Ferrell, Olympia, WA

A lack of "net neutrality" will kill innovation, and stop the internet from growing to become the leading job producer that it is.
—Lance Lavandowska, Circle Pines, MN

Net Neutrality helps the internet foster creativity, innovation, and the human spirit. Getting rid of it would be a detriment to all of us.
—Scott Read, Ft Mitchell, KY

I am tired of big business controlling this government while no one ever looks after the interests of the common people.
—Michael McHugh, Pinellas Park, FL

FREE SPEACH.
—Mark Newgarden, Brooklyn, NY

There should only be one internet, wholly available and open to all comers, with no preference given to any entity, public or private. Any act eroding that principle is a step in the wrong direction.
—Scott Bram, Denver, CO

I've been following this issue for some time now. I've made the majority of my adult living wages from contract web and software development. The low barrier to entry makes the web a perfect place to reach a huge audience with your next idea. It's a true "School of Athens" moment wherein all classes of people and all walks of business are judged equally. Their product is information, and removing net neutrality puts product delivery into the hands of an elite few. I disagree wholeheartedly with this approach.
—Joshua David VanderHook, Saint Paul, MN

Everyone should be treated equally on the net, whether you're a corporate giant or just an individual using the Internet at a public library.
—Steven Vaughan, Beaverton, OR

Because it prevents me from being controlled by corporate media. We deserve freedom from even that sort of repression.
—Michael Toth, Fort Pierce, FL

The internet is not a measure of social class or wealth. It is a medium that allows for communication between interested parties. Do not ruin a tool that connects the entire world. Do not censor posts for your own benefit. You are not moving in the right direction. Think about what you are doing and how it will impact our growing economy.
—Martin Baclija, Indio, CA

It is important to preserve the freedoms we have and stop special interests like this. When we can't even read this new tiered system it should tell everyone something is wrong. When something is being hidden away like this it is not hard to understand why. They obviously hope to pass this without an uproar and once it is done it will not be undone. The FCC is supposed to be there to protect us not side with cooperations.
—Stacey Wallace, MANCHESTER, NH

I do business online and use the internet for work purposes everyday.
—Kenneth Allen, Duluth, MN

this is THE issue of the our day!
—Brett Schlosser, Minneapolis, MN

To Protect Internet users from the very real possibility of corporate abuse.
—Chris Capuozzo, Spring Valley, NY

free society, free markets demand net neutrality
—Kyle Schmierer, Phoenix, AZ

The availability of early recordings on the Internet is essential, and net neutrality is the only way to retain that availability.
—Mr. Tom Samuels, Buffalo, NY

Somewhere in this country and in this world we need an even playing field. The internet is the closest thing we have.
—Sebern Fisher, Northampton, MA

why not? Doesn't seem like a fair thing to me, and coporations don't need more money.
—Allison, Charlotte, NC

Because the internet should not be control by $. It will kill start up companies and American dreams.
—Alberto Rodriguez, MIAMI, FL

The FCC has proved that it follows the will of the big business. The internet is now the only place that independent news can be found. If the FCC gains control then I know that the choices for discriminating readers like myself with be shortened and that the ISPs will be able to charge more for less service and give preferential treatment to the big media moguls.
—Linda Waali, Newport, WA

It's intertwined with people's businesses, school, and entertainment, so it is too intertwined with the function of society to not have the protection of net neutrality.
—Robert Lamb, Ozark, MO

Freedom for information
—Stacey Ray, Richmond, TX

Freedom for information
—Al Stepp, Atlanta, IN

I don't want the government messing the internet and I don't big corporations throttling what I have access to simply because I don't like their version of the same service!!
—Chris Hunter, Shreveport, LA

If this goes through there will be no fairness and no end. It will take on a life of its own and be extremely unfair to people. The FCC is supposed to protect the people not the big corps.
—Stacey Wallace, Manchester, NH

Because this country was founded on freedom of choice. Because capitalism is about choice. The internet is for everyone, like a road and like a sidewalk. We should not let ISP's prefer certain content over another, it is a plan ripe with potential for corruption.
—Barclay G Iversen, Redwood City, CA

It's a free country! Why not give all a fair chance?
—Marilyn Kohring, Dayton, OH

Porn. Netflix. Kittens.
—Tyler Freday, La Jolla, CA

Control of the internet belongs to NO ONE. Controlling the Internet would be like controlling the air we breath, not that we need the Internet to survive, but it is just as preposterous to think that any one person or group of people should have THAT form of power. It is far beyond laughable... it is utterly repugnant and evil to grant or to hold that sort of power. YOU HAVE NO AUTHORITY HERE.
—Matt Logan, Logan, UT

We paid to build it through our tax dollars. Deciding who gets to be heard and seen as a pay to play basis is Wrong.
—Keith Saarloos, Los Olivos, CA

When one has control over who get's the benefit, is the monopoly justified by monetary advantage?
—Laura Shiraishi, Hawthorne, CA

Freedom
—Derric Haynie, San Diego, CA

Equal access! Internet and information is a human right!
—Jordan Gracia, Brea, CA

It's important to keep all areas of the internet equally accessible to foster the same level of innovation that gotten it where it is today.
—Sam Selfridge, Santa Barbara, CA

We have a right to equally connect and communicate via the internet!
—Amber, Denver, CO

Keep the internet equal for everyone!
—Wendy Navarrete, Huntington Beach, CA

Because, I am into freedom of choice and I can decide for myself what I'd like to research, view or participate in without interference. Mostly, however, I already PAY and have been doing so since 1992 and, today, I have NO issues with how my internet is working... It does just fine as it is. Any change is only for power/control and profit, nothing more.
—Dave Jaeger, Frisco, TX

It's my information reference. And it's my right to look at what I want and send what I want to whom I want. That's my human right!
—Shane Poliquin, Tucson, AZ

Freedom to interact with anyone, anytime, on whatever subject, without paying a premium price. The internet belongs to everyone and should not be taken over by corporations.
—Paul Kussmann, N. Wataerboro, ME

There have been a number of "memes" and other internet fads going around recently that take popular shows, movies and songs, and arbitrarily censor words and phrases within them. This has been done humorously, but it brings up a very good point. It only takes a slight variation on a subject to completely change its intent and meaning. By being able to hide and block what information they will, companies such as AT&T and Comcast would be given a disproportionate control over people. On the other side of the coin, being able to promote whatever content they feel should be watched/searched/read goes against fair and balanced legislation that protects people from Corporate monopoly.
—Katherine Howe-Moore, Novi, MI

We can not have a monopoly in communication resources. Rates will increase and corporations will be in control of all information we receive and share. This would be criminal!
—Brenda Cromwell, Dover, FL

Net Neutrality allows artists, entrepreneurs and small businesses to compete on a level playing field with larger enterprises. The larger enterprises have, or have bought, enough advantages already without taking an Internet backbone that was constructed by the taxpayers, thank you.
—Hooper "Lex" Alexander IV, Greensboro, NC

Why wouldn't it be! This about freedom!
—Ms. Sheryl Whitfield, Vail, AZ

Because one should NEVER attempt to 'fix' what Isn't "broken".
—Tony Vazquez, Albany, NY

it's important to me because it's one of the only things I can do freely that helps me feel calm. if we lose that, I might as well die.
—Christopher Hamm, Lake Waccamaw, NC

It's in perfect working order. Since 1993 I've paid and been happy with service. Don't change it for profiteers.
—Dave Jecker, Frisco, TX

Internet should not be in the contril of big business
—Allen Winiski, Roswell, GA

Internet needs to be a free lane without any discrimination on who uses it or how it is used. This is like taking away the freedom to not use gas
—Bharat Nandakumar, Chicago, IL

Take the influence of money from the free speech
—Carol Abramovitz, Key West, FL

Because I don't want to be held hostage for internet service by huge internet providers.
—John Mann, Galveston, TX

Equal access to the internet is vital to individual freedom.
—Gary Lee, Palm Springs, CA

I don't want isp's to govern the content I can see our use on the web.
—Chris Lawrence, San Jose, CA

the internet should be kept equal and free. Companies who already have money shouldn't be able to get more money from the internet
—Kim-Quang Vo, Westminster, CA

This is greed motivated. The internet works just fine and companies make well enough profit already. The hard earned money we people spend to have internet access is already going up. Do the right thing FOR THE PEOPLE, not corporations.
—Charlotte Hunt, Louisville, KY

My son is pursuing computer science, another botched attempt by the beauracracy to "fix" something is going to destroy the future innovators. Hasn't the government caused enough problems? Do you have to get your hands on everything that is doing fine without your "help".
—Curtis Valero, Steubenville, OH

Equal internet speeds and access should not be dependent on how much money you have.
—Andrew Smith, Fayetteville, AR

If this passes, I'm moving.
—Maya Mowrey, Indian Head, MD

The access and cost of the internet should be equal to anyone and everyone.
—Doug Storm, Saint Louis, MO

As an expiring entrepreneur who currently is seeking to follow the steps of many successful online businesses, how can my hard work and those of many others come to reality if this bill is passed? Not only will you grant more power to big corporations, but you will give the green light to widespread discrimination online.
—Adalberto Contreras, New York, NY

An open Internet is an essential for our country to remain a leader in technological innovation.
—Alexander Kienle, Miami Beach, FL

It keeps powerful companies from making the rules over yet another part of our society.
—Tedouesz, Buffalo, NY

The only way to keep a fair and open internet to to have a level playing field for all parties. Large companies have the potential to force smaller competitors out of the market place because they can afford to pay more for the prioritized internet.
—Amesh Shah, Fairport, NY

Because the internet is the most open and democratic communication network in history, and I don't want corporations to undermine that for the sake of profit.
—Jordan Deam, Seattle, WA

The internet is a telecommunications service that is now vital to the welfare and prosperity of individuals and businesses, and it must remain an undiscriminating medium for education, recreation, artistic expression, business, etc.
—Donald, Seneca Falls, NY

I'm writing to urge the FCC to scrap its plan to allow Internet service providers to charge for preferential treatment. These rules would destroy Net Neutrality. I urge the commission to throw them out and instead reclassify broadband as a telecommunications service. This is the only way to restore real Net Neutrality.
—Kurt Ehnle, Louisville, KY

A neutral internet is a fair and level ground for all and must be restored. This country was founded on the little-guy-start up businesses who found a way to make it and grow and flourish, and in some cases are now big corporations. They would not be what they are without a fair and level field to start at. New technology will be stifled, growth and advancement will be ground to a halt. Restore a neutral internet immediately and do not allow the implementation of a "fast lane" for which only the wealthy and privileged will have access to.
—, Beverly Hills, CA

If it isn't broken, don't fix it. Communications companies already charge more than is fair, and it is my feeling that the new guidelines by the FCC would promote unfair discrimination. These companies could easily expose loopholes and create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford it. They don't need any more power than they already have. With SOPA and PIPA, the user base of the internet vocally spoke out, but it is my fear that the same user base is less aware of this set of guidelines. I'm sure that with more awareness, they would have the same feelings toward these proposed changes as they had toward SOPA and PIPA. I propose another blackout, another vocal and combined effort to show that the people still have a voice, and that the government cannot do whatever it pleases.
—Alex Pomorski, Whitmore Lake, MI

As the Internet is the most common, available and complete source of timely information including life safety alerts; Internet service providers need to be classified as common carriers.
—Brian Menges, Denver, CO

My cable/internet bill is the second largest bill I have for utilities. I should not be discriminated against because I am lower income.
—Nadine Kelley, Acworth, GA

Net Neutrality is important to be because free speech, innovation, education, economic growth, and small business are important to me and they are just some of the things that will be harmed by this change.
—Shawn Betz, Blackwood, NJ

I currently pay a premium for a faster "more data" internet connection. In that contract I am purchasing a set amount of data delivered at a set speed. My cable company already uses "speed Boost" which is just a way to cheat my current speed. It boosts my speed at the initial connection to make it appear as fast as advertised, but it slows down quickly thereafter. This is the current situation that I am in. The proposed plan would allow the cable companies to charge the companies I visit via the internet to speed up the connection I already pay for. This is double charging and effectively I am now paying for nothing if the other companies are paying for the speed. Fix the current system where I am paying for a connection that is heavily muted before benefiting those that are gaming the system already (the cable companies).
—Paul Wagner, Tucson, AZ

Affordability and accessibility of information for the masses!!
—Matt Boyle, Swarthmore, PA

Net Neutrality is democratic. The proposed rules only benefit those with wealth. So much about America violates our principles of equality and equal opportunity, please don't add access to the internet to the list of that which only the elite can truly benefit from!
—Sharon Shirley, Branford, CT

Internet is a free place where people can express opinion, regardless of what background he/she may be from. Also, the internet is where I get my information to do my research and understand scientific technique and experiments. I don't understand why does AT&T, Comcast, and Verizon need to make two lanes for internet. If anything, it will segregate the internet and gibe the fast lane to those who are able to afford high quality internet. I mean, who are they to decide how the internet should be divided.
—Tuong Ngu, Bridgeport, CT

Killing net neutrality DOES NOT foster innovation as is so often cited. Allowing ISP's to place "QOS" (quality of service) rules on internet traffic, then charge for higher priority queues is NOT going to foster innovation. This will only allow those with deep pockets to participate and shut everyone else out. Want to launch an internet startup? Right now, you can get a VPS for a few dollars a month, and code up a site. Traffic to/from your site goes just as fast as traffic to/from Google or Netflix. Killing net neutrality would change that. In that world, if you wanted to launch an internet startup, you'd have to develop ENTIRELY at home (aka no cloud) and then get ventrue capital to be able to afford the premium hosting (AWS, Rackspace, Google) it would require to be able to use your site functionally. And that's just from the developer standpoint. There are so many mom-and-pop websites that just share information, they don't sell anything. They host their website AT THEIR HOUSE sometimes. Niche topics such as audio production, or particle physics papers by students. Those are the areas that would be hurt the most. The USA ranks 12th in terms us broadband speed to citizens. in fact The FCC reported that only 0.3% of DSL connections in America provide speeds of 25 Mbps or higher. We are supposed to be a country that fosters innovation. Not a country that takes money from big corporations, and lets them set the policy for the nation. Remember, if the US shuts down net neutrality, then you CAN BET MONEY that the innovation will come from countries where the network is still open and neutral. Keep the internet as a service. Stop allowing companies like Comcast to dictate what consumers want. We want information, and we want equal access to ALL OF IT. Do the right thing. Keep an open internet.
—Terrac Skiens, Sunnyvale, CA

It is important to me and every other everyday user on the internet, start-up businesses trying to get their word out and advertisers because the "major companies" shouldn't get special treatment just because of their size. While everyday users are left to rot and we can't pay to get on this "fast lane". I hope for the internets sake you don't do away with net neutrality.
—Zachary Corral, San Bruno, CA

There is only ONE internet, not a fast one, or a slow one....ONE for all.
—Rachel Radcliffe, Alameda, CA

I'm a web developer.
—Louie Pisani, Philadelphia, PA

These rules are unfair and unnecessary. Stop trying to fix things that are not broken.
—Sheena, Abingdon, VA

I believe Internet is a common good and should be available as such. I believe all content online should be available equally to everyone and no content should be given priority over other content.
—Anastasia Rzhevskaya, Henrietta, NY

As a military family, the internet makes it possible for me to communicate with family members around the world, and continue my education online after being relocated away from the university I attend.
—Ms. Erin Kimsey, Honolulu, HI

Information should be freely accessible to all and not gated by corporate interests.
—Nathan Germick, Berkeley, CA

Channels for the transmission of information are a public utility and need to be regulated as such.
—Grace Teng, New York, NY

Because all business should have a fair chance on the Internet; because service providers already control our access far too much.
—Mohammed Shariff, Poughkeepsie, NY

I don't want to have to explain to my children that, once upon a time, every person on the planet could access any part of the internet for the price of a broadband fee. And instead of backing up all this information, we posted Instagram photos while it was slowly taken away from us.
—David Regan, ,

Because we live in America which is a free state and are not under control of greedy corporations
—Nabeel Farooq, Orange Park, FL

Freedom of speech. Freedom of choice in access to the Internet. Allowing certain corporations exclusive high speed bandwidth will be a travesty to the openness of the Net. Plese stop this Act now.
—Robert Wolfe, Bonaire, GA

The internet is a resource for the poor and rich alike. It allows us to spread our ideas; it enriches our right of speech. Any payment that I would have to make in excess would limit my freedoms and limit my rights. With extra payments, not all could afford to use the internet. You would be making the internet a luxury and America is not just for the rich.
—Andrea, Austin, TX

I don't want to see innovation stifled, because that's what makes the U.S. special.
—Amber Pham, Portland, OR

I need the internet to stay open so the world can evolve with love,truth,and understanding.It should accessible and fast for people even if they cannot pay.Corporations and their money are not more important the mankind and its understanding of how we can all learn and live together.
—Jeremy Lee, Los Angeles, CA

This is extremely important to me as a small business owner. There should be equal footing for all not just a fast pass for the wealthy corporations.
—Romana Sinegal, San Ramon, CA

Net Neutrality is incredibly important to EVERYONE. We are already put upon by cable and internet companies, and as an American, a student, and a person who craves knowledge this FCC proposal sets a dangerous precedent. Knowledge and ways to seek it have to be easily and cheaply accessible to all, not just those with enough money to access it.
—Alex V, Modesto, CA

Without net neutrality local and small businesses will suffer because we don't have the weight of a large company to throw around to get our way or what we need. Potentially you will worsen or possibly in the long run destroy the lives of many people just so certain companies can make even more money by getting the fast lane. The internet is the only place where people of different classes are treated as close to equal as they can be, and you will take that away for the greed of companies and yourself.
—Eleanor Wheaton, Sherman, TX

Because free speech is a basic right of all americans, and by throttling up bandwidth to the highest bidder, we would be losing yet another part of what makes this country the greatest on earth, all for a little bit of money. Money that isn't even ours to begin with!
—Matthew L Sherwood, Portland, OR

Because the growth of an open and fair internet helps foster innovation and creativity.
—Kyle, Medford, MA

I'm tired of greedy corporations wanting more and more money.
—Tara Helsel, Chillicothe, OH

The ability to discriminate for speed and quality of service among content providers on the basis on independently negotiated deals is fundamentally unfair to end consumers. Why does EVERYTHING have to be for sale! There has to be a way for the FCC to regulate the the ISPs as common carriers.
—Marie Bareille, New York, NY

If politicians get equal time for advertising, whose to say anybody else does not have the right to that time. If one organization decides to give their favored politician better rates to use the internet - to promote their compaigne, what's to stop them? Save you own neck even if you don't see the value in fairness to others.
—Lori Golden, Redwood City, CA

I would be speaking for many when I say that I have found information valuable and relevant to me on the internet that I would not have been able to find elsewhere. I only hope that such information will continue to be easily found by everyone without being hassled.
—Nicholas Jorgensen, Jersey City, NJ

Net Neutrality is not just important, it is imperative to the survival of our rights as citizens. Any sort of control over access speeds can be later used to censor free speech. Are we not the land of the free? Do we not value the same rights and freedoms of our forefathers? Please fight for the rights of consumers. These rules would not bring a truly neutral Internet. Please reconsider and come up with a new plan. Perhaps reclassifying ISP's as common carriers is an option. We must not allow the most important technological invention of our age to become a tool of greed and corruption.
—Charles Rhyne, Little Rock, AR

The internet is one of the most potent creations the world has ever seen, and it should be allowed to flourish in a free and equal environment!
—Ryan Gardner-Cook, Brooklyn, NY

Fuck the American Gubmint and their nanny state bullshit!
—Pat mills, Wilmington, DE

Why are we allowing corporations to create the laws for the public without the publics interests at heart? We cannot allow our rights to free press and free speech to become further limited. The internet has become apart of how we communicate and should be reclassified.
—Suhaily Feliciano, Brooklyn, NY

It is the basis for true democracy in the 21st century.
—Matthew S Mantsch, Brooklyn, NY

A closed internet would only benefit those with the power to abuse it.
—Connie Ambridge, Philadelphia, PA

Because it is freedom, it is our space, it should not be corrupted by greedy politicians and companies. The internet has become an important part of life that should not be played with for profit and greed.
—Ivan Weman, Philadelphia, PA

My career will be focused on the internet. I don't want the inspiration for my career to be vastly different from before I started college
—Joe, Baldwin, NY

The internet is an essential tool for education and work. To allow some more well-established sites to hijack the system is completely criminal. Internet access should be considered a utility available to all based on usage amount alone.
—Sara, Des Moines, IA

As a senior I am able to keep up with Internet whereas am not able to get around as I use to do
—Joan Botto, Carlsbad, CA

It stimulates ISP competition, promotes innovation, drives entrepreneurship, assists charitable organizations, protects freedom of speech, and puts everyone at a level playing field. Throw out the proposed rules for reclassification. Maintain REAL net neutrality.
—Diane Kuzilla, Dearborn Heights, MI

If this proposal goes into effect, the internet will be anything but Neutral. Please do not place this proposal into effect, this country wants to pride itself on equality, correct? Then do not place this proposal into effect. Thank-you for your time congress. -Joseph De Cruz
—Joseph De Cruz, Louisville, KY

A free Internet is our last, best hope for democracy, both here in the US, and globally!
—John Hechtman, New York, NY

Net neutrality is important because without it we will stifle both innovation and free speech.
—Aaron L Weissman, Cambridge, MA

Net neutrality is important to me due to the fact that i am a college student and use the internet everyday for my classes. The removal of net neutrality will greatly affect the convenience of certain sites and can alter the grade of students nationwide.
—Juan Morales, Bell Gardens, CA

I knew the net before it was "the net" it's purpose to stay free and open for everyone, this FREEDOM OF SPEECH, should not be hindered in anyway. You think your computer lags now, wait til the censors get to it. I have a computer that loads pages quick and easy, always has, but if "they have to screen" EVERY email, and post online because the NSA wants them to.. then it will drag for possibly hours.
—Lisa Vacula, Allentown, PA

Because the Internet is my daily source of information.
—Richard Balogh, ,

I don't want "The Big Guys" getting any special treatment., it will just cost us more in the long run. Say NOOOO to comcast.
—Rita Huston, Raymond, NH

I'm a software engineer, without true net neutrality, innovation and start ups are dead.
—Sebastian Krywult, Litchfield Park, AZ

It's one of the few remaining areas where everyone is on a level playing field, and no one should be allowed to change that for corporate gain
—Michael Chaka, Jewell, OH

As a technology professional I can't imagine how much of a setback it would be to impose such archaic and ill conceived restrictions on such an important tool.
—Jay Bosworth, Bay City, MI

So many, many reasons.
—Brogino Gibroni, Orem, UT

It is question of fairness and equality. It is also an issue of equal access for all, not only for those that can afford to pay. Verizon and the other corporations are not people(the US Supreme Court ruling not withstanding.) They do not own the air waves that we all use the internet for. The 1% cannot control the 99%. This is supposed to be a democracy, not an oligarchy. This is another step toward corporations controlling all aspects of our lives--- a death blow for freedom and democracy. Tom Wheeler needs to stand up for the people or step down as a corporate stooge. Net neutrality equals free speech. We deserve our constitutional rights to be protected.
—Sharon Anderson, Napa, CA

As a small business I rely on my internet to be stable and current with the rest of my competitors
—Robert Hipp, Bend, OR

I, and many others, rely on free and open internet to run our small businesses. Giving corporate giants the ability to control the speed of internet based on how much someone is able to pay will only continue to raise the corporate giants and lower REAL PEOPLE and hard working human beings. Do the RIGHT thing for the people YOU SERVE. Come on.
—Matthew Laine Nall, Haiku, HI

I am taking graduate classes online. It is vital that I have secure reliable and fast access to the internet.
—Thaddeus Noto, Johnson City, TN

Without a truly neutral internet a Company like Comcast can literally advantage one company over another. Comcast is already to large to serve its customers. This would allow them to purchase any line of stores and give them a service advantage not available to others. The internet should work just as well for a mo and pop and Goggle.
—Robert May, Templeton, MA

Because I love the internet. I love that there is no limit to what we can do with it and on it because it is open to everyone equally to both host their own ideas and browse the ideas of others. Net neutrality keeps control and power of this exchange in the hands of the individuals and out of the hands of others. If ISP's gain the power to control this flow of information and exchange of ideas (which these new rules will give them indirectly), this equal exchange will be lost. There is no denying that these rules will only help the few in charge of ISP's, and would go against the desires of the people who, in many cases, have no other providers to turn to.
—Kevin Gries, Ames, IA

Net neutrality is important to me as an American because I realize that the entire future of how we interface on the net is impacted by the rules that are made today. I find it truly sad that politicians and monopolies are carving out the internet for themselves. The FCC's recent actions confirm that. Are there no champions of what is right and ethical left????
—Carolyn Allan, Brattleboro, VT

I already have a bad history of every ISP I've ever used not providing the service I'm paying for. The last thing I want is for them to be in control of the speeds at which I get access to the internet based on their subjective decisions or the demands of the monopolized ISPs and cable providers.
—Matt McDaniel, Austin, TX

As a public educator, I see the importance of the Net Neutrality when it comes to my low income students. They need access to educational resources that will be affected by online discrimination.
—Marjorie Oyler, Gypsum, CO

Net Neutrality is important to me because i believe that the internet should be open to everyone not just those who can pay the most. I would also like to start a petition to ask for chairman Wheeler to step-down from the FCC.
—Jose Gomez, Paterson, NJ

Because equality of opportunity is an essential aspect of the internet.
—Andrea Yeash, Fairfax, VA

I am a small business owner. VERY SMALL. Without equal access to the internet, both in terms of how much content I can offer on my website and in terms of how many people I'll be able to reach, I am doomed. Net Neutrality is the ONLY thing keeping me afloat. DO NOT DOOM ME.
—Amelie Belcher, Austin, TX

Being retired and on Social Security I can't affort the outrageous prices that Comcast is charging NOW. The proposed rules would only make it worse.
—Charles M. Kittredge, Santa Fe, NM

I am disabled & I spend a HUGE amount of time on the internet. I don't want it controlled!
—Susan Jessee, Kingman, AZ

I already pay a significant amount of money to my ISP for what I consider subpar internet service at 50 mbps. I pay netflix for their monthly service and should be able to stream my netflix content at 50 mbps, as this is the service I'm paying the ISP. I'm not paying them for 50 mbps for google sites, yahoo sites, comcast sites, etc.. and only 12 mbps for netflix. Any anti-Net Neutrality ruling marginalizes the individual citizen at the benefit of "big business." Any fees Netflix pays will be passed on to the consumer and for all practical purposes the consumer is going to be paying twice for the same service. ATT, Verizon, etc... want to whine about how net neutrality will stifle buisness. This is ridiculous. Telecom companies have record profits. I've personally seen the inside of ATT and it is run terribly. The inefficiency is criminal and despite their poor operations they make a killing. Why? Because they charge so much already. If they made an effort to be efficient they could likely decrease their rates 25 to 50% and maintain their current profit margins. Please say NO to allowing these companies to rape the american people. Government agencies such as the FCC were created to protect the people's interest. Please represent us well. Please enforce net neutrality. If this requires reclassifying ISP as utilities then please proceed. Please take whatever action is within your power to level the playing field and protect the average citizen from "big business" gone wild. The courts carried out a travesty when they struck down the 2010 rules. Please set the record straight. As a side note, In the United States why is so difficult to proceed in that's best for the public as a whole. European Union doesn't seem to struggle with this issue as they continually pass laws and regulation that protect and serve their citizens. Seems the United States has greater forces that are designed to protect corporations at the cost of the citizen - lobbyists! Tell them not this time.
—Chris Massari, Bend, OR

Because the internet is like any other utility and should not be performance tiered based on who is on either end. If you pay for a certain speed you should get that speed again regardless of end users.
—Dharma Kemp-Bresett, Nashua, NH

I think that for all the talk about freedom, that this is one of the most important. The free exchange of ideas. Also I don't believe corporations should be allowed to control everything. They have only their own bottom lines in mind.
—Jason L Naramor, Calera, OK

Government should fight for the common people. Not corporations. Tom Wheeler is corrupt and making millions of dollars while common people fight for every penny. Now he wants to help the rich and steal from the poor. How do people like him get into leadership positions? All he speaks are lies. He specifically laughed during a FCC hearing at people who wanted their voices heard. HE LAUGHED! What leader laughs at common people and not hear. Makes me sick this is what government is coming to. Please Tom sit me down and explain why this will help me and not Comcast? How much money did they offer you? How much are you making while the rest of us must work hard and long for every penny. I would like Tom Wheeler to personally call me and explain like we all deserve. Why his he ignoring everyone's voice and only trying to push the government into corruption.
—Korey Kluding, Findlay, OH

Information, news, and media should be delivered in equitable way. When those who pay to get their message out faster, information and news is no longer objective!
—Catherine Handschuh, Aptos, CA

Allowing already existent website monopolies to become even more empowered will stunt the evolution of information.
—Amber Tuthill, Hebron, NH

The net is far too important a tool for grassroots organizing to hand over to large corporations.
—David Edwards, Seattle, WA

Because access to information is vital to a free society. The government already does more than enough for big corporations at the expense of ordinary Americans; this would just be one more huge proverbial kick in the teeth.
—Michael Bergamo, Tucson, AZ

Net Neutrality is important for a fair and open Internet. I think that the idea of a "fast lane" for those who can afford to pay for it will exacerbate inequality on the Internet and stifle innovation on the margins. The next big start-up that comes from someone's garage will simply have a harder time coming to prominence if the FCC goes through to kill Net Neutrality. I demand nothing less than REAL net neutrality. Regards, Jason Lipshin
—Jason Lipshin, Cambridge, MA

Equality! And, I paid for the infrastructure…..what is your cable doing under my earth? They should be paying us (taxpayers) for the property that houses the cables. Internet should be free and fast for everyone…..the FCC is employed by me not corporate America…..what is the FCC mandate?
—EA Daniels, Seattle, WA

Net neutrality (at any cost) is the foundation of change. We need to preserve this freedom for our children. Any cost benefit to the consumer and business owner is not worth the cost of the loss in freedom of speech and entrepreneurship that the internet provides.
—Alyssa Johnson, Seattle, WA

I run a small online business.
—Janel Goolsby, Aliso Viejo, CA

The free exchange of information keeps a society free.
—David Dye, Portland, OR

I do not wish to make a few wealthy in my pursuit of information.
—Raenie Kane, Long Beach, CA

Mega-corporations are already controlling so much of the free world that it scares me. To allow them to take even more control could create a world that is even harder for the less wealthy.
—Tina Vigorito, Vancouver, WA

We have heard every reason Tom Wheeler has gave for why his plan is great but now it is time to listen to the american people. It will not work and we dont want it. Make ISPs common carriers. That is what the american people want. You may defend this plan all you want Mr. Wheeler but the american people are not buying what you are selling.
—Leslie Lewis, Capitol Heights, MD

please save the internet now
—Stephen Kollenborn, Mesa, AZ

The Internet is more than a private business, it is a public trust that needs government/social protection in order to remain an equal source of information and learning for humanity. Much like libraries house our trusted sources of information, freely available due to the private invention of the printing press -- the Internet too, must at its heart be kept free an open to all. Businesses already have many opportunities to leverage the potential of the Internet to profit while connecting us all. In fact, protecting net neutrality ensures all businesses have an equal chance to succeed (including bare bones startups), much like it ensures our democracy promotes a fair chance to read, react and participate in discussion. We cannot have tiered Internet and discrimination against those who have money and those who do not. To do that is to go against the nature of freedom we like to promote around the globe. Technologies far beyond our grasp today exist on the horizon, and to have it only distributed to a higher paying class hampers growth in our country.
—Matthew Ryno, Milwaukee, WI

Corporations already have too much power.
—, Seattle, WA

It is going to slow down progress in new technology and give rise to too narrow of a spectrum of content.
—DeAnn Worland, Rockford, IL

The internet is the number one leveling tool that allows capitalism to function like it is supposed to. It is truly an equal space for all. Don't ruin the internet with this ruling, which will allow large oligopolies to make even greater profits at the expense of ordinary citizens.
—Heather Sevrens, Menlo Park, CA

Net neutrality will maintain the internet as a free and democratic public utility, as it should be. If the FCC monitors and regulates it, it belongs to ALL citizens, not the corporations who already own far too large a stake in our government.
—Kristie Cunningham, Tucson, AZ

It's a learning tool for my autistic child. And helps keep him grounded. As a single parent with the only income I could not afford to help him.
—heather Olson, Tucson, AZ

1st ammendment
—Mr. Noah Evans, Huntington Beach, CA

Because I am a small online retailer and because it's patently unfair to give large companies preferential treatment on the Internet that, we, as taxpayers, paid to build.
—Nicholas Africano, Bourbonnais, IL

I work from home and my husband is an internet radio DJ. We need open access to the internet and to not be limited by greedy corporations that already take to much from the average people. What they want you to do would make things extremely difficult for my husband and i
—Rebecca breaks, Cincinnati, OH

This can't be the land of opportunity if access to knowledge becomes an even more profitized commodity. It could be the final nail in the coffin of the American Dream.
—Don Landry, Dallas, TX

Because it's double dipping, unfair, selfish and a disgrace to the internet
—Ben, ,

The internet may be the Wild Wild West but its a true democracy. You can create whatever you want, discuss whatever you want, and everyone has access. These companies already make BILLIONS of dollars, but now they want more control? More money?
—Ms. Roxanne Oraguzie, Carson, CA

First off, I'm piss poor. I'm not going to pay a premium for internet speeds that aren't at a premium price in the other 194 countries on this planet. That's hardly fair. Secondly, as an artist, I need streamed movies and videos to get reference material for my own work. To put it bluntly, having that slowed down would not end well.
—Jace Viernes, Ewa Beach, HI

As a person who uses the internet daily, and runs a website, the "Net Neutrality" rules are sickening. Along with SOPA, ACTA, and PIPA, this will ruin the free information highway. The Internet is supposed to be used to share information, not to give more money to the HollyWood Pigs.
—Riley Burns, ,

America is founded on the principle of freedom. Also, fuck Comcast.
—Nikhil Nair, U S A F Academy, CO

Anything other than complete net neutrality will only be a danger to free communication and the flow of ideas. The internet has the chance to connect the human race in ways never before possible, congress and the FCC must not hinder this tool for intellectual freedom.
—Joshua Yang, Cerritos, CA

I focus my education through the internet. From what I do not learn from public education, I further explore the concepts on the internet. If the FCC goes through with this, me as a lower-middle class american will struggle to keep expanding my knowledge.
—Tanner Bruner, Rogersville, TN

Net Neutrality supports small business & freedom of speech
—Harriet Matter-Jones, Portland, OR

Because I am a lower class citizen and I have the right to a free and open internet in order to educate myself to reach a higher level of knowledge. I believe the internet is the most powerful tool for education, so please don't take away my access just because I am not in the 1%.
—Corrinne Simone Willis, Colorado Springs, CO

because the internet is my life. I have extreme social anxiety and 2 broken knees. the internet is my escape.
—Ciara Bonneau, ,

A great gift that our own government put into action is being abused by controlling companies that are already overcharging us. Please look at the overall picture of such action and consider "us" the taxpayers and our futures in not only this issue but, all issues pertaining to the betterment of all! This nothing more than a two company monopoly without the opportunity for improvements and direct competition. Thank you for your consideration! Jack Thank You
—Jack Schmidt, Aurora, CO

The internet is a communications service for all of mankind. There is no place for Government picking winners and discriminating against the rest of internet users. When technology experts create new and innovative means of communication the internet users should have access to it indiscriminately. God Save The Republic.
—patrick Dugan, Felton, CA

It gives an equal change for everyone to express themselves and create whatever they wish for without fear that a greater company will somehow affect them or treat them as any less important than any others.
—Manuel Diaz, ,

It's important because I can keep in contact with friends I've met and it's Freedom of Speech. Taking our internet and limiting it is taking away out Freedom of Speech which is against one of the rules of the country.
—Josie Valdez, Santa Fe, NM

Start up companies will be at a great disadvantage, but you don't care about them they don't have lobbyist that give politicians money. How are they giving you money to sell out? This is what is wrong with America, big companies just buy the laws that will benefit themselves. How do you sleep at nights?
—Wayne Dudones, Palos Heights, IL

It is important because imposing laws on connectivity will do nothing but stifle innovation and the advancement of technology.
—Mr. Justin Bisutti, East Hanover, NJ

I'd like to add my voice to the thousands who are in disagreement with this proposal. I think that this idea is foolish and one that could come back to bite you in the long run. As it is now most of America is held hostage by the larger cable companies and this only serves to give them carte blanc over a service that should be free and open to the public they have forgotten how to serve.
—Mr. John ODay, Saint Louis, MO

The level playing field of knowledge, expression, and commerce is incredibly important. It is a founding principle and makes the internet a better place..
—Jeremy Bethel, Roanoke, VA

Please do us all a favor and leave the internet alone. PLEASE!
—Shea Davidson, Marshall, TX

A two-tiered internet where it costs additional fees to be in the fast lane will hurt small internet reliant companies. As I hope to one day start a company such as this, this has a huge impact on what I hope to do with my future. I do not believe that a monopolized internet is the correct path.
—Dominique Brown, Excelsior Springs, MO

If there was no net neutrality there wouldn't be facebook or google or anything , it keeps the playing field even and not gives a advantage to the big companies , so we need net neutrality for innovation and newer projects and everything
—Rahul Jain, ,

In a society where the internet is the main form of communication, making that communication free and open is of the upmost importance.
—Sean J, Fishers, IN

As an engineer and a entrepreneur, net neutrality gives me the same chance as large corporations to invent ideas and expose them to people all over the world. I have an equal opportunity and it is a crucial part of the American dream. Net neutrality will slander the American dream and provide a systems of tiers or classes between websites. The internet will no longer serve as a gateway to equal opportunity if fast lanes are approved.
—Cary Wood, West Lafayette, IN

There are so many reasons, but one reason could be that you ll stop people from innovating things on the internet because they just don't have the power to make it
—FrozenStarz, ,

It allows information to be freely shared. The Internet is a place where people can find comfort, valuable advices, understand other cultures and discover news that cable media don't bother to share. Destroying net neutrality equals to saying no to free speech. Please cherish what makes our civilisation so great instead of getting it one step closer to Medieval era of censorship.
—Michaela Ivasienkova, ,

Because having bigger corporations take control over what online sites have faster speeds is completely irresponsible and not right in terms of fairness to the consumer.
—Kirsten, Morrisville, NC

The internet has naturally grown to become what it is, and stopping that now, would slow down the growth of what it can become.
—Sergey Barshtein, Brooklyn, NY

As a graduating web and front end designer, I think it's unfair to put a price on internet speed. This proposal is a form of discrimination against all businesses, and will affect my work intake in more ways than one, making it more competitive to get the biggers jobs from companies willing to pay this extra "fast lane" fee, and every single web designer/developer will feel the same. Please don't pass this!
—Kristen Whiddon, Atlanta, GA

I want to see our Internet still open to everybody, and not to pay higher fees in fast lines! Even not fair to smaller websites using slow lanes too.
—Melissa Maddox, Frankfort, KY

It's the last frontier of equal opportunity —Derek Masten, Morrisville, VT

I have a business website
—Stephanie Petersen, Reno, NV

Net neutrality is the most important issue of our generation. It is COMPLETELY ridiculous that speed would be dependent on tier and product. This crushes the democratic possibilities inherent in the internet.
—Kamran Hakiman, Washington, DC

The free and unrestricted flow of information using the internet allows it be an important source of communication that has become vital, not simply to entertainment, but also to communication and education.
—Tyler Smith, Allendale, MI

EQUAL ACCESS to knowledge and information should be available to all. Regardless of you financial situation.
—Asef Alam, Hillsborough, NJ

An open, free, fair internet is going to be one of the most important freedoms going forward. There's a reason why nations in Europe and the Republic of Korea have substantially faster internet speeds than those of us here in the economic powerhouse of the world. I urge you to force the ISPs to keep an open internet and require them to increase their bandwidth so we as a country are on par with other industrialized nations around the world.
—Kennith Conley Coleman, Mohawk, WV

how are we to say that the few rich companies should have the right to jeopardize all the smaller companies to line their pockets even more. REAL NET NEUTRALITY IS FOR EVERYONE!!!!!
—Jason Lamb, Grove City, PA

Net Neutrality is key to democracy. Without it, the Internet will become yet another place where those with money get to benefit, and everyone else gets shut out of the discussion. A two-tiered internet would extend class warfare into the online realm, where the increasing numbers of poor and "middle class" have their last, best chance of regaining political representation.
—Benjamin Healey, Fort Richardson, AK because its fair and there's nothing wrong with it the way it is.

—Andre, Salt Lake City, UT

There are already too many barriers to what should be a right to information, we don't need any more.
—Ben Urciuoli, Wethersfield, CT

I believe that the internet is a valuable resource that must be protected from fiscal influence. I believe that if Net Neutrality is not preserved we will lose a magnificent resource of learning, discourse and innovation. If all of the information on the internet is not allowed to flow equally, then the people are at the mercy of those who control the flow of that information. Thank you for your time. Gabriel Naugher
—Mr. Gabriel Naugher, Upper Marlboro, MD

It keeps the world at our finger tips and of of corporate hands!
—Jennifer Whitworth, Topeka, KS

There will be no freedom, no democracy without it.
—Barbara Swanston, ,

Real Net Neutrality rules that protect Internet users from corporate abuse. Keep the internet Open and free to grow.
—Leo Kisrow, Jacksonville, FL

Corporate profits and renegade laws that continue to impose restrictions and unfair burdens on the citizens the elected officials are supposed to work for and protect has gone horribly wrong. You're asking for a revolt, and if you keep persisting in such bullshit as this act, you WILL get exactly that. #OCCUPY
—Maureen Dauphinee, Rochester, NY

To have the freedom to use the Internet as I please, not as someone else dictates —Richard Riley, ,

Net Neutrality is important because it allows me to access to websites that I use for school, for my job, and my personal life. Entering a two tiered system would leave me in the slow lane because I will not possess the funds in order to have the faster speeds and money for the fees websites might charge that I NEED. The internet is the largest form of free speech, and it should not be subjected to discrimination from the big wigs.
—Erin Englett, Houston, TX

The internet generation is the one i grew up in. Without it, most teens/kids would be lost. We're living off the entertainment, information, and education that it's giving off.
—Malorie Keylon, Cedar Hill, TX

Net Neutrality is essential! We, the public, pay enough for our use of the internet. The public should not be victims of corporate abuse!
—Amanda King, Boston, MA

I do not like that companines with a lot of money will be able to pay for faster "pipes" and like guys will not be ale to. I also do not like that by doing this ISP's will be able to charge you more for select services and in turn these services will cost us more.
—Joaquin Bridges, Watsonville, CA

Being able to use all of the sites that I usually use at a consistent speed is important to me in my day-to-day life, from browsing Reddit to checking my Microsoft Outlook and Gmail inboxes to playing video games such as League of Legends. I'm disappointed and frustrated at the possibility that this free and open Internet, where any site and any user are created equal, could disappear in favor of a pay-to-access system with exponentially slower speeds and a method that allows ISPs to charge us more for what we already fairly pay for, such as seen in this image (http://i.imgur.com/4jTTFbP.jp g). I'm not happy.
—Paul Lucero, Littleton, CO

The internet is what I use on a daily bases. I don't have any extra cash to pay for faster speeds, my father already pays enough. I want to be able to continue making content and posting it on the sites that I want, without feeling like my internet is second class. Fuck you FCC, The internet is for people to spread and share information that is important to them. Step away from the gate and let these people continue to run free.
—Jakob Prater, Houston, TX

It is the ISP's responsibility to update their services so that congestion can be alleviated. The internet will continue to grow, and charging the customer more money for this trend is unethical and should be prevented at all costs.
—Tim Hanneman, Locust Grove, VA

I was under the impression that FCC was supposed to protect the public from power and influence from money. It is outrageous that the FCC would even consider siding with big corporations so they can take control of the Internet and end what is known as Net Neutrality. If the FCC allows this I am totally convinced that it is being run by the $$$ from these big corporations. It seems there is no end in sight from this onslaught of corporate dollars running our country. Our democracy is more than halfway in the toilet now. The Internet needs to remain free of corporate influence and greed. Please DO NOT allow Net Neutrality to be flushed down the toilet along with voting rights and "corporations being equal to "People". I am an outraged US citizen.
—Robert Smith, Seattle, WA

As a student, I can't afford to pay for the internet I will need for my education.
—Emma Fredericks, Hackettstown, NJ

The web connects the world. Making people pay changes the entire way people will exsist.
—Kim Troxall, Lexington, KY

Net neutrality is what makes the internet great.
—Eli Schroeder, Glen Carbon, IL

Scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.
—Corey J. Apling, Columbus, OH

The YOUTUBE!
—Ariel Pineiro, Fort Myers, FL

I am beginning college this year, and I use the Internet for a multitude of incredibly important things. The Internet is the fundamental basis for undiscriminating, free speech. It allows young students like me access to global communications and information. Obviously I am not going to be able to afford increased expenses for the Internet, nor should I have to. The FCC must realize that the Internet cannot be regulated by the government as it's essential that all people of the United States are allowed to let their voice be heard EQUALLY, not favoring those who can pay more. The Internet does need funding, but throwing net neutrality out the window is strictly benefiting companies like Verizon and Comcast, allowing them to make extra millions to stuff in their pockets while the Internet becomes less and less usable without extra payment.
—Cari Wolff, Lake Geneva, WI

When money talks, the ones with the deepest pockets win.
—James, Orlando, FL

I strongly encourage the FCC to classify Internet Service Providers as Title Two Common Carriers. Allowing companies to purchase premium delivery for their content is unjust and a form of extortion. If this were the case the freedom and growth of the internet that the nation has experienced in the last 20 years would be devastatingly halted; leaving only the super-rich companies to compete against each other.
—Andrew Hassel, Chicago Ridge, IL

It allows me to use everything at the fastest speeds possible. If it's removed, then services would be slow, I'd stop using and paying for those services, and the internet would lose users.
—, Huntington, NY

ISPs have essentially a monopoly here in the US, and they have abused that power in so many ways. We need net neutrality for free competition, especially for upcoming services using video, and we have reached the point where internet can be considered a right. I refuse to let greed win.
—Scott Mason, Detroit, MI

because it make us equal. if this does pass, all your telling the people that your just greedy for money. I can't afford to pay more and things are really hard as it is for me. please don't. :(
—Paul Laureano, Killeen, TX

I am front end developer and know the importance of an open internet.
—Khalid Robinson, Los Angeles, CA

The Internet is an amazing resource which allows access to books, documents, films and documentaries which help to further educate those who may not have access to such resources wherever they may be.
—Justin Creasman, Los Angeles, CA

I've been able to surf the web since I was 12 years old all on my own. I can learn things, find humorous sites, and enjoy surfing just for fun. I can start a business, purchase things from other countries, sell things from my country, and connect with people from all over the world. Internet is already pricey enough just for better SPEED... don't include exclusive access to it, too!
—Jessica Gill, Dallas, TX

I don't believe the providers should have a say in what I have legally paid for. We already have a substandard internet with data caps and limited to no options for alternate isp, i don't think they should be able to charge me more for what I've always done.
—Joron McRae, Youngstown, OH

Chairman Wheeler the internet should be the peoples not the highest bidding companies. The government intrudes on every part of our lives these days. Leave the little people something.
—Donald Ross, Aylett, VA

As a full time college student who already pays rent, a car note, tuition, and other bills I can't afford to also have to pay for the internet which plays a big role in my education
—Ariana Walston, Reston, VA

I can barely afford internet as it is. I can't have these companies charging me more to use the internet when I basically work on the internet. It isn't right.
—Emily, Nashville, TN

Stop messing with us!!
—Mohammed Moinuddin, Elmhurst, NY

The internet is a great source of information and entertainment for myself personally. I don't want our system to change because I fear I wont be able to afford it.
—Daphnie Russell, Corona, CA

My livelyhood depends on the internet.
—Jeremy Dew, Madison, WI

I own a video based business incubator that will be crushed by segregating the world wide web that my taxes paid to develop. Broadband providers are common carriers. Most importantly though net neutrality is important to me because the elitist two tier model is "Information Access Discrimination".
—Matthew Steven Melin, San Diego, CA

Equal opportunity and access for all
—Scott Cunningham, Tucson, AZ

We must not continue to kill small business in this country. The corporations already have enough power! Start representing the people instead of the corporate oligarchy!
—Norm Lindner, Melbourne, FL

I cannot afford a more expensive internet. The open internet saved my life by allowing me to research my disease and find treatment. Without it, I would be dead.
—Dawn Adkisson, Normal, IL

As a costume maker and small business owner, losing net neutrality would literally destroy my only source of income. I would also lose access to important resources and learning tools I use in my every day life, in order to support myself. Not only will this affect me, but hundreds of thousands of others. If net neutrality is lost, I would certainly stop using the internet all together. I'm sure many would. All in all, placing such restrictions on the internet is just plain stupid.
—P Lammers, ,

It's important for EVERYONE to have a free and open internet; just because others have millions to billions of dollars more doesn't mean they should get their content provided to people faster. It would be like if highway HoV lanes were only for people who made $250,000+ a year and everyone else was restricted to the standard highway lanes.
—Jeremy Brown, Brighton, CO

I am an academic, so I am very concerned that information be freely available and that access to information not be influenced by wealth. The internet is one of those public venues that preserve democracy and prevent the US becoming an oligarchy. So far, the internet has provided an incredible platform for innovation and social sharing. Please don't destroy this amazing human resource by making it controlled by wealth and power. Keep the internet a public resource!!!
—Suzanne Benack, Schenectady, NY

Everyone is equal in real life, so why wouldn't they be online? People already pay for different connection speeds and strengths, so why complicate it even more with different tiers?
—Jordan Andrus, ,

The internet is the best way to help people and for people to help themselves. Taking away net neutrality would hurt the most disadvantaged and make the most advantaged have slightly more convenient speeds at which to download pr0n.
—Emerson Goncus, Springdale, PA

You know why.
—Jonathan, ,

As the Internet is backbone of the free flow of information, I feel it is important to protect free speech by not allowing those with money to control this flow.
—Sakura Lipsey, Sammamish, WA

Because all websites should have equal playing field, and big internet providers just want to make more money
—Jack Koury, Ballwin, MO

It ensures our basic rights for free speech, innovation, education, economic growth, creativity, etc. - not giving unequal rights to the wealthiest among us.
—Jacqueline Smith, North Fort Myers, FL

Why wouldn't it be important to me? We all deserve net neutrality. There is no good that can come out of it. The end result will be higher fees for customers, and it is ridiculous that something like this is even being thought up. We, as consumers, already pay for Internet access. Why should we all not get regular services like email or videos that we've all paid the ISP for? Please reclassify ISPs as Common Carriers under Title II. We need to keep net neutrality ALIVE.
—Kenneth Neurohr, Butler, PA

It is absolutely essential to make sure that the one Internet, World Wide Web, serves all information packets at the same speed. Otherwise large companies will use large numbers of legal procedures to defeat small companies, who cannot afford the legal bills to get equal speed. Existing cable and phone giant companies already use their public exclusive geographical franchise grants to charge excessive rates to consumers because they own the only direct lines. The FCC must fully support net neutrality to make the one Internet/WWW a common carrier so that there is fair competition in both business and fair competition in ideas that the big cable companies and phone don't want to be heard. The FCC must not allow any additional speed fees on the one Internet /World Wide Web. It's the only Internet we have, and the FCC better not kill our rights of free speech and free enterprise, or the US public will rise up and hold accountable all those responsible.
—Timothy C. Warlick, Tulsa, OK

A free and non discriminatory Internet is necessary to continue our everyday lives as they have been for years
—Enrique Rufo, Cape Coral, FL

It should be important to everyone, to have net neutrality. The internet is only what it is today because of the interaction of everyone with a stable internet connection. Take that away from 99% of americans, and suddenly you'll find only the 1% surfing the desolate AT&T, Comcast, and Verizon webpages - because the rest of us will have moved on from the internet and gone back to actual human interaction. Us internet users are a fiscal lot - which is why sites like facebook and youtube have done so well, while others in their position, but charge for membership do not. This is also the reason that piracy is the large issue that it is. The average person would rather jump through hoops than to pay, when it comes to the internet. Human patience only lasts so long on the net - and there is nothing more aggravating than a slow internet connection. So, with all due respect, it's more likely you'll see a mass exodus from the net rather than having people actually pay more for a better connection, or for better site hosting. And once the majority of people leave, you lose the entire infrastructure that has been built up over the years. Tldr: The internet is only as great as the amount of people who choose to use it.
—Andrew Wesolowski, Rhinebeck, NY

It is important to protect our rights from discrimination and freedom of communication. Lets not give that to the telecom giants Tom Wheeler, and take it away from American citizens.
—Bryte Beevers, Vancouver, WA

Allowing this plan would further widen the divide between rich and poor in this country. Time to STOP!
—Keith Baratta, Long Beach, CA

Fairness in competition and reasonable prices for consumers
—Lucas Black, Herndon, VA

I value having adequate network speed for all of us.
—Sallie Shapiro, Glendale, CA

Because it internet is the future of the economy and I want the internet to stay free and open.
—Michele Harman, Portland, OR

Because I love the internet and this country already does enough to fuck over the poor.
—Amy Shaw, Willimantic, CT

The Internet is a place to be free. Not so that fat pigs in suits and sitting on gilded chairs get faster wifi and more freedom, while those who work for what they pay for lose their rights.
—Kadhim Al-Kaylani, Grand Rapids, MI

Cost
—Elizabeth Ackerman, Portland, OR

Net Neutrality protects the economic interests of budding start ups. Without equal access the internet, economic achievement will be at the hands of those already in economic power. Limiting startup's potentials pushes American technological progress backwards, rids the economy of worthwhile and much needed jobs, and sends a stark messages to the youth of today that their projects, and thereby their individual interests, are nothing compared to the economic interests of the telecom giants.
—Cole Bubenik, Austin, TX

Without Net Neutrality the way that we interact, perform our daily activities and transmit data will be changed tremendously. Allowing the FCC to enforce these rules will only allow the rich to get richer including the corporations that own the telecommunications companies as well as the giant corporations that would be able to afford the higher producing internet service.
—Chris Michalak, New York, NY

The moment you let net neutrality go, you lose the web as it is. You lose something essential – the fact that any innovator can dream up an idea and set up a website at some random place and let it just take off from word of mouth.
—Kartik Sareen, ,

The future depends on us not selling out now.
—Bill Stern, San Francisco, CA

Without it, as a poor college student, I wouldn't be able to afford the faster lane of internet for school and would therefore struggle immensely financially.
—Mary Grove, Roanoke, VA

Free speech and video streaming.
—Alanna Phillips, Brooklyn, NY

For one, students all over the united states use the internet for research projects, studying and connecting with teachers. Many already can't afford the internet and to add even more costs is ridiculous. College students can barely afford to get to college, how would they afford to keep up with classes? Net Neutrality is important for everyone, for society to be able to grow as one. Connecting with those over the internet happens now and it brings so much to the world. It allows for others to be exposed to different cultures, foods and for some, it saves lives. If one has to pay even more than they already do for internet that now, is perfect, then forget about America even coming close to being the best country.
—Breanna Higgins, Kyle, TX

I want the internet that I paid for, there should never be a two-tiered internet that telecoms decide what my fate is. This will destroy a lot of businesses and put a lot of people out of jobs! Please reclassify ISPs as Common Carriers under Title II.
—Matt Bauer, Black Mountain, NC

I think that if we have pure freedom in real life, we should have the ability to have pure freedom online, too.
—Riley Annon, Phoenix, AZ

because we don't want big businesses to take control of the world my Internets all ready slow enough and if it gets any slower ill probably go crazy
—Johnathan Dudley, Cumming, GA

I do not believe there should be discrimination when it comes to Internet speeds.
—Amanda Simpkins, Fort Myers, FL

I am a college student trying to beat the odds of a jobless recovery by trying to enter one of the only places which seems to have a future: the internet. Without Net Neutrality, any company I work for or set up on my own will be dead in the water. Every company begins as a small business, many of which would not be able to pay to get their content to their viewers. And many viewers would not be able to pay to receive their content! Don't kill the only thing keeping the internet's economy afloat!
—Andrea Munguia, San Diego, CA

Net Neutrality is important to me because the greedy communications corporations need to keep their corrupt filthy hands off the information superhighway, and find new ways to adapt their flawed business models to a modern world. Secondly net neutrality is important because we need to have internet speeds comparable to Sweden and Japan, if we claim to be a technological society. If I want a data pipeline to my house I SHOULD BE ABLE TO HAVE ONE at a REASONABLE price. I render 3d models, play video games and program, I need bandwidth to do these things. The internet does not need to be nerfed or tampered with in any way. Through legislation like this the FCC renders its self un-patriotic in my eyes. We need to unite and build a strong tech educated America, so we don't fall behind the rest of the world. I'm signing this submission, to help preserve reasonable access to data and technology to all people.
—Nicholas Fazzolari, Portland, OR

I want to start a website, I want to make money. I CANNOT make money if I have to PAY to start the website that I plan to MAKE MONEY on. Does that sound like freedom? Does it sound like freedom to let the people with the most money own the internet? If I must PAY to use the internet, why the hell should I pay extra fees that come along with it? Any website that is a competitor (hell, even just not liked) by the big companies will be demolished, finished, destroyed. THIS IS NOT FREEDOM, THIS IS MADNESS. Why do you always try to fuck up the Internet? This is a source of information for the masses. Do you not want information to SPREAD?
—Pearson Batitto, Chesterfield, VA

The internet is one of the largest hubs of information and blocking that off from the public is a grave disservice.
—Haley Fox, Novi, MI

Our rights to the internet shouldn't be cut short to line the pockets of already wealthy people.
—Christopher Gallavan, Midlothian, VA

Equality for everyone.
—John Kaye, Beverly Hills, CA

The internet is the only true protector of democracy, human rights and innovation. Breaking net neutrality is a slippery slope that could badly cripple the countless wonderful fruits of the modern web. This has to be stopped.
—Ido Kalir, ,

I dont want the Internet to be dominated by monopolies and prices for access to go up and up
—August Malupa, Yonkers, NY

For education purposes, this new discrimination will greatly affect our youth.
—Laila M, Los Angeles, CA

Net neutrality is important to me because I do not believe corporations should be able to tilt the playing field in their favor. It is not the business of anyone to decide whose voice is heard.
—Davis Collins, Springfield, MO

Freedom for all, cost to none.
—VonDexter Montegut II, Los Angeles, CA

Lets prevent companies, who provide a necessary service, from making as much money as they possibly can off of The People
—Megan Adams, Seattle, WA

I favor social justice over corporate profits. We all need the internet to work and play; it needs to be fair. It is the government's job to make sure it's fair.
—Eric D'Asaro, Seattle, WA

For me, this is less about large companies having all the power and more about individual citizens not having the same access or FREE SPEECH as the larger companies. It is an equity AND equality issue. It is a free speech issue. It is an issue that affects those who don't have a voice... So I'm using mine. Don't let this go any further. Remember: "With great power comes great responsibility" Use it wisely.
—Emma, Arlington, MA

The Internet has come a long way, why ruin it? Why control it? This is similar to the black white oppressions in America in the 1940s. You control the internet you control the voice of billions of people.
—Darin Hogen, Foothill Ranch, CA

Because it is the livelihood and valuable resource for everyone I know.
—Ruffin White, Atlanta, GA

Why isn't it important to me? Removing net neutrality is one step closer to living in a communist country. America the free, right? Let's keep it that way.
—Megan H, Georgetown, KY

The internet is a place where people share ideas and information. Restricting this will not help us as a society gain useful knowledge to better ourselves and the people around us.
—Andrew Richardson, Plano, TX

Because it prevents unnecessary greed from companies. Punishing people for having better internet is unfair and overall its just down right wrong
—Ryne Knight, Louisville, KY

Its not fair to make people pay more to go to sites they can already go to at a normal internet fee just because their internet providers don't have the support of the said sites!
—Arturo J. Briano, Bryan, TX

It allows me to be apart of a world community!
—Aleksander Berg, Los Angeles, CA

I like the internet
—Nick Smith, Rochelle, IL

because I believe in true open and competitive internet without mettling by big business.
—Mitch Montgomery, Vancouver, WA

I would like to be able to visit my college home page, and also learn new dyi from sources in forums on how to repair, create, innovate either my car or just my hobby. Net neutrality is disgusting. It serves anything but advantages for the consumer.
—Jordanis Laureano, New York, NY

We need the freedom to innovate without corporate obstruction. Opportunity for everyone.
—Mike Riley, Cape Coral, FL

I do not believe this is an actual neutral and fair way to connect and communicate to a service provider. Americans already pay huge bills as it is. Provide America with REAL NetNeturality not this government interference of our right to connect that we are currently enjoying.
—Kelley Morris, Stevens Point, WI

the free, open and neutral internet represents the biggest equalising force society has perhaps ever encountered and it needs to be kept that way
—Angus Macrae, ,

Internet service should be fair and consistent for all users. A service provider, that serves as a 'highway' for the delivery of goods should not be allowed to dictate what it delivers when it is a monopoly. That is exactly what ISP's are, a monopoly.
—Liam Livingston, Ocala, FL

America needs a free and vibrant internet, free from corporate interference and greed. The very people who need to use the internet for everything from education and research to social communication will be forced to pay monopolistic prices to use it. "Fast lanes" will morph into slow, fast, faster price levels for everyone combined with data charges...all stymieing Americans' need for the internet.
—Dennis Link, Monaca, PA

We need an unbiased internet, or "free" internet for all...and I want the internet to remain the way it is. Small businesses should have the right to the same rights, as big business. If I want to use big businesses, I can look them up on the internet. If I want to use a smaller business, I want to be able to find them just as easily. KEEP THE INTERNET THE WAY IT IS NOW, KEEP THE INTERNET FREE FOR ALL.
—Corinne Vautour, ,

We are already paying inflated prices for high speed access because service providers have no competition. Does the FCC exist to protect the interests of business, or to regulate that business in the interests of all?
—Stuart Hirshhorn, Seattle, WA

1st amendment freedom must be protected!
—Robert Hart, indanapolis, IN

Net Neutrality is important to me reasonably because it has helped me learn and do well at school. Also I have been able to meet many people from around the world using the internet. If i have to pay more then these privileges will be taken away from me. These are just a few reasons.
—Nathan, ,

It seems to me that the proposed rules will have a chilling effect on our economy. American needs real net neutrality in order to prosper.
—Lisa Schlossnagle, Fulton, MD

As an educator, I believe it is important that we provide fair and easy access to the Internet. We need to make sure that no one is limited to what they can access based on what they can afford.
—Rhonda Spearman, Huntsville, TX

Net Neutrality is important to me because it's a form of freedom of information for Americans to seek, find, and locate information on health, housing, education, or any issue of concern without flipping through a book which doesn't provide clarity to our most seasoned Americans, seniors. Net Neutrality is simple, accessible, and does have a cost through my cable company so I desire the freedom to surf as an American of the United States of America. Fighting appears to be the American way to gain freedom for everything and it shouldn't be for Net Neutrality. Allow the small American to enjoy the freedom of the Internet as it is today without discriminatory practices. Power to the people?
—Elvie Jester, Silver Spring, MD

It doesn't stifle my search results and gives me access to everything that I need not just what company's say I would need. Keeps things fair for my and other start up websites
—Cashil Ferreira, ,

Equal right for all americans should be in person and on the internet!
—Hany Ryan Solh, Charlotte, NC

I believe that online speed and content should be equal and not discriminate!!!
—Lauren K., Des Plaines, IL

Without net neutrality, the greedy service providers would be able to controll the internet for their own benefit. This means they'd get extra money from those who could afford it, leaving the rest of us without good internet simply because they want their money. This would be a stupid decision, and the government needs to make sure that it NEVER happens.
—Emma Follman, Malvern, PA

Because having net neutrality will ensure that all people who want to use the internet will be able to do so without having to pay extra. it also restricts the power of large cooperation who would benefit at the expense of the common person
—Bob George, College Station, TX

I'm disabled & cannot afford the prices charged by the big telecommunications companies plus we are NOT served by the cable companies out where we live. So if this goes through we will be screwed big time!
—Bob Thomas, Myrtle Creek, OR

The internet is the ultimate platform of democracy. With fair and equal access, everyone, regardless of social status and economic means, can be empowered by access to important information, exercise their first amendment right of free speech, use the internet to help advance themselves in society, among many other advantages. It is critical that politics, and especially that which is supported by dirty money from the ISP's, not sully this access. The folks who will be hurt the most are those in the lower levels of economic means, those who would like to innovate with internet-based start-ups, and the racial minorities. It would be a dereliction of duty for the FCC to allow the ISP's to control access to the open internet. It is profoundly hypocritical for political "liberals" to be among those fighting viciously to deny Americans the free and open access to the internet. Please uphold the principles of our democracy and support net neutrality.
—Sammy Elzarka, San Dimas, CA

As an educator, consumer and American I find this thinly disguised bit of pandering to big business disgusting and unconstitutional. I promise you I will be one of the first to sign onto any punitive action taken for this ridiculous over reach of the commissions power.
—Brandi Martin, Chicago, IL

I'm a retired Librarian. I understand the importance of reliable information and open access to that information for our democracy. Net neutrality--the equal playing field of opportunity that provides access to critical information for voters, students, care givers, and citizens of all categories--is the new bedrock of equal opportunity. More and more people in this country are seeing the negative impacts of catering to the rich, of allowing our democracy to devolve into plutocracy, of granting 'personhood' to corporations. The assault on net neutrality is just one more facet of that destructive onslaught by the 1%. If you wanted to find one way to wake up the American citizen, especially the younger generation, you couldn't have picked a better alarm clock. Net neutrality: the last stand.
—Carol Fitzgerald, Denver, CO

Its important because this is how we get our voice heard! Right now as I'm typing this i am using the free internet , what will happen in a few years if this actually happens?
—Danny, Oxnard, CA

I own a small business
—John Langton, Somerville, MA

it is the only way to have a level playing ground for any business large or small
—James Hartsell, Concord, NC

Net Neutrality is important to me because I believe in an equal and fair democracy. 50 years ago we eliminated discrimination against African Americans, the minority. Do you really want to repeat history, but this time against the majority?
—Celia Shapiro, Potomac, MD

To ensure the internet remains a equal public forum for innovation and access —Joshua Sierra, Los Angeles, CA

Neutrality is important to a free society and should not be allowed to be ruled by corporations. I think that the free market can determine who wins and who loses. I do not want ISP's to determine that for me!
—Robert Simon, Victoria, TX

Free speech, innovation, education, creativity, fair access and economic growth.
—Tracy Austin, Las Vegas, NV

I don't want to have to pay to use the internet even more than I do. Wifi and phone bills are expensive enough.
—Rachel Conklin, Cape Coral, FL

Democratization of the internet is paramount to keeping this country free. no one should have to pay more for certain 1's and 0's over others.
—Christophe Jammet, New York, NY

It is essential for equality & free speech in a democratic country.
—Carolyn Lamb, Santa Fe, NM

Internet should be an open resource, not a government controlled one.
—Casey Cahill, San Antonio, TX

Net neutrality is fair and common sense.
—Emily Selman, Denver, CO

The internet needs to remain open and equally accessible to all - period. No favoritism should be allowed for those who can afford to pay more —Steve, Mount Joy, PA

I already live a modest life and cannot afford all of the luxuries and even some of the necessities I desire. Net neutrality is what makes the internet not only a place of entertainment, but my primary source for meaningful education. Destroying net neutrality will not only make me more bored and angry, but also dumber, and the FCC would be responsible for the decline in not only mine, but the whole country's intelligence.
—Patrick Varela, Belleville, NJ

I want to be able to access the internet and be able to look up what I wish. The internet should be free and equal. Just like the United States says it is.
—Shelby Hughes, Georgetown, KY

I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.
—, Boulder, CO

Because I absolutely do not comply with the corporate world and the web needs to remain an open place to share and learn from. I do not want corporations to empede on my ability to figure out what matters to me. outrageous that Mr Wheeler dares asking. He must be getting a big chunk of $$$ from those corporations. NO, not acceptable. I do not have to pay for information. Those corporations wish to darken the place where most live. Greed is the most vile human trait. thank you
—Carole LY SING LAO, North Hollywood, CA

An internet connection is critical to my job, and also critical to my ability to learn new things. Throttling connections for people who can't pay will stifle creativity and imagination in a lot of people.
—Ben Link, Columbia, SC

It is a part of our freedoms, which are being taken from us almost daily. The government does not need to control us, our activities or our "speech". They need to protect our freedoms, not destroy them.
—Judy Link, Greenwood, SC

As a future internet entrepreneur and student, I want to have the same opportunities as the big companies. I believe that I have rights to connect and communicate equally —Christopher Araya Araya, ,

Cause it brings power to the people rather than those fucking money hoarding asshole tycoons.
—Dillon Green, Greer, SC

I work and play in the internet. I don't want other to determine what information is more important than other information.
—Mark Klein, Sterling Heights, MI

The internet is a free space for exchange of information among people. If companies are able to control the what websites people are able to access then only those with money have to right to speak, be heard and share their thoughts. This is wrong and not what the internet was created for.
—Chris Aiken, New York, NY

Dismantling net-neutrality is completely ridiculous and is another thinly veiled act of classism. If you do this, it will backfire.
—V, Philadelphia, PA

It's unjust to give a voice to only those who can afford it. Only you can vote to keep the doors open. Do the right thing for the global village and not just the wealthy privileged class.
—Kevin Velez, Jersey City, NJ

It protects my freedom of speech. The first amendment in the Bill of Rights, don't take that away from us.
—Victor Joel Valdez-Hidalgo, Fresno, CA

I don't understand how you can allow a company like Comcast who has zero ISP competition where I live that you've already allowed them to create tiered pricing for the Internet speed. There is nothing stopping Comcast from charging even more for those of us on the already slow lane at anytime and as many times as they choose. Our city split up arbitrarily many, many years ago between two ISP providers COX and COMCAST creating two monopolies because where you live determines what ISP you may sign up with for your internet. Tax payers payed for the initial internet with our tax dollars where only the military and universities had access. So, consumers paid for it with their taxes and now commercialization means that Corporations now control something they claim they invented which is an outright lie. My elderly aunt lives in a very rural town that has only one cable and one ISP provider. She cannot afford either one. There is only one wireless phone provider, Verizon. She cannot afford a wireless phone without assistance. These are also monopolies. 19 States have passed laws making it illegal for communities to build ISP networks providing better service and incredibly less cost. We cannot rely on the ongoing do nothing or do destructive things to consumers CONGRESS to pass any laws for Internet Neutrality, to break-up monopolies, to federally outlaw any laws passed at any lower level of government from allowing communities to build their own networks (ISP's). Why do does the commission speak about cable and internet providers as if they are not the same companies with huge monopolies? The same goes for wireless companies who have quite achieved total national monopoly (price fixing status), but are darn close. Remember that, we the tax payers originally paid for DARPANET and ARPANET without even knowing it unless we were members of the military in the latter 1960's or universities in the early 1970's. I want to address the two (R) commissioners who clearly have no clue as to the origins of the internet. You are both in the pocket of these companies and your absolute ignorance about the internet. For people who claim all "regulation" especially from the "government", do you really have the gall to accept a paycheck from the FCC a "regulatory" "governmental" agency. Stop taking our money for not doing the job you were hired to do. Do you have any idea how ridiculous you appeared on CSPAN? You are both complete and total hypocrites.
—Melinda Tharan, Tucson, AZ

Net neutrality is important because creating a slowlane for those unable or unwilling to pay for decent isp connection speeds is preposterous. it is a basic utility, as important as a basic home phone service or a running tap. allowing telecomunication companies to provide priority to particular websittes would create a huge mess, and would ultimately infringe on my 1st ammendment rights by selecting what content I get based upon what isp I'm using.
—Thomas Donovan, Beverly, MA

I believe the Internet is the most important force in both innovation and education in the modern world. I want to see it remain an open resource available to all.
—Daniel Miller, Elizabethtown, KY

Fairness and freedom.
—Carol Payne, Atlanta, GA

I use it all the time at wok and my children need to use it for school work at home.
—Helen Bisesi, Kennesaw, GA

I like innovation, and growth, and feel it is our best chance at creating positive change. The internet is one of the most valuable resource in my life. I have found an education, friends, my passion, and started building a company through it. The idea of breaking apart and selling the internet makes me sick. On the plus side if it gets too crazy something innovative will find a way around it.. Maybe an open source infrastructure. The internet is a rescource people will not allow to be tampered with. It may seem like this isn't true now, but when people feel the effects of this ruling attention will be directed towards fixing the problem, and human attention is the most powerful force on the planet. At some point we will all need to accept change instead of fighting it. Cable companies are not innovative, have no pulse on modern technology. They deserve to lose money, feel uncomfortable, and hopefully learn what is needed to succeed in todays market.
—Mike Lamentola, Grass Lake, MI

As a social media consultant offering services to clients, I fear that the impending threat to net neutrality will impact not only my business but consumers in general. The internet is crucial to many areas of life and threats to net neutrality will only squelch innovation, communication progress, while narrowing the scope and availability of the net to the few who will be able to afford price hikes and red tape. Telecom giants are now merging and the options for consumers are diminishing. A tiered internet structure will only worsen the already narrowed options for consumers. I don't want to see this happen and I'd like the FCC to prevent this from happening.
—Courtney, Tucker, GA

I am a web developer. If the FCC takes away certain rights, I won't be able to do my job to it's fullest extent. Not only would I have to charge my clients more for already expensive services, but those clients would also be forced to pay more to actually use the services I build for them. We all know that said service providers won't take the high road and just make a "slower lane" cheaper for those that can't afford the internet, they will make what we have more expensive and make something faster that's even more expensive cutting even more people out of the loop just to make a few extra bucks!
—Amanda Johnson, Waite Park, MN

Restriction of the flow of information in an age where misunderstanding and misinformation is so rampant will only exacerbate cultural divides and increase resentment. Additionally, those who support this will be [metaphorically] crucified during elections.
—Eric Owen, Orlando, FL

Forget who gave you money during your election. Forget who appointed you or any political, regulatory, or legislative agenda you may have. If you want to stay in your office, support of this bill is not an option.
—Tyler Owen, Eustis, FL

Because the internet should be equally accessible to everyone no matter what their economic status is.
—Carrie Brightman, Brooklyn, NY

Net Neutrality matters for anyone who believes that economic growth matters (driven by start-ups and entrepreneurs), education matters (the U.S. is behind most developed countries), innovation matters (keep this a strength for the U.S.!), freedom of speech matters (cornerstone of democracy even if I don't agree with you).
—Laura Farwell, Marquette, MI

Throttling access to online content that won't pay extra is nothing short of extortion. Don't give the telecom companies the power to do it. Keep the Internet open!
—Seth Argabright, Los Angeles, CA

I want the FCC to represent the people in this case and not the special interest groups and lobbyist. The internet was created with tax payers dollars, and needs to remain free for the progression of world communications and individual consumer choice/rights.
—Dave Campnell, Akron, OH

Its the most unbiased source of information. I have the freedom to see and choose any and all content that I wish to see for either myself or my family. Please don't take that freedom away from me.
—Nate Dailey, Platteville, WI

To me, net neutrality is one of the most critical issues our country currently faces. The Internet, and its open access for everyone, levels many playing fields across socio-economic strata. Now, threats to this open access are rampant, and many carriers already slow the speed of their data flow depending on the use, the user, and time. This two-tiered data speed structure will give the "haves" an even stronger advantage over the "have-nots." Why take this step backward when we have the technology to level the playing field with net neutrality? What will happen to Facetime and Skype communications? At a time when so many families are apart because of military service or because work has carried them far from home, eliminating inexpensive access to these online tools could splinter families even further. It's already happening now, as peer-to-peer file sharing and Internet video streaming face slowed streaming times. With this latest proposal, these amazing technologies could be curtailed even further if users can't afford to pay for faster streaming times. Plus, we already have such an information and education gap in this country between the rich and the poor. I see that gap widening if this two-tiered structure passes, which is unfortunate if we have the technology to help narrow the gap! Now, I understand the reasons carriers would want to charge some users more for their usage, especially if they use more data than the average bear. After all, the carriers are providing them with more data. I get that. What worries me is that net neutrality also involves the concept of non-discrimination, with no censoring. Under this new proposal, carriers could choose to slow download times or block competitors' apps or information. In a country that has a free speech constitutional amendment, which has been broadly applied, I see these developments as a direct attack on that free speech. Who wins with this two-tiered system? Big business, that's who! The big corporations, like AT&T, Comcast, Verizon, etc., will make more money as they collect higher fees from clients seeking faster download times, and exert more control over what information, apps, and sites to which end users have access. Who loses? Us, the average, middle-class and lower-class U.S. citizens who elected our government officials to protect our interests. Is this really the future you want for our country and our Internet? Please vote down this two-tiered nightmare and preserve net neutrality! Thank you for your consideration.
—Rebecca Plaza, Tracy, CA

As a person who has spent his entire life developing software for the internet, I demand that we keep last-mile operators from hijacking the network that we have all worked so hard to create.
—Josh Cragun, Minneapolis, MN

Net Neutrality is essential to societal and economic growth, not only within the US, but in relationship to international growth. Unbiased and, dare I say, even free, digital access is a human right. By limiting our digital access through taking away Net Neutrality you are not only infringing on and limiting our growth as race, but on our inherent right as human beings. The key to a better world is not to limit digital access, but to openly aid in the fight to provide it to all of humanity. Digital access in regards to Net Neutrality is no different than the right to an education.
—Crystal Montalvo, Woodstock, GA

It is important that all have equal access to internet.
—Estelle Block, Port Jefferson, NY

Freedom of information. When you allow ISP's to throttle and control what information I am allow to see you take away my freedom to learn. I would like to show my son informative videos on space and nature..oh but sorry, daddy can't afford to pay even more money to a money hungry company that is hell bent on monopolizing the I data sector. And how is this not ISP's just want to dissect and charge more? You stopped ATT from acquiring t-mobile but now they own dish....and now they're looking at a fantastic way to make ubsurd amount of money with out costing them anything just...because? Keep the internet open, fair and free.
—Kyle blake, Addison, TX

Because it should be free to all as it has been. Anything else creates a monopoly for Comcast, at&t, Verizon. We no longer have free TV. How much more can you take from the American people for big business and their CEO's
—Joanne Fish, North Grafton, MA

Net Neutrality is democratic and we need to care for everyone, not just the few.
—Katie Sherman, Brooklyn, NY

so the public can have a place where we can learn what is going on in our country and the world without bias, and disinfornation, but with truth!
—Kathy Barrett, Dunmore, PA

My parents couldn't afford a high speed internet connection when I was growing up, luckily we at least had dial up - I don't want the internet to only be for people who can afford it. The internet should be a public utility - it should be treated like a landline. The internet is for everyone, not just for the people who can fork over $70+ a month for the service from a cable provider who has no competition.
—Ichha Arora, Rancho Cucamonga, CA

Isn't it obvious?
—Ryan O'Quinn, Baton Rouge, LA

This proposed path would open the door to widespread discrimination online. America is supposed to be the land of equal opportunity, net-neutrality is anything but neutral. It would give Internet service providers the green light to implement a two-tiered Internet, with a fast lane for those who can afford it and a dirt road for the rest of us. This would be a disaster for startups, nonprofits and everyday Internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls. Bring Equality back!
—Andrew, Temecula, CA

ISPs are common carriers, and deserve to be treated as so, like all other Telecommunication services.
—Sarah Larara, Chesterfield, MO

I want equal access to opportunity and information. Handing over the internet to big corporations will cause the destruction of innovation and create a two tiered futile society.
—Marie Mckeeman, Bend, OR

I do not want more government intervention in my life nor do I wish for my internet provider to regulate what I can and cannot access. Internet access should be open and free.
—Amanda Swanson, ,

As an independent artist who uses the internet on a daily basis to promote my work, I feel like this law will only handicap my marketing and sales, and that is NOT acceptable & unfair to us indie artist. Please get rid of this unfair proposal and keep Net Neutrality REAL.
—Ashraf Dawod, Baltimore, MD

Freedom of Speech. No net throttling!
—Richard Borden, Maple Shade, NJ

The web is one of the last frontiers in which a small business could actually succeed and therefore one of the last ways for an individual from the lower class to rise to a higher class. This would crush even that.
—Isaac Sloan, SAINT GEORGE, UT

Every ISP should be classified as a common carrier. There is ONE internet! Not a fast one for those that can pay for it and the slow one for everyone else. I pay my ISP for access to the ENTIRE internet, not what they 'allow' me to access. If there were not local monopolies in most cities, the 'free market' would allow me to choose another ISP that does not segregate the internet. Since that is not the case in many cities, we are not free to just switch to another provider. I, as a consumer and a tech employee, am tired of seeing my monthly bill increase while my internet speeds continue to slow down.
—Jason Feather, Mahwah, NJ

This important to me for a variety of reasons, not the least of which is access to information. If you go with the axiom that "Knowledge is Power", this form of regulation and control is tantamount to taking Power away from the People, which is NOT a good thing in any manner, shape, or form. People should be able to use the internet to educate themselves any time, any place, on any topic (not to mention use their hard-earned money to make online purchases). Period.
—Rodger Weir, Baltimore, MD

Its about personal rights to millions of people. I feel that many of our liberties are being stolen, this being one of them.
—Amber Britt, Eagle Mountain, UT

freedom
—Steve Engelmayer, Saint Paul, MN

The internet is a commonplace for information distribution. Enforcing throttled connections to the highest paying consumers stifles creativity and goes against the principles of the implied 'neutrality.'
—Matthew Beaudreault, Navarre, FL

Because it allows communication to all people throughout the world.
—Richard Ramirez, New York, NY

I don't want to lose communication
—Yolanda BRigs, ,

Keeping the Net open to everyone at the same level is imperative if we are going to continue to be a society based on equality. We are slipping away from that quickly, and this is one way to help curb that.
—Paul Reyburn, Saint Paul, MN

I can see no way in which consumers would benefit equally from this measure. It would serve to create a tiered system that can too easily be manipulated in favor of corporate profit and control over real service to the customer base and free use of the internet. The internet should not be sold!! Preserve REAL NET NEUTRALITY!!
—David Coral, Minneapolis, MN

Freedom of speech, freedom of information, freedom in the general sense of not being controlled.
—James Michael Lockhart, Dana Point, CA

The internet is one of the few reserves left to people when the government does not recognize or serve their interests as a democratic force. To infiltrate the internet with this concept that the more you can pay, the more of a voice you have, is damaging to a contemporary forum for democracy. Net neutrality should be an American value.
—Paige Bradley, Brooklyn, NY

We need net neurtrality so there are no issues with content delivery. Everyone from small start ups to large corporations have the same bandwidth to send their information along. To do anything different is to stop the basic philosophy of what the internet is for--information for everyone, equally.
—Melanie Ulrich, Saint Paul, MN

Basic needs--and internet access is now a basic need--should not be controlled by private enterprise with no thought for the public good. In the best of all possible worlds, utilities and communications services such as the internet would be owned by the people who use them, sort of like a cooperative. At the very least, the federal government should enact SUBSTANTIVE laws that protect the public interest.
—, Washington, DC

Many countries have a faster internet than Americans do. We don't need a fast lane for those who can afford it. We need a faster internet so that we can all continue to be treated equally, namely a fast lane for everyone, including making sure it is possible for the next great idea to be successful by not being relegated to the to the Slow lane.
—Andreas Klute, Playa Del Rey, CA

Because there are already enough ways for big business to push out smaller entities on the Internet; they don't need another one that fundamentally reclassifies the internet in their favor.
—Desiree Taylor, Jamaica Plain, MA

Net Neutrality isn't a privilege. It is a right. Ending Net Neutrality is ending the chance of success for the underdog. Mom and Pop shops online will not be able to compete. Neither will musicians who are trying to make a name for themselves. Net Neutrality is American. It helps the underdog succeed. It helps the little guy have a chance at winning. It is freedom of information; freedom to share your knowledge and freedom to learn. Ending Net Neutrality is unamerican. Please, fight to keep a real net neutrality.
—Marilyn Ann Bow, Sterling, VA

It will keep the internet more accessable for everyone, and curtail the extent to which those with power and money gain increasing control.
—Dawn Nelson, Jamaica Plain, MA

Because everybody should be treated equally in terms of internet speed. I dont even know why this is in question..
—Colby Oldroyd, Salt Lake City, UT

I'm a college student. I need access to a fast and open web for everything about my academic and personal life. I already pay enough for school. Why should I pay more for my internet content?
—Ankit, Lake Oswego, OR

it helps me get the information and the tools I need. if passed I will not take the fast lane or the dirt road. I already left cable. I know I can definitely live without.
—Brandon Mullins, Norwalk, OH

So that people aren't being discriminated against —Ryan Enright, Mays Landing, NJ

Truth, Justice, and the American way? How about those?
—Olivia Destandau, oakland, CA

Net Neutrality allows my voice to be heard.
—Tara Kerksick, Festus, MO

It makes the internet fair and accecable to everyone! Now I may not live in america but I know what is right and what is wrong STOP THIS
—Louis, ,

Corporations should not be able to limit what we read, or how fast we read it. I believe it falls into the free speech category, although written. Speed is a necessity - and as technology improves, speed will improve at relatively little cost to the providers. Congress and the FCC has already let cable companies run rampant over people (why does BASIC cable cost $100/month?) ... don't let the internet follow suit.
—Ann McFarlane, Seattle, WA

As young citizen of the grand/o great developing times I feel that net neutrality is an innovation which shall shape a prosperous world of creativity that is to come. I will never stand by while greed is involved.
—William B. Mace, Brooklyn, NY

You can see where the Internet is going “Today”, not tomorrow. Not after Comcast plays nice a couple more years to get the FCC’s blessing for it's take over of Time Warner and then have a monopoly to your Internet connection. This is “Today”, real time. Europe passed Net Neutrality so the telcos and cable companies would not use it as a cash cow. Those governments took a lot of flack from the telco's and cable companies, but went ahead and did what was right for the people, not corporations.
—Drew Stoiberg, Woodland Hills, CA

Because I'm a poverty stricken, anti-social, agoraphobic
—Mike, Indianapolis, IN

Becuase the opposite is unchecked corporate greed.
—Brian worthington, Danvers, MA

Because it's important for EVERYONE. Duh. It's dangerous and insidious to allow information only to those that can afford it.
—Kim Carrier, Minneapolis, MN

Allowing ISPs (who are already monopolistic) control over content would force small sites, businesses, and even non-profit sites to go out of business or pay exorbitant amounts of money to ISPs.
—Anna Matthews, Palo Alto, CA

Can we be honest?
—Ricky Bakosh, Oswego, IL

I don't want to have to pay for something that's been free since it's creation.
—Dylan leffler, Laguna Niguel, CA

Net neutrality is important to me because it allows us as Americans to have access to the internet. If this freedom is taken away, I fear what's to come next. Internet and technology should be available and truthful for all because it allows humans to be educated in a way that prevents oppression.
—Chloe Filippinetti, Phoenix, AZ

Access to information (the internet) without discrimination must be equal. It is a very slippery slope before one's economic access will dictate the type of internet experience they have--this should not be.
—Nigel Philip, Springfield Gdns, NY

To give the millenniums a chance to change the world for the better.
—Haley Cope, Kennesaw, GA

I care about the internet and the lower class and I don't think people should be forced to pay for something they can't afford
—Robert Kuehne, Branford, CT

Net Neutrality is a platform for incredible innovation, both creatively and economically as new businesses and companies are able to grow and technology advances with incredible new ideas that have the power to reshape the world.
—Logan Reynolds, College Station, TX

it is the key to artists and other creative people's livelihoods
—Jamie Paratore, Santa Cruz, CA

We must preserve the equality of the internet - we must protect our access to information to have any chance of gaining equality and justice in our American Dream.
—Sarah Hastings, Madison, WI

There will be long term complications with selling the internet piece by piece. It will hurt small companies and consumers and only benefits large corporations. Keep the largest media source open!
—Whitney D Lomax, Layton, UT

Because the internet is one of the last remaining places that are safe from favoritism and discriminatin.
—Brenda Sanders, Baltimore, MD

Freedom from ISPs creating a pay-to-play internet.
—Allen Hsieh, Milpitas, CA

Net neutrality promotes a free market. If services rendered directly compete with services offered by internet providers (ie Netflix and cable television) then the market should adjust for that competition. Allowing providers to control competition in affect creates a crowding out situation and if severe enough, a monopoly.
—Brian Maulding, Sugar Grove, IL

I don't want American's paranoia, monopolistic, capitalistic, anti competitiveness to allow a few power-hungry, unregulated, boys-club-millionaires and/or paranoid militants, undemocratically seize power to control the internet, which will open the doors to corruption, manipulation, further censoring, black-listed-spying, extortion, and ultimately removal of the worlds basic rights of personal and commercial freedom on a medium that America no longer has sole ownership or the right to tamper with. This is ultimately a G20 matter. It's internationally culturally insensitive that yet again Americans believe that USA is the "world" and the decisions they make will have no impact on anyone else on the planet earth. This legislation will open the doors of internal legal precedence and completely unnecessary implementation of new technology solely for the purposes of legalising internet traffic monitoring and tampering under the false guise of business. If the fat cats of America want a fast lane - build your own dam fibre optic intranet service! No new broadband legislation is required. No monitoring is required. No tampering is required. The GFC which American business leaders and politicians caused through anti-regulation and immoral practices is an excellent example of the incompetence of considering America being ethical model business leaders. Homeland security, NSA, and now this? Without an open internet, who is policing the enforcers? The FCC is manipulating us as they themselves are being manipulated. This is simply not democratic at all.
—Dean Goddard, Winmalee,

The U.S. has one thing going for it in today's global economy and that is innovation. Don't let the big corporations take that away from us. A free and open internet is vital to our economy and public discourse. Our entire economy and way of life depends on it.
—Christian Lynch, Charlotte, NC

Because I have the Need and the rights to communicate with out a Caste system
—Yolanda, ,

Internet shouldn't be reclassified. The mergers of telecom services should lower the cost of internet but I see only excuses from these telecom giants to increase the cost. Net Neutrality for the monopolies.
—Mary Ann Snellings, Lake Alfred, FL

If you take down NN then that means the less fortunate will have to pay fees they can't afford in order to get onto websites they use daily, such as tumblr, facebook, or even YouTube. I'm not sure if it's because you people are greedy and stingy about money, but pretty everyone else in the world hates the FCC and their decisions to change our way of life just to make some money.
—Sean Carroll, Carmel, IN

Free exchange of ideas is the founding guideline of the internet and should not be restricted.
—Terry Boyd, Atlanta, GA

It's the future of America
—Jack M Morrison, Costa Mesa, CA

Just another set of money bags trying to control something. We should be getting tired of this. This is our net and we need to keep it. Look at other countries so far ahead... of us. we allow this crazy keep net neutrality reclassify and get the net every where and speed that stuff up!! ex. see the gig from Chattanooga Tennessee.
—Levi, Sidney, OH

Working in software industry, it's very important to have neutral Internet for innovation.
—Ruchir Amin, Fremont, CA

its the last vestige of free speech.
—Matthew Peterson, Belleville, IL

As a disabled person the internet brings the world to my doorstep. Please don't allow corporations the power to fast track highest bidder. Thank you.
—Nathan Maxwell, Sarasota, FL

ONE COVERT NOME HARPP GETS OLIGARCHY!
—Hitlerson War MacHT Bunker Generator Capitola Superman Is ! and Homey, Capitola, CA

Net Neutrality is the new 1st amendment! Internet providers should not be able to discriminate against smaller companies and should be treated more like common carriers! A common carrier is legally bound to carry all passengers or freight as long as there is enough space, the fee is paid, and no reasonable grounds to refuse to do so exist. A common carrier that unjustifiably refuses to carry a particular person or cargo may be sued for damages. Unless you want the whole of the America People weighing down on your shoulders make the right decision for the internet users in America! Thank You, Eric Ballestero
—Eric Ballestero, Ventura, CA

Net Neutrality is essential for a free flowing internet that keeps creativity and innovation alive instead of stifling it.
—Jeff Peters, Conneaut, OH

I work in research and need a high performance free and open network to properly utilize nih funding to do good science.
—Andrew Box, Mission, KS

Information wants to be free. The internet is a vast library of every kind of knowledge that would destroy this country if most could not afford to access it. Then again, the uneducated are easier to control.
—Taylor Sloan, Vanderwagen, NM

The internet is the only place where everyone globally has an equal voice, it should remain this way, belonging to the people, preference should not be given to those based on their monetary value.
—Tim Forshaw, ,

For education, a global community, freedom, world peace, and to help prevint monopalies.
—Andy Bunch, Wartburg, TN

Im an artist and the internet allows me and those with similar talents to have our work displayed for the world to see. Sites like Instagram, Tumblr, Etsy and Deviant art are not only promotional tools but provide a creative community. If Net Neutrality is threatened the online art community will take a large hit. Artists usually don't have extra money to make sure their home grown websites run as fast as those from major corporations.
—Jennifer Belott, Rantoul, IL

As a proponent of free speech and the open sharing of ideas and opinions, I fear that creating a two-tier Internet in which telecom giants can decide which sites, apps, and other Web-based content is more accessible than others would effectively silence the voice of individual citizens online in favor of major corporations and wealthy individuals. It's the government's responsibility to protect the rights of its citizens, not cater to the demands of corporate entities. Please reclassify internet service providers as common carriers as to prevent a cooling of our free speech and assembly. I appreciate your consideration. Best, Susan Jennings
—Susan Jennings, York, PA

Freedom to choose without being exploited for everything we're worth.
—Abby R., York, PA

Equal internet for all!!
—, Twining, MI

Net Neutrality has become an integral part of our democratic system. Like free speech it needs to be protected.
—Jay Mead, Hartland, VT

It's important on a social justice level, not just on economic principles, to keep it open for those who need it.
—Jacqueline J. Basse, Brooklyn, NY

So that it remains as available to everyone as possible.
—Darci Barrett, Great Falls, VA

The internet is for everyone. It's like air. Wait, don't give big corporation any ideas with that analogy! Keep the internet open and free.
—Marla Thomson, Boston, MA

Sounds like an eventual rip-off
—Bernard Ungerbern5@gmx.com, Malverne, NY

Net Neutrality is important because it prevents the Internet Service Providers from abusing their small monopolies. It will prevent them from making deals with content providers that will guarantee a good connection to their service while throttling they competition. It will make sure that I am never suddenly unable to enjoy some of the services I pay for and the content I enjoy because I am priced out into a lower tiered plan.
—Raul Rivera, Columbia, SC

I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.
—Protean Acumen, ,

This is the most important communications medium in the history of the world. To move forward with your proposals is to sell out the medium. It's to sell out mankind.
—Eric Peterson, Cary, NC

Keep free speech forever!
—Sandy Sobanski, New York, NY

Enough is Enough! STOP the FCC, You can't control everything! What you want to control our money and our mind too?
—Cammesa Plummer, West Orange, NJ

Telecom companies charge exorbitant amounts of money for basic internet and television services. The only benefit to destroying net neutrality would be to allow companies to charge public users more, and these companies clearly already have a monopoly on our business. If our government is serious about protecting citizens' rights to access information regardless of income or other assets, they need to strike this legislation down. Please do not allow the internet to be skewed in the favor of corporations over the citizens of our country. Those of us without means will suffer if this legislation is enacted; as usual, telecom companies will be fine, either way. There is an observable and proven inequality of access to resources that has arisen largely because of the freedom that is granted to companies at the expense of individuals. Please do not let the internet be yet another area in which our government has failed us.
—Jennifer Cuzzocreo, Baltimore, MD

Because open access is crucial to all our lives.
—Kathy Simmons, Aiken, SC

Information is a right for all and not those with more money then the rest. Any kind of categorization of priority would create a hindrance on freedom of speech.
—Jon Nowak, Albany, NY

I work in software and have seen over the course of 30 years the tremendous benefits of the Internet for myself, my industry, my community and the global community. The potential of humanity tied to a free internet are is incalculable, I don't want to see that potential compromised for the questionable benefit of the very few.
—Brian May, New York, NY

I'm sick of this - I can barely afford healthcare and now the government wants to create this two-tier internet system? Do you realize how difficult you're making lives are for people who can't throw out cash at a drop of the hat?
—Mary Dawson, Auburn, AL

The internet should be free!
—Brennan Hartich, San Diego, CA

The internet has become a vital tool for all of us - big and small. This is yet another ploy to favor the rich. We are losing our democratic foundations in so many ways in this country. We are not far from an aristocracy at this point.
—Sherry Hartmann, Bartlett, IL

Net Neutrality is important to me because I rely on a fast, secure internet connection for my school work; as do many other college students in the United States.
—, Northbrook, IL

I do not want an oligarchy to control 90+ per cent of the market. Price fixing is unnecessary and detrimental to us all.
—Patrick Chu, Northbrook, IL

An open Internet is the only way to keep large corporations from suffocating new enterprising businesses. The proposed rules are biased towards those entities with the ability to buy access and guaranteed speed.
—Duane Baker, Powell, OH

Everyone should have an equal chance of success
—Ryan Yau, Naperville, IL

equality for all
—Nancy Gangler, Minneapolis, MN

The Internet is the one place we can freely share ideas, where individual s can share their voices and communicate at the same level as the corporations. We need to preserve this open international free forum!
—Carina Hizliok, Malden, MA

It makes the internet accessible to EVERYONE
—Louis, ,

The internet is a marketplace of free ideas. Money should not decide which ideas get through.
—Evan Conn, Alpharetta, GA

Becasue I care about the Internet as it is today.
—Jake Reece, Smyrna, GA

The internet is the ultimate platform of democracy. With fair and equal access, everyone, regardless of social status and economic means, can be empowered by access to important information, exercise their first amendment right of free speech, use the internet to help advance themselves in society, among many other advantages. It is critical that politics, and especially that which is supported by dirty money from the ISP's, not sully this access. The folks who will be hurt the most are those in the lower levels of economic means, those who would like to innovate with internet-based start-ups, and the racial minorities. It would be a dereliction of duty for the FCC to allow the ISP's to control access to the open internet. It is profoundly hypocritical for political "liberals" to be among those fighting viciously to deny Americans the free and open access to the internet. Please uphold the principles of our democracy and support net neutrality.
—Marie B Elzarka, Azusa, CA

it is the backbone of a democracy to have a free and open system of communication. we're in a democracy not an oligarchy.
—Margaret Wallace, San Francisco, CA

This literally give Service Provides such as Verizon, At & t, the power to wipe out small internet business or bully them into turning over their businesses at bottom dollar. Were legalizing extortion.
—Christopher Sessa, Mesa, AZ

I make a decent living, but just becasue someone makes more than the next should not determine that they are more worthy of faster speeds. This goes back to class and people with less aren't worth much.
—B Howard, Woodstock, GA

I think closing the internet would endanger innovation. I completely support keeping start-up companies open access to the internet.
—Richie Cyprus, Sacramento, CA

The whole internet should be equally accessible to all and free from corporate abuse.
—James Roberts, Quincy, IL

Medical information needs to be accessible!
—Carla Eisenstein, Somerville, MA

Equal access to information is an essential part of democracy in the internet age. Allowing large corporations to dictate access to online content is an affront to our right to free speech and pushes the U.S. even more firmly towards being an oligarchy
—Elana Gilbert, Houston, TX

Its something every person should be free to do its free speech it's the voice of the generation and if it starts with the Internet who says our speech isn't next —Carl P Bonafede, Seaford, NY

we consider these truths to be self-evident
—Aerie Ward, Santa Barbara, CA

Because without it the creation of new ideas will be stifled
—Patrick Nugee, ,

Its the one form of true freedom we have. It's there for many things. Communication/Education/Entert ainment. Once this is blocked. True freedom will also be taken away. It will be like paying for oxygen.
—Andrew Ramirez, Glendale, CA

I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service. The internet is fine the way it is. Protect our first amendment rights and throw this proposal in the trash. We demand nothing less than REAL net neautrality. Stop lobbying for big corporations.
—, Baltimore, MD

Please pass rules/regulations/laws classifying internet providers as common carriers in order to keep the internet open and free.
—Pat Kirk, Fremont, CA

I think I, and everyone, has the right to this.
—Casey Browning, Granger, IN

The FCC has proposed rules that would break the open Internet. This proposed path would open the door to widespread discrimination online. It would give Internet service providers the green light to implement a two-tiered Internet, with a fast lane for those who can afford it and a dirt road for the rest of us. This would be a disaster for startups, nonprofits and everyday Internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls. I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.
—Jeremy Sphinx, ,

Because I am a literate citizen and a user of the internet, who doesn't want to see prices increase while quality, access, and communicative connectivity all decrease.
—Lauren Sleator, Tucson, AZ

To preserve a free and open Internet.
—, Elk Grove, CA

Everybody deserves equal access to free speech- regardless of their socioeconomic status.
—Jessica Pedersen, Eastpointe, MI

The internet shouldn't be selectively priced by how it is used. This would only create a class biased system of internet use where the affluent could have access to the more premier services and the poor would be denied access. If the United States is actually interested in equality and freedom, it would never consider such measures.
—Jane Carmack, Fairdealing, MO

Competition and cost. Regulation should be about protecting our interests from corporate interests -- not the other way around.
—Roger McCluskey, Kimberling City, MO

net neutrality is democracy. comcast, att. time warner. all of these companies soak the consumer. outrageous increase in costs, just because they can use leverage that you have offered them. stop. keep the internet free and open. this is absolutely unacceptable. KEEP NET NEUTRALITY.
—Jeanne F, Oakland, CA

The internet has become the primary means of communication in the world. Giving control and favored access to rich corporations is just another sample of the incredible corruption in our government.
—Elaine Bletz, Columbus, OH

We are loosing so many of our freedoms and liberties in our country to the interests of corporate greed mongers. Americans are loosing their love of their country because it is on a daily basis, becoming more and more unrecognizable. Please choose the stand with the American people, not private interests.
—Michael Rubio, Salinas, CA

When I pay an ISP for my internet service, I am paying for data. Any data that I choose. I am using them as a gateway, not as a "Content provider" for specific media or information that has a higher "value" and is then slowed down or sped up depending on if their company can line their pockets with more money.
—David Knapp, Dallas, TX

most don't seem to understand that the way we use the internet is no longer just about surfing the web. It's more and more likely that instead of buying a physical copy of a computer game, I will choose to buy & download it, legally, through Steam or some other game service. Some of these files are 50gb+. Yes, I'm talking about games, but this is what movies and tv shows will be like. We will pay for and download them legally, not pay a ridiculous amount of money for cable service that gives us content we have no interest in. Denying this just means you are against the consumer and for the big cable companies
—Kal Leonard, San Dimas, CA

I believe our very democracy is at stake.
—Susan M. Blubaugh, Milford, NJ

The FCC has proposed rules that would break the open Internet. As a person who has little money this would affect my daily life. I use internet for just about everything whether it be recreation or work, I rely on high speed internet with access to high quality streams and etc. If I needed to pay more it would make my life extremely hard. I CANNOT afford these tolls and trying to start a business would end in failure unless I had all this money that larger corporations have. You are literally charging for an american necessity. Most Americans need access to certain parts of the internet without it being restricted by speed and quality, and by tolls and fees for what you deem as extras. I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.
—John Johnston, Florence, MA

ISP are common carrier and should not have the right to discriminate and interfere with a free and open Internet. Net neutrally must be included in the constitution for this to NEVER happen again. Also, the FCC in its present form is a cancer that must be terminated immediately.
—Ramon Zarat, ,

The internet is my means of watching tv programs and movies and my method of communicating with friends and learning everyday.
—Kathleen Branton, Ellensburg, WA

BUCK THE GREED!
—Mr. James Patrick Meehan, Fort Lauderdale, FL

The internet must be reclassified as a public utility, accessible to all without regard to our ability to pay. Equal access and free speech must be preserved for everyday Internet users as well as startups and nonprofits.
—Nancy Maneely, Tucson, AZ

Without net neutrality, information will inevitably be censored. Net neutrality should be a given.
—Matt Dalton, Southlake, TX

I hate the idea of a two-tiered internet, because it inhibits the amount of freedom start-ups and nonprofits have on the internet. It will mean that new companies will not be able to compete with all the big ones.
—Aahlad Madireddy, Flower Mound, TX

TO preserve an open internet without favoritism to large telecom companies.
—Ann Smith, Huntsville, AL

The regular middle class internet user who can't afford the ramped up prices of the ISPs vision of the internet, and the startups/small businesses who will be hurt or destroyed by not paying the big bucks like the companies already established
—Jacob Speicher, Cresco, PA

ISPs are common carriers, plain and simple. Their manipulation of loopholes to gain more profit for what is already a monopoly needs to stop.
—Bret Van Horn, Washougal, WA

Net Neutrality allows for the internet to stay as an open forum for people to speak their mind , create new and unique content, start innovative businesses and communicate and network with millions of other people that they normally would not be able to connect with. I believe that getting rid net neutrality not only destroy these aspects of the internet , but also stifle any prospects of any new innovations or businesses unless they are bought or acquired by a big corporation. I don't believe that trying to control the internet by trying to change it into the "New Version of Cable" by which the internet companies can pick and choose what you watch, how fast you can watch it or whether or not you can even watch it at all! I think that in destroying net neutrality will lead down a slippery slope that will spell the doom of the internet as we know it.
—Bryce Robinson, McDonough, GA

I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband access as a Title II common carrier. Furthermore, the new rules should explicitly ban the practice of implementing 'fast lanes' and/or throttling connections for any reason. Finally, the aforementioned caveats should equally apply to wireless (mobile) broadband as well.
—Jason Horwath, Homer Glen, IL

Net neutrality is important to me because what some ISPs are doing is unfair. The internet should be a place where everyone can come together and enjoy content regardless of importance.
—Paul Debski, Orland Park, IL

Freedom and saving money. It appears these days, America's number 1 goal is to INCREASE debt by taking away our freedom of choice. Don't you remember when TV was free? Now we have to PAY for it! Insane! The FCC has allowed ATT to strip our freedom away from us. Give it back!!! Thanks for standing up for us :-)
—Andria May, Fairview Heights, IL

We must keep Net Neutrality in order to allow freedom of invention and allowing the "little man" a level playing field to compete with big corporations. Greed is killing this country. Maintaining Net Neutrality may very well be the key to our children's future success and ability to compete in the world market place.
—Dana Routh, Winston Salem, NC

Free information resource —Jose Raborg, Brandon, FL

the world needs free internet trade
—Sebastian De Dios, Passaic, NJ

Running my small business is online, how can I innovative and grow to get my name out there without the internet?
—Jacqueline Charak, Highland Park, IL

Net Neutrality is important because internet access has become a basic modern necessity and needs to be treated as such.
—John Michels, Sedona, AZ

Net Neutrality is the only way to protect our rights to connect and communicate from corporate abuse.
—Anne Wharton, Austin, TX

Being disabled and on a fixed income, I have been able to educate myself online when access to traditional methods of education were not available to me.
—Tonja Peterson-Wendt, Ashland, NE

open creative connection, collaboration and inspiration make the world a better place.
—Alyssa Szarkowski, Minneapolis, MN

we are losing everything, our education sucks, getting a reasonable job is close to impossible, actualy getting our voices heard in the government will never happen, the government takes as much of our money as they can, and now you want to let the internet get ruined beyond repair. Please don't do this —Alden Lofquist, Alamo, CA

The internet has been the most powerful force for democracy in history. It's unacceptable to further the digital divide by giving corporations control over this public utility and resource.
—Kristin Lawton, denver, CO

I am part of the working poor! I need the internet to help better myself so I won't away's be scraping by. Also corporations have gotten to so big, this is just one more step toward becoming a third world country!!
—Toni Hansen, Sacramento, CA

The internet should be available equally to ALL, not to the few giant businesses that will only create a monopoly!
—Jamie Maloney, Grass Valley, CA

I use the internet and this is unfair...
—Brandon, ,

Because I use it everyday for entertainment, education and communicating with family and friends.
—Jesus Gonzalez, Newberg, OR

Net Neutrality allows an open Internet and allows the users to dictate what information should be flowing through it. And not allow large companies to force upon us what it thinks are the privileged services based on deep pockets.
—William Parks, Santa Monica, CA

The way the U.S. economy is right now so many people are struggling to keep a roof over their heads and food on their plate. The unemployment rate is skewed and doesn't reflect the correct amount of people with little or no income as it only shows those on unemployment. Many of us are using the internet to make an income or supplement our income by selling items on the internet. Whether we've purchased from wholesalers or are making the product ourselves. We are trying to rebuild America to what it was by being entrepreneurs as there aren't enough companies hiring. This is a whole new way for the United States to grow economically and allow people to support themselves. Net Neutrality has to stay in place for the good of the United States economy. If the big telecom giants rule and are allowed to create a two-tiered internet IT will be the downfall of our economy. I like many other people will then be out of any chance for an income, be homeless, without a means for food and will have to resort to being on unemployment and all other governmental assistance. This is much bigger than just the telecom giants greed, it is the BIG picture for the U.S. economy that has to be seen. This would be a monopoly, discrimination at its highest form and the devastation of the U.S. economy. Please do not let this happen.
—Karen Y. Elo, Canyon Country, CA

It's a freedom. A voice. A connection.
—Melanie Reller, Cincinnati, OH

Freedom of speech !!!
—Joseph M. McCall, Seattle, WA

i am against discrimination of any kind. In my mind one one owns the internet.
—Paris Davis, Lawrenceville, GA

I use the internet for a multitude of things - including business related reasons. It's disgusting that instead of looking for ways to cut costs, the rich are trying to get richer. I can only spread my paycheck so far. And it's not right to discriminate ultimately against the end users because the costs will be passed on to us.
—Virginia Hendricks, Washington, PA

I pay a lot for utlities,my house and those "necessities" but please don't let the same happen to my entertainment. Thanks for listening.
—Dan Garcia, Aurora, IL

Small business owner.
—Erin Stimac, Crestwood, KY

To take away the freedom of expression and filter my right to hear and be heard is an attack on my civil liberties which violates everything which America as a nation stands for. This is a country founded on the principle of "by the people, for the people" not "by the elite, for the wealthy." To censor the internet in any way, up to and including limiting access thereto, is an attack on my first amendment rights and should be treated as such.
—Joshua Mark Michniewicz, North Port, FL

The federal government needs to stop taxing the american people.
—Donna Yates, Hebron, KY

Because the internet was created to be a free and open exchange of ideas. Not something a former corporate shrill could come in and charge for so his former employers can get even more money for awful service. This is a travesty and should have never even made it this far.
—Alan Lawson, Gainesville, FL

Just say no to censorship and discrimination!
—Michele Lea, Frankfort, KY

The internet is supposed to an unbiased place and it should not be possible for an ISP to control what data a user has access to at what speed. Defend Net Neutrality.
—Toran Richards, ,

Net neutrality means equality and fairness. The proposed rules unfairly prioritizes profit over people. The United States is supposed to be a government of, by and for the people.
—Stuart Tanquist, Des Moines, IA

Protecting the competitive nature of internet business by preventing "fast lanes" is key to innovation in the future.
—Nathan Phillips, Myrtle Beach, SC

it just fucking does ass hole
—Kimberly Moore, Purcell, OK

The internet should remain a platform for free speech, and be accessible to all: the US should declare the internet a telecommunications network. Mega corporations should not be allowed to fabricate scarcity (creating 'faster lanes') for those who can afford to use; this will crush equal access and free speech on the WWW.
—Lori Chilefone, Eau Claire, WI

It is matter of free speech and discrimination.
—Shawn Carney, Trenton, NJ

It's important to preserve net neutrality so that everyone can continue to learn, share and grow together.
—Elizabeth Gorn, Brooklyn, NY

Net Neutrality ensures that myself, my family and loved ones could continue to enjoy the freedom of choice I have for my home and entertainment purposes. If I choose to play my games online or offline, (via Steam, etc.) I should have that right knowing that I paid for those products and services provided to me. If I don't see something interesting on tv or the radio at my location; I have my iTunes, I have youtube I have other choices out there to choose from If I so wish. It's manageable for myself and my family to afford this kind of freedom from our service provider, including our other financial responsibilities. If what you are proposing should be become a reality, that would offer only preferential treatment to those that have a more successful lifestyle, financial or otherwise. It's one thing to want to give the right to service providers to regulate and control their customers viewership and usage of their service, but it's another thing entirely if they themselves aren't regulated. If this passes, it will only be the first of many steps downwards for people who DEPEND on their content for their viewers and subscribers. But please also understand that with every action that is taken in what would appear to be a positive for the Service Providers, there will also be Negative Consequences as well. If more people learn of what is at stake for their future involving the internet, they will also know that it could very well be the end of their involvement with it. Higher prices, railroading people to a single or few means of entertainment or internet usage via websites and etc, will mean a STAGGERING loss of customers and longer term reproccusions. I urge you and those you are affiliated with, to PLEASE consider all the options available to you and us, the customers the viewers, the ones the companies and YOU depend on, for a possibly better or at least a mutually agreeable path for all of us to equally tread, just as Net Neutrality intended all along. Though I may only represent myself and those close to me through my own voice and opinion, I also represent a very large and surprisingly receptive group of individuals whom unfortunately do not speak out as much as they should or get involved as much as they should. Thank you for your time and consideration for what I had to say and hope for a more peaceful and more educated learning experience from this.
—Clinton Glassey, Cordova, TN

The internet belongs to everyone, get your hands off it!
—, ,

Big companies do not have the right to restrict the freedom of the internet.
—Carolyn Wagner, Philadelphia, PA

I would be out of work online sales would not be possible under this —Kelly Neddo, Jacksonville, FL

I use internet for everything from school projects and education to purchases. Please keep it neutral. It makes life simpler and what used to take hours looking up in books and making phone calls now only takes a few minutes. In our fast pace lifestyle, it is necessary to save time any way we can. Technology has advanced enough to keep it neutral with everyone and it needs to be kept that way.
—Jenna Pitts, Moss Point, MS

Because the Internet should not be regulated. The Internet is one of the most amazing things to have happened in the past 25 years and we should not toy with it
—Matthew Wentworth, Allston, MA

The defining idea behind the internet was to be able to freely communicate across the entire globe. I can understand having to pay an ISP to maintain the lines so this service is upheld but allowing bigger companies to pay to muscle out the competition goes against everything even the capitalism that makes them want to make this change in the first place. What right have they to do this to a system they didn't even create!?
—Mr. Michael George, Margate,

Because it is FAIR and RIGHT.
—Laurie MacAllister, Jersey City, NJ

How could it be not? It's critical to anyone who uses the internet. Listen to the technology companies and not just the organizations that seek to exploit citizens for profit.
—Brian Moore, Purcell, OK

I use the internet on a daily basis, but simply could not afford to pay more than I do for it
—Brian Gardner, Colchester, CT

Somewhere somehow discrimination must be stopped.....this is just another "give big business all the rights to "rape" us" Just do what's right for the American people for once.....
—Paula Thompson, Talent, OR level playing field is the foundation ethic of our founding fathers ....

—Geoffrey McCabe, Hollywood, CA

Freedom of expression, innovative new business ideas, connecting people
—Todd Lyles, Nashville, TN

As a small business owner, I depend on the internet for my living. This change could destroy my livelihood.
—Debbie Martens, Flint, MI

My internet already being limited in bandwidth as it is, we don't need any more of that problem anywhere.
—Kyle Herrmann, Caro, MI

The internet is a place where, for better or worse, free speech is always allowed. For small companies who need bandwidth to get their message out, having to pay their isp in order to have a chance to compete with large companies is wrong. ISP's are already being paid twice for their services and since they have a monopoly in their area no one has a choice to argue their rules; why should they be allowed to ask for more money from a third source. We as a country are being artificially held back versus the rest of the world in connectivity; why would any isp improve their service if they can just steal more money from companies. We need to set rules and guidelines that support nondiscrimintation of services.
—Blake Thornhill, Monroe, LA

It makes every voice equal.
—Moira Lourie, Kensington, CA freedom of speach and thought sharing

—Iris Natanzon, ,

Because big corporations dominate so much of every day life, it would be terrifying to let them dominate the information we are able to access by introducing discrimination online as a restriction.
—Nicola Buckingham, ,

I do not believe that large corporations, who certainly DO NOT have my interests at heart, should be allowed to control what I can and can not do on the internet. I do not believe that America should model its internet service similar to China.
—Nicole Boyeson, Madison, WI

WHY ISNT IT FOR EVERYBODY
—Matt Blanchette, Goffstown, NH

Metered internet billing is the real goal of these monopolists. The Net Neutrality issue is very important, but I believe, it is just a red herring. They will cave on Net Neutrality in order to seem entitled to Metered Billing. Multiple credible studies, around the world, have repeatedly shown that the incremental cost to the ISP to deliver a gigabit of internet traffic, above some arbitrary cap, is nearly nothing--almost unmeasurable. Any charge for excess traffic is nearly pure profit. Huge Profit. The cost of internet service is -not- like groceries or gasoline or electricity. The price for that next bag of groceries is the same as the price for the first bag. The cost to the grocery store is the same. It is not even -close- with internet service. Metered billing fees for internet service are almost pure profit to the ISP--in the area of 95%+ pure profit. And monopolies -never- invest their profits. Their incentive instead is to create and maintain artificial scarcity--and then to charge more. People using less are -not- "subsidizing" people who use more. They are all paying the same basic monthly fee--which, BTW, is already very profitable to the ISP. These monopolies simply want MORE. Is this what we want?
—Ronald Rauscher, Austin, TX

Even though I live in the UK and not the USA, I still believe that the USA needs Net Neutrality. It is meant to be the example for democracy, freedom and fairness and this proposal only achieves to do the opposite of that. Net Neutrality should be protected and regulated for the people that use it the most - the new generation, and not old and greedy businessmen. Anything less would be unreasonable and illogical - net neutrality is a basic concept that is a cornerstone in the growth of the Internet, which in turn has helped communications and services to all of its users - this proposal would only stifle this growth and promote its abuse and injustice.
—Ivan Riley, ,

Net neutrality is crucial, ISPs already charge me for a certain speed of internet I pay $70 for 25MBPS so now you are saying that it's okay for the ISP to limit that speed unless the web service pays them again! I That speed is already paid for and the ISP shouldn't restrict that speed any more than they already do by limiting me to 25MBPS. What the FCC is proposing is madness and needs to end now! The only ones who support this are the ones who are on the profitable end of the stick and that is not fair or equal in any way.
—Wesley Sandidge, Bellingham, WA

I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service!
—Katie Aiani, Simi Valley, CA

I am a full time student who has worked and saved for 30 years to afford an education and I still need the internet to afford it now. It is already a challenge to complete online course work with the lag that exists now, making it any worse would also make it impossible. I have always worked and volunteered for my country and community instead of my own greed, like a lot of Americans. It does not make any sense to believe that our country will ever be strong again as long as laws make it easy to be self-centered and greedy and hard to be patriotic and actively care for your nation. As long as Americans who care more about their country than their own personal greed remain less important to politicians than those who care more about their own greed than anything else, our country will continue to whither. Ending net neutrality makes it easier for a small percent of Americans to put their personal greed before our country's needs. Needs like the education of public school children, medical and scientific research- most of which is done by grad students, and people who volunteer their time to build stronger communities for a stronger America instead of focusing on personal gain. On what planet is that good for America? Because it certainly is not good for America on Earth!
—Michelle Barrett, Birmingham, AL

I believe that everyone should have equal access to the internet.
—Miriam Clapp, Grand Forks, ND

The lobbying by huge corporations to control the flow of information should not take precedence over the rights and wishes of the U.S. citizenry.
—Nicole Martin, Marengo, IL

Because I am a small business person and my entire income relies on online sales. Potential user fees, costs to customers, inability to be accessed, restrictions to social media, etc., will all affect my livelihood.
—Robyn Parrish, San Mateo, CA

We don't need tiered internets. We need to keep the internet truly neutral. Don't let big corporations choose what sites I want to visit.
—Kevin Wellsand, Lathrop, CA

Why wouldn't it be?
—Shahin Hossain, Woodbridge, VA

Freedom of internet is Freedom of Speech!
—Maciek Gorecki, Portland, OR

Keep the internet open!
—Elizabeth Hill, Champaign, IL

Stop caring about the money that is going into your pockets from these companies and start thinking about the money that has to come out of ours. The Internet should remain open.
—Sean Lively, Medfield, MA

Open internet = open forum for new ideas. Fast lane = potential to choke off new ideas.
—Pete Nelson, Brooklyn, NY

Access to information, freedom of speech, education, free information, innovation, medican info, connection with family etc...
—Lynn D. Anderson, Cornelius, OR

The internet is the last true free medium, controlled - at least in part - not by those with money, but by every single user. The freedom of and access to information, which I'm sure you'll agree is presupposed for any functioning democracy, is at stake. The internet has allowed for independent media like democracynow! and others to thrive solely on the merrit of their content and not by the dollars that are gained through advertising and selling priviliged audiences to top-end businesses. I am familiar with the theory that is proclaimed so widely in the more well-funded media that we should fear government control and allow "the magic market" to take its' course. However, I would rather have the internet regulated by the government who have to, at least to some degree, answer to the people, than simply have them answer to the whims of big business, or the dollar as you will.
—Dennis Duine, ,

So there can be neutrality on the internet and not have to pay extra to access certain information.
—Ellen Hawkes, Charleston, SC

The foundation of democracy is based on free and accessible information. Keep it free. Keep it fast, and stop gatekeeping the internet.
—Teresa Raines, ,

We all deserve same rights!
—Jodene miles, Sacramento, CA

I am a freelance artist and a free and open internet is integral to my livelihood. Killing net neutrality will be hugely damaging to me and others like me.
—Allison Westbrook, Milwaukee, WI

Why is net neutrality important ? Be serious here, why would such a question exist in the first place, what you want to do is make something that is equal to all, unequal. Why would you do that just so people can pay millions of dollars to get their "websites" more exposure by not having their traffic stifled.
—Jarl Ove Sletten, ,

I am hoping to make some portion of my career happen via the internet. I believe that we all deserve an equal opportunity to use the internet on the same terms. Being an art student is quite difficult as it is, but should these rules pass, making a career out of it would become that much more impossible. Please rethink this situation. Thank you.
—Andrew Harms, Winter Springs, FL

As a new freelance artist having my portfolio have the same equality on the internet as any other website is extremely important to me and I know it's important to many others. I really hope that large companies like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon aren't allowed to monopolize the internet- they honestly don't need any more money then they already have. There is no reason to allow them to have that much control. I hope you throw out these proposed rules and devise a plan that really solidifies true equality among those with money or without.
—Natasha Raymond, Lawton, OK

I am an aspiring artist who recently graduated from college. I, along with many friends, make our living online as freelance artists. Currently what you're doing is making life harder for us artists by allowing companies like Comcast to monopolize and take control of the internet, meaning they can deny us from continuing to work as artists. Please reconsider your actions, you're single-handedly ruining the lives of many people who cannot afford the luxuries that most have.
—Mike Liotta, Buffalo, NY

My entire life relays on the internet.
—Joe Burak, Center Line, MI

The internet is an important part of everybody's lives, especially artists. Many of us use the internet to collaborate, inspire, and bring the artistic community closer together. If the FCC took control of the internet, it would make these activities nearly impossible for artists as well as other professionals that depend on the world wide web to connect to each other. Please rethink these FCC rules and think about the millions of people that it would negatively effect. Thank you for your time, Andrea —Andrea Rawson, East Amherst, NY

As a newer Freelance Illustrator, my future lies entirely with the free internet. My income entirely comes from contract work acquired from around the world. Giving the reigns of the internet to corporate entities not only will jeopardize my future as an artist but will effectively destroy the level playing field that creatives have to grow and innovate. Don't make paying out my student loans that much harder because already rich corporations want more money.
—Douglas Nisbet, Peoria, AZ

Everyone should have access to information despite their tax bracket. People in small town America already have issues with obtaining Internet access and the current plan would just put more barriers in their way.
—Elizabeth Jones, Norman, OK

Why wouldn't it be? In a society where our freedoms continue to become smaller, it is now important than ever to keep the internet free for all.
—Viviana Podina, Madison Heights, MI

The flow of free information to those who can't afford it... For starters!
—Paul Stenis, Canoga Park, CA

ISP's already have the upper hand. To keep a level playing field for everyone, policy must favor the small, not the large.
—Dustin D Furseth, Portland, OR

To let others control your actions and mine you for data is just wrong. Nobody owns the net so they can't use it like they do, its the worlds, not some CEO's toy.
—, ,

Just what we need, more haves and have-nots.
—Felton Frueh, Austin, TX

On a moral level I believe that all services that are deemed basic for a population should be protected from private interests, i.e. that no one should make money off their infrastructure, or that it should at the very least be heavily regulated. On a practical level I believe that this will give the ISP's too much power in the realm of content delivery. I believe they will use this power to secure their own economic interests first, and the interests of the customer second, if not even lower. I strongly believe that this will hurt the consumers, the content providers and ultimately the internet as an open platform for communication itself.
—Thomas Longberg, ,

I use the Internet for everything school, entertainment, and work. Allowing ISP's to reduce the speed for people like me who NEED it for my education and income just because I can't afford to pay the ridiculous prices they propose is basically allowing them to fix prices.
—Cory Lollie, Utica, MI

I fear this is only the first step on the slide to an elitist money grab and stratification on Internet access.
—Matthew Tomlinson, Churubusco, IN

Both my established company who creates/utilizes online content and my on-the-side startup would be negatively impacted if the proposed rules get a pass.
—Andis Reks, Providence, RI

Information should be available to anyone, like a library.
—Rachelle Bradley, Paradise, CA

freedom
—Khalil Honsali, ,

Freedom
—Angelos, ,

It is wrong to charge people extra to visit each site they go to on top of their already expensive internet bill. Not to mention it is just flat out greedy.
—Nicholas Butler, Lakeland, FL

Freedom.
—Brent Spann, Los Angeles, CA

Dudes, free internet, enough said. Plus, the internet was made for posting and sharing information for all, or some to see.
—Justin Berghauser, Naugatuck, CT

Because I am a content creator and want to still have a voice that can be heard on the internet.
—Mhairi Morrison, Los Angeles, CA

Clearly broadband internet access providers should be regulated as Common Carriers for the benefit and safety of the users of the internet, not purely for the profit of a few large incumbant ISP's. Public good is the clear issue.
—S Murton Guild, Pensacola, FL

Well it is obvious...
—Samuil Pavlevchev, Sofia, CA

We are all born free and taking our freedom away is a breach of Human Rights .
—Teresa Pace, ,

Net Neutrality insures a free and open space for equal participation of all users. This will protect our democracy Please represent the majority of the population that wants the internet to be a common carrier and telecommunications utility with free and open access. Sincerely, Dr Lyn Pestana
—lyn Pestana, Los Angeles, CA

The Internet has the potential to continue being a diving force in the economic, technological, and cultural development for the human race, much like electricity or plumbing. The internet is a Utility. The proposed fast lane system is unacceptable, it will cripple future technological innovation, cultural expression, and entrepreneurial enterprise. Internet service providers offer a utility and should be bound by the same rules as the other utility services.
—Justin Stone, SOUTH RIVER, NJ

Your job is to protect those that cannot protect themselves. Work for the people. Freedom should not just be for those that can afford it.
—, Terryville, CT

Because the Internet should be affordable for all!
—Anteaus Reese, Jacksonville, FL

The internet should not discriminate based on whether or not someone can afford for their content to be faster than someone else's. I want to be able to get the content I want from everyone equally - not what someone else pays for me to see first by slowing the content of other providers.
—Leeanne McLeod, hamilton, OH

The open and free Internet is allowing human knowledge and self-determination advance in historic ways.
—Noah T. Winer, Philadelphia, PA

I'm a blogger; Net neutrality fosters creativity, democracy, & the exchange of ideas. There's enough inequality already.
—Amy Fried, North Bethesda, MD

To maintain fair access of resources to all and to avoid the increased costs being passed to consumers!
—Candace lapan, Greensboro, NC

Net Neutrality!!!
—Catalin, ,

This matters. The rich should not take over the net as they have everywhere else. Please protect net neutrality.
—Terry Lee Burns, Grants Pass, OR

Because everything shouldn't have a price.
—Arman Zand, Mission Viejo, CA

FREE INTERNET FOR A FREE PEOPLE!!! Enough is enough!!! Keep your hands off the Internet!
—Sandra Oliveira, Tustin, CA

I am a have not and I am afraid the internet will divide access to favor the haves
—Willie Davis, Charlotte, NC

Look at it this way. You're writing a research paper on global warming, but your internet provider doesn't support your beliefs, thus those websites are blocked...
—David k., Leesburg, GA

We are all equal, why should someone with more money have more rights that I do?!!
—Edna Brown, Cordoba,

As a small business owner whose livelihood depends on the internet, more regulations and requirements are only going to make it harder to bring in new business. Making life more difficult for small businesses is not the America my Grandfather fought in the war for. Capitalism requires a fair market to thrive. Please don't take the fair market from the backbone of this great country! America needs Net Neutrality! The world needs America to allow Net Neutality!
—Joe DelPreto, Bartlett, IL too much power centralize leads to more corruption

—James T Smith, laguna beach, CA

Monopolies should not control content. Internet access is a telecommunications service.
—Russell Easterly, Seattle, WA

Freedom. If we live in a land of freedom, we can not turn a blind eye to it in the name of business and allow people and businesses to be bullied into higher costs. Without net neutrality, the FCC is essentially legalizing internet price gouging. That is not freedom.
—Josiah David, Dallas, TX

Internet is an infra whose freedom needs to be protected for capitalism to thrive.
—Subodh Prabhu, San Jose, CA

Net Neutrality is essential to the free exchange of information. Broadband access is a necessity for the exercise of the vigilance that will preserve our liberty. We must not allow the classification of information into fast and less-fast, important and unimportant, based on a content provider's desire to purchase special treatment from the delivery system. Preserve net neutrality!
—Carl Wilson Laur, Mill Valley, CA

With the mounting costs of everything these days, having the internet get more expensive for the things we need isn't an option.
—Axel Jimenez, Kissimmee, FL

The agency can preserve Net Neutrality only by reclassifying Internet service providers as common carriers. This is the only way to protect the open Internet. Anything else is an attack on our rights to connect and communicate.
—Jake English, El Paso, TX

Internet might be the last refuge for freedom of speech and expression especially on some third world countries, leading countries should know better when giving example on making such laws...
—Hassan Radi, , its the internet

—Taiwo Mannn, ,

Because I am a human being that somehow still has hope that "The Man" is going to lose this battle. Power to the People.
—Kyle Rehder, Camarillo, CA

Because I use internet for studies and some extra stuff. But if those sites are going to slow down I don't have the money to pay to have faster service for each website I visit and consecutively that will hurt my studies. And this is not just in my case but many Americans who rely on education through internet.
—Ninad, Wilmington, DE

Capitalism does not work when start ups cannot afford equal internet access. Such a system would lead to massive monopolies and cannot be allowed.
—Webster Wing, Wayzata, MN

Its opportunity for all and the right to access what we want to access.
—Lisa Echevarria, Maspeth, NY

we must have a free and open internet equal for all
—Mark Vanatter, Jamestown, NY

Without net neutrality, I believe commerce and fee speech will be severely restricted. The only way everyone has a equal say in our ever expanding world of new media, is through a fair, shared access to the internet.
—Jason Swenson, Mountlake Terrace, WA

Because it was meant to be free and it helps to get my music out to new fans who would never see who or what Bonerama Music really is. It's important to not charge us what was meant to be free so that major corporations can make more money than they should off of something that was created for us. Please keep it as it is. Don't succumb to the almighty dollar.
—Craig Klein, New Orleans, LA

Internet is important for freedom
—Richard Tybout, Columbus, OH

I don't want cable internet. I don't want big corps taking control of everything.
—Delia Ross, Mobile, AL

It makes it easily available to those of us who really need it. Especially being a student and having to have internet access for studying.
—Isabella Earthchild, Springfield, MO

I enjoy privacy and secrecy online!
—Juniper Hanna, Bakersfield, CA

It's the only fair, just and democratic way for the internet to progress.
—Michael Dowling, ,

Money is not everything.
—Saravanakumaran, ,

De FCC heeft regels die het open internet zou breken voorgesteld. Deze voorgestelde traject zou de deur naar wijdverbreide discriminatie online openen. Het zou Internet service providers het groene licht te geven voor een twee-voudige Internet implementeren, met een fast lane voor degenen die het zich kunnen veroorloven en een onverharde weg voor de rest van ons. Dit zou een ramp voor starters, non-profitorganisaties en het dagelijks internetgebruikers die zich niet kunnen veroorloven deze onnodige tolgelden zijn. Ik dring er bij de FCC om deze voorgestelde regels te schrappen en in plaats daarvan te herstellen van het beginsel van non-discriminatie online door herclassificatie van breedband als een telecommunicatiedienst.
—Walter Botteldoorne, Kortrijk-Heule, NJ

Because freedom speech extends to the internet and should not be decided in the interests of corporations
—Alexis Velasco-Coley, Steilacoom, WA

What the heck are we doing giving the people with money faster and better internet and the little guy gets crap! I a so sick of getting stepped on and the rich keep getting richer and the poor keep getting poorer. My children won't have faster speeds and benefit from it because I won't be able to afford the faster speeds! The kid down the street who's parents can afford it will be able to reap the benefits from faster speeds because why, THEY have money!!!!! Please stop this!!!
—Nicole Lounder, Stafford, TX

Because the internet provides an entire world of information important to me and those around me. It's what connects me to my family and friends and what spread my art to those I want to share it with. Without net neutrality, there would almost be no point to the internet. Please throw out these rules.
—Paul Igla, Overland Park, KS

I agree with savetheinternet.com: "...Net Neutrality preserves our right to communicate freely online. This is the definition of an open Internet. Net Neutrality means an Internet that enables and protects free speech. It means that Internet service providers should provide us with open networks and should not block or discriminate against any applications or content that ride over those netwoThe open Internet allows communities of color to tell their own stories and to organize for racial and social justice in the digital age. The mainstream media have often failed to allow people of color to speak for themselves. And thanks to economic inequality and runaway media consolidation, people of color own just a handful of broadcast stations. The lack of diverse ownership is a primary reason why the media have gotten away with portraying communities of color stereotypically. The open Internet gives marginalized voices an opportunity to be heard. But without Net Neutrality, ISPs can block unpopular speech and prevent dissident voices from speaking freely online. Without Net Neutrality, people of color will lose a vital platform to shape debates on issues that impact their communities well-being. And without Net Neutrality, millions of small businesses owned by people of color won't be able to compete against larger corporations online, which will further deepen the economic inequality in our nations most vulnerable communities."
—, Chicago, IL

I am from a lower middle class family. If these new "rules" are put into place, I will be forced to be behind those who already have more than I do. If you take away my rights to internet freedom simply because I do not make as much money as other people, you are stepping on my and many other Americans' freedom and giving more power and authority to the rich, leaving the poor with even less. The same poor who have made your companies INTO the giants they are today. Without the millions in the lower middle class who pay for the ISP services, they would never have gotten as big as they are. Why are we being punished for making them successful? We make up a majority of their business, yet we are being pushed aside for the rich who only make up a small percentage.
—Richard Lord, Mannsville, NY

Because I use the internet a lot and don't want to see it screwed up by governments.
—Bryan Valenta, Winter Park, FL

Don't let this, too, become a monopoly.
—Callan Langsdorf, Alexandria, VA

I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service. The internet means something to me. Don't break it.
—Chevy Hungerford, Shepherd, MI

STOP PRIVATIZING COMMUNICATION AND KNOWLEDGE!
—Miss Michelle Choiselat, Riverside, CA

It's important to me because it's apparently not important to the FCC for whatever reason.
—Matthew, Tarpon Springs, FL

I want a neutral Internet for everyone, That seems fair.
—Murray Thompson, ,

The internet was designed as an open medium and as such should be equally available to everyone and must be protected from corporate monopolies. Tom Wheeler's proposed plans are bad for consumers, as well as start-ups, non-profits, bloggers, and smaller businesses that can't afford to pay for access to that internet "fast lane".
—Leslie Drechsler, Honolulu, HI

I use the internet for school and so many other important aspects of my life depend on the internet.
—Joe Tagle, El Cajon, CA

I want my FREEDOM! We don't need companies giving us no choice in what providers we want to use and what internet SPEED we pay for. You can not monopolize the internet. STOP BREAKING THE INTERNET.
—Samantha, Chicago, IL

Regulate Internet Service Providers as common carriers with oversight from the local corporation commitments. These strategies worked for water, electricity, and telephones; why not for broadband as well?
—David H. Barr, Claremore, OK

Regulating the flow rate of data across the internet is just the first step to controlling access to data in general. The internet is a major contributor to free speech and the open sharing of ideas throughout the world. Free speech is meaningless if your voice cannot be heard.
—Jesse Bright, Alameda, CA

The internet is an open space for free speech, innovation, and growth; it is ridiculous to discriminate based on how much money people can afford to pay. These rules should not even be considered.
—Le Yi Zhou, Parsippany, NJ

It helps provide a level playing field for everyone so the people who are trying to start up actually have a chance instead of a monopoly like system.
—Kenneth Spencer, Conyers, GA

I have no choice of internet provider. When I called a local provider to sign up for service that others tell me is nothing less than stellar, they told me, "Sorry. We can't sell to you because you live in AT&T's territory." Withoutout strong regulations, the providers who are available to me (AT&T and Comcast), who do not truly compete with eachother, will slow my access to services that threaten their business models. Without net neutrality, these companies have a financial incentive to ensure their networks are constantly congested and service quality is poor. This is a violation of my right to free expression and free association. Without strong regulations these robber barons will eploit the internet to extort every last dime they can get from the public while working to ensure the internet is slow, frustrating, and useless. That behavior cannot be rewarded if this nation is to reclaim the freedoms we once enjoyed.
—Nicholas Durcholz, Bloomington, IN

It should not be locked down by ISP provides that already offer poor service. All information must be equal and not juged by big companies.
—Shadhadley, Denton, KS

It is critical to allow startups to compete and for free action to information.
—Morris Massel, New York, NY

There are already enough factors in our country where the rich get benefits, let the internet remain a place for everyone with a good idea and ambition. Also I fucking hate comcast, they are the worst company i have ever delt with. I dont want them to benefit in any way.
—Caroline Warfel, Alexandria, VA

Cable companies and internet providers already monopolize geographic areas around the US. We do not need another internal way for these companies to gouge people through services that they already pay for. What I want to access on the internet should not be privy to an extra charge.
—Anna Seekatz, Ann Arbor, MI

Net neutrality is important to me because I need the ability to search and find free information, to be allowed freedom with my speech and what information I seek. And, I'm a hard working civilian that shouldn't be given something free and then have it taken away once someone finds away to regulate and sell it. There are already enough things I have to buy just to make ends meet by living in this country. we've been allowed to use the internet for a monthly service fee. Don't restrict and make us pay more money for something that had already been given to us.
—Krystyna, Nine Mile Falls, WA are you kidding me, don't you get it? control control control!!!

—BT Griffin, Woodside, NY

The internet is now a necessity to work, communicate, and to research different view points of issues. Everyone should have equal access to it. The internet has became a public utility. Everyone should pay the same rate for it use and should have the same access. Playing favorites only will enrich the cable companies which have the worst customer service and not help the people.
—Laura Bebee, Owings, MD

I live on the web. Communication, education, work, entertainment.
—Jonathan Grossman, Atlantic City, NJ

It's the right thing to do.
—Jennifer Green, Ellensburg, WA

Because it prevents cable company fuckery.
—Dr. Russ Milliken, Eighty Four, PA

Need fast service as a small business owner but cannot compete with big corporations $
—Jodie Apeseche, Natick, MA

Access to information!
—Mindy Hiley, Arcata, CA

It is and should be important to everyone! It was founded on the principle of open sharing of information and it is that environment that has sparked countless innovations in technology, medicine, and all fields. Limiting speeds would also limit the creativity and innovation that increasingly demands higher throughput. Making that access commercial will most definitely stifle economic growth and the United Stated future as leader in technology development.
—William Bosler, Three Rivers, MI

Creating a fast lane for higher price will stifle innovation and democracy and give certain companies too much control over the flow of information.
—Gretchen Weber, Palo Alto, CA

Without net neutrality services such as Netflix providers will incur and added cost for streaming speeds and thus the cost will be passed down to consumers and more often than not result in a breakdown of proper service
—Femina Patel, Tampa, FL

Because its currently a fair playing field and should stay that way.
—Isa, Milwaukee, WI

With the appointment of Wheeler to head the FCC... What do you think the President was doing? Of course this is an expected result. However, this will go down as the most egregious self serving act the Obama Administration has done.. Their legacy will be virtually ignored and succumb to the Administration that monetized the internet for their own interest. This single act will be what is left of their accomplishments, not Obama-care, not Benghazi-gate, but the subjugation of the internet. Why you ask? Because of the voice that it has... year over year this will ring out as the Hooverville of the Obama administration and the Republicans will use it to get back in power with the promise of a repeal... Gentlemen, if I were you - I would revisit the ROI on this...
—Paul Shanty, Buena Park, CA

Today we rely more and more on the internet for banking, communication with family including hard-of-hearing relatives, shopping for products that are hard to find locally, weather and new information, instructional content, etc. that needs to be delivered more quickly as opposed to more slowly as the big providers are proposing. The United States is already lagging in Internet speed.
—Christopher Daly, Rochester, NY

Dear Tom Wheeler, Please keep the net free for all and stop the FCC breaking the internet. Thank you, Petria Seymour
—Petria Seymour, Playa del Rey, CA

I don't want to have to pay extra to receive high quality internet services and do not believe in offering preferential treatment to some companies based on their desire to corner the market on high quality internet content. There already is too much collusion between corporations and government in this country. We need to maintain net neutrality to assure equal access to all internet content for all citizens.
—Matthew Johnson, Cleveland, OH

Net Neutrality is important because everyone should fair and equal access to the internet, period! The wealthy already get many more tax breaks and privileges that the working class doesn't. Why should they get a fast lane when we all deserve the opportunity to enjoy the best internet possible. Living in a small city I already have crappy internet because there's only one provider and they haven't updated their cables/infrastructure to support faster/better internet. I imagine that my service will go down significantly if we allow for fast lanes. Quit passing laws that line your pocket and leave the rest of us poorer than we were before. The working class and small business owners deserve more from our government and we demand better treatment. NO to fast lanes!!!!
—Wendy Nance, Brownwood, TX

I don't believe that our internet access should be limited or controlled by the big telecom companies. Broadband internet should be classified as a telecom service.
—Kathleen Hulme, Pavilion, NY

Freedom to discuss, post, search, entertain, entrepreneur on a open platform.
—Betsy Daniel, Huntington Station, NY

I believe in an open internet. Somewhere you have all information treated equally. In a time where the highest bidder or donator gets whatever they want....all of the rest of us are left in the ashes of what will be left behind.
—Dustin Rowell, Lexington, NC

It keeps the internet free and even. The only place where there isn't a hierarchy.
—, Minneapolis, MN

Changing the Net Neutrality rules would effectively allow providers the ability to hang a noose around the necks of data providers that the internet has blessed us with. The internet itself is important to me because it is an unmatched source of data that can be reliably searched and obtained at any time. Those who seek to end Net Neutrality only seek to put a premium on information. Do you not think that the prices of education have already done this enough? I urge you to continue to allow us freedom of information in this accessible way that we have. Throw out your new damned rules and stop catering to these controlling large businesses simply because of the money they spend lobbying. I urge you to protect the people and lobby for our best interests. Do not choke our access to information.
—WIlliam Johnson, Griffin, GA

The internet should stay free and should not allow for tiers of service.
—Sean Aman, Sioux Falls, SD

Net Neutrality is a necessity for keeping an open internet, and preserving our right to communicate freely. When internet service providers are allowed to limit the speeds of different sites, it is infringing on my first amendment rights as an American. Allowing internet service providers to charge content companies for preferential treatment would not only allow companies like Comcast, Verizon, and AT&T to hold content providers hostage for higher payment, but it would stifle growth of new companies and content providers. Allowing these rules to be implemented would be a serious step backwards for the American people. The telecommunications industry is already a non competitive service, with over 96% of Americans having only two or fewer choices for high speed internet service. Furthering the big telecom companies to increase their strangle hold on the American people's access to information would cause serious issues and increase their position in their oligarchy.
—Matthew Strickler, Front Royal, VA

Because the internet shouldn't be controlled by businesses. Communication companies already have huge amounts of power. They don't need more.
—Meredith Crow, Oklahoma City, OK

The basic tenet of the American capitalist system is equal access and opportunity. This proposal violates that tenet egregiously and further promotes the existing monopolistic practices of politically connected cable providers. I am shocked that any government organization can even consider these proposals in good conscience.
—Angela Weil, Woodbridge, VA

Net neutrality is important for the sole reason that internet providers already make more than enough money. The consumer shouldn't have to pay even more for services. The telecom giants should not be allowed to pick and choose who gets preferential speeds/treatment. Small businesses that rely on the internet for their revenue will suffer as a result, and it is unfair to the 99%.
—Matthew McSparran, Norwich, CT

Im a software engineer and depend on high speed internet to get my job done.
—Christian Robsahm, San Francisco, CA

The imbalance of finances in the world is bad enough without gentrification of the last fiscal equalizer...the internet. "We the people" are not in support of policies that make subordinates of common Americans, and support a capitalistic elitist paradigm.
—Kabir Cain, Taos, NM

The Internet is there for everyone I have a small web site that I need to give my company more profile. I cant afford to pay extra for a better connectivity. Ending net neutrality would ruin my company.
—Felix Werner, ,

As a web developer, whose life is hinged on the internet the way it is, I urge you to reconsider this ruling. Doing this may end my business and end the businesses of many other small business owners.
—Timothy Buell, Willington, CT

We already suffer from terrible service provider choices in this country due to the lack of common infrastructure resulting in monopolies in certain geographical areas for ISPs. We do not need another regulation that will stifle the little guys that aren't able or willing to pay the price of blackmailing the ISPs into not slowing down connections to their services.
—Jason Ferrier, Oakland, CA

It provides the means for up and coming companies to start and provide well worth capital to the United States. Anit-trust laws are here to protect us from this filth. Rockefeller would be proud at Comcast for screwing with the people's cat videos.
—Jordan, Hialeah, FL

Net neutrality embodies the concept of a level playing field for companies to compete on. This fair competition is one of the fundamental principles in how companies, policies, and people interact within a functioning capitalist society, especially within the United States. An end to net neutrality would allow bigger corporations to eliminate competition in a manner analogous to the overbearing trusts and monopolies that flexed their muscle in the underdeveloped policy of the Industrial Revolution. Net neutrality is a necessary expression and foundation of functioning capitalism within our country and must be present on the internet to ensure a functioning society.
—, Medford, MA

I think Net Neutrality is important to me because i believe the internet should not be controlled by giant companies. I believe the internet should be free.
—Raul Moreno, La Puente, CA

My phone company is not permitted by law to dictate who I can call or who can call me. And they must provide the same quality of voice service for every outgoing and incoming call I make. Telemarketing companies are not allowed to purchase a preferential voice lane so that their calls get through to me before other calls that are made to me. I already pay the phone company a fee to provide me with neutral voice service. The same principles apply to my relationship with my ISP and it should stay that way. I ask that you please look at the the issue of net neutrality more clearly and designate ISP's as common carriers. Thank you.
—Richard Diller, Elk Grove, CA

The ISP companies have demonstrated the desire to control information and blackmail companies. By destroying net neutrality you bring back the robber-baronsand the monopolies that brought America to its knees. You also cripple the only real economy that America has left, its ability to create and innovate. Don't cripple America.
—Chad Jones, Redmond, WA

It allows equal treatment for all people, companies and organizations.
—David Afzal, Pacific Palisades, CA

There should not be a two tiered internet. This would be horrible to an open and free society.
—AJ Botham, Saint Petersburg, FL

The proposed rules would give larger businesses an unfair advantage over smaller and start up companies.
—Chris Vonderweidt, Bowdoinham, ME

I have a choice about how much bandwidth I might need each month and about how much I am willing to pay for it. I am an average American without the deep pockets of a large corporation. Doing away with Net Neutrality turns my bandwidth into a dirt road, regardless of how wide it is.
—Soren M Peterson, Riverdale, MD

Seriously? Why do I have to ask for this? It's absurd that it is being taken away.
—Ruth, Mc Queeney, TX

It's important, cause I want choice around the information I take in. I don't want that choice to be made for me.
—Milla Ahola, ,

Free speech is a pillar of democracy. If that falls, the whole system could collapse.
—Aaron Davis, Cleveland, OH

Freedom of speech and freedom of information are a large part of what makes this country great. I use the Internet every day to inform myself, connect with others, and also for entertainment. Creating this monopoly would curtail the right of myself and millions of others. This "fast lane" is simply a way for cable companies to increase their wealth at our expense. Protect our citizens, protect our right to access and sharing of information: get cable lobbyists out of the FCC and out of our Internet.
—Emily Sinn, Brooklyn, NY

Internet centered start-ups are a backbone of the modern American economy, and are the 21st century embodiment of so much that is great about American culture. Anything that potentially interferes with the competitiveness of these firms, in no uncertain terms, is absolutely unacceptable.
—Brandon Bennes, Hershey, PA

Don't try to fix something that's works just fine for us regular people. Big business is ruining America.
—Jessica Ogata, Sacramento, CA

Cable companies are already basically a cartel - this would further stifle competition and access to the Internet.
—Kelsey, Chapel Hill, NC

This nation was founded on free speech. The internet is the ultimate forum for free speech and as such deserves special status. We already have corporate control of almost all aspects of our lives. We don't need more.
—Mrs. Barbara Talbott, Elgin, TX

I am Computer Science graduate student and a firm believer in technological progress for the greater good. The beauty of the Internet is in how it provides a place where ideas can succeed based on their merit rather than on the bankroll of their promoters. Yes, Google operates more server power than I could ever dream of having access to, but all their data still has to travel the same road as mine. In my eyes, broadband is clearly a "telecommunications service" and should be classfied as such.
—Ryan A Dellana, Greenville, NC

The rich have enough advantages, these rules would give them even more control.
—Tim Heintz, Takoma Park, MD

It's important that everyone has a equality not preferential treatment for those who can afford it.
—Paul Ordonez, Torrance, CA

The advent of the internet has already had an enourmous effect on society as we know it, and it is not done yet. But as a student preparing to make a career in the tech industry, I do not feel comfortable giving the power over the future of this industry to those who stand to benefit from holding it back. What other modern nation has such restrictions on this resource? A pseudo monopoly already has us behind the rest of the world in quality and pricing of internet access, and it isn't because we are incapable of doing better. Please help us
—Drew Lazzeri, Littleton, CO

I oppose monopolies and the censorship or restriction of data of any sort.
—Mitch Housman, Falls Church, VA

It is nice to be able to find small companies online that we can buy items for that we can not find here in out local town. Plus with the cost of living how are some people suppose to be able to afford the cost when they can barely afford their house or rent payments.
—James Williams, Odessa, TX

It isn't just important to me - it Is important to everyone. This is one more example of how the rights if everyone our being chipped away by the needs of a very few to be able to make as much money as possible and deprive the majority of the American People from free access to a just a fair system. This is NOT FAIR AND WILL ONLY RUIN THE INTERNET - A SYSTEM THAT IS NOT BROKEN AND NEEDS TO ALLOW EQUAL ACESSS FOR EVERYONE WITHOUT LOOPHOLES FOR COMPANIES LIKE COMCAST AND VERIZON TO BE ABLE TO CHARGE FOR FASTER ACCESS.
—Catherine Palter, Culver City, CA

Equality. Fairness. Access —Loretta Hollifield, Parkville, MD

I am an American citizen who has watched the events over Net Neutrality for quite a while. I have been wary of the consequences of the direction things are headed and until very recently I have never known what I can do to try and affect things other than discuss the issues on websites. I believe that my fellow Americans and I both demand, and President Obama pledged, real net neutrality. This requires: 1)FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler should resign or be removed from his position. The recent policy proposal from the FCC on net neutrality enables service providers to blackmail content providers with fees for the delivery of content that the subscriber already paid them for. Such a proposal is consistent with Wheeler's former role as head of National Cable Television Association but it is a violation of the chairman's responsibility to the public. I.E. Tom Wheeler has a conflict of interests, his actions speak to this. 2) Internet service has become an essential tool for work, commerce, and the exercise of free speech. Broadband providers use public rights of way to string cable across the country and the space to do so is limited. Accordingly the government has an obligation to ensure that this natural monopoly is not abused. Given that the installation of internet cables is controlled by the local governments just as utilities are, it is unjust to not list them as a utility to be controlled by the government granting them this monopoly. 3) Few households in America have more than one provider of real (> 6 mpbs) broadband internet access. The FCC has done nothing to promote competition for this critical service. I have seen statistics that of any kind of internet service options other than satellite internet, more than 99% of Americans have two or less options. This is a problem as there is no legitimate competition between any companies and it stifles technological growth and allows for ISP’s to overcharge for internet speeds that pale in comparison to many other countries. 04) Internet Service should be regulated as a "telecommunications service". The companies that operate the network must not be allowed to discriminate regarding the physical devices connected, or the type of traffic transmitted over the network. For almost all people, there is only one high speed 'pipe' available to them. The operator should be compensated fairly for operating the pipe infrastructure but they must not be permitted to control who and what can be accessed or to artificially affect the throughput; just as Ma Bell was obligated to connect people wanting long distance service from Sprint and other providers. 5) Any network services over and above the raw transmission of data through the network should be provided by third parties; without discrimination based on content, source, or destination. There are many ISP’s that are attempting to collect and sell your data to other companies which is obviously something that should be illegal as their customers have no way to stop them from doing so. 6) Broadband providers should be permitted to inspect traffic only for the purpose of routing it to it's intended destination and not otherwise, scan, store, forward or share it. In short, Internet Access should be treated exactly the same way that phone service was; after the dismantling of the Bell monopoly. The necessity and issues that happened around phone services at this time mirror our current situation with internet service providers and so I believe they should be regulated as Title II Telecommunication Services as that is what internet traffic at its core is just communication from one end to the other via 1’s and 0’s representing what is said. Sincerely, Texas
—Texas Ruiz, San Antonio, TX

I think it's ridiculous to allow big corporations to rule what we can and cannot due in yet another aspect of our lives. I'm tired of it! The internet is meant for the people to use, not for corporations to dictate what we can and cannot do.
—Jennifer Cooley, Loveland, CO

Net neutrality is important to me because i use the internet and anything but net neutrality would be an egregious act. It would irreparably damage the internet.
—Alexis, Jersey City, NJ

I work with small startups in the internet industry, and I am worried that dismantling net neutrality will hinder young startups, reduce competition, and create monopolies for established tech companies. It seems like a way of kicking the ladder out from under a lot of new competition.
—Emma Lindsay, San Francisco, CA

The internet should be accessible to everyone, not just the rich or big companies.
—Ms. Chris Rutledge, Levittown, PA

Because I do not believe in furthering the inequality of the ultra rich and everyone else. This would just be one more way to hold back those without power and to further the power of those who already have control over certain markets.
—Andrew Klein, Lansdale, PA

I have Comcast because I don't have a choice for a better provider - either with service or pricing. I want a choice - it is America, land of the free - and allowing Comcast or Verizon or TWC to charge the next Netflix more money to prevent competition isn't very American.
—Darren McMichael, Woodstock, GA

It maintains a level playing field for all internet companies and promotes healthy economic competition.
—Vlad-Stefan Marcu, La Canada Flintridge, CA

Radio and television both held the promise of education and connection of the masses, but we've seen what capitalism did to the promises they once held (Jersey Shore and defunded NPR for all!). Don't cause the same thing to happen to the internet. We have enjoyed the relatively open and democratic structure, and allowing those with money to have a different set of rules is a slippery slope that will kill (or splinter, which would be just as bad) the global community of humans that we've created.
—Matt Claypool, Cedar Rapids, IA

I don't wanna pay a premium for the site said I want to get to.
—Todd Larson, Meridian, ID

The future of innovation, creativity depend on free, unhampered access to the internet. Allowing ISps to control access levels to content and profit from will hamstring US companies. it's short term gain for ISPs with deep pockets and death to long term growth of us business.
—Joshua Welber, New York, NY

Internet Service Providers that use their power to sell customers information are violating our 1st and 4th amendments. They also may be contributing to identity theft.
—Jo Whistler, Hampton, VA

Big businesses should not be able to control how I use the Internet. Everyone deserves the freedom to use the Internet and information made available from it, no matter how much money they have or who their provider is.
—Danielle, North Wales, PA

Simply, It maintains a safe internet for everyone without discrimination. We need this for our future generations to provide free and unbiased services. It is wrong for big business to once again attempt to rob the consumer but use the guise that they want to help them!
—Shelia Givens, Mount Juliet, TN

I want good internet access speeds to all websites, not just those that pay web service providers. Some smaller sites have the most interesting, and less commercial content
—Keith H, Plymouth, MI

Stop corruption now!
—Rina Bliss, San Francisco, CA

Limiting the internet would only limit growth and potential. America would then become much like Orwell's 1984
—Colin Kirkpatrick, West Hollywood, CA

A free and unobstructed internet is important for my life, commerce and future innovation. The proposed rules will severely hamper internet development, free speech and increase prices for all —Mohammed Osman, Centereach, NY

The internet should be equally accessible by and for everyone
—Karen Zeilnhofer, Danbury, CT

Im disabled so cant go out much all my friends are on the internet
—Jordan P Bassett, Kennewick, WA

I am a small business owner and a registered voter. It is critical to protect innovation and competition on the internet.
—Julia Wester, Fort Myers, FL

To All Parties Concerned, We know that you are giving deep thought to the issue of net neutrality; however please continue to consider the deep repercussions of this bill. Affecting access to data in any way whether through internet speeds or fees will have a dramatic affect on the flow of information. The ramifications of allowing companies to overly influence the flow of data will not just target a select group. Every income level and culture group will be subject to the abuses that are inevitable when monetary interests are at stake. Please consider your part in history and the well being of your fellow citizens in this ruling. The flow of data is a gift that not only advantages this country as a whole but allows the innate gifts of our citizens to flourish. We sincerely and respectfully urge you to reconsider this proposal. The effects of this plan will alter destiny and reality for millions of Americans.
—Waellzly Milton, Royal Palm Beach, FL

Net Neutrality is important to me because I am able to feed my family by providing value to others with the internet. Keep it Neutral
—Kurt Younker, ,

I want free access to all the educational information I require. I think it's unethical that corporations might control my internet usage. It's bad enough that they already monitor it. Please restore the principal of online nondiscrimination.
—Elizabeth Wing, Nassau, NY

Because despite all disparities of income, education, and opportunity, the internet provides true universal equality and always should.
—Tera Childs, Las Vegas, NV

Net neutrality holds the right we expect in the modern day and age
—Benton Hunt, Boise, ID

Freedom
—Rhiannon Frater, Austin, TX

It is extremely important to keep the internet truly neutral. Putting these rules into place will ruine any faith I have left in our government.
—Lucas Kevlishvili, Rolling Meadows, IL

I do not want to be discriminated against online nor do I want tolls on anyone for using the internet.
—Melissa Barnes, Seattle, WA

Because its fair and we should all get a say in what we use.
—Margarita Llanas, Houston, TX

The human race is dependent on freedom of information, not crony capitalists monopolizing through their nepotistic connections.
—Michael Heath, Arlington, TX

Internet access is no longer a luxury, but rather a necessity for many Americans, myself included. We rely on it for business, relationships with distant relatives and entertainment. My ISP, Comcast, falls somewhere between shaky and out-and-out corrupt as they currently exist, and the idea of allowing them any more control is repugnant.
—Robert Oseas, Beaverton, OR

It allows everyone in the world to be connected and united without the worry of lack of privacy
—Maximillion Rosario, Miami, FL

It's the foundation on which modern telecommunications is built. Audio, video, text, email... All of this is incredibly important. To set America back behind the rest of the world by putting connectivity in our country under the control of a few large companies is simply ridiculous. Modern business relies on these networks like they do roads and water.
—Aaron Mason, San Francisco, CA

because net neutrality is creating a renaissance in creative products. These rules would hold the US's full potential back, and move us from a leader to just one in a heard.
—Leslie Allen, Philadelphia, PA

It's important to keep the free flowing traffic of ideas unimpeded by corporate policies and politics. It will only deter the future improvement of the human species by making access to powerful and innovative information unnecessary difficult to attain.
—Michael McNellis, Levittown, PA

The internet is entrenched in our lives to the point that creating a two-tiered Internet would be like getting people to breathe two types of air. Don't destroy Net Neutrality, for the sake of sanity.
—Christine Chen, Durham, NC

Everyone deserves a fair chance. Lobbyists are ruining this country.
—Brian kolb, Portland, OR

Net neutrality is important because it threatens the very foundation of what makes the internet as ubiquitous and important as it it. If data speeds were regulated we would lose the ingenuity of millions, crush start ups, and do nothing more than fill the pockets of a select few that already have a strangle hold on America's digital entertainment.
—Anthony Ferrante, Biddeford, ME

Net Neutrality keeps the internet equal for everyone-- switching to a tiered model will keep the internet better for the highest bidder and worse for everyone else
—Kevin Strick, Los Angeles, CA

Should NOT be discriminatory!!!!!
—John Oden, Anaheim, CA

Because it is so instrumental in our daily lives. The internet is the fundamental source of everything you can think of. To inhibit access to any of that because of behind-the-scene contracting is just deplorable
—Elizabeth, Philadelphia, PA

Life is expensive enough. Leave it alone.
—Sarita Freedman, Agoura Hills, CA

Are you absolutely insane? How much money have they thrown into your face? Thousands? Millions? Billions? This is almost a thug shake down of content providers. Do you remember when you weren't a sell out? I can't believe this is even possible.
—, Galt, CA

I think it's totally against the principals that the internet was created upon. Profiteering is all this is. As someone who is rarely home due to work commitments, i do not pay for un-necessary bills... my home broadband connection would quickly become one of those un-necessary, over inflated, not worth the money bills. Get a grip.
—Andrew Taylor, ,

Having big corporations control how people use the internet is UTTERLY WRONG!!!!!!!! This cannot be allowed to happen.
—Caroline Dando, San Francisco, CA

I rely on the internet for daily use, both personally and professionally. To allow greedy corporations to have such unconstitutional power over my life is just disgusting!
—Seth Yohnka, Northridge, CA

it is our god given data highway.
—Arun Sharma, Gallipolis, OH

Universal access to all the internet at indiscriminate speeds. Protection of small companies and websites that cannot pay the inevitable tariffs .
—J Flaten, Westminster, CO

Freedom Is free
—Matt Clark, Los Osos, CA

We must keep our Open Internet. Do not let greedy, awful ISPs ruin something so critical.
—Kyle Dylan Conner, Long Valley, NJ

The internet should be a level platform for everyone to share content and information.
—Tom Lees, ,

Big Brother is BIG ENOUGH as he Shouldn't be. Don't do this small business and those who already scrape by to afford an internet connection, and to everyone who deserves peace of mind when browsing... we don't deserve to be marketed to on an even more constant basis than we already are.
—Miranda Hernandez, Santa Rita, GU

It's all about a level playing field.
—David May, Wallingford, CT

It is unfair to pay extra for access and encourages big corporations to make more money. This screws startups and smaller companies.
—Sajid Ghaffar, Fairfax, VA

I am a web developer and want to make sure that small businesses have the same playing field as everybody in the industry. I also want to make sure my personal data is not being sold to the highest bidder.
—Balz Kaufmann, Brooklyn, NY

It is obvious that Internet service is analogous to other utilities such as phone service, energy, and water, and that in our information-driven society it is becoming as necessary as these utilities. Internet service should be treated as a utility and regulated as a utility (especially given the paucity of ISP competition in many areas of the US). The Internet has empowered individuals to compete with large corporations in the marketplace of ideas, and competition is a very good thing for people. As we seek diversity in our public and workplaces, we should encourage diversity of viewpoints and ideas. We should not allow gatekeepers and pay-to-play-type policies that will take away the voices of many individuals and empower large corporations to speak with less dissent.
—Holly Bell, Fayetteville, NC

This is such a slippery slope. As an entrepreneur I am deeply concerned about the effects this could play with launching and advertising my endeavors.
—Kim Liggett, Fenton, MO

It allows my company which is a new start up on the internet to compete on an even playing field with companies with more resources than me. Off line I am limited to a small range of clients on the internet I can go after the same clients as a larger company. It keeps American business fair online which encourages the American dream.
—Diallo West, Dallas, TX

I am a marketing manager of a small business with corporate competition. Net neutrality gives us the even playing field that keeps our company in business.
—Alex Duggan, Huntsville, AL

Corporations should not be given this level of control of the free flow of information. You should protect the best interests of individual citizens and not corporations —Douglas Ramsey, Indianapolis, IN

because it levels the playing field for small business and start-ups. Too many laws handing the advantage to only those that can afford it. It WILL stifle innovation and competition which is extremely un american.
—Ross Pearlstone, New York, NY

The net should be open to all, freely. Not preferential treatment for those who pay more. The consequences of this would be enormous- I really don't think those in charge have really thought of the ramifications
—John Ogborn, Orem, UT

We do not need more corporations taking advantage of the people. One internet speed for all. How is this a good thing?
—Sean Hoy, Bryn Mawr, PA

FREEDOM OF SPEECH. Every individual must have equal access to public forums.
—Torrey Bell, New York, NY

The end on Net Neutrality would be a critical blow to freedom of speech and freedom of expression. The internet is one of the only places where the unheard masses can still have a voice, and the end of Net Neutrality could take that voice away from them forever. The companies that provide internet access should not be allowed to control it: should not have the right to bend it to their will. Just because one man owns the only ferry, does not mean he owns the river. It belongs to everyone and anyone can access it: so should be the internet.
—James Weir, Douglassville, PA

If you allow cable companies to set up two speeds of service, it won't be a "fast lane" and a "hyper-fast lane." It will be a fast lane and a slower-than-a-turtle lane. Comcast already proved this with Netflix. Comcast held Netflix hostage to their demands by dramatically decreasing their speed.
—Katherine Lippa, Portland, ME

ISPs should not have the power to block or interfere web traffic. The internet is not broken, but the FCC seems determined to do just that.
—Nick Oliver, Powell, TN

As more and more businesses, large and small, move to a hybrid cloud infrastructure; removing net neutrality rules could drastically impact their performance and outcome.
—John Day, Sacramento, CA

Mr. Wheeler's proposed rules for net neutrality would only furthers the disparity between the haves and have-nots. Potentially bright minds that live in rural areas, or in low income situations, would be denied the ability to advance their status, perpetuating the growing gap between the classes. This is unacceptable. Everyone has the right to reach higher, to desire better in life. Only a truly neutral internet would allow this. Throw these ludicrous rules out. Let the internet be for the people, instead of the ISPs.
—Josh Miller, Eunice, LA competition , not control over who gets my business

—Sandeep Puri, San Jose, CA

Without net neutrality, progress just can't happen. With large corporations stifling the websites and services of those who could possibly compete with them in any service they might want to dip into, nobody will be able to open a new service. The very idea of the internet, the idea of an open forum and source for information, commerce, and new perspectives will die.
—Benjamin Kimble, Rexburg, ID

The internet is a path intended to be traveled by all, monetizing the speed at which one can move is absolutely deplorable. I am all for capitalism, however this is not necessary, nor does it make fiscal sense for anyone other than the government and the lucky gatekeepers in telecom.
—Ravi M. Babu, Nutley, NJ

Net neutrality is basically going to cripple the little guy on the internet. The idea of a fast lane and a slow lane is not possible with companies. Who would hold them accountable for maintaining the "slow lane"? It will not happen, it will be abandoned because there will be no regulatory/cost penalty for those who spend their resources in favor of the companies that can pay for the high speed. It is an unfair rule and I will not support any politician or organization that is for it.
—Marcus Vaughan, Gilbert, AZ

Net Neutrality lowers the barriers of entry for entrepreneurs, startups and small businesses by ensuring the Web is a fair and level playing field. It’s because of Net Neutrality that small businesses and entrepreneurs have been able to thrive on the Internet. They use the Internet to reach new customers and showcase their goods, applications and services. No company should be able to interfere with this open marketplace. ISPs are by definition the gatekeepers to the Internet, and without Net Neutrality, they will seize every possible opportunity to profit from that gatekeeper control. Without Net Neutrality, the next Google being built in a garage somewhere will never get off the ground.
—Sharon C Young, Salt Lake City, UT

It not just important to me but everyone. Company will have a too much power!
—Danny, Aurora, IL

Cable companies provide terrible service at high prices. Estonia has higher download rates than we do here. I don't trust them, would abandon them if I didn't want basic cable, and think they operate as a cartel. The idea that they won't compromise users' interests--charging more from disrupters than incumbents (and potential consumers) is laughable.
—Caitlin Bowler, Somerville, MA

Internet is an ultimate free market, it must be fair game for everyone. This ruling ultimately benefits already hugely profitable ISPs and not the consumers.
—Steve O'Shnall, Rego Park, NY

The internet is a way to express free speech.
—Ryan Good, Muskegon, MI

All people should have a right to open internet without companies dictating what we can and can't have.
—Anna Banker, Minneapolis, MN

Fairness
—Jeffrey Bedrosian, Santa Margarita, CA

I, like other small businesses, I will not be able to compete on a level field with bigger more established businesses. In general, American people and American ingenuity will be stymied as new ventures with better products and services can't compete with bigger businesses able to buy internet fast lane advantages.
—Judy Rodman, Nashville, TN

As an individual on a fixed income and caring for a loved one with a debilitating mental health disorder, I am heavily reliant on access to internet resources that draw on a heavy bandwidth. Sometimes, on the darkest days, watching a favorite movie or TV show on Netflix is the only thing to keep my partner's mind off his suicidal thoughts and deep depression. We use videos of TED talks and motivational speakers on various therapy sights to give him a place to reinforce the coping tools he learns in therapy. Since the sudden onset of his illness two years ago, neither of us has been able to work full-time, and our savings have plummeted. We live in a rural region with limited internet access options, already leading to fairly high prices for only adequate internet access. To make it even more costly would prohibit our ability to stay where we live and work on helping my partner from being able to get back on his feet and find his way to a happy and healthy life.
—Jennifer Anne Johnson, Stowe, VT

I am strongly against this, the internet belongs to THE PEOPLE, not giant corporations! I'm tired of big companies trying to swindle out the American people and taking away equal rights for smaller companies.
—Lacie Pedersen, Sandy, UT

Net neutrality is essential for small startups to be competitive in the internet market place, which allows new companies to adapt to the needs of the market faster than industry giants. Without net neutrality large corporations will have an inherent advantage in the market due to buying priority, allowing them to control the internet services market. This goes against the internet's use since its inception in that all websites and services are equally available, leveling the playing field so it's about quality of service.
—Chris Vittoria, New Bedford, MA

It is important because there should be NOTHING less than REAL Net Neutrality. This is an attack on our rights to connect and communicate!!
—Jill Doering, Grafton, WI

I take my rights of freedom granted to me by the Constitution of the United States Of America, very seriously. STOP TAKING MY FREEDOMS AWAY!
—Steven Prevost, Grand Rapids, MI

Net neutrality is important to me because it provides startups like the one i work for an equal playing field with the the larger companies like the greedy bastards you represent. Thank god google fiber is coming and those companies will soon bea thing of the past.
—Ricky Thomas, Austin, TX

Because without Net-neutrality, the internet woulnd be the same!
—Daniel, ,

Our future is looking like a feudal society. Keeping net neutrality will continue to allow a large part of our culture still open as a land of opportunity.
—Attorney Russell C Leffel, Prairie Village, KS

I enjoy the freedom to access all the content the internet has to offer. A major corporation should not have the authority to dictate what information is available on the the internet.
—Ryan McFarland, Indianapolis, IN

I am a web developer. And I don't want big companies to take over smaller ones.
—Shamir Towsif, ,

An Open Internet is the ultimate free speech purveyor. By creating a two-tiered Internet, you are creating fascism and everything America goes against. Scrap these rules. Be a leader and do what's right.
—Latanya Ivey, La Verne, CA

Big Corporations should not have precedence and control over the internet. These rulings are undemocratic and corrupt. It's terrifying that these proposals made it this far along.
—Chen Blume, San Francisco, CA

To me it is a free speech issue; not scrapping these rules would allow corporate interests to restrict the free flow of communication for it's own purposes. The full-service internet should not be available only to those who can afford exclusive rights to it.
—Rita Pearce, Marion, IL

The Internet should remain a level playing field for everyone, big and small, a like.
—Roxanne Eldridge, New York, NY

Because anything is as unfair as charging for air to breathe. For once take a simple stand for the populous not the masters.
—Jane Childs, Las Vegas, NV

The reasons are legion. Most importantly we can't allow big telecom to continue to create more and more ways to generate new profit streams through manufactured pricing tiers. I live in a rural area that can't even get fiber or real high speed internet. If products or services that I use get choked arbitrarily it will be awful for me as a consumer, and for any entrepreneur.
—Andrew Roeder, Beaufort, SC

I want to enter any page i need to. I live in a country where the people that are against the gobernment are censured and i dont want that on the Internet too.
—Kenneth, ,

The internet was created to bring any information to all who sought it. Net Neutrality ensures that everyone has access to the same information, and that everyone has the capacity to spread their own information or business equally.
—Kate M Tucci, Glendale, CA

The internet altered the way the entire world lives, dies, and communicates. It allows for freedom and connection among every single person that uses it. Like the freedom of speech it should not and cannot be altered. The United States does not own the internet, no one does, and therefore cannot try and impose itself upon it. Creating prioritizable traffic just plays into the corporations that current monopolize the internet. It's bad enough that I don't have choices between internet providers at my house. The internet will surely suffer if cable providers and isp can introduce charges to access certain websites or services. I'm a budding entrepreneur and these new rules could likely inhibit my success as a starting company. How can we compete against bigger companies with financial backing when money starts impacting how I can start an internet service. Keep the net open and free. The way it has always been. It's the reason why the internet has been so successful.
—David Fedele, Sherman Oaks, CA

It prevents corporate interests from taking over the bandwidth and using it for corporate profits.
—Kathie LaLonde, Sanford, MI

It is the last equal opportunity place in our universe where people of all economic backgrounds, ethic origins, and various orientations can come together and create communities, start businesses, and learn what ever they see fit. Keep the 'net neutral.
—Gretchen Bedell, Williamsburg, VA

The internet is the last free place in the world. My voice is as valid as any other man's. Without Net Neutrality, I will only be subject to the whims of a a subjective force of inequality.
—Adam Meredith, Provo, UT

It keeps the Internet free and open to all, and I would hate to see this service be put behind paywalls.
—, Jasper, AL

I wish to preserve the neutrality of the internet to provide small businesses and new ideas the opportunity to grow and reach consumers. In addition, the neutrality of the internet gives an opportunity to all minorities (racial, religious, economic, etc.) to use their voices and advocate for their issues. If the net were not neutral, it would be harder for the small, the new, or the different to take a stand -- a dark future that clashes with the ideals of the United States.
—Brennan Murphy, Anderson, IN

Without net neutrality ISP's, who already reap the benefits of monopolization, will be able to discriminate against individuals, organizations and businesses by deciding who is able to get better service. I demand net neutrality and urge the FCC to reclassify broadband as a telecommunication service.
—David Ross, Fall River, MA

It is no one's place to dictate the web. It is our last true free space, with no politics, which is what humans desperately need since politicians don't understand the actual concept of neutrality and freedom.
—Maury Holliman, Northport, AL

Please don't turn the regular Internet into snail mail, and the 'pay-to-play' Internet into FedEx. It isn't fair and it isn't democratic.
—Tina Peterson Ph.D., Houston, TX

If it ain't broke, DON'T FIX IT. Period. This is such a blatant use of government and corporate power, it boggles the mind.
—Renee Musicus, Parkville, MD

The internet was designed to be free. To create express routes will ruin the internet for everyone. It's a cheap way to raise revenue and will be the downfall of the web. Also, Anonymous may end up ruining you!
—Mark Rossiter, , equal access to/for all

—Frances Johnson, Austin, TX

Because it is a reality of our 21st century. It's a channel of communication that shouldn't favor a corporate person over a real person. Why should we give power to a few so they can make decisions for us. The problem with television and radio is that it was controlled programming. We don't want to go back to that mindless shovel-fed world. It's our future and our children's future. Stop looking for short term gains and keep the net open and free.
—Craig Erickson, Port Townsend, WA

It lets small organizations and individuals to have good internet sites that require reasonably priced high speed coverage.
—Max Siders, Gallatin, TN

Freedom of speech shouldn't come with a price tag. My ancestors paid the price already. Why burden future generations with corporate greed?
—Mike Smith, Chicago, IL

I'm fortunate to have grown up in a household where books were valued, and a town with a very good library. But the ways I access information or do research have changed so much the past 30 years! The internet has increasingly become my first source for information, and allows my business to work with clients and use services located anywhere in the country. Most people and businesses have very limited choices in who their ISP will be. My physical location allows me only two choices (Verizon DSL or Charter Broadband – and many locations do not have DSL as an option b/c they are too far away from a main copper trunk line). If my ISP has the option to throttle access to my clients, the online services my business depends on, or the sites I visit for personal reasons, it can censor my access to information and/or shut my business down. The economy as a whole increasingly relies on the internet; individual access and the ability of every business to deliver content or services must be protected across the country, regardless of which ISP the end user has delivering that content or services.
—Jo Landers, Easthampton, MA

Its a good thing for all americans not just a few corporations. Its whats best for america as a whole to uphold our morals and core values as a country.
—Kathryn Pergola, Brooklyn, NY

As a small business owner I rely on affordable internet access to grown and run my business.
—Tracie Grant, Idaho Falls, ID

Freedom of speech means in the digital age means that no one should have to pay for special internet access.
—Shane Burns, Colorado Springs, CO

Because freedom is important to me and the Government isn't.
—David Kurman, Baldwin, NY

We must preserve net neutrality and keep the internet fair, fast and accessible to all regardless of income level. The United States already lags behind South Korea, Japan, Estonia, and Latvia (to name a few) in connection speed. Cable companies and other huge corporations have far too many rights and are slowing national progress. The FCC needs to reverse its prior decisions and reclassify Internet access services as “telecommunications services” under the law and treat ISPs at the common carriers they are. and Without legal restraint ISPs can monitor everything we do and say online which is a blatant violation of freedom of speech. What is the point of a regulatory agency if it does not properly regulate giant corporations and protect the interests of citizens? As a concerned citizen, I urge the FCC to restore net neutrality and the open internet.
—Leslie Reed, Tampa, FL

Net Neutrality is important to me because it allows me to freely communicate with anyone that is on the internet and access whatever information I would like to (selectivity is nice). I do not want those apart of larger companies to receive an excess amount of money, such as Verizon or Comcast. They have already made quite a profit from their regulations on data and channels. This assists the development of a social class gap, which does not need to be any larger than it is. I do not find it fair that those who are not capable to afford to use the internet freely, will not be able to access the internet as easily as those who have the money to afford to do so. Which would also mean that anyone who wanted to access the same information as someone else will be left in the shadows of unawareness. Everyone should be able to receive the same information at the same time, this is better for the public sphere in helping shape us all to be well-informed. The internet has been beneficial for many in giving others opportunities for careers, social interaction and education. Especially with education, with Net Neutrality, I'm capable of researching whatever I would like to research and not have any concerns about having slower (no) internet because I cannot afford whatever packages of "faster service" internet that Verizon or AT&T will provide. I would like to continue to freely communicate with anyone, access any information that is available and continue to not support large service providers like Comcast and Verizon in their accumulation of wealth. Information is for everyone, and we, as the public sphere, should all be capable, able and allowed to access that information, no matter what social class we are apart of. We would all appreciate no discrimination.
—Drew LaFasto, Maryville, TN

Companies like Comcast and Time Warner Cable already have a quasi-monopoly on internet service in many areas. Consumers should have the option to CHOOSE without paying more premiums for faster speeds.
—Yuqing Kou, Portland, OR

Net Neutrality maintains an open and free internet, which celebrates the 1st Amendment and makes education available to all. Additionally, it promotes a healthy economy where barriers to entry are broken down for new businesses, encouraging innovation.
—Sameer Khan, Baltimore, MD

Net Neutrality is most important thing for deaf culture because we can't use the phones so we had to use internet to do most of errands and works that we need to be done with instead of relying on the phones that are completely not working for the deaf people. Also Internet are allowing us to educating the future generations with better tools that are available on the internet.
—Heath, Duncan, SC

I decide for myself what content to surf. Thank you.
—Kevin Hathaway, Key West, FL

This is the only way to protect the open Internet. Anything else is an attack on our rights to connect and communicate.
—Kristy Hopper, Tucson, AZ

It's already a struggle with ISPs and their high costs for poor service. I rely on the Internet to be able to do my job. I don't need government regulations making it easier for the ISPs. They already have a monopoly and this proposed ruling will give them more of a monopoly.
—Craig Clingman, Colorado Springs, CO

I have lived through the golden age of internet accessibility for all. This is a wonder of modern civilisation. How galling to see a few robber baron corporations working as a cabal to deprive Americans (and the whole world) of fair and free access to this great tool for education and entertainment. Please act to ensure true net neutrality for the global internet community, not the weasel version sought by the greediest ISPs.
—Kathleen Cain, ,

The internet was founded on the basis of free and open sharing of information on a neutral platform. To remove net neutrality is to remove the very core values that the internet stands for. Preferential treatment will lead to conglomerates and corporations ruling the airways whilst also allowing the sharing of information to be quelled. This is an abomination and it must be stopped.
—Dylan Godfrey, Sanford, NC

The internet is one of the last places that allows american entrepreneurs to be successful and keep market competition. To allow giant corporate ISP's to essentially restrict any start ups ability to compete will only open doors to monopolization discrimination and widespread corruption of the best chance for human improvement since the rigorous application of the scientific method.
—Matthew Robinson, Simsbury, CT

I believe in fairness, competition and innovation. People who support these proposed rules apparently don't believe in what I believe.
—Benjamin Walker, Carlisle, PA

It means freedom of speech for everyone
—Raj Pabla, Harrisonburg, VA

Chairman Wheeler, please disallow the FCC from proposing rules that allow discrimination online, and throw out your proposed rules and reclassify real Net Neutrality.
—Paul Sensat, Clear Lake Shores, TX

By not allowing net neutrality is a step towards communism. We complain about other countries not allowing freedom of speech and equal rights for all to express opinions, we too will be like one of those countries if we do not have net neutrality.
—, Houston, TX

I manage a small business that rely's on internet traffic for new customers. My business is just starting and we have next to no money to compete with bigger companys for faster internet. Please do not pass this law.
—Michael Simonitsch, New York, NY

Everyone should have an equal playing field. People can't afford food these days let alone "premium" internet service.
—Dustin D., Shawnee, KS

A free and open internet is the single greatest technology of our time, and control should not be at the mercy of corporations. A free and open internet stimulates ISP competition. A free and open internet helps prevent unfair pricing practices. A free and open internet promotes innovation. A free and open internet promotes the spread of ideas. A free and open internet drives entrepreneurship. A free and open internet protects freedom of speech.
—Rebecca Wilson, Astoria, NY

Protecting liberty
—Dj, San Francisco, CA

Without it innovation will be stifled
—Tom Whitcomb, Southbridge, MA

It is essential to preserve open access to the internet for everyone. The internet has become fundamental to communication, to access to information, to commerce--to every aspect of our daily lives. The internet must be reclassified as what it clearly is--a telecommunications service under the law--and regulated as such by the FCC.
—Alan Stafford, Sarasota, FL

To preserve fairness to all.
—Desmond Ng, Jersey City, NJ

On May 15, 2014, the Federal Communications Commission proposed rules that would allow rampant discrimination online. Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would enable Internet service providers to charge extra fees to content companies like Google and Netflix for preferential treatment. Under these rules, telecom giants like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon would be able to create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford it and dirt roads for the rest of us. These companies would have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. And no one would be able to do anything about it. The agency can preserve Net Neutrality only by designating broadband as a telecommunications service under the law. Anything else is an attack on our rights to connect and communicate.
—Julia Decker, Astoria, OR

I do not want my ISP deciding which content I will receive in a timely manner and which I will not.
—Stephen Deffenderfer, Corona, CA

The internet is an amazing tool for education and economic development. In order to keep this accessible for all people, net neutrality must be maintained.
—Jessica Williamson, Washington, DC

I support net neutrality, and strongly encourage you to throw out your proposed two-tier "paid prioritization" rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. The FCC needs to regulate the internet under Title II common carrier rules, as originally laid out by Congress in the Telecommunications Act of 1996. Also, I strongly encourage Chairman Tom Wheeler to resign his position immediately. He is obviously and embarrassingly in a conflict-of-interest position, and seems incapable of making impartial and objective policy decisions.
—Rachel M. Barrett Knight, Franklin, IN

Equality for all. Mr. Chairman you have been a telco lobbyist however I want to remind you of your duty to citizens first. Remember opportunity for all.
—Jagan Subramanian, Santa Clara, CA

It is the single remaining level playing field left. What is best for a small handful of large corporations is the worst possible outcome for everyone else. I am tired of critical decisions being made simply for the financial benefit of the very few.
—Laura Corogenes, Kansas City, MO

A neutral internet provides everyone with equal access to content and information. There is already a sort of hierarchical divide between people who have the hardware use the internet and those who don't. Asking people to have to worry about their service provider, especially given the essential monopolies these companies have is an unnecessary and frankly pointless form of censorship. My children deserve to use the open and cultural advantages of a neutral internet.
—Eva Gallagher, Denton, TX

Unnecessary fees that would make giant cable corporations with terrible customer satisfaction have even more control over the internet.
—Ben Young, Austin, TX

The internet is a platform for gigantic economic growth in America. Jobs are created everyday because of companies access to the internet. The thought of charging different rates for data speeds is ridiculous. It is creating an unfair platform for large companies to strangle the competition. Instead of creating more jobs a new company would have to spend that money on staying competitive. The internet should not be restricted to those who can pay more. The fact that the people making this decision are in the pockets of companies like Comcast just show are poor the decision making abilities of this government are. This is not a Democrat vs Republican issue. This is the entire country looking at the greed of our Government and realizing it is no longer for the people.
—Katherine Whaley, Elmhurst, IL

You will crush our business if you allow this to take affect. We are a small business we will feel the full brunt of what's to come. We rely on the internet and can't compete with the Netflix & Googles. Protect our right to have a fair hand shake.
—Luis Rosario, Marina del Rey, CA

The Internet is free speech. We want free speech.
—Ali ElSayed, Woodside, NY

small biz
—Mark Spera, San Francisco, CA

The Internet must remain an equalizer and level playing field for small business owners and massive corporations, people of privilege and those without, etc. I do not accept the monopolization of Internet providers and their flexing of power over consumers. This. Is. Bullshit.
—Jennifer White, Portland, OR

Do you guys even realize up what your doing? Don't do this.
—Marshall mathers, Indio, CA

free speach
—Dennis Manier, Taylor, MI

Research, education, answer questions, free speech.
—Lisa LeBlanc, Austin, TX

Because it's fair and the right thing to do!
—Suzanne Preston, Bedford, IN

Net neutrality is important because all content should be treated equally. No corporation should be able to dictate what content can be accessed faster or give priority to their own content.
—Danielle Cosme, Sammamish, WA

The Internet will play a huge role in my future and you are planning to take this away from me! How dare you push the telecom industry's lobbying efforts to create a new global inequality divide? The Internet belongs to the world, and the fact that people like you are trying to privatize it for personal gain sickens me!
—Jesper Mount, Plano, TX

It lets me stay connected with my loved ones from all over the country. And it grants me access to whatever information I'm seeking!!
—Bryon Smeltz, Harrisburg, PA

It's already a monopoly and should be prevented from becoming more of one.
—Andrew Blake, Kansas City, MO

Freedom of speech
—John Galdo, Augusta, GA

The Internet is an essential telecommunications vehicle, and in this country, perhaps the MOST essential vehicle. Everyone should have equal access to this vital means of telecommunications. Equal access means equal processing speed. If I buy a phone, my call doesn't connect any quicker than the call of the person standing next to me. The proposed rules will encourage corporate abuse and make access far more difficult to those who can't afford upper tier access plans.
—, Teaneck, NJ

It seems that this country that was for the people by the people is not for the privileged only. When do fairness get back in to our great country.
—Robert Carter, Stockbridge, GA

Even playing field
—Charles Jennings, Chesapeake, VA

Let's let just one thing be an even playing field. Just one thing. We all own the internet together, and that's the way it should be.
—Jaqai Mickelsen, Atlanta, GA

As the owner of a small business which obtains most of its clients through its website, I know that an open internet with a level playing field is imperative.
—David Davis, Independence, MO

My grandfather fought in World War II to defend, among other rights and liberties, my freedom of speech. Chairman Wheeler's proposal is a direct violation of that right.
—, Lexington, KY

Because I value free and open access to whatever websites I choose to consume, and don't want corporate ISP's to dictate what I have access to.
—Kirsten Brennecke, Missoula, MT

Allowing ISPs to financially manipulate the relationship between internet content providers and content users runs counter to your mission of "supporting the nation's economy by ensuring an appropriate competitive framework for the unfolding of the communications revolution." Once ISPs can censor or charge for delivery of specific content, competition and innovation cease to exist.
—Elisabeth, Austin, TX

The Internet should always be open-source.
—Hannah Pieragostini, Milford, CT

This needs to be stopped. Don't break the internet, everybody wants an open internet.
—Carlos Vaquerano, Everett, MA

Unrestricted internet usage is vital to the progressiveness of technology and the enhancement of learning in this digital age.
—Jessica Lester, Seattle, WA

I am an employee of a small business. It is important for us to have net neutrality so that we are able to have the same speeds are any other company and have the same chance to grow into a larger business, as the larger companies had when they first started.
—Meghan Minus, New Haven, CT

A neutral internet means equal opportunity for all. Anything else is a plutocracy. My tax dollars paid for the development and construction of the internet. It should remain equally open to everyone because we've all paid for it. The big corporations are raking in profit already from the infrastructure that we put in place. We should charge them for access, not the other way around.
—Mark Kauffman, Chico, CA

I am daily internet user in my personal and professional life. I use it almost constantly and depend on it. I cannot stand by and let these horrible changes be made.
—Miroslav Lulic, Chico, CA

Corporations already control so much---don't give them more!!!
—Mallory Nettleton, Roseville, CA

Really? ! Another way to categorize people in classes, by rich and poor. The internet is the only place where you can fully express freedom of speech, by anymore. And you don't have to be in a category to express one self. Now taking that new idea just to divide a group of people, is unconstitutional!
—Oscar Ventura, Somerville, MA

Net neutrality is our right.
—Tomi Yamamoto, Santa Clarita, CA

The internet should be open with equal access for everyone.
—Paula Leffel, Prairie Village, KS

We have too many big businesses not acting in the best interest of their customers. Our government needs to start ensuring that the public interest is protected and not big business.
—Chrystal Hagerty, El Segundo, CA

Internet connectivity is the best hope for improving the human condition globally through education and connectivity. If it is further monetized, those who can benefit most will no longer be able to connect to this essential lifeline.
—Darlene Susco, West Hartford, CT

Stop letting lobbyist run this country
—Charles Lambert, West Palm Beach, FL

The internet is a global resource and tool. To allow companies to bid over priority would undermine the very reason the internet came about. Not to mention people are already paying more for internet than any country for the slowest speeds, killing net nutrality would allow for companies to raise prices even further not to mention costs from other companies to pay for faster connections. Its ludicrous!
—Gary Farris, Bentonville, AR

As an employee in Ecommerce I recognize the EXTREME importance for an equal playing field for all businesses who want to has an online business.
—, Bemidji, MN

Censorship for any purpose is not acceptable
—Heather Lancaster, Mountain View, CA

because discourse in America is already dominated by large corporations. The internet is the only vehicle for free discussion of ideas and the introduction of new ideas.
—Jean Corigliano, Spencertown, NY

These telecommunications companies have become monopolies and it is time for them to be stopped.
—Margie Dent, Havertown, PA

It represents one of our last freedoms.
—Alain Garcia, Irvine, CA

We need to protect our internet.
—, San Diego, CA

less corporate influence over communication
—Alex Lapp, Seattle, WA

I believe in equal access for all.
—, Los Angeles, CA

I like paying for services that give me the freedom to use them as I see fit, without hindrance.
—Ron West, Charlotte, NC

IT IS IMPORTANT TO EVERY CITIZEN! DO NOT MESS WITH OUR INTERNET!
—Danny Decena, Alameda, CA

We don't need another controlled environment.
—Nikola, , common sense

—Viktor Lauro, ,

The ability to browse the web freely
—Tyrrel Tsosie, Fort Defiance, AZ

The internet has empowered the world, please don't turn it into a profit center that suppresses access to those who need and benefit from it most.
—Brenda Boles, Tampa, FL

I spent 5 years in the Marine Corps serving this country, and will not allow the freedom that I volunteered to defend be corrupted.
—Jacob Scott Collier, Portland, OR

BECAUSE IF THESE GREEDY PIG BASTARDS DO "BREAK" THE INTERNET, THEN SOMEONE COULD BE OLIGED TO "BREAK" THEM AND I DON'T WANT TO SEE AN HONEST AMERICAN GO TO PRISON SIMPLY FOR GIVING BOTTOM FEEDING SCUM WHAT THEY'VE LONG DESERVED.
—Tim, Nashville, TN

Net neutrality is important because censorship is against the freedoms we enjoy in America.
—Kerri McConnell, Land O Lakes, FL

Prevents establishment of further stranglehold by monopolistic companies such as Comcast, Verizon, etc.
—Morgan Wilson, San Luis Obispo, CA

Corporations cannot decide whether or not the rules of net neutrality apply to them. Save the internet. Give us real net neutrality.
—Rebecca Cody, Austin, TX

The internet needs to be open, free, and AFFORDABLE. I'm tired of reading about the fast, modern gigabit internet services in Europe and Asia, while I'm being charged over $100/mo. for the privilege of having my connection throttled, charged overages, and randomly dropped. It's time to invest in the future of the internet and abolish these huge monopolies that don't care about their customers.
—Vincent Cimino, Phoenix, AZ

I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service. Also take a look online.....go do it we got time..........now go on youtube and look up a video....any one will do.......now click on the videos on the side and SEE ALL THE GLORY OF INTERNET AND SEE HOW WE SHOULD TREAT THE INTERNET BUT YOU WONT F*CKING DO IT CAUSE YOUR JUST A GREEDY A$$ N*GGA WONT EVEN CARE CAUSE YOU ONLY WANT MONEY EVEN IF IT MEANS SCREWING WITH PEOPLE YOU CANT EVEN THINK!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! !!!!!! JUST WAIT FOR THE LONG TERM EVERY SINGLE COMPANY THAT USES THE INTERNET WILL HAVE TO PAY MORE A CLOSING DOWN THE SMALL COMPANY'S AND ONLY LEAVING THE BIG ONE TO STAND!!!!! BUT THIS IS WHAT YOU GREEDY @$$ WOULD LIKE AND THATS WHY YOUR GONNA LOVE HELL CAUSE IF THIS GOES DOWN AND IT PASSES YOU HAVE WRITTEN YOUR NAME RIGHT ON THE NEXT TO GO TO HELL LIST!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! !!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! thanks for reading
—Kolby Doxey, Hooper, UT

I have several family members and many friends that make their livelihood through small internet venues. These rules would be devastating for many of their businesses, as the ISPs would be able to discriminate the content they provide in favor of the larger, wealthier companies would can afford preferential treatment.
—Jesse Paul Nelson, Tucson, AZ

The Internet should remain neutral to promote free speech, small business and access to education, art, culture, etc. No corporation should be able to determine which start ups succeed and which don't. Reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers.
—Jacqueline Wichern, Denver, CO

The Internet should remain neutral to promote free speech, small business and access to education, art, culture, etc. No corporation should be able to determine which start ups succeed and which don't. Reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers.
—Brianne Corona, Arvada, CO

It should be important to everyone. Less control for corporations.
—Alexandra Keane, Cheltenham,

It gives a level playing field for all and promotes healthy competition among both startups and major corporations.
—Daniel Mooney, New Haven, CT

It is very important to me to have access to many different websites - having different speeds would discriminate against and even end some of my friends smaller businesses. We must have an open internet!
—Kelly Bradley, Dallas, TX

I don't want cable companies controlling my internet usage.
—Tavier Ellis, fresno, TX

I implore you to keep the internet free and open to the public. By reclassifying Net Neutrality, you will be abusing your power as elected officials and servers of the American public. Do not abuse the power you are given. Do not think of your money and power, think of the common wealth of our nation. The internet allows all the freedom of speech, research, and it givens up open communication to our global community. By allowing these HUGE corporations like Verizon and Comcast to regulate themselves and basically do as they would like to their customers, you are allowing a basic freedom to be bought. The internet is priceless and should be sold at no cost. It should be easily accessed by all and not monopolized by so few companies! This will harbor innovation, free thinking, open conversations, connections between those who are far away and promote resentment between the people and the government. Do what is right, keep the internet and the world wide web truly neutral.
—Kate Vanlandingham, Savannah, GA

Because everyone deserves the same privileges on the Internet. There should be no price discrimination. Net neutrality is a must.
—Clarissa Padilla, South San Francisco, CA

i support net neutrality. this will be a key moment in the world development
—Stuart Quang, Croydon,

We don't have oil like Saudi Arabia, but we do have talented innovators that and an open playing field in the technology sector. A large portion of our GDP comes from the great minds that are capable of building fantastic software platforms like Facebook, Google, Amazon, etc. These companies are primarily American. To take away net neutrality would be to reduce the potential for innovation online and thus, over the long run, stifling the economic engine that is silicon valley that has helped so vehemently to keep America on top.
—Frank Zondlo, Fort Walton Beach, FL

Do the right thing for we the people, not the highest bidder.
—John Woodall, Bellevue, KY

everyone deserve open and free and EQUAL access to the internet, which has become as great and wide spread and REVOLUTIONARY as it is today because at least on the internet, everyone has the same capabilities to have their voice heard!!!
—Swati Dontamsetti, Edison, NJ

Net Neutrality is important to me because it puts everyone on a level playing field, not favoring one company over another. A new website would have as much possibility of achieving popularity as the website by a corporation, which allows for entrepreneurs a fair chance. I don't want the internet to become bogged down by the same people who control television and newspapers.
—Alric Knebel, Biloxi, MS

The playing field is level now. The FCC Regs will allow Corporations to take over control of the Internet.
—Roman Reynolds, Madison, WI

You will further deepen the divide that is occuring in this country against the common man and communication giants and governments. Please don't feed into the lobbying that is occuring by the telecom companies. You will be only a pawn. Be on the side of the people in this country not on the side of the deep pockets of the corporations who threaten to sue you if you don't take action to give them preferential treatment. Don't do this.
—Mark S., Milwaukee, WI

Net Neutrality is important to me because I believe the internet should be an even playing field and that preferential treatment should not be given to those that have and are willing to spend more money.
—Alex De Marchi, Delray Beach, FL

There should be no discrimination over internet broadband use.
—Austin Prario, Wilton, CT

Freedom on the internet is essential.
—Robert Pless, Marietta, GA

It balances the social/political powers in our country, and protects against increased corruption.
—Matthew Fisher, Greensburg, PA

I want to be able to see ideas and products from small business and individuals not be locked into viewing what communication corporations like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon can charge more for. American pay more for Internet than most other countries! Why do we need to be charged more, reducing content and diversity? Protect complete access to the Internet for all.
—Brian Rose, West Palm Beach, FL

freedom of choice. If the cable/phone companies can regulate speeds with $$ they can regulate what we watch when we watch it and how we would like to watch it. How is that right?
—Kekoa Parker, Orange, CA

I believe we should have free, consistent, and open access to the Internet without condition. Abandoning net neutrality would be catastrophic to our economy and country.
—David Pollman, key west, FL

Please do not break the internet. It is extremely important that it remains open. As a computer scientist and an aspiring software entrepreneur, many of my lifelong dreams would be crushed by an internet with gatekeepers. Please take action to ensure the net remains open and an enabler for entrepreneurs all over the world.
—Brendan, Seattle, WA

I'm a small business owner and I work with tech start ups. Don't shut out innovation online.
—Mitra Cline, Ventura, CA

People everywhere understand that the Internet is a crucial driver of free speech, innovation, education, economic growth, creativity and so much more. We demand real Net Neutrality rules that protect Internet users from corporate abuse.
—Peter Feller, ,

This is one of the most egregious eradication of our supposed free market enterprise economy and a blatant example of just how little elected politicians provide their obligatory support of the rights of the American citizens, choosing to favor the interests of corporate America and the millions in campaign finance and lobbying dollars spent to keep them in positions of power. This and campaign finance reform are the two crucial political problems that need to be solved immediately if America wishes to exist as the democracy that so many corrupt politicians claim it to be!! This situation shows just how uneconomical free America has just become: huge corporations are campaigning to give themselves the power to provide substandard products and services while eliminating the chance for competition to provide better alternatives to the public. Plain and simple.
—Jason Graser, Naples, FL

Free market capitalism.
—Matthew Bagsic, Carson, CA

Because I'd rather support companies like Amazon, Twitter, Google, Microsoft, and Facebook, and ten thousand innovative start ups and small businesses over monopolistic, greedy, manipulative ISPs like TWC and Comcast. Because the first group is what has and will carry AMERICA forward into the 21st century. Make the right choice. Support TRUE net neutrality.
—, Overland Park, KS

Net Neutrality is very important to me. Although you may not see the lower states of community like twitch.tv. I've already noticed changes as Time Warner Cable has already take in the change and quickly started to slow my internet down. The buffering, and constant disconnects can be very frustrating. I'm a live streamer and its very hard to keep constant viewers if they/me keep getting disconnects and/or buffers. It makes it nearly impossible to do anything on the internet and I fear as more and more people will start to fall of from ISP's and go to the better ISP's. For the people who can afford it, they don't really care. For the people at the bottom of the shit-stick its rough. Net Neutrality is nothing to be messed with. So can we please change it back. Its already affecting mine and many other lives. This is not what the internet was intended for. Please reverse the actions and save 'our' internet. Become a hero....
—Austin Osborne, Miamisburg, OH

Without equal access, there is no real competition. Without competition, there is no free market, with all it's benefits. Prices will rise, services will deteriorate.
—, ,

I'd prefer not to live in a world where all information is provided only by the largest corporations with their own agendas.
—Jean Loughran, Buffalo, NY

Already living in a large city where internet speeds are less than Ideal, having the throttle cut on information based on price seems ridiculously counter-intuitive. This hurts everyone, period.
—Mike Baker, Baltimore, MD

It is important that small emerging company's can stand with the big guys. This country has ravaged the ability for a small business to start in every way but online start-ups. Do not let this happen.
—Jon Hamber, Vandalia, OH

The FCC has proposed rules that would break the open Internet. This proposed path would open the door to widespread discrimination online. It would give Internet service providers the green light to implement a two-tiered Internet, with a fast lane for those who can afford it and a dirt road for the rest of us. This would be a disaster for startups, nonprofits and everyday Internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls. I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.
—Sabina Kajtezovic, Chicago, IL

THIS will cost me more money. REALLY!!!!
—Holly, tewksbury, MA

It is a constant source do information and instruction. Don't break the best thing to happen to this century thus far!!!
—Patricia O'Brien, New York, NY

The Internet must remain a level playing field for all. We can not allow corporate interests to take this away.
—Stephen Groundwater, Philadelphia, PA

Because equal access to online contents promotes free speech.
—Asad Ahmed, Hagerstown, MD

I want the Internet to remain a place where everyone is equal. We all get the same chance. Companies should not hold this kind of power over the internet
—Alexander Gudschinsky, Fairbanks, AK

. This would be a disaster for startups, nonprofits and everyday Internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls.
—Christopher Lee, Saint Louis, MO

The death of net neutrality in the U.S. Is going to destroy our ability to compete in the digital marketplace. It's going to kill startups and further empower internet giants giving them a monopoly on their services. If you care about our countries future more than Comcast, Time Warner or Verizon's future, you will defend net neutrality. Christopher Kind New York, NY
—Christopher A Kind, New York, NY

As a young entrepreneur hoping to make a name for himself in the tech industry, Net Neutrality is absolutely vital to my success. I don't have the resources to pay for preferrential treatment in a two tiered Internet. Being stuck in the slow lane will undoubtedly crush any attempt to get a web based business off the ground. No company has the right to hinder the success of another through service restriction. Healthy competition is one thing, but to prevent the next Google or Facebook from getting off the ground because they can't pay for premium service is unacceptable.
—Nathan Casale, Bristol, CT

Network neutrality is the principle that Internet users should be able to access any web content they choose and use any applications they choose, without restrictions or limitations imposed by their Internet service provider.
—Anthony Hernandez, Carol Stream, IL

Net neutrality is essential to keeping all voices equally heard, and to allow the internet to continue to develop as a space where new, useful, and unexpected things can occur. Anything else is rediculous and impoverishes potentials of the internet that have yet to be explored. Market values can not be the only values. Commercial internet-services are acceptable, but they are by no means the only thing that makes the internet interesting, useful, or beneficial to people. The internet, as it is, is already getting more and more commercialized, and thereby, less valuable. Any stance to further this development, or systematize it will make it culturally beyond repair.
—Till Hopstock, ,

The internet is one of the most important creations of our time, and we need to safeguard it. It has brought people together from across the globe who have shared their knowledge and experience with one and other, pooling it into a single digital construct. It isn't just about freedom of expression, its about freedom of community. The internet has brought people together in ways not seen before. And, in this time of corporations, lobbyist, and politicians that seem to act in self interest, the internet has become the one place where we can express our voice. On top of that, this could be a critical blow economically. Capitalism needs competition to grow and flourish. Jobs need to be created so that more people can make money so that more people can afford goods and services. If net neutrality is broken, then you can say goodbye to one of the few (and most important) outlets left for entrepreneurs to create business and competition. Maybe we've become too reliant on the internet. Then again, does it matter? What matters are the repercussions if net neutrality is lost. Cable companies are acting in self interest, rather than in the interest of the people. They are an antiquated business that has become nothing more than a parasite and detriment to society. The internet has become society, a place where all can have a voice.
—Daniel A White, La Crosse, WI

Net Neutrality promotes innovation and fairness. Do the right thing.
—Marta Walz, Geneva, IL

It is extremely important to me that the internet continues to provide an equal opportunity and voice for EVERYONE. Please and thank you.
—Jason Den Van Eng, Oakland, CA

To ensure the continuation of free speech and avoid a broadband/telecommunications monopoly, it is crucial to keep the Internet open and maintain net neutrality.
—Kate Karczewski, Chicago, IL

The internet should be open and free from corporate abusers.
—Kim Allio Warner, Houston, TX

The cost of internet access will prevent the freedom to use the system. Big companies will continue to abuse the less fortunate into paying for access that is disproportionate to the utility value of the general consumer.
—John C. Kaczmarek, Boca Raton, FL

The web is the only place left that is truly free. Our rights are manipulated everyday, in every place, but not there. Keep it free please. Freedom! 'Merica, fuck yeah!
—John Hammersley, Eldorado, IL freedom to start a business without a ton of money

—Annette Eland, Fair Oaks, CA

Protect internet freedom. Don't drop the ball on start-up companies!
—Adam Garrison, OLYMPIA, WA

We need equal access to open and efficient internet for our livelihood and well-being! Don't discriminate, stop these misguided and selfish rules and enact REAL Net Neutrality!
—Jami Nielsen, Goleta, CA

I don't want a Limiting Diversity of Content I don't want Favoring Commercial Services I don't want Restricting Internet Telephone I like the freedom on the internet I do not want cable/ISP companies having power over what I want to see, download, stream, etc. by discriminating against any other services or companies they do not have ties with. I'm paying for my service already. why would other people using the internet would have to pay for exclusivity while other that didn't would get slow or low service.
—Jose vega, Santa Maria, CA

The internet offers an amazing amount of services and information for all users. It's a great tool for education, communication and entertainment. Most importantly, it offers an equal playing field for individuals and companies. Startup companies, small companies and non-profit companies are just as likely to succeed online as any big-name company. The whole point of the internet is freedom without discrimination. To turn it into a tiered system where large telecom companies rule would ruin the whole purpose of the internet and would only open the door for these companies to make further changes to shape the internet to their favor. This new system is unfair and quite honestly un-American. Let the internet stay as it is, don't try and fix what isn't broken.
—Alyssa Schuett, Warminster, PA

The monopolies of communication companies already have devised cartel ways to block net neutrality. Stop them from having legal backup for it. Please prevent the tiered system of internet speeds from happening. It will undeniably put a block to revolutionary technological projects from happening. It will create globally problems in the way we communicate. It will disrupt financial viabilty for anything that we currently do. Moreover it will put comm companies in charge of our everyday communication and thus life. We already pay extremely more than enough for subpar services. Communication is a freedom that should not be controlled, and especially not be controlled by monopolies.
—Triantafyllos Paparountas, ,

Seems as if nothing is free in this country any longer. Now our information highway is also at risk and there seems to be nothing we can really do about it. I hope this and other forms of protest will work.
—Yvette, Round Rock, TX

Stop being a money hungry pig, throw out these rules.
—Shelby Shook, Spring, TX

As a future small business owner, I will be heavily dependent on the internet to promote my services through an online website, blogs, videos, audio clips, and social media. I believe it is imperative to keep the net neutral for not only my optimal survival and growth, but for other small business like me that don't have the capital or platform to benefit from such a revised internet usage. This would be a violation of rights and freedoms, guaranteed to me as a citizen of the United States. A country that was founded on the backs of those that this unfair ruling looks to cripple the most, no less.
—Kimberly Chapman, Edmond, OK

It is important for being able to do work. Everyone needs access to knowledge
—, Lawrence Township, NJ

I believe that it is essential for freedom of speech and to keep the internet easily accessible to everyone, not just people with money. This proposal will increase the educational and economic divides.
—Kelly Ludwig, Kansas City, MO

I think everyone should be on a level playing field.
—Claudia Gibson, Prairie Village, KS

As a librarian, I see people everyday who can't afford broadband Internet at home. They need to be able to use the Internet to find jobs, promote their businesses, work, study, and access all the things they need to continue to connect and access information. Please don't take this freedom away--especially from the people who need it the most.
—Laura Marlane, Pawtucket, RI

I feel that more and more, the rights of regular people are being infringed upon, to the benefit of the wealthy. These proposed rules will ruin the Internet as we know it, and will make American Citizens vulnerable to the aggressive tactics of large corporations. The economy is bad enough. Don't make it worse but letting these companies place an even greater burden on the public. This is wrong, and I think everyone knows it.
—Nathan Harris, Orem, UT

It is important to allow access of the internet to be the same for all.
—Andrew, El Dorado Hills, CA

http://www.supplychain247.com/ article/net_neutrality_what_yo u_need_to_do_and_now
—Clive Purchase, Framingham, MA

Free market trade, free speech, social justice, anti-monopoly safeguard, and a separation and healthy competition of powers/market forces.
—Kent Schmiedeberg, Edmond, OK

Because the internet is something that no individual owns and everyone should have equal access to in order for them to find information or any general path to enlightenment. Allowing this could potentially open up a wider gap between the "haves" and "have nots" and the next Einstein is having enough difficulty coming from poverty as it is without being further limited.
—Mark Hoffman, Columbia, MO

We cannot allow the freedom of the internet to be infringed upon by anyone, either big government or big business.
—Grant Sabean, New York, NY

The internet is for everyone. Do NOT take away these rights and take a dump on those of us who do not make much money. Not everyone can afford to pay extra so their internet connection won't be awful. Let us have what we are already rightfully paying for.
—, Evansville, IN

It is one of the only places global citizens can feel close to true freedom.
—Daniel Bowler, Arlington, VA

I won't be able to take online classes with additional two tiered internet service fees.
—Tyler James, Fort Smith, AR

1. freedom of speech. 2. i like millions of americans work for a small company that relies on the freedom of the internet to compete with large companies like walmart and amazon.
—Mark Fields, Osseo, MN

The internet has done much to fulfill the promise of equality enshrined in the first amendment. Today, the voice of anyone may ring loudly if it finds resonance among the populace. Any unknown may provide challenge -- indeed, meaningful challenge -- to even established and entrenched institutions. Giving providers control of internet speeds on the basis of content would provide an amplifier, and a mute switch, to established and entrenched institutions. Please keep the internet free of such influence and ensure service remains neutral to content. Please reverse the decisions and reclassify ISPs as common carrier telecom service providers.
—Adam Rausch, Oakland, CA

Net Neutrality is the basis of our freedom
—Junglee, Sunnyside, NY

Net Neutrality is important because it is freedom. If you take freedom from the people you service, your freedom will be taken from you also.
—Rachelle Beasley, Afton, NY

I depend upon quality content from the internet for learning purposes, communication, and self expression. These are all fundamental human desires and I fear that they will no longer exist if net equality is destroyed. Please support an Open Internet so that knowledge can spread, ideas can be fostered, and people can become capable in a perpetually changing world. The internet is a precious, infinite resource. Please consider the consequences.
—Timothy Pulliam, Rochester, NY

Net Neutrality is important because the internet is ours!!! Not the governments!! Stay the hell away from our freedom, you greedy bastards!!
—Gordon Montross, Auburn Hills, MI

This will only further the gap between the haves and the have-nots.
—Josh Cline, Santa Cruz, CA

Equal opportunity is the American dream.
—Jenni Wells, Birmingham, AL

The internet is the last truly free place in this world. If we limit those freedoms, how can we ever expect anyone or anything to lrogress? Why do we protect those who can afford to protect themselves?
—Alexandra Greenway, Atlanta, GA

I am an small business owner that relies on the neutrality of the internet for my livelihood. It is important the ISP's are not blocked or any unfair tier system be applied to the internet.
—David McRae, Richmond, VA

Real Net Neutrality and the FCC reclassifying internet service providers as common carriers is important to me for a number of reasons. ISPs with the ability to determine the cost of content create new social classes - the information rich, those able to afford any content they choose, and the information poor, those who have access to only the content that they can afford. An ISP is put in a position of great power to determine what is seen and what is hidden via charges on information sources. I don't want to live in a world where my ISP determines that Fox News is available to all and a surcharge is applied to PBS, foreign news or sites that are not aligned with a particular political bias. The ability for any business to serve its content to an audience without financial penalty on the part of a user is critical for continued innovation and developing services in an ever growing connected world. I entrust my ISP to deliver the data I choose, I do not trust it to choose the data it delivers. I hope you will take a longer view of the actions you propose and consider what is in the best interests of America, not only those who run AT&T, Comcast and Verizon. Regards, Scott Layne
—Scott Layne, ,

Prevention of a corporate oligarchy!
—Shannon Jones, Carrollton, TX

Because our economy is built on small businesses that have a fair opportunity to compete with established companies online if they have a better product or service. If ISPs can start charging for that advantage, you skew the system in favor of the "haves," in the same way the 1% are currently now heavily skewed for success than the rest. That is the opposite of the American dream. And it's also not what Congress and the Courts intended, which this administration seems to forget are the other two arms of our government.
—Adrienne Luscombe, Alexandria, VA

Net Neutrality is a right, WAS a right. It has been taken away in order to allow petty cable companies to take advantage of people, to take their money and give nothing back. This is a step backwards, not just for internet but for all people who live in America.
—Kenneth Gomes, Jersey City, NJ

We need free access to the only media that is not beholding to anybody.
—Carol Kopsco, Tucson, AZ

Our amazing internet companies like Google, Facebook,etc. need an open internet. A two teired system will destroy innovation. Don't sell out to the big telecoms.
—Michael Rooney, Vienna, VA

I have a small business and already deal constantly with issues pertaining to internet speed and customer service. I can't see how this proposal would do anything but make it worse. On a more macro scale this would seriously harm competition and innovation in the US.
—Henry Fleischmann, Berkeley, CA

A two-tiered internet would accelerate the divide between the haves and the haves not. This is a matter of equal rights and supporting competition and entrepreneurship in this country.
—Stacey Foreman, Portland, OR

As a web developer I want a free and open internet where all can thrive, not a competition killer. The role of government is too defend and ensure competition and I do not believe these rules fulfill that role.
—Patrick Metcalfe, Chicago, IL because any form of discrimination is abject

—Matthijs Wolff, ,

The internet is the biggest tool of leveling the playing field...a true equalizer for all. By making the internet a two tier product...you're alienating a large demographic that will not be able to afford the higher end version.
—Jesse Tarantino, Boston, MA

I serve in the United States military, and I didn't enlist to have my internet and telecommunication capabilities trampled over and monopolized on. I demand Net Neutrality.
—Benjamin D Tenbrink, Marshall, NC

Freedom and a level playing field
—Larry Poindexter, North Hollywood, CA

You'd essentially destroy any hopes of a start-up to be able to compete with the giants if they don't have the money to do so. I would also assume it would affect established smaller companies as well as areas such as academia which may not have additional capital to fund the fast lane. The ramifications for your decision are huge. The internet is not just a place for play. A lot of important information flows through it that is useful for many not only in the United States, but the world.
—Adel, College Station, TX

Though I'm sure this won't be read. The telecom companies need to stop double dipping. Please don't stifle competition in the future.
—John Kelly, Sealy, TX

We need to keep everything neutral for a truly competitive market.
—Hannah Wang, Gaithersburg, MD

The internet is a open egalitarian ,distributed network. Without net neutrality regulations, ISP's could create caste systems based on economic status, the internet would no longer be an egalitarian space.
—Benjamin Cheng, San Jose, CA

Companies cannot buy my clicks.
—Mackenzi Coan, Chino Hills, CA

To enable entrepreneurs and start ups to exist!
—Charles Faulkner, ,

The internet is one of the last remaining spaces where access to information isn't dictated by economic standing. The risk of a widened digital divide is real and actualized with the loss of Neutrality. Information access dictated by business undermines the notion of free speech and access to information. The whole basis of the creation of the internet was to be a open communicative tool. Please be better than this Chairman.
—Carrie Vogler, Stone Mountain, GA

Upholding Net Neutrality and keeping the Internet open is essential to the future of our country. Allowing cable companies to freely dictate our laws is a failure of our democracy. Don't let corporate CEOs deuce all over our constitution.
—Brenda Hidalgo, Yorba Linda, CA

Net Neutrality should be preserved at all costs. The FCC must not finalize this proposed rule.
—Priscilla Flattery, Alexandria, VA

Net neutrality allowed for innovative entrepreneurs 10-15 years ago to revolutionize commerce and the economy. No doubt there are more innovations and entrepreneurs on the horizon and they-we deserve the protection of equal/ low-cost access to the internet
—Kyle Kauzlarich, Omaha, NE

It's essential to our modern First Amendment rights.
—Andy Simons, Seattle, WA

Freedom of Speech rights and a level playing field for business and others to distribute their content on the internet.
—Marc Williams, Bentonville, AR

Cable companies made a free market decision to invest and build the broadband infrastructure and reaped massive profits organized around market monopolies. They don't get to now claim that they need government help with their wildly successful business model. Are they capitalists or not?
—Steve Overturf, Providence, RI

Cable television, nearing the end of its developement and relevancy, has been reduced to absolute fecal matter thanks to big networks and big money. The internet is a miracle of the modern age, please do not let it suffer the same fate. Please do not let big money destroy the greatest human advancement of our time.
—Adrian Daley, Tucson, AZ

It's essential for small businesses.
—Tara Zdzienicki, Seattle, WA

There is nothing wrong w/how the internet works right now. Accept maybe the speed, and the only thing this is going to change is the price we pay for the services we receive!
—Katrina Thompson, Douglas, AZ

it works the way it should —Linda Baker, Prior Lake, MN

The internet is one of the greatest creations of mankind and this is largely because it is an infrastructure that allows equal access to information for everyone. Although it may not seem like it now, allowing corporations (or individuals) to pay for faster (or better) access to information will eventually destroy the aforementioned infrastructure. It would only be a matter of time before a tiered, class system took the place of a free exchange of ideas. I'm not sure if anybody even reads these comments but if you come across this one and happen to be in any position of power to do anything about, please consider what you're doing. This is bigger that some corporation or government. This is about all of us. Please preserve an open Internet. Thank you.
—Mark Alston, San Diego, CA

I do all my business on the internet, just leave it alone.
—Billy Allen, Grove City, OH

I support Net Neutrality Net Neutrality is the Internet's guiding principle: It preserves our right to communicate freely online. This is the definition of an open Internet. Please keep the common Carrier
—Patricia Bearhs, Cincinnati, OH

Equal opportunity for all internet sevice providers on internet
—Harold Bosse, Minneapolis, MN

Equal right for all to reach potential customers on the internet
—Christelle Michel, Minneapolis, MN

It's for everyone.
—Christina Bisio, Kihei, HI

The reason the internet has become this giant entity that we all know and love is because of net neutrality. Without the internet being open for all ideas to be shared in a fair and democratic fashion, the internet will become nothing more than another tool used by the cable oligopoly to snatch our hard-earned money out of our pockets, another way corporations will stifle the creative process that only the internet can provide by only letting those with certain internet providers have decent internet connection. The internet is not a place for discrimination, despite what you might read in any given comment section.
—, North Richland Hills, TX

This proposal directly conflicts with the freedom of speech and expression that is guaranteed to every citizen in the constitution. I ask that as a representative of the people that you move to reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers. Otherwise you will be supporting a vehicle that will create discrimination and inequality between socio-economic classes. This will also hinder the upward mobility that is a crucial part of the American dream. Please protect this incredible country and ensure it remains the land of the free.
—Celestial Pennington, Wilmington, NC

Are you really going to let these already FAT cash farm companies put this country farther in the hole??
—Stefan Romaldini, Wilmington, NC

If a service is paid for, we deserve to receive those services. Especially if several of our paid services coexist and rely on each other.
—Rebekah M Callaway, Spokane, WA bc America is supposed to be the land of liberties, not restrictions and tyrannic control

—Matt Thies, Wilmington, NC

I'm a consumer and expect to get equal treatment
—Bruce a west, Cypress, TX

I believe that we must protect open internet.
—Whitney Helm, Wheatland, WY

We are distributors. Before the internet, we had to gamble large sums (for us) on Yellow Page and newspaper ads. It they didn't pull we could go bankrupt. The internet gives us an opportunity to get in front of potential customers affordably - to be competitive with anyone.
—Cecil H. Myers, Erwin, NC internet citizen

—Ms. Anon Smith, Anon, IL

I believe that ISPs should not hold ye power to sway free speech via the speeds at which internet voices can be heard.
—Jai, Durango, CO

Net Neutrality is important to me as I enjoy being able to talk to my friends, no matter where in the world they are, and know that I can do so by only paying my ISP's monthly fee. If the real Net Neutrality is abolished, it will destroy the free internet we've all come to know and love. And it can be almost guaranteed that people will start becoming their own ISP's as opposed to having to leech of major groups.
—Guy Schulz, Clinton,

I don't want company's with their own agendas to control the information available to myself and the public.
—Brian Tobia, New York, NY

Who'd definition of Net Neutrality?? I don't want the FCC regulating my internet —Danielle Femine, Hartsdale, NY

The FCC should be protecting the American people and it is selling us and our needs to the highest bidder!
—Kari, Sioux Falls, SD

Because Net Neutrality is the basis of the internet and the core of the future of freedom, weather individual or corporate. No one should be able to legally dictate which companies get faster internet.
—Joel Oleaga, Teaneck, NJ

Simply, Net Neutrality rules are fair for all those who are the majority of the middle class in our society.
—Suck-Min Kim, Seattle, WA

These proposed rules would open the door to widespread discrimination online. It would give Internet service providers the green light to implement a two-tiered Internet, with a fast lane for those who can afford it and a dirt road for the rest of us. This would be a disaster for startups, non-profits, and everyday Internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls.
—James L. Day, Texarkana, TX

the internet should be free information open to everyone equally.
—Stephanie Trice, Houston, TX

As one of the founders of the software publishers association, its' first chairman of the software protection committee, the publisher of the first ever officially licensed software package of the National Football League (NFL), a Stanford University graduate, and an entrepreneur, I believe that it is in the best interest of our country that the Internet remain neutral. The FCC should correct the classification of Internet service providers to what they were previously - telecommunication providers not information providers. Dale Hillman, P.E. Daleh@isd.net
—Dale Hillman, Minneapolis, MN

I
—Jeff Larson, Lincoln, NE

The agency can preserve Net Neutrality only by designating broadband as a telecommunications service under the law. Anything else is an attack on our rights to connect and communicate.
—Kelsey Davis, Palm Beach, FL

I am against discrimination and this proposed path is so obviously discriminatory that it seems incredulous that it is even being considered by the FCC.
—Chris Billington, Montara, CA

I want to be able to make online content in the future and allow small businesses to prosper online without going through a bigger business.
—Rebekah Durig, Chillicothe, IL

Net Neutrality is the only way to have a level playing field for all sorts of businesses that rely on the internet. In the very near future virtually all businesses will be dependent on this communications network. Internet service providers MUST be reclassified as common carriers! If we want a vibrant economy that can move quickly with new ideas and technologies, we need this vital backbone to be available to all equally. Chairman Wheeler’s gift to the very industry he lobbied for will be disastrous for our country’s economy, stifling innovation and pushing us way behind other countries in the new world economy. PLEASE don't allow this to happen to our future and our children's future!
—Dave Dennis, Downers Grove, IL

Because I believe in Democracy, and anything but net neutrality is undemocratic.
—Carmine Aiello, La Jolla, CA

I about to start an online business and I want fair competition
—Amy master, Gloucester, MA

All data should be treated equally. No two tier or multi-tier approach by ISP or cable providers. The Internet should remain the great equalizer.
—Mark Barwinski, Ellicott City, MD

Everyone deserves access to the internet in the similar way that everyone deserves a public library in their community. Internet is the library now and restricting people access is selfish.
—Sarah Esquivel, Las Vegas, NV

Its important to everyone.
—Becky McGinnity, Fort Worth, TX

Business, Freedom, Privacy, Security
—Jason, Manchester, NH

I work very hard for my money that pays for Internet access. I should be able to visit any website I want to without being hindered by my ISP provider.
—Greer Hallmark, Cookeville, TN

keep the net open to all
—Bill Cantlon, , everybody should have equal access and rights on this important medium.

—Gerard Platerink, Hillsborough, CA

It is vital to allow access for new business start ups on an equal footing to established businesses who already have the ability to pay to gain commercial advantage. The limited competition shown by the cable carriers illustrates how competition between ISPs will be stifled. Lack of competition has already left the USA behind other nations in terms of service quality and competitive price. ISPs are common carriers and should be properly classified as such under the law.
—Michael Burton, Lyman, SC

Net Neutrality is important to me because it allows for a level playing field and freedom. This is the very freedom on which America is founded. To alter this would be the same as taxing a specific gas station along the highway because it is not Exxon. Since some of the internet companies compete with the provided content with what is online, it would be as if Exxon told people they were no longer allowed to set up dinners on the road without them or pay an extra tax. Question should be, why does Exxon get to charge me extra?
—Jesse Wright, Great Falls, MT

I really don't want a corporation denying or limiting users use of the internet, and I want the internet to stay as it is, because it's fine as it is.
—Alex Concepcion, Waldorf, MD

It's part of Free Press and is essential for an informed public.
—MaryMartha Pritz, Fairview, NC

The net is a form is digital free speech and should be available in its full format to anyone just like power and water
—Joshua Johnson, Escondido, CA

Do not allow corporations to own parts of the internet. Access should be equal for large and small companies and everyone should have access to speed/throughput.
—Anne Varnell, Bakersfield, CA

I don wan this fast lane slow lane bs. Keep things how they were and don't just let them take control. I want my internet to be free of hinder abcs by other companies who simply want to monopolize my internet and regulate what I want.
—Jeffrey Winkler, Whittier, CA

Democratic freedom, anti monopoly and a level playing ground
—Elena kumarasamy, ,

For small businesses
—Albert Arenas, Santa Paula, CA

Too many reasons
—Dante Delfini, Chicago, IL

Priincipal. The US was founded on freedom, but for the last 40 years I have watched HELPLESSLY as these basic freedoms are being restricted or even removed. Europe has become more tolerant of racial, and religious differences than the country founded on those principals. I am being forced to pay premiums for subpar performance already and I see it only getting worse if this rule is enacted. Please keep corporate greed out of my internet service. Thank you, Michele
—Michele Mitchell, Cecilia, KY

Because I do not accept living in an oligarchy. Net neutrality is not only common sense, it is just.
—Gina Mosca, Malden, MA

"This would be a disaster for startups, nonprofit and everyday internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls."
—Leslie Pomales, Hartford, CT

Because anything less is inhibiting important freedoms that every American deserves; rich or poor.
—Michael Vostatek, Youngstown, OH

It is what is left to us as what was once a free and democratic society to express ourselves. To build businesses To protect what my father and my ancestors since Jamestown came here for. Freedom. If this is passed, it is and act of treason and you, Chairman Wheeler, would be a traitor to this country. A traitor to my father, my uncles (who fought in WWII). To the founders of this country. You would be doing more damage than Bin Laden. I am already ashamed of my President , who appointed you and intend to share that with him. If you have children, you should care that this freedom needs to be protected for their sakes. They will inherit the world you leave them with. Would you leave them unable to enjoy the freedoms millions have died to protect? Are you so determined to destroy our freedom of speech? I have nieces and nephews. I have great-nephews and a great niece. Their futures, their very freedom is at stake. What enrages me is that YOU are the only one who will decide their future. I am looking at my father's picture and now realize that in spite of his sacrifices, the country he fought for and that even more died for were wasted. If you allow this to happen. Then you spit in the face of my father and single United States Veteran. You spit on the graves of those who gave their lives to protect our freedoms (which are already under attack). You spit in the faces of every child (including your own) who should be able to enjoy the freedoms we have. There is only ONE choice for you. If you do not make it, I call you traitor to this country. To all we hold dear. And you and your descendants will have to live with that shame. For I and millions of others will make sure of it . Oh, yes, please, suh...could you protect my freedom of speech?
—Ann Trulove, Burbank, CA

I do not want sites blocked from each other. This is a step towards countries like North Korea that restricts its citizens from knowledge of what is going on in the world.
—Daniel Browning, Jeffersonville, IN

I speak as a former employee of ATT, current multimedia specialist at Santa Monica College and former research assistant to Leo Hollister Senior Researcher Palo Alto VA. To start with I am extremely worried that the good works and good will that this government has taken to help this country become whole economically, medically and spiritually will be tossed away by giving companies like Comcast, Verizon and AT&T a stranglehold on internet commerce. The companies' public comments have been transparent shams built upon the notion that they run things here. Though there is ample evidence of Comcast's intentions to increase tolls on their internet highway and decrease speeds to any companies (Netflix) that do not agree to their blackmail; it is the many and varied smaller users who will suffer and hold this administration responsible. This is more than just movies this is inhibiting start up entrepreneurs from doing business. It starts with streaming providers (which is where everything is going as the DVD rental business is gone) and it goes to individual users who will soon be charged per gig like these companies cell phone plans. The move to the cloud is allowing individuals and companies to share more data in a single day than I could input in a year in my years in research. People routinely transfer gigs of files in a single transaction. At the college we teach on a 100 terabyte share, which is now local but will soon be cloud based. Being held up by providers who we subscribe to will cripple our efforts to move forward. All companies that use editing technology like Avid Everywhere (Fox Broadcasting etc), that hire our students and use these providers will also feel the cost. Individuals who work at home, vets who are homebound all will feel the pinch. This is not the American way but a money grab and corporate influence over government at it's worst. Trust in our system is at stake here. Verizon is not a troubled company. At stake for them at worst is competing in a healthy American competitive atmosphere. All these companies have and are providing service far below their ability to deliver and charging way above what they should. THAT SHOULD BE THE NEW LEGISLATION. Something that takes them to task. Something that puts an American customer service agent at the end of the phone when you call for help. A policy that provides support to workers here and puts the public good first.
—Robert Hershon, Los Angeles, CA

Domination of corporate interests must be curtailed.
—Joel Spears, Gurnee, IL

I'm a business owner and I believe Net Neutrality should be protected as giving the ISPs all of the power would destabilize the internet. Small businesses wouldn't be able to compete and would simply fall farther and farther behind leaving only a few corporations to "compete." Or just agree upon outrageous fees and terms and conditions and leave consumers with zero to little options. I pay an ISP to use the internet, why should the sites I visit have to pay for my traffic to them as well? They shouldn't. Do the right thing.
—Ken Kadwell, Mount Pleasant, MI

The two tier system is simple leverage for misuse with no practical benefits to American citizens.
—Michelle Hayden, Delray Beach, FL

I believe in the principle of net neutrality; this whole debate and the current status of telecom industries reminds me very much of the state of affairs with holding companies in the electric sector in the 1920s and early 1930s before PUHCA was passed.
—Katherine Dykes, Broomfield, CO

Net Neutrality is the ONLY way to protect our rights to free and open communication on the internet. Otherwise it will be controlled by rich corporations, like Comcast and Time Warner. Anyone else's stuff would be SOOOOO SLOOOOOW. It's not fair. What makes the internet great is that anyone can put whatever there and it is just as fast as stuff put there by the extremely rich. Without Net Neutrality, that would go away.
—Kathy Doran, Tucson, AZ

The FCC can preserve Net Neutrality only by reclassifying Internet service providers as common carriers. This is the only way to protect the open Internet. Anything else is an attack on our rights to connect and communicate.
—Adam Seebeck, Phillipsburg, NJ

We pay the highest rates of the industrial countries and have the slowest Internet service.
—Patrick Lowe, Charleston, SC

small business startups
—Alicia Gonzalez, Lubbock, TX

I don't want my isp to determine what I'm allowed to use my connection for.
—Adam Seebeck, Phillipsburg, NJ

Keeping all content on the same level allows all levels to be accessed. Monopoly is not welcome on the internet.
—Asha Roe, Los Angeles, CA

The free market system on the internet is built upon this.
—Aidan M. Mohan, Lindenhurst, NY

I dont want anybody messing with my internet!
—Sterling Collins, Austin, TX

It levels the playing field. Don't let the large corporations gain control over us.
—Katie Thomas, Lakewood, CO

Profit and other corporate interests should not be interfering with content routing nor transfer speed.
—Andrew Warren, Blacksburg, VA

Net Neutrality is important because without it, the internet would be useless.
—, Kaneohe, HI

I am already paying for faster internet so I can watch movies and tv on the internet. Why should I have to pay twice. I am the end user and will have to suffer the cost fallout of this action. Why should a cable company get to suppress its competition by slowing their speed. The responsibility of government is to insure a level playing field and not hinder competition. This new rule proposal will only benefit the cable companies, no one else. I want real net neutrality, but I fear the President has put the fox in charge of the hen house and Mr Wheeler will bow to his old masters.
—Vince Tebalt, Gilbert, AZ

An open internet is vital to the innovation the internet has spurred. Two tiered internet, of any form, will have a chilling effect on innovation in the country.
—Mr. Jason Albert, Rochester, MN

I like my online freedom!
—Lucia Serrano, San Diego, CA

Constitution of the USA says that I should be able to have free speech, and that applies to all not just telecommunication companies. NO ONE should be able to limit my access to internet information.
—Jacob Manee, Jackson, GA

I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.
—Sophie Morgan, Lexington, MA

Greedy telecom companies will make more money by charging internet-based companies more to stream faster content. This is basically a shakedown and the cost will be passed onto me, the consumer.
—Matthew Phares, Aledo, TX

Please reconsider the proposed rules and scrap this proposed rules change.
—Robert Kumagai, Denver, CO

cuz freedom
—Jung Seo, Duluth, GA

The idea of having a fast and a slow lane and all of the evidence against them disgusts me, (NETFLIX)
—Ethan Norsworthy, Berryton, KS

This is about democracy and equality, about everyone playing with the same rules and about open, unbiased access to information. We're in the 21st Century, not in feudal times.
—Ricardo, ,

Internet service is being increasingly monopolized and priced out of the reach of many Americans. This is THE basic means of communication now and in the future. If you allow those monopolies to dicriminate against inovators and competitors and offer lower tier service to the general public we all lose.
—Jeff Moore, New Bern, NC

I use the internet services everyday. Even my teachers use services like Youtube, Google etc. in their teaching (I'm a High School student). Just wanted to let you know that the internet is a worldwide provider of education, and that this is only insured with real net neutrality. Thank you for reading this.
—Joakim Kryger-Baggesen, ,

We went from free TV to now having to pay for it. My cable bill (along with phone) continues to go up and I don't have any special channels. I watch the movies I choose via services like NetFlix which give me a choice. Now you are going to drive up those costs. How much are these companies paying you???
—Bekki Windsperger, Minneapolis, MN

Where to even begin....oh, maybe the monopoly that is telecommunications. I heard an interview with a Time Warner executive who said they aren't a monopoly because they can't compete with Comcast because of the geographic restrictions of the services they provide. Except "can't compete" is the definition of a monopoly. Sure, they can't compete with Comcast in my area, but neither can anyone else. This isn't the law we need. The law we need is one that prevents former lobbyists from chairing government agencies that exist to improve and strengthen our nation. Mr. Wheeler, your new (non-lobbyist) job is to promote competition, not stifle it. To, as the FCC website says, "Provide leadership in strengthening the defense of the nation's communications infrastructure." This proposed law is completely counter to that mission. As it doesn't in anyway strengthen the defense of our communications infrastructure, it only strengthens corporations. Not exactly the same thing, is it?
—Betsy Fitzpatrick, Pittsburgh, PA

Controlling and blocking online content is something we, as Americans, have condemned other nations, such as China, for doing to its public. We are supposed to encourage the freedom of information, not restrict it even more. The companies WE PAY for service should not be dictating our access to information. This rule would harm growth and progress for entrepreneurs while lining the pockets of already prosperous organizations.
—Chelsea, Riverview, FL

Small businesses are critical to the U.S. Economy, and many small businesses today get started on the internet. Without true Net Neutrality, small businesses will not be able to effectively complete with large firms that have the marketing budgets to influence ISPs. Net Neutrality is vital to a protect a free market environment for consumers. Thank you.
—Candace Holowicki, Plymouth, MI

Net Neutrality is critical to everyone. The FCC must continue to regulate and ensure the ISP's do the right thing. We all know without regulation costs will rise and service will deteriorate. All the large ISP company's care about is there money!! No more small businesses starting up online once this change goes into effect!!!
—John Bostick, Orlando, FL

The internet is a telecommunication tool, and should be classified as a utility. Allowing ISPs to control what content customers see and how fast they see it online is akin to telling a consumer with a cellphone who they can call and text and who they cannot, or sabotaging their connection when they do call someone the cellphone provider does not want them to (or charging the person they are calling a premium in order to accept the call without issues). Healthy competition between ISPs is already dead in the United States; Usually people have at most, a choice between two ISPs in their area. Don't play into the monopoly more by granting them more power.
—Julia Marshall, New Orleans, LA

We have already allowed the telecommunication companies to become their own type of monopolies. I believe that empowering them further would cripple innovation and only benefit those who already wield too much power.
—Scott DeMaagd, Grand Rapids, MI

As a small business employee with website marketing this will make it very difficult for us to compete online with larger corporate competitors with deep pockets.
—Laura Baker, Houston, TX

My day-to-day life as well as my job is almost completely dependent on a free Internet. This kind of discrimination will hurt the country more than anyone understands. Just because the government can't afford to pay their bills does not mean that they should make it harder on the American people to pay theirs while trying to live the free life that we fought so hard to earn and keep. Imposing a two-tier internet could very well affect the small business I work at, which in turn will hurt my family and I who are already struggling. Leave us alone!
—Kristopher Fields, Maryville, TN

Internet freedom means Net Neutrality. I support Net Neutrality and against any plan that would enable Internet service providers to charge extra fees to content companies. I urge the FCC to act to preserve Net Neutrality by designating broadband as a telecommunications service under the law. Anything else is an attack on our rights to connect and communicate.
—Janet Twyman, Rego Park, NY

Please reclassify broadband as a telecommunications service thereby prohibiting discrimination. I am a registered voter. Thank you.
—Andrew Closson, Mason, OH

The right for all speech to be equally available to ALL is at the heart of our democracy and it’s now obvious that the internet is vitally important in ways individuals, communities, government and businesses communicate with each other. Keep Net Neutrality by reclassifying and designating broadband as a telecommunications service under the law.
—Dianne Jenett, Palo Alto, CA

Net neutrality is important to me because it protects new internet-based businesses (startups/etc), restricts further profiting by already-present monopolies and keeps the interests of the American citizens in mind. It is imperative that the FCC reclassify ISPs as common carriers, thus allowing citizens, companies, and small business to communicate and share information effectively and without the potential interference of ISPs.
—Ellen Teygart, Erie, PA

Democracy, equal access —Kathy Cheun, San Francisco, CA

For the same reasons John Oliver laid out so well recently!!
—Steve Berquist, Minneapolis, MN

Information is freedom, Information is success. Blocking any content is censorship. Charging a premium for access to information is class based censorship. Allowing the "purchase" of premium tollgates would stifle small businesses and destroy so many start ups which is the life blood of America putting us behind the rest of the world and global economy.
—Dan Mallegol, Bahama, NC

The Net MUST remain neutral - not doing so will make it owned by the few wealthy corporations that can afford to run it.
—Andy Cohen, West Newton, MA

Throttling internet to people or companys that can't afford it it strait up discrimination.
—Jonathan Rogozienski, National City, CA

Let the internet remain equal for everyone.
—Sofia, ,

If you let net neutrality die, you will also be responsible for ending the classic American Dream. You must be aware that, in America, low-class citizens are not able to navigate out of their class any longer; they are born and die there, unless they have unfettered access to the internet. Since its creation the internet has been where all people could go and be heard and also have opportunities for progress. It is on the neutral internet, that people could find the resources necessary to help themselves. Considering their reputations, that they have earned based on their actions, you cannot actually believe that internet providers would be socially responsible, or that they would ever just do the right thing. You know they will not ever choose the right action over the profitable action. My hope is that your character is strong enough to make a better decision, and “scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.” It is your responsibility (as representatives of the American people); you have to decide to act right. The only right action for your people is to insist on real net neutrality.
—Dianna Schepler, Le Roy, NY

EQUALITY for all!!!
—Pamela Fullerton, Leechburg, PA

We need to have open and equal access to the internet for small business to grow and prosper, and for individual citizens to have unfiltered and affordable information access. Do not allow these changes to take place and create a two-tiered and costly internet. Thank you.
—Roger Whitton, Green Bay, WI

"All men created equal" has more than one application
—Kristin, Dayton, OH

Abandoning net neutrality is unconscionable. Net providers make plenty and like everything else you do this helps the rich and craps on the poor and small internet start ups.
—Matthew Galen, Costa Mesa, CA

Cable companies are already providing sub-standard service and now want to charge us more? What is the governments definition of a monopoly? We, the customers, don't have much of a choice in internet providers. I urge you to reject this proposed rule and make the internet what it should be.
—Christopher M. Mader, Steubenville, OH

The Internet is the only place where there is still competition. If a company can just pay to bury my website, there's no point of going online. It was founded on a "stupid network" so leave it that way. We're already paying out the nose for bad service because it's all a monopoly so please don't take away anything else from us
—Dylan Rickaby, Antelope, CA

i want net neutrality because i want everything equal
—Adrian, Chico, CA

Because bribery from communications giants should get Tom Wheeler thrown in Jail.
—James Cullen, Cave Creek, AZ

Are you insane? This is legal censorship and discrimination of the internet!!
—Brittany Zhao, New York, NY

Net Neutrality is part of my own personal journey towards freedom of creativity and my own journey in the pursuit of happiness. Controlling what I see on any level is censorship, which I will stand against every time. I choose what I will watch and what I want access too.
—Amanda Fields, Glendale, CA

NET NEUTRALITY IS MORALLY WRONG AND IS AGAINST WHAT AMERICA STANDS FOR. Do not go forward with this. We need to throw this out. It's not fair, and it's unjust!
—Nathaniel H, Bedford, TX

I want my freedoms preserved! I do not want to suffer more amoral spying, and I want the internet to be equally available to all!
—Brandon Kramer, Aurora, IL

You are violating the USA CONSITUTIONAL 1st Admenment what gives you the right to filter what we read you nazi terrorest i will sue you for being unconsitutional
—Noah Hatfield, Grapevine, TX

It is unjust to discriminate internet connections
—Karl Freyberg, Bedford, TX

This can't happen. This is such a gross misrepresentation of our freedoms and democracy. Use standard logic and prevent this from occurring.
—Greg Supelak, Delaware, OH

I believe in an internet which is free of discrimination for all users.
—Oscar Montes de oca, Hayward, CA

The internet is the perfect vehicle for expression and media consumption. Given the need for boadband access for on demand delivered content, it be appropriated fairly.
—Rafael Rodriguez, Wahiawa, HI

It preserves free speech and prevents ISP to discriminating against users and getting profits from exercising such discrimination.
—Ricardo J Flores, Dallas, TX

From large websites like reddit.com to a close friends personal blog, my internet browsing habits are quite diverse. What is amazing is that I can access, browse, and interact with each website in the same speed and manner, regardless of the sites size or influence. This allows me to peruse a wide variety of content and material without the hastle of a slow or spotty connection. I do not want a tiered internet. I want an open, unfiltered web were all information is treated equally.
—Dan Craigie, Minneapolis, MN

In our great country of "FREEDOM" the government continues to take away more and more of our freedoms. The Internet is and always has been meant for the world to use without restrictions. Please do NOT allow ISPs to take even more control than they currently have. Internet service CLIENTS in most of America do not currently have any choice of their ISP unless they are willing to bear the slow speed of satellite providers. If an American household doesn't have cable TV lines available they can only choose their current telephone provider for their Internet service as well. Most telephone Internet providers REQUIRE that you buy not only their Internet service but you must also buy phone service or they will not provide you with Internet DLS service. This has created a monopoly and last I checked a monopoly is illegal.
—Russell Chambers, Canton, GA

I believe that if you give the ISP's the right to discriminate for money THEY ABSOLUTELY WILL!! The FCC chairman is the fox guarding the Henhouse. Im disgusted by these proposed "New Rules". what utter Bullshit!
—Nate Franz, Poulsbo, WA

Because without neutrality the future of new enterprises do not stand a chance against corporate giants.
—Saro, ,

Ultimately and higher costs for the so called fast lanes will be passed on to the consumer as higher prices for access. At the same time new content providers will be placed at a competitive disadvantage. Given that the slowest link in the network is at the consumer interface, they as usual will see no improvement in service but will be forced to pay a premium. Given this it is much more likely that the technology employed will be throttling of those who don't want to pay for a fast lane. The FCC should be requiring ISPs to provide a guaranteed level of service to the consumer rather than making rules that allow ISPs to charge more for reduced service.
—William Holmes, Ithaca, NY

My privacy is more than important to me. It is crucial. Freedom is not to be stripped away.
—, New Albany, IN

Without Net Neutrality our progress as a species will be slowed considerably and our ability to connect will be decimated.
—Gianna Signorini, Troutdale, OR

Losing Net Neutrality would greatly hinder free speech, innovation, education, economic growth, creativity and so much more.
—Steven Redard, Ventura, CA

Because this is the last bastion for freedom of speech.
—Seth Bradley, Roanoke, VA

To promote fair competition for new startups.
—John Duhamel, Wilmington, MA

As an artist who gets commissions and contracts based on the visibility of my website, it is more important than ever that I maintain a strong internet presence to help support my growing family. If net neutrality were ended, it would mean taking a severe financial blow.
—Melissa Howell, Union City, CA

Do not bring back a class system in society. The Internet does not need to be included in the war on people in poverty. Information should be free for all.
—Julia Logan Stinson, Seattle, WA

The internet saved my life. Even if I live in a third world country, the internet provided me with knowledge and work which provided roof to my own family and aid to my elderly parents. Taking away the benefits we get from the internet is like supporting starvation of millions of people.
—Jan Patrick Apura, ,

I wish to ask the FCC to keep the internet NEUTRAL! It should be free for us all. There should not be any favoring of any company to make profit by charging for faster access. This can set a dangerous and unfair precedent as companies like Comcast could slow down video content for regular users. I am afraid we are already seeing this with YouTube. Something seems to be affecting users who have CenturyLink as their server. There are many who have found themselves unable to access popular YouTube video content in past week including myself. This is exactly what could happen if the FCC allows corporations to charge for faster access. This would be the same as allowing discrimination. I ask that you reconsider these new "rules" and keep the internet FREE AND OPEN ALWAYS! This is just another lobbying effort by the likes of Comcast to make even more money and seriously affect the open internet format. The open or neutral internet format should be maintained! the FCC needs to reestablish its legal authority to pass strong rules. I am against these proposed rules that the FCC is now considering on implementing. Sincerely, Patricia Pirnack
—Ms. Patricia Pirnack, Eastsound, WA

Net neutrality is important on so many levels such as educational, a way of keeping in touch with family and friends half way across the world, being able to be a part of a revolution, and find same minded people who believe in the same thing as you do. It is a way to create awareness of issues on a whole new level, faster and more efficient. You can share information in the blink of an eye. Yes, there are discrimination, yes there is racism, and yes there are bad behavior online. But come-on... As long as there are people around there will be bad behaviour. I am not saying it is excuseable, I am saying that by building high roads and dirt roads online... that is really not going to fix the problem. It's a ridicoulus way of attempting to stomp on people's rights. Besides building a fast lane for PEOPLE WHO CAN AFFORD IT is discriminating, it is bullying, it is bad behaviour. Get real. For me personally, for my own future, I am dependent on having the internet be neutral as I am an aspiring artist, and will be looking for clients online as a freelancer. I will be looking for jobs online. And you would be taking away, or making it even more difficult for me, and equal minded people like me, to earn a living this way.
—Lise Sofie Hopland, ,

The Internet is the last place where the middle and lower class can get work for what actually they are good at (eg: concept artists, translators, programmers). Here we are not judged because what color our skin has, in which country we were born, who were our parents or which millionaire we are related to. On the Web if you are good at something you can find a job doing that and also get a decent paiment. And this is true also for third world countries, like mine. A chance for the less fortunate. Please don't take this away from us.
—Cristian Somcutan, ,

As a creator, i rely on neutrality to have people see my work (it's hard enough to get work sometimes as it is), with these rules it would see most of my hardwork going nowhere unless i pay? It's ridiculous and will only add fuel to a fire that is already burning with most of us towards big business. Have a proper think about what is being proposed. Put yourself in our shoes.
—Damian Audino, ,

I'm currently working on becoming an Internet based artist. I rely entirely on Internet neutrality in order to build my fanbase; destroying Internet neutrality would completely break any hope for me to reach sustainability. I also absolutely refuse the predominance of any political power on the Internet. The Internet is a world to fill, not a world to control.
—Rebecca Scalese, ,

Innovation grows from the equal playing field we have now, and stopping that would allow industry to sink into mediocrity.
—Lance, ,

Governing the internet by large cable company's will hurt the flow of information and emerging business
—Brooks d back, Franklin, OH

Because it represents one of the last true arenas of a level playing field for everyone. Take it way and you just confirm big money controls everything, again.
—Roy Bennett, ,

As a recent college graduate with a degree in Character Animation, it's crucial to me for the Internet to share my stories-- not just with potential clients, but with friends and family. I delight in the Internet's ability to educate, entertain, and inspire the next generation of artists. It excites me to see my talented friends and myself receive accolades from far-away art appreciators. This is the age we live in, the age I grew up with. Revoking an open web is going to set everyone back -- small businesses, students interested in exploring new topics, friends and family blogging about their life adventures. The open Maker community may crumble. I'm relying on the Internet for a nation-wide outreach for an educational product I'm developing. I've had the pleasure of traveling to Europe for international film festivals-- all thanks to the Internet. We all rely on a freely open Internet. Let's keep it that way.
—Tahnee Gehm, Fallbrook, CA

Nowadays, that's pretty clear that the world has gone digital in many aspects, including work. Lots of people make a living out of internet business, and a large number of them are ordinary people who use the internet to sell products and services. Having a 'fast lane' and a 'slow lane' would totally damage lots of us, who use (or intend to) the internet to reach different markets. Putting us in a 'slow lane' (since the majority wouldn't be able to pay for the 'fast lane' advantages) only brings back the inequality we have seen many times in the 'real world'. We would be pleased to have our breadwinning activities protected, rather than put down. Thank you very much!
—Rodrigo Figueiredo dos Santos, ,

It is important for the continued growth and innovative standing of the entire country. Without net neutrality the United States will continue to fall behind other countries both educationally and in terms of provided infrastructure.
—Nathan Skwierczynski, Gurnee, IL

The free internet is a medium in which we can share ideas and information without government manipulation. If this ceases to exist, we might as well be called China! The government needs to stop being bought by giant corporations whose agenda only benefits themselves.
—Leigh, ,

I am an interdependent artist, comic creator and aspiring independent game creator. I am also an avid consumer of independent media. The fact that people like me can make their living is because in the face of the internet our position is the same as the big, mainstream media companies. We can meet our audience and our clients from all over the world on exact footing as those who have huge marketing budgets - and we won't be able to do it otherwise. If a real Net Neutrality is not maintained the whole livelihood of people like me will be in danger as we will be not able to compete with wealthy corporations. This is true not only for artists but for any small company that manages to function thanks to the Internet. Please don't stifle the voices of the small.
—Joanna Piechowiak, ,

I am an artist and writer who is starting out, but with how net neutrality is now, I at least have an equal playing field to grow and improve while getting fans. The internet allows us to collaborate with other creative people and actually keep up with the rest of the world in the art fields. However, the instantly it is destroyed, there goes to recovery to the US as well as a lot of people moving from the US going up as that "fast lane, slow lane" deal will be the last straw for a lot of people, especially artists, writers, and such. Telecom giants are going to hurt themselves with this as deal as many Americans are not happy with their current "one to two" internet providers in their area due to the monopolies already in place by these companies. At least Australia as a great budding artist communities and access to art supplies, which makes up it lack luster internet. Here in the USA, most of that has been wiped out and we have to order a good deal of it online to get the good stuff. If the sites are slow and we can't get our supplies, then we will be in trouble. But, outside artist fields, the internet is the competitive advantage many businesses, small and medium used to stay on toes with the foreign companies. If Net Neutrality is lost, so goes this recovery(though has the economy really recovered as wages are stagnate and bills go up, including internet) as we lose our last means of competition. To survive, we would have to either move and pool in the few good areas in the USA with good internet for possibly really high prices or move overseas, which the overseas looks pretty good with so many providers overseas having really good internet for cheaper prices than what we are paying for sub-par now. Some in very nice locations perfect for artists. So, think about it. If Net Neutrality is turned into this two tier system, you're going to be on the hook as well as the telecom giants when the rate of Americans leaving the USA goes shooting through the roof and the economic caves back in(it's already doing it, but this time makes it look like you would be a great scape goat for when it does). The way main street works has changed to use Net Neutrality to the fullest and that is where the jobs are recovering as many realize we have to make our own jobs as there is not jobs to fill. We need the internet to allow so many people becoming their own boss the change to fail and experiment before finally finding success and adding to the American Economy. However, many of us are beginning to shift think of our back-up options with hearing our jobs at risk. Even I am thinking of moving if the internet goes down as it's important know in order to keep in business as an artist and writer and reaching our audience in the 21st century. I hope you realize what a bad move this is. I usually look at both side of the story instead of rant like this, but I HAVE and no which way is this good. It will hurt ALL, even the Telecom giants who may benefit at first, and it will hurt really, REALLY bad as I remember history real well as it's one of my inspirations as an artist and writer. I hope you are having a good day... And hope your email hasn't exploded yet as artists are rallying against the Telecom Companies from around the world, not just North America, as this is how big this simply little rule of Net Neutrality in the USA effects the whole world.
—Mandy Milliron, Iowa, LA

Discrimination is already rampant all over the nation. The internet is the one place where you can access any viewpoint and wade through the bullshit to find the real heart of the matter. Take that away and we as a society are nothing. Right back in the middle ages.
—Amy Karony, Elmhurst, IL

EVERYONE must be able to access the Internet freely and evenly. The vast majority of our communication and information are provided through the Internet. Corporations such as Verizon and Comcast are not concerned about the "little guy" - they are concerned about the bottom line. The FCC was designed to help protect the little guy from these big conglomerates. If net neutrality is abolished, the FCC is not doing it 's job.
—Kathryn S. Coe, Bayville, NJ

I am an independent animator, producing my own series call "TAR of Zandoria". The Internet makes it possible to find an audience without having to pitch the concept to traditional gatekeepers in order to get distribution. Without net neutrality, media companies like Disney, Dreamworks, Cartoon Network, etc can use their monetary advantage to squash competition from independent creators.
—William Studios Sutton, Ooltewah, TN

I am an independent artist. I am trying to get to the point where I can make a living off of my art, and an open, equal web really helps in that direction. The open web has changed the business landscape of the world and has created economic opportunity for millions. Please do not hamper that opportunity. The web gives me and others the opportunity to go after financial independence, and everyone benefits from that. Please don't make an opening for that opportunity to be destroyed.
—Devin Smith, Piedmont, SC

It is free passing of information and of opinions this is our naturally born right.
—Louie, Greenville, SC

It should be a basic right in America, the country that happens to be considered a 'free'. Altering net neutrality compromises our basic freedoms.
—Lisa Cipriani, Chicago, IL

I am a new start up with a creative business. I rely heavily on the internet to share my work and get it to as wide an audience as possible. My primary format is animated video and having a 'slow lane' not just for myself but for my viewers would be detrimental. My audiance and list of potentila clients extends to the US and I would love to be able to share my creativity as well as work with US based businesses without such an unnecessary handicap.
—Rob Cardus, ,

Our current system has its flaws, but this proposal is much worse. There are already serious competition and monopoly issues, don't make it worse. Common carriers!
—Jordan Lee, Huntsville, AL

porque soy artista y quiero que mi trabajo sea igual de importante que el de los demas
—Jimmy Sánchez, san jose,

FREELIFE.
—Andrê Chambers, ,

I see this as progress toward totalitarian control. Please keep the internet open/free/equal.
—Ryan McAllen, Greenville, SC

Art is my livelihood, and the equality of the internet has allowed me to fully support myself through my art. It has helped me reached people I never would have known, learn things that would have been unattainable from physical distance and cost, and overall, it's allowed me to grow as a person. I know there are many, many others who share my story. If we lose net neutrality, we are going to lose an emerging pool of the strongest, most creative, innovative talent we have seen in years. We are going to lose our future, not just as a new and strong generation of artists, but as a culture. Please, let us keep our voice. Protect our freedom of expression.
—Jessica Doll, Tulsa, OK

I don't have my own radio program. I don't have my own television program. I don't have any lobbyists. I don't have my own newspaper or magazine or even a book to my name. But I have a website, I have an online portfolio and an email address for clients to contact me through - I have a way or supporting myself because I have a website. I have a voice because I have the internet. I have a voice because I'm a tax paying citizen. I have a right to orientation about what's going on in the world especially since magazines like Time makes special covers for American Shelves. 6 corporations own nearly all publishing platforms in America. The people deserve their own equal platform - all people, not just Americans - have a right to hear each other's voices and perspectives - the internet is the only place left with free speech. Don't change that. History will remember you, you can decide how.
—Kirsten Allen, Tallahassee, FL

I want my data, and I want it now!!!
—Tyler Hasz, Bolingbrook, IL

As an independent artist, I rely on Net Neutrality to share my work and to support other artists and small businesses. Please reclassify the ISPs as a telecommunications service so that people like us can thrive in an equal opportunity environment.
—Bethany Pyles, Nazareth, PA

Without Net Neutrality I would not have become as knowledgeable about the world or my job as I am now. I don't think I would even have my job right now if it wasn't for net neutrality. I'm an independent artist, my work is directly proportionate to how many people have access to it online from around the world. I have worked with companies and private people from across the entire globe but mostly from the US. You take away net neutrality and you take away business, their JOBS, from hundreds of thousands of people who make their living solely on the internet. Who are going to pay for them? The job market regardless of profession is oversaturated already.
—Chris, ,

The Internet is a powerful resource and access should be open and equal. As a retired Federal employee (DHHS/NIH/NLM) and a taxpayer, I am proud of our Government's contributions to the Internet. Much of my career was spent in developing and maintaining information products and services for healthcare providers and consumers, an increasing number of which were made accessible via the Internet. We should be expanding free access to the highest quality of Internet services available and not allowing commercial interests to profit by creating levels of privileged service.
—Jan Willis, Lewes, DE

The ability to share and collaborate and create with other artists would be hampered. Then we would loose the potential greatness of those possible ideas and actions that can be born through sharing our work with others. It would limit our potential to the privileged. In essence we would be going back in time to a class based society, where those who don't have the means are discriminated against.
—Crystal Flippin, Xenia, OH

I'm an illustrator and artist on my first steps toward going full force with my career- I just left my job in order to pursue my own work and be self-employed. This isn't an easy path, but it's part of the American story- putting in long, hard, passionate work in order to build your career. That journey isn't possible without Net Neutrality. The internet is THE means of communication for getting my work out there, for connecting with other artists and fans alike. My circumstances are just one example of how smothering Net Neutrality will pave the way to killing much of this country's innovative force, if small-time creators, developers, business owners, etc are unable to reach people and customers without getting through barriers of cost which are insurmountable for the average person. People trying to create their /own/ jobs will be out of luck, and may be forced to abandon their potential. Please protect these creators and innovators and their continued existence as such by protecting Net Neutrality.
—Sasha Jones, Austin, TX

I pay ENOUGH money to get the SPEED THAT IS ADVERTISED to me. When I watch a streaming movie, that is absolutely NOT the case. This is false advertising and to be pay even MORE just to rectify something that shouldn't even be a problem in the first place is extortion.
—Jeremiah Joson, Bakersfield, CA

Thank you for talking the time to listen. I desperately hope the FCC will not move forward with the current rules in question - the rules that would create a two-tiered internet and destroy Net Neutrality. I really appreciate the services of big companies, but selfish initiatives such as these may benefit only a few and hurt everyone else. I have been either unemployed or underemployed for over 2.5 years, working myself to the bone to support my family and build a brighter future. Unless you reclassify ISPs as common carriers, AT&T, Comcast, and Verizon may crush everything I've created, which would not be in the interest of the federal government, or the majority of US citizens. I'm not alone in my concern, and if we want the U.S. economy to grow, we need real Net Neutrality. Please throw our the proposed rules and reclassify, ensuring that all U.S. citizens can benefit from the powers of the internet. Thank You.
—Scott Wiser, Ogden, UT

I use the internet to keep in touch with my family who lives in Texas and Arizona. I want to be able to see pictures of their families and vise versa.
—Travis Raffel, Middleton, WI

Protect the consumers
—Ms. Pierrette Guimond, Orcas, WA

I am a young digital artist that pretty much makes a living off the internet. New Neutrality is important to me because it allows me to share my art and ideas with people all over the world. It allows me to get new ideas and helps me think of new, innovating ways to approach things. Please don't take this away from us. The internet is the only thing that keeps a lot of us off the streets.
—Nicole Artigas, Norwalk, CT

This is exactly what the internet was created for!
—Andrei Dumitru, Charlotte, NC

The internet is vital to free speech, education, and so much more that is good in this world. Please keep it wild and free.
—Ms. Regina Simpson, Chico, CA

Everyone should have equal access to the internet.
—Mandy Wilson, Austin, TX

I am an illustrator and a creative. I rely on the internet to show my work to potential clients and connect with other creatives around the world. I blog, make videos, use social media, have a website, and am planning to start a podcast about my area of expertise later this year. I am a mother of two children, and my husband is a graphic designer. Our income is low end middle class. Most of the time we are just making enough to get by- and if I had to pay for the internet as we know it, I might not be able to actually make any income. My business has been growing because of the internet. I have been able to make very important connections with people who have helped my career grow- people who live clear across the country that have become great mentors. I have gotten clients that are clear across the world. Without the internet as we know it, or Net Neutrality, this would never have happened, and my career would not be where it is today. My career is continuing to grow, but if Net Neutrality is taken away, this may be taken away from me. I won't be able to share my artwork with the world, connect with other artists and clients, and make a living doing what I love like I have in the past. Please, please consider those of us who are making our living from relying on internet neutrality and an equal playing ground. Sincerely, Shawna Tenney www.shawnajctenney.com
—Shawna Tenney, Eagle Mountain, UT

I am an independent artist who is striving to make a living for myself with my artwork. I have made many friends and connections within my community from all over the world - and we are all still in the same community thanks to the equality and neutrality of the internet.
—Sarah Elliott, ,

I am a freelance artist, and if people choose to look at my content I don't want to be in a slow lane. I don't want the content I look at to be in the slow lane. I want my internet to be equal ground with equal opportunities for everyone.
—Jennifer Mealing, ,

The idea of a free internet is paramount to being an American. All races of humans are allowed to speak freely without discrimination. Getting rid of net neutrality will allow monopolies such as comcast to slow down or block access to the internet for different ethnicities or different socio-economic status. This is infringement on our basic rights as Americans and net neutrality should be preserved as one of an american's basic rights.
—Judson Bristow, West Point, MS

I am an independent illustrator and animator and I rely on the equality of the internet for the future of both my business and my contributions to culture. It is vital to me and other artists to be able to get our work out to a global audience without gatekeepers. Without that ability the clock will be turned back to a time pre-internet where our best hope of making a living was from convincing said gatekeepers to give us the platform to make a name for ourselves. With an open internet, we can allow consumers to decide for themselves if something is worthy of their attention and, ultimately, dollars. It is the basis of our American economic system: work hard, make something people want, and benefit from that. These proposed rules would wipe that dream away. Thank you for your time. Christopher J. Purdin —Christopher J. Purdin, Portland, OR

I firmly believe the internet should remain free and open, ensuring accessibility to all users. The FCC's recent steps to align themselves with large telecommunications corporations causes a great threat to the future of the net and jeopardizes the expansion of business and creativity. I am currently a Comcast customer, not because I want to be, but because I have to be. There is no choice in my local area for alternative internet access. The fact that Comcast currently has a monopoly on the market, coupled with the fact that the FCC is willing to give them even more of a boost in profits and forego the principals of net neutrality greatly disturbs me. Make the internet a place where ideas and content can flourish without preferential treatment to corporations.
—Jessica Taylor, Alexandria, VA

Dear FCC Chairman Wheeler and Members of Congress, In my development as an artist and a thinker, I started believing that the most important quality that makes us, humans, a bit more special in the World and, maybe, in the Universe, is the power of creation that only we are able to carry on. A power that made our evolution as rational beings possible. A power that, if used for good, would only bring positive things to every living being. Since the Internet is the most accessible, affordable and inclusive media distribution platform in history, the freedom and equality it offers for creative people like me has inspired big dreams and new hope for our world, our families and for ourselves as creative people. I would be happy if things could be kept in the way they always should have been being, permeated by freedom and goodness. Best Regards Poppe
—Douglas Poppe Lopes, ,

Due to the price of living currently and my school loans the last thing I need increased is my internet which I need for both school and work!
—Christina Reynolds, Ogdensburg, NY

Dear FCC Chairman Wheeler and Members of Congress, I'm a young woman, aged 24, from Portugal, who's been working a lot to fulfill her dream. I'm a designer and illustrator, who, together with my fiance, created her own software and design company at the age of 20 (as soon as I graduated from university). We dream to create games together, make them known all around the world and provide everyone with a lovely, immerse and profound experience through them. I am currently investing on my education on art, so I can become better and better in order to fulfill this dream. PLEASE, I beg of you, consider your actions. Without all the freedom and resources the internet provides, our dream will be crushed, as so will so many others. I thank you from the bottom of my heart for taking the time to read my e-mail. Wish you the best, Ânia Marcos.
—Ânia Marcos, ,

I'm a 23 year old independent comic book artist breaking into the industry through the internet. My collaborators and I are building a fanbase and networking through our website, and making that harder would impact my future career in a hugely negative way. And it's not just me, most of my friends and colleagues make a name for themselves on the internet and that turns into a career in the field. The removal of Net Neutrality would heavily impact our ability to make a living in our field.
—Jack Ciolli, Savannah, GA

Dear Chairman Wheeler and members of Congress: Please allow me to share a story with you. As a little boy, I was endlessly curious. I loved to draw and paint, to tell stories and tell jokes, and I pelted anyone who stood still long enough with countless questions. I was awestruck by the wonder in the world, and I wanted to soak up every drop. I did not comprehend this on an intellectual level, but I felt it, LIVED it, all the same. My father was a preacher at a small church in Florida, and growing up in such a home opened my heart to the possibilities of worlds beyond our own, which were filled with untold wonder in their own right. As I grew, so did my love for these worlds. I began to create worlds of my own, filling them with creatures and people born of my own imagination. A vision began to form, that of myself as a grown man, sharing these worlds with others, and experiencing those they shared in turn. It was an exciting time. One day a man came in to my father's church. I had happened to join my father that day, sharing his office and his time, drawing and daydreaming and all manner of things to which small boys are prone. The Man was tall, with a white cowboy hat, and boots that proclaimed his arrival on the tiles of the church's foyer. I did not know him, for he was not a member of my father's congregation. He walked around, as if he owned the place, informing my father of the ways in which he failed to properly lead his church. The Man had, he was certain, all the wisdom and knowledge needed to proclaim such things, as well as the right to do so. Age granted authority, and he must not be questioned. I did not understand the things he and my father discussed, but I felt the waves of hurt radiating from my father's heart. That was when the Man turned his attention on me. "And what do YOU want to be when you grow up, son?" He asked, deciding for me that I owed him the respect due by the word 'son', a respect that my father had earned through loving me the moment I entered the world. "I want to be an ARTIST!" I replied, with pride, and the unwavering conviction of it's reality, as is so often the case when the young talk of their dreams. After a long, interminable pause the Man replied. "Son, you should become a preacher like your father. Art may be a fine hobby, but don't you think that your life would be better spent doing the Lord's Work?" I do not remember how I responded to the Man. I do not remember his leaving. Nor do I recall if he ever returned. But something had changed. I had been raised to respect authority, to hold in high regard the input given by those older and wiser than I. I do not regret being taught this value, and should I have children of my own, I plan on encouraging the same. But in this instance, great damage was done. The idea that my dream was in some way inferior sank into my marrow, and it's impact rippled over my life. I lost my drive to seek wonder and create beauty. I lost confidence in the value of my imagined worlds, and I slowly left them to crumble. I began to pursue intellect over imagination. Just as the increase of my imagination increased my love of other people and their own imaginings, as my intellect grew, so did disdain for those who didn't know as much as I. Instead of the boy with a thousand questions, I became the young man with all the answers. I was smart, and I made sure other's were well aware of that fact. I became highly intolerant of those with different opinions and beliefs than mine. I developed the habit, the NEED, to be the first one done with tests in school. I was first to raise my hand, if I even waited for that. I had to be the first in line to display my intelligence. My identity became tied to other people being impressed with my wit and eloquence. In short, I became a selfish know-it-all. And yet, even through that decline, my inner soul cried out for expression. After high school I went to school for music, a form of artistic expression that I allowed myself to consider. And I flunked out. In life, intellect is not enough without a strong work ethic to back it up. A strong work ethic is built on curiosity, respect for the knowledge of the teacher, and the craving to never, ever stop asking questions; to be an INSATIABLE learner. But I already knew enough. I was smarter than the rest, and I didn't need to work at it. I was wrong. Yet I still could not see, so when I returned to a different school a year later, I put in more effort not because it was the right thing to do, not because I craved learning, but to avoid the embarrassment of once again being told I did not have the commitment necessary to succeed. When that too began to crumble, I decided that music was not for me. Again I changed schools, this time pursuing a degree in Interior Design. AN art, but not MY art. This time I graduated, but I still lacked the passion that drives one to walk the long, hard road to mastery and success. I searched for work for three years, to no avail. I had $60,000 in student loans, and nothing to show for it. I hit the end of my rope, and my rope snapped. Depression and anxiety overtook me, and held me captive for several years. Two things gave me the hope needed to carry on. First, the love and care of my wife, who never gave up on me. And second, with nothing left to loose, I remembered my boyhood dream. Could the Man have been wrong? Could I return to the joy of my youth? This is the age of the internet, after all, and anyone can carve out their small place in the economy to do what they love, and to make a living doing it. I made the choice. And I have not looked back. The harmonic resonance between my soul and creation was powerful, nearly frightening. The spark of the idea burst into passion; blazed into an inferno. If has settled into a constant flame, ebbing from time to time, but always there, driving me forward into the light. There is a reason I have shared this very personal story with you. After years of struggle, I have once again begun to pursue a rekindled passion, and now I find the success of that dream balanced on the edge of a knife. And not the knife edge of my own choices. I am just one man. I cannot compete in a market where preference is given to those few with deep pockets. It is not even a matter of competition for me, in truth. I do not begrudge the success of a company, and I applaud those with the determination, intelligence, and guts to make something, and make it profitable. My desire is simply to tell stories, to invite people into my worlds, and in doing so, enrich their own. I am not seeking this to make myself rich. I simply want to make a comfortable living, with which I can provide for the needs of my family and bless those around me. My succeeding will in no way reduce the profits of those companies that will benefit from the proposed FCC regulations. But to succeed here I need to be FOUND, ladies and gentlemen. I need a platform from which I can share my stories with those who want them. This cannot occur if priority is to be given to companies and institutions who are willing and able to pay for the right to place their products and services between me and the people to who might benefit from what I have to say. We live in an age where large strides are being made toward the abolishment of discrimination in all areas of life. We can search for housing and employment and education without fear that we will be stopped simply because we are who we are. Equality of marriage is gaining momentum, and I hope and expect that we will soon be able to declare commitment to another person without being told that we cannot due to our genders. Why then, should the internet be any different? We ALL have the right to Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness. These proposed regulations will effectively allow ISPs to define for me what Happiness is, to give me only the Liberty to pursue that definition of Happiness, and then call that Life. This is an injustice that cannot be allowed to occur. The land of opportunity MUST remain one of opportunity for all. If not, ISPs will don their white cowboy hats and their boots, to enter unannounced and insert themselves between the creator and his audience, and tell us all that we should only value the work that they deem worthy. It will take the imagination of the human spirit, which gives light, and hope, and childlike eyes that still see one another as precious, and put a bit in its mouth, to be turned this way and that, by the ones with holding the reins. Control over the dissemination of information and ideas will create a caustic environment of narrowed minds, in which many others will share the sad path that I have walked, through disdain and intolerance, pride and contempt, and only perhaps to come out the other side as I have done, and am still doing. Please, for the sake of the value that we share as human beings, and for the sake of our children and theirs, take an active stand for equality on the internet. Define all broadband internet as a common carrier telecommunication service, make it illegal for companies to restrict our services and access based on their own, self-serving criteria. Hold ISPs strictly accountable for breaches of these laws. Remove the blockades that ISPs have put in place to ensure localized monopolies, and disallow mergers that give any one entity the vast majority of market control - carte blanche to rewrite the world in which we live. Perhaps then we will all be able to be Artists when we grow up. Thank you for your time, Seth Greenwald Independent Artist and Storyteller

—Seth Greenwald, Winter Park, FL

If you allow comcast, verizon and other network providers to create a two-tiered internet, then you will singlehandedly destroy an economic engine that has made our economy and our nation so prosperous the last 20 years. Facebook, google, twitter, and thousands of other great tech innovators might not exist today if not for net neutrality. The empowering nature of an open internet is arguably the most powerful catalyst for economic and technological development humanity has ever seen. that the fcc is anywhere close to considering undermining that is shocking. If you destroy net neutrality you'll be destroying the single basic element that allows the internet to function in such a powerful way. How could a non-profit like wikipedia or NPR compete with the bandwidth-purchasing power of walmart.com? How will the next video streaming successors to youtube and netflix reach through the impenetrable ranks of a class-based internet to the users who will help it grow? If you destroy net neutrality, the rich get richer, their ranks grow smaller and entrepreneurship dies in this country. A corporation who feels threatened by the small innovator can simply outbid her for bandwidth. Innovation grinds to a halt, and the American economy will rapidly fall behind the rest of the world. The internet is currently one of the few domains where the ideals of freedom and equality are truly embodied and where those ideals flourish and drive an explosive energy to innovate, cooperate, communicate, and share. No forum, ever, has assembled the immensity of cooperation the open internet has. The internet and its billions of contributors constitute the greatest collaborative effort in human history BECAUSE net neutrality evenly distributes access to the effort. But... EVEN aside from all of that, the one question on the mind of every citizen helplessly watching as corporate greed attempts to set fire to our generation's greatest achievement and the one that we deserve an answer to is: Who wants this? Who are you serving in destroying net neutrality? Citizens of the United States? Obviously not. So..... who do you serve? Thanks, Matt
—Mr. Matthew L Jung, New York, NY

It's Net EQUALITY. These companies are trying to take away my equality on the internet and show preference to people that will line their pockets. It's corrupt and wrong. This is the kind of thing that will spark anger and revolt.
—Jen Waldon, Nottingham, MD

I am an independent artist who makes my living in whole by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. It is the FCC's responsibility to the future of humanity to protect REAL Net Neutrality and the “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—Edward Smith, San Rafael, CA

To keep the power of choice in the hands of the people and not the interests if big business.
—Matthew Kaiser, Minneapolis, MN

I'm a creative professional. Having one equal internet lane for everyone is crucial to my success and the success of all others working in creative or innovative fields. A two-tier internet service would drive innovation to a grinding halt. I shouldn't have to point out that a lack of innovation is a bad thing, but apparently this is necessary. What ever happened to America being a land of opportunity?
—Zelda Vinciguerra, Penns Grove, NJ

I am an aspiring artist who is deeply committed to learning my craft. I plan to use the Internet for 80% of my education while learning and 100% of my marketing to build my career. PLEASE do not compromise my American Dream by changing the way the Internet works.
—Melissa Allison, Boulder Creek, CA

As a place for creativity, community, discussion and most importantly, free spech; a free internet is vital to the modern world. We need a free internet to hinder major corporations and governments from abusing their power. We do not want oppression from a place that is supposed to be free. Let us create, enjoy and help eachother in a vibrant, free internet instead of being turned into even more mindless drones.
—Rasmus Kvist, ,

It is important because on the internet as it currently is, we are all the same. We are all just people. By allowing companies to make changes to who can afford higher speeds, it is just a way to separate the haves from the have-not's AGAIN! The internet is a place where people of any race, creed, religion, sexual preference, and age can express themselves freely. It should remain that way, FOREVER! Why does everything need to be separated by you people (The FCC and Congress)? Any form of segregation should be unlawful and never even explored if thought of. You will be taking the ability to learn out of the hands of children, the ability to play a simple game online with friends away from gamers. Potential future historians or scientists might not get to the information they need, or at least not as fast if they can't afford a better connection, and could miss out on a major breakthrough that changes our thinking, if not the world. Why are you thinking of doing this? Because you are just as much in bed with the telecomm sector as you are with the oil, automotive, and banking industries. It is all about trying to help the rich get richer, and the poorer be damned. Our society is worth more when we actually have things in common, rather than constantly trying to differentiate ourselves and drive a wedge in with our differences. Net neutrality is essential to the country and our place in the world. Whether you believe it or not, it is! I have just as much a right to connect with people as the poor person in the next town, or the rich person across the country. Keep net neutrality!
—Charles Orrell, Melrose, MA

Because it is one of the few real, tangible ways in which stories and art can be shared around the world instantaneously. I would rather the internet remained in its delightfully anarchic state than become one more tool to force a bland, hollow monoculture down the collective throats of the entire world.
—John Scanlon, ,

I am a freelance web designer/developer just starting out in the business. The disintegration of Net Neutrality would sabotage my efforts, making it more expensive to do business as an entrepreneur. Protect REAL Net Neutrality for everyone's sake.
—William Corpening, Las Vegas, NV

Internet users need protection form corporate abuse!
—Marcia Cooper, Waban, MA

This is the United States of America.....not China. The internet should be free.
—Maximilian Gantz, North Palm Beach, FL

Sir, as a young woman with experience in the world of business, I can understand your desire to make internet like an expensive amusement park with toll roads and large gates. It expands YOUR businesses and creates revenue while diminishing competition. However, what you are not taking into consideration is way internet has brought community to those in the midst of mental and physical healing, to those telling their stories. This community keeps people ALIVE. Doing anything that would negatively impact this community would end thousands of the lives of customers your revenue depends on. Lives that cannot afford therapy. Lives that thrive because they find true inspiration from artists, bloggers, indy musicians, and others found online. I ask you respectfully, as one in the midst of healing, as one of millions who share their inspiration through creative means and networks with others in healing too, please take this impact into consideration. You will not only be affecting small businesses, you will be affecting human lives.
—Sharon Salazar, Mannford, OK

I create content and develop web systems for myself as well as paying businesses. I need to be able to trust a communication system that is open and ever-evolving for use as a public utility - NOT a tool of a consortium of large corporations who only reason to change the internet is to increase their profits. Please do not fix what isn't broken.
—Dan Foegelle, Culver City, CA

We need have to keep at least one fair playing field available to the people. Leave our internet alone.
—Jessica Curran, Federal Way, WA

I am a member of the media. I support the free flow of information!
—Darrell Greene, Collierville, TN

because I believe in net neutrality
—, Solon, OH

What has happened to this country? Instead of helping each other, we bleed each other dry with our greed! The internet should stay on a level playing field for all. By not allowing net neutrality you allow the bigger corporations to continue to smother the little guy. This country was built on the little guy! Don't forget your heritage! The whole idea of allowing greedy companies to continue to suck the life out of people is disgusting!! Get a Conscience!! Or have we all lost our humanity?!!
—Theresa, Santa Ana, CA

Allowing the internet providers (many with a monopoly in local areas) to choose at what speed individual content is delivered is an unprecedented and dangerous practice. I already pay a large bill every month to have my content delivered at the speed that I pay for. It should be my right and privilege to have ANY content I wish delivered at the top rate that I can afford. It is unconscionable that you are even considering allowing these companies to take my money to deliver content at the contracted speed, and then allow them to also restrict that speed based upon an extortion that they are able or unable to extract from a content provider. This is double dipping in the worst possible way and also restricts content providers on the internet to only being those who can afford to pay for the privilege. The Internet is not some product of a company that they may charge what they wish. It is a fundamental backbone of our country like water and electricity delivery. These companies MUST be classified as COMMON CARRIERS. It is a danger to our way of life and the security of our nation as other countries surpass our abilities while we remain shackled by the greed of a few who happen to have their hand (literally) on the throttle. This isn't about Big Business, this is about the progress of the United States and its ability to retain its advantage in the World.
—George Neville, Fort Worth, TX

This is the equivalent of freedom of the press however without net neutrality being preserved you eliminate the mechanism that equates to that expression. Shame on you if you side with this unabashed monopolistic industry's efforts.
—Darren Wood, West Des Moines, IA

Don't let big business hold the internist hostage and make it harder for small startups to compete with the establishment. It's what has driven many innovations over this past decade.
—R Brady Finch, Lees Summit, MO

It is important that all people in this country have the ability to have their voices be heard through their freedom of speech.
—James Banks, Ashburn, VA

I'm an independent artist and right now I'm using the Internet to improve my skills by taking online courses from a group of great artists and also by being able to be a part of a great artist community. And all of this is possible because of the current neutrality of the internet.
—Lucila Idoyaga, ,

Like America, the internet should be a free place.
—Ben L, Jacksonville, FL

Americans so rarely have real equality these days & internet should stay EE! Big corporations should stop milking the middle class! Also why should an ex telecommunications company leader be running the FCC on this issue. Talk about government corruption
—Rose Ecabert, Omaha, NE

A balance between supporting the obvious benefits of being able to share information, communicate and be connected as a global society, and not allowing corporate giants to gain even more control over our ability to do this or to profit at our expense.
—Derek Ahl, South Berwick, ME

The Internet has become so much a part of the lives of most Americans that it is easy to imagine that it will always remain the free and open medium it is now. We'd like to believe it will remain a place where you can always access any lawful content you want, and where the folks delivering that content can't play favorites because they disagree with the message being delivered or want to charge more money for faster delivery.
—Al Klein, Portland, OR

Why? Are you kidding me? I don't watch TV or lsiten to Radio anymore for years now. Why? Because on the internet I can choose the content I'm going to watch. Also I get to find more than one version of every ingle news, and can decide for myself whether something is bad or good, I can make my own judgement WITOUT THE MANIPULATION AND CENSORSHIP OF OTHER MIDIAS. Also, many people make a living out of the internet! Producing videos, art, literature, news, content, all kinds of important and silly things you can imagine! Do you have any idea what would happen to these people if you started censoring their production? Also you'd kill the best thing about the internet: freedom of speech. You are able to freely express yourself in any way you choose without being cut or erased. You matter on the internet. Don't take that away form people! Also, many people find support for bullying, domestic violence, abusive relationships, addictions and all kinds of things on the internet. We can communicate with people that otherwise wed never meet! I seriously don't understand how ANYONE could possibly thing this act is a good idea!
—Juliana Vianna e Silva, ,

Are you kidding??? Most of my life is already controlled by the rich and powerful; now you're going to mess with the Internet? Look inside and bring up some courage - keep the Net neutral!
—Charles Ruff, Las Cruces, NM

I run a small business and a good portion of my work is from online communications, marketing and advertising. I don't think I could afford to pay for faster service but "dirt roads" would certainly hinder my progress.
—Christian F Rosselli, Woodside, NY

Id like the ability to start a business someday and i dont think my isp should be able to decide what i do on The internet
—Brian Vandam, New Orleans, LA

I am a filmmaker and business owner. I saw entertainment heading this direction back in 2004 and finally started my production company, American Wasteland Entertainment, LLC. We focus on online entertainment/content/short form TV productions. We have two award winning and critically acclaimed series and have moved into season 2. Why is net Neutrality important to us? The answer is quite simple and I feel like nobody is listening. Its one simple word, freedom. If you take away the freedom of net neutrality, you take away the equal ground for filmmakers and businessmen like myself against bigger corporations. I keep hearing that the government encourages small business, but many of the companies that are trying to form now, are based on the use of the internet. Taking away net neutrality just gives the giant corporations more control and takes out the competition. There are shows online that are getting better reviews and more views than TV shows on networks. Instead of trying to cultivate this, these corporations don't want the competition, when its proven that competition facilitates a healthy work environment. Without competion there are no more jobs in this country being created. Net neutrality gives people like me and other entrepreneurs level ground to go head to head with the big guys. Many jobs could be created if we helped facilitate these creative endeavors online instead of cutting off their source to the world. Basically, net neutrality creates jobs, facilitates business, and helps create healthy competition between companies. Think about it, there are people out there right now that are creating businesses and having success thats making bigger companies sweat. Thats amazing! The bigger companies don't want to put money into making their product better, so they are just trying to cut off the source, Net neutrality. Netflix is a great example of rising from the ashes and is challenging the TV/Movie norm. Now they are having to pay more to keep their service open to their great clients because Comcast wants more money. They already have enough. Give your workers more money and stop trying to hurt us who work our butts off to make a living. We're doing something right because these bigger companies want be rid of the competition. As the FCC its your job to create and facilitate online entertainment as much as TV. You would be costing thousands of jobs due to smaller businesses having to pay extra fees that are not needed and having to let workers go. Lets help small businesses grow and not add to the problems this country already has with job loss. Thats what net neutrality comes down to; even playing ground for small business to go head to head with the big guys and grow. Taking that away hurts the American dream, which is already having trouble standing. You could be taking away the next Facebook or twitter.
—Jason Brasier, Springfield, MO

Right now, even you benefit from Net Neutrality, and you may need it in the future. The rest of us need it now and always. Thank you.
—Lea Hernandez, West Hollywood, CA

Hello, I am an artist who needs the internet to remain as it currently is in order for me to grow my business as an illustrator. small people like me will never have a chance to make it if the internet is transformed into a "net neutrality" system. I believe that the work on the internet that people see is popular based on it's own merit. it's simple and fair. and the people who work hard are rewarded. Thank you so much for taking the time to read my email. and please keep the internet as it currently is. -Alyssa
—Alyssa, Rapid City, SD

Because the merger among these already corporate giants will make the lives of creative everywhere immensely difficult. I'm just one voice of the millions this law will effectively harm. The simple fact that our connectivity will be slowed in favor of furthering this corporatocratic regime says it all. These giant companies simply get to stomp on the freedoms and joy of the masses. Don't let this go down in history as the companies that destroyed the once potent means of becoming self-sufficient as a creative in this world. Let not our media be censored like some North Korean-inspired, Orwellian derived nightmare.
—Taylor Payton, Minneapolis, MN

Protect the open internet, remove the ability to discriminate sites online, allow for growth of business and the ability for start ups and small businesses to be successful
—Courtney Tarantino, San Francisco, CA

Net Neutrality allows me learn about my own interest and hobbies. Without it, the artist and educators I use for myself and my children will disappear. This will stop growth on a personal, business, and spiritual levels. Small businesses have just as much right to be here as the top dogs. They will never have the same drive and creativity because they lack heart. Instead they pay for half-efforts and try to bully out the stuff that has became popular by its own merit. Please, don't allow them to shove the small guys to the side. Thank you.
—Chastity Leadbeater, Mc Kenzie, TN

Equality is important to me. This nation's future is in the balance. Having a free, "neutral" internet guarantees that those who aren't rich have a voice, and that creative freedom will continue. I propose that Tom Wheeler step down, due to an obvious conflict of interest. I also demand nothing less that real Net Neutrality.
—Taylor Hellewell, Salt Lake City, UT

Because I am a creative professional working with art for games and children books.
—Guilherme Da Cas, ,

I am a creative professional who makes a living thanks to the internet. I am able to connect and find work. But I am still new and poor, please dont take the net away from me.
—Jennifer Meyer, Leominster, MA

Because it is supposed to be my right as a user!
—Robert Delgreco, East Hartford, CT

I working on a way of art living. I'm a frelancer artist and i need internet equality to live, share my works and, of course, to work. Neutrality, equality, whatever you guys want to call it; keep it that way. You'll be ruining lifes with that, including mine.
—Rafael Dant'Anna, ,

The internet is the most important public forum of our time. Granting the wealthy and powerful control over who may access it and how is an immense disservice to every American citizen of whatever political stripe.
—Justin Davis, Wynnewood, PA

Equality for everyone on the internet. These internet companies don't need there pockets stuffed even more
—Arman Bhangu, Tracy, CA

I'm an artist and small business owner. I heard the internet accurately described as a great equalizer via equal access by big business & individual people. I want it to stay that way.
—GR O'Neil, Santa Cruz, CA without a free and accessible internet for everyone, who will read my comics when I make them?

—Matthew Gemlo, New Brighton, MN

The equality of the internet has been the most important thing to happen since it's conception. It is the only arena where a small business can compete with a huge corporation. Please do not stack the cards in favour of those with the greater resources. The internet is the last bastion of equality. Please do not take that away. Remember that the biggest internet phenomenons over the past 10 years such as Facebook and Twitter which are worth billions now could not have grown and flourished under these proposed new laws. Thank you for taking the time to read this statement. Kind regards Ian Summers
—Ian Summers, ,

I depend on the internet to connect with other artists and be able to share my work with as many people as possible. If Net Neutrality ends, I will not be able to do this anymore.
—Bianca Severino, East Haven, CT

Everyone deserves equal access to the Internet.
—Alexandra Kepner, Cambridge, MA

As a business woman and an artist, net neutrality is my best chance to support myself and my family. Take that away and you will be killing small business's interests and creating a situation that won't allow for true freedom of speech and access to information as guaranteed by our laws.
—Laura Charles, Addison, NY

I am an aspiring artist looking to get into the movie making field. I have a long hard journey ahead of me and this would only make it harder.
—Alec Drake, ,

Net neutrality is important to me because it gives me a creative voice. It allows me to do what I love and run a business. It allows me to keep the lights on at home and my family fed. I truly believe that dismantling net neutrality would destroy one of the greatest things humanity has ever achieved. Thank you for your time Kind regards Paul Loubser
—Paul Loubser, , net neutrality is essential to keeping our society progressing and giving everyone the opeprtunity to be heard equally.

—Lars Johnsen, ,

The internet demands freedom for the people
—David Hoggan, ,

I'm an independent artist who makes a living in whole by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. it is a responsibility to the future of humanity that you protect REAL Net Neutrality and the “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable. Thank you for your time, Jean Claude de La Ronde Freelance Storyboard Artist
—Jean Claude de La Ronde, ,

Because it's a global issue that would affect everyone. I'm not even from the states and would be unable to vote on the issue (if it even is up for public vote) but it would affect my use of the internet. The internet is a great tool for small businesses to advertise and operate. It is an equaliser, probably the only true one left to us. Your decisions wouldn't just affect your country, but the entire world.
—Leah, ,

I am a UK freelance illustrator and nearly all of my clients are based in the US. All my work is found via the internet. I am a very small business making a small living to survive. These plans to discriminate websites and connections would severely throttle my ability to work efficiently as well as connect myself to other businesses and clients. I would not be able to afford to keep up with any special fees put in place to reach people, like in place on facebook pages right now. I can't afford to reach all 100 people who watch my facebook page right now but it's only facebook and there are other options for me, so it's a loss I can afford. However if this is put into place over the internet it would basically destroy my chance of being able to work and earn a living in the field I love and feel passionate about.
—Hannah Clark, ,

I use it for my work
—Lazaro Ruiz, Cocoa, FL

I'm an artist & illustrator who mostly use internet for marketing and showcasing my work. It's main source for work opportunities. The graphics/illustration/game/fil m/advertisement business will suffer extremely if the internet "breaks". Milions of people risk to lose their jobs.
—Andrea Femerstrand, ,

Everybody needs to be equal, at least online!
—Aart-Jan Venema, ,

I am designing a product, which will be primarily marketed and sold via the internet. With almost zero capital, I can't afford the fast lane, and this could very easily stifle and destroy my efforts. I am also working toward becoming a freelance designer and artist, which depend heavily on free equal access. There are already plenty of obstacles to these dreams. Please don't add another one.
—Jamie Sims, ,

It's my life's dream to affect people creatively. As well, my family depends on my ability to reach my customers, and this new legislation will take that away, essentially, because I can't afford to pay the toll.
—Justin, Mesa, AZ

Speaking as a business owner, the Net has allowed me to have a level playing field for my online business. By creating these preferences of fast lanes you will kill my business and future innovations that the level field our current Net has.
—Melony Chitwood, aztec, NM

I use the internet as apart of my daily life, I use it for work, for relaxation. Anything but a free and open internet with NO slow lane would be unacceptable. Please don't let the big companies push you around and ruin our free and open internet.
—Brendan H, ,

The internet is freedom of expression and freedom of choice. NO ONE should be allowed to control either of those.
—Kevin Richter, ,

As an independent freelance artist, it's imperative that my clients, art directors, and publishers are able to find me as easily as they would find anything else on the internet. Please keep the internet an even playing field. Don't allow larger entities to "buy" better service.
—Ernest D'Elia, Westborough, MA

To whom it may concern: The internet is my livelihood. I make most of my living off of Google Searches, media sites, and the content that I create. Net Neutrality would, without a doubt, ruin me. I would not be able to pay rent or buy food. I would not be able to pay my bills or save to buy a home. As such, I oppose Net "Neutrality" with such an intensity as cannot be described by mere words. It is a proposal that only has one winner: the ones who proposed it. There is no regard to the consumers, only to the money they have in their pockets - money that I have already told you will be spent on better things. The Internet is and should be a free and open resource. This bill would effectively destroy that in favor of the minority and not at all in regards to the majority. Please do the right thing.
—Meg Syverud, Columbus, OH

Equality should be the major stance when it comes to how internet resources are divided.
—Benny Lindberg, ,

Dear FCC Chairman Wheeler and Members of Congress: The FCC has proposed rules that would break the open Internet. This proposed path would open the door to widespread discrimination online. It would give Internet service providers the green light to implement a two-tiered Internet, with a fast lane for those who can afford it and a dirt road for the rest of us. This would be a disaster for startups, nonprofits and everyday Internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls. I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.
—Pascale Mackey, Miami, FL

Net neutrality is important because it gives artist of all varieties to have a voice and make their presence known to reach a wider range of people than oppose to physically going to places to broadcast that you're an artist. I am a freelance illustrator where the majority of my clients come from Facebook and through word of mouth. Neutrality would give me opportunity to communicate with customers who all don't live in the same place if we discriminate with the internet then how can there be equality? We fight for eqaulity amongst race, religion and gender but now you take all that and segregate how we communicate and share ideas and gain an audience for intellectual properties is crazy. Please keep the net neutrality for all of us not just big business but for the common man as well because our dreams are worth fighting for thanks for the opportunity to hear our because we also your consumer base as well. Thanks again I hope you consider our voices in this matter.
—Devon Camel, Jackson, MI

I am a self employed illustrator who has successfully used the internet and my website as my main marketing tool to get work as well as to promote my art. My work has reached a worldwide audience including the Salvation Army of Australia where my image of a homeless Christ ended up on their magazine cover thanks to them finding my work on the internet.
—Deb Hoeffner, Doylestown, PA

I am an independent artist working to make my living in part by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. It is your responsibility to the future of humanity that you protect REAL Net Neutrality. The “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—Rosemary Knowles, ,

Net Neutrality is important to me, because, first, it is in my very right, to be free and equal, disregard of the money I have, the company I used, the country where I Iive. As an independent artist, I need that the information I sent, the art I post, is not more, or less seen than something less.
—Sarah Salard, ,

I have a very good friend who is an artist and is starting to teach me basic sketching. Please, please, please keep Net Neutrality!!!!
—Diane Kahler, Bay Village, OH

My small business as an artist depends on people being able to see my content and view my website. It would seriously hurt my ability to work if bigger companies were given preference because they're able to pay the toll that I can't afford. Please listen to us. When small businesses win, everybody wins. Thank you, Jesse —Jesse Jones, Portland, OR to make a living and individual rights and freedoms

—Dayle Dodwell, ,

I'm an independent artist, and allowing this to pass would be a major blow to not just myself, but many other creative people who are thriving today because of an open internet. Please do not allow the FCC to do this, it is not just about personal creative freedom, it is about the life and means to make a living for each and every creative person out there today.
—Mike, Clinton Township, MI

I want my art to be seen. I want a chance to compete with the big art studios, and I can't do that if I have to pay huge sums just to make sure people can actually load my website.
—Joshua Brown-Culp, Minneapolis, MN

Net Neutrality is important because many artist make their living by commissioning work online and selling prints of their most popular art. They can also send it to anyone in the world. Net Neutrality is also important because unknown artists who are aspiring to do art professionally (artists like me, who are just starting to plan out their post-secondary education) can get critiques on their work, find other artist, ask questions, learn how to improve their work and even make a bit of money before they even graduate high school. I am constantly learning from the tutorials and tips other artists post on Tumblr and DeviantART. Without Net Neutrality, it will be so much harder to continue learning or to get critique from other artists. All we want is to post our art for the world to see, and discover and support other aspiring artists. Please do not take that away from us.
—Emily Douglass, ,

Because equality and justice is defined by basic human rights we have to protect from giant corporations that take them away from the public every single day. It undermines the core believes in freedom that America was built on, giving unlimited power to those who can pay. Loosing net neutrality is announcing that those right are being sold off to the highest bidder, i.e. the corporate giants who have already split the market into shares, creating a monopoly, and blocking any prospect for a small business to thrive.
—Alexander Mirzoyan, Savannah, GA

As a digital artist, I make my living largely in part from my correspondence on the internet. Removing net neutrality would remove the equality that allows me to earn a living.
—Jesse McAllister, New York Mills, NY

One of the main reasons the internet is so valuable is that individual voices can be heard and rise to prominence based on their own merits.
—John Middleton, Rowlett, TX

Because everything is treated equal, unlike society.
—Michael Toovey, Laie, HI

As an artist and student, I use the internet as a resource for education, creative ideas, and as a resource. If the internet were not net neutral I would not be able to afford the access to the information. I am on a limited budget and I could not pay more for internet access.
—Robbie Klarer Smith, Pueblo, CO

I'm an independent artist who makes my living in whole or in part by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. It is your responsibility to the future of humanity that to protect REAL Net Neutrality and the “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable. Thank you.
—John, Allentown, NJ

I am a freelance illustrator who depends on the Internet for my business. Limiting potential customer access to my online presence will be a big hit to my income. The cable companies could give more bandwidth and attention to their own causes and self-interests. Access to voters' attention online? Could go to whomever pays the highest price and if it serves the cable companies' interests.
—Anna Measures, Oxnard, CA

Having freedom of speak is something that should never be taken or hindered likewise for the free voices on the internet/Net Neutrality. Million dollar companies have directly benefited from the superhighway of the internet and its freedom. I myself hope one day to make my mark as a creative voice and keeping the internet a free flowing entity will ensure opportunities for not only me but the entire world.
—Patrick Gassaway, Greensboro, NC

Small business!
—, Warrington, PA

I like bein able to see all of the internet at the same speed. Taking away this freedom means proving that the FCC is controlled by cable companies, and therefore corrupt. These changes are simply cruel, unfair, and unAmerican.
—Jeffrey Sweeney, Clifton Heights, PA

I'm a storyteller and an artist who has an unfiltered voice in this world through the internet. This is a magically time to create because of this opportunity. Don't take my voice away from me.
—Nick Patton, Sheboygan, WI

I am a creative artist and make my living as a writer. Controlling the internet in the way these companies are planning is criminal and a monopoly. It's un American and has no moral integrity.
—Vittorio, Tampa, FL

I'm an independent artist who is trying to make my living by sharing my work on the internet. The neutrality of the internet is imperative for my business to thrive. The way the world is being skewed towards anyone with a lot of money is really disheartening to me. The beauty of America used to be anyone can make it with enough hard work. By giving preference to Big Money, it will be the death of thousands of small businesses trying to make their way. This country was made by the workers, not by big corporations! It is your responsibility to the future of humanity to protect REAL Net Neutrality. And although the law sees corporations as people, we all know they are anything but humane! Please don't turn the whole Internet into one big, inhumane and corrupt corporation! It is unjust, unacceptable, and frankly, un-American.
—Lynn Alpert, Saint Louis, MO

We can't have freedom of speech if we don't have freedom of information.
—Leah, Lancaster, PA

Please don't make it harder than it already is. Please don't condemn our children to a life of inequality, superficiality and ignorance. Humanity didn't go all this way for this.
—Audrey Dowling, ,

I am an up and coming artist working toward making my living in whole by the current neutral playing field provided as of now which allows my fans to see my content indiscriminately from the content of other larger names in the industry and other larger corporate organizations. It must be taken into consideration how many peoples livelihoods are based solely on the foundations of net neutrality and how the replacement of the current system could be detrimental to those who can't simply buy their way into the "fast lane". Anything short of true equality is unaccpetable.
—, Oceanside, CA

Dear Chairman Wheeler, Please scrap the proposed rules for tiering access to the Internet. As an independent artist who trying to make a living selling his work to as many people as possible, being able to sell my works will be adversely affected by a tiered system. I want people to browse my art, appreciate it fully, take the time to look at it. That'll work fine for people with fast lane privileges, but for everyone else, they'll be getting dial-up speeds and will lose patience while waiting for their slow lane access to deliver my site or any site, government, business, or education, to download. This does not allow me to compete with artists with bigger pockets, and stifles innovation and commercial progress. Please keep the playing field level for all parties, regardless of the size of their wallets. Thank you.
—Larry Wentzel, Ann Arbor, MI

It is important to me because I am trying to my a career out of freelancing for concept art. Without net neutrality my career is gone and my family suffers, there would be no way for me to get my product out to my fans and gather more fans. Without net neutrality many people like myself and their families will suffer, and there would be no more spice to the world of consumers because it would be choked out. Events would no longer have the ability to happen, startups would no longer work, small business would be sent back to the '90s when there was dialup. Do you really want to do that to the economy? The economy doesn't just run off these large businesses, you would force stock to drop because there would be less money for us the consumer to buy from these bigger businesses because our own businesses (our way to make money) would fail or severely suffer. Do you really want to do that?
—Dara G. Lewis, Indianapolis, IN

As an independent business owner, Net Neutrality is what helps me get on the same playing field as others. Losing Net Neutrality would cause me to lose my business. America has always championed the little guy and small business startups. Please leave the internet free for all to experience equally. Freedom should be experienced everywhere, including the internet.
—Sara Diesel, Bridgeville, PA

Net neutrality is important to me as a creative. A recent illustration graduate, I am using my online presence as a form of advertising and exposure, self-made exposure, something very important to ALL artists. Through this presence, I am picking up commissions and jobs - a means of supporting myself. Not only this, because the internet is such a great platform for art and visual media, it allows me to come into contact with more creatives, artists, writers, filmmakers etc. - This allows for more collaborations, feedback, support and happier clients all around - Not only this but happier artists and creatives too! - Most of us spend a lot of time cooped up alone in rooms, working. There IS no set workplace for us. We do not need the internet to become a closed-off slog through advertising and censored media. Without net neutrality, we'll be taking a step Backwards in terms of our development. Thank you for your time; Please rethink these classifications, and allow internet service providers to be considered common carriers. Many thanks, Sarah Crossan
—Sarah Crossan, Dublin,

Chairman Wheeler: I am an independent artist. I have a job as an IT guy right now, working for a large corporation in South Florida, I enjoy it but it's not my dream. Working on art is my dream. I have a small website at www.aarpieart.com as well as a facebook page, tumblr, and twitter. These are my means of marketing, selling, and starting my own business. I don't make enough to 'pay the toll' to get in the Internet Fastlane, which means the difficult job of getting my name out there and getting recognition will become even more difficult, if not impossible. These new laws don't fix the internet, they break it. They break it for entrepreneurs and small businessmen like myself. I'm not in this for the money, either. I want to work from home. I've got four great kids and a wonderful wife, and I miss out on so much being an hour away. You're telling me that my dream isn't as important as someone who can pay a bigger fee. You're telling me that the America that I love is dead and buried, and that all we can dream for anymore is a good sale at Sears. Please understand what you're trying to do will continue to murder of the American small business. Don't pass these laws. We don't want Net Neutrality because it's not Neutral. We want Net Equality. Thanks! -Aaron Pierce West Palm Beach, FL
—Aaron "Aarpie!" Pierce, West Palm Beach, FL

As a freelance artist it allows me to effectively communicate and work with clients worldwide. For new clients to find me and me to find new potential clients.
—Ramsey Sibaja, Peachtree City, GA

I am an artist trying to build my client base online so I can suppliment my income. Please do not allow big corporations to control the internet, keep it free to all the public. If a schools are making homework and tests online, everyone should have equal access to the internet at its current speed. Please don't allow discrimination based on money. Your decision, whatever it may be, will go into the history books.
—Jen Beasley, Pulaski, TN

I am a freelance artist, and use the internet to reach my clients and future/potential clients. Please do not take away this platform from us. The internet has been the cure to the long suffered starving artist. Thank you for your time and consideration.
—Joy Walsh, Blue Island, IL

Net neutrality is important because it allows all businesses, and all people, to have an equal say in this digital age. Without net neutrality, creativity and small businesses will be stomped off the map. As a person, and a member of the ever-growing art community online, this is something that I cannot condone or approve of. Please reconsider this decision, if not for me, then for the people that you serve.
—Javier Pena, Orlando, FL

Cause i really want to become an freelance artist and i'm studying hard to that, if the FCC crushes net neutrality all my effort will be meaningless.
—Douglas Akio Ito, ,

I run a small business that relies upon a level playing field on the internet, all of my business comes from clients being able to easily find me on an open internet without restrictions. If these new restrictions were put into place I could not afford to run my business anymore and would have to shut my doors. I can't express how damaging this would be to one of the few areas of the economy that are thriving.
—David Kingham, Oelrichs, SD

I make my living creating content for clients on the internet.
—Kristin C, Oakland Gardens, NY

I'm an independent artist who makes my living in part by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. It is in part your responsibility to the future of humanity that you protect REAL Net Neutrality. The “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—Olga Andreyeva, Brooklyn, NY

Anything other than Net Neutrality is an attack on our right to freedom of speech and access to important information.
—Judith Fosmo, Anacortes, WA

It enables artists and others to get their work out there like never before.
—Ari Binus, Waban, MA

The internet is a democratic medium and the only hope of sustaining income as an independent artist. My creative agency works with many non-profits whose message may be lost if they can't afford to pay for "Fast lane" sections online. It is the FCC's responsibility to the future of humanity that they protect REAL Net Neutrality and the “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—Amy Mayer, Ypsilanti, MI

I am an independent artist and most of my profit comes from my publications on the internet. Even if I'm not resident of the United States, this greatly affects me as most of my contacts and public resides in USA.
—Paula, ,

Because large companies have enough control over the media/culture as it is.
—Brian Naughton, ,

How else is creativity meant to foster if you take away neutrality? You will stifle uniqueness, idea generation, everything that makes the world go round.
—Sorcha Moloney, ,

Because despite what people say, the American Dream is still alive. It's alive through the internet, where anyone can do anything and build themselves from nothing. If they take away Net Neutrality, than the American Dream will truly dead. And I don't know about you but I'd be ashamed to live in an America that threw away its own dream and basic morals to separate the rich from the commoners like a monarchy. I'm also disgusted that so few people get to decide the fate of so many people and something so many people use. A change of this magnitude should be put to a national vote. It's very suspicious and unfair that these rules are being debated on by the few people it would benefit. Please keep my faith that there are people out there who still think money isn't everything. Keep my faith that people still believe in what this country was built for: freedom.
—Michaela, Newtown, CT

I suffer from severe anxiety, if it wasn't for my ability to make a living from self employed illustration using the internet to correspond with clients and set up my business, I would be dependant on the government for benefits and I would be forced to live with my parents or assisted living for the rest of my life. This is not an exaggeration and I know there are others like myself. Net Neutrality means independence for people like me, this means a lot for someone with mental health problems and physical difficulties that prevent them from being so otherwise. On a wider scale Net Neutrality is Net Equality and it gives a voice and a platform to everyone equally. We fight for equality in our society, we should fight for the Internet to retain it's unique and brilliant platform that allows anyone from any walk of life to have a voice, run a business, connect with other people and create something wonderful. I urge the companies who are trying to erase this platform as it is now, to evolve, learn and explore, innovate and create so that they too can make use of the Internet without having to control it and take it away from other creators and consumers. There is room and opportunity for all of us - isn't that what America is all about? Why would you want to crush that? Look up from the rut of the old ways of business, open your mind to ideas and transcend outdated methods. I say it again. There is room for all of us.
—Ulv Havet, ,

I am an independent artist and designer who makes my living by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. My livelihood and hopes for future success depend on an equal Web. It is your responsibility to act in the interest and good faith of humanity by protecting REAL Net Neutrality. The "Internet Slow Lane" is unjust and unacceptable, and the repercussions of such a situation will echo beyond the U.S. to the global community if allowed to happen. Creativity, freedom of speech, and innovative thought will all be repressed under the discrimination of an unequal Internet. Please fight for true Net Neutrality and Equality.
—Katherine Campbell, Buffalo, NY

This is obvious. And many people have said it better than I can.
—Mario Gonzalez, Miami, FL

As an aspiring artist, the internet is a seemingly endless resource for inspiration and creative growth. TRUE Net Neutrality is important to me because I want that resource readily and without inhibitions. The artistic communities created through the internet are so so important, we are each others support. If you implement these unjust rules, you will impact HUNDREDS OF MILLIONS of lives. Those same lives that are the future of this nation, and this world. For the sake of big business would you have us. the future generation, living REPRESSIVELY? The internet is an open domain where thoughts, ideas, media content, and news is freely and equally shared. As part of this nations future, and for the sake of NOT fucking everything up for future generations, I DEMAND Net Neutrality.
—Mia P., West Chester, PA

I'm an independent artist who is working to make my living in whole or in part by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. It's is your responsibility to the future of humanity that you protect REAL Net Neutrality and the “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and totally unacceptable.
—Belinda Vega, Austin, TX

As an independent artist, what I'm aspiring to make my living off is largely depending on the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. Being able to publish and share work online and reach out to people, regardless of who you are, is the key for me and thousands upon thousands (or even millions) others like me to be able to communicate our creative visions. Dismantling Net Neutrality would not only hurt all of us, but would consequently hurt the world and its culture as well.
—Olof Eneroth, ,

I am an independent artist trying to break though the industry of entertainment arts. I rely heavily on personal contacts that I have made through the internet, all the social media where everyone can see my work, small forums and gallery sites to host my images for high resolution quality, and my own personal web site which contains my portfolio for potential employers. If you take away Net Neutrality, you are taking away my resources to make my dream a reality. It is not just MY dream either. The art world is immense in size and you would be taking away important income from all these other artists who make a living doing art. Who do you think designed that building you are sitting in? Who do you think designed the clothes you wear on your back? Who do you think makes all the designs and logos for everything you use? Who do you think comes up with ideas for costumes, monsters, characters, etc for movies you love to watch and enjoy? Everything is designed by an artist. Taking away Net Neutrality is harmful to the everyone and would benefit NO BODY except the internet companies. The internet, as it is now, is a level playing field for all. But what you plan to do will only destroy it. It is your responsibility to the future of humanity that you protect REAL Net Neutrality and the “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable. Please do not remove Net Neutrality!
—Mike Dumas, Interlochen, MI

Lately we have seen a lot of driven, clever people starting businesses, sharing ideas, getting educated... Learning and growing every day. A free and equal internet made that possible. Please, please preserve net neutrality. It is of outmost importance for the free and modern human being around the world.
—Sabina Pawlus, ,

Because I'm a freelance illustration and without a free and open internet it would be difficult for me to both use and make money off the internet. Keep the internet neutral and free!
—Marsha Riti, Austin, TX

The “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—Kevin Fagan, Lakewood, OH

I don't think I should be discriminated against just because I won't be able to afford a basic speed of internet. Its should be the same for all.
—Teesa Loveless, Moorpark, CA

It's bad enough that the US lags behind other countries in providing high-speed internet to it's citizens. We don't need to be further marginalized by allowing the 1% high-speed privileges while the rest of us are in the slow lane. Little by little, what made America unique is disappearing in favor of laws made for the powerful and wealthy. Let's not contribute to that degradation of democracy. The Government is for sale and we "ordinary" folks can't afford it. That has to stop.
—Isabelle Green, Pittsfield, VT

Beyond my personal interests, this is something that simply goes against what we stand for as a nation, impinging upon our free speech. This is akin to saying that from now on political protests may only be held in deserted back alleys and must be no larger than ten people. I sincerely hope that the wonderful creative lifeline that is the internet will not be crippled in the interest of allowing telecom companies to further control the markets.
—Patrick Danber, Columbus, OH

Tom, My name is Phil Wade and I'm a freelance illustrator in San Diego. If you know anything about illustration or the art industry as a whole, it is very difficult to find work and make a living. At the moment the internet is my only source of income and self promotion. I have worked very hard to make the small footprint I have on the web and the contacts I have made through forums and the like. These small internet communities are vital to creatives everywhere. If we lose neutrality, we lose our ability to share, learn and grow as artist. I understand that you are running a business and that this would most likely be very profitable for you and your affiliates, but I urge you to try and put yourself in the shoes of those that live in a constant financial uncertainty and have not had the big breaks and opportunities these major companies have had. People may say, "Well get a real job" and not realize that artists are what make the world we live in visually compelling. It's in everything we see. In an economy that is short on "real jobs" it is even more vital that we keep the internet neutral and not allow the little guy to, once again, be trampled underfoot by those with means. I don't know if you will ever see this, but if you do, I ask that you take my words and the words of others that have written you about this to heart. This is our livelihoods that are affected. Thank you for taking the time to read this,
Phil Wade Concept Artist / Illustrator
—Phillip Wade, San Diego, CA

I'm an independent artist that relies heavily on net neutrality and the ability to get my work out on the internet for all to see.
—Adam Ratcliffe, ,

The US Constitution/BIll of Rights that I fought to protect in the military, is the same Constitution/Bill of Rights that I still hold as the standard for living. We are all equal whether we are talking about the color of our skin, our religion, or our freedom of speech. I am a Indie Writer trying to create an audience so that one day I can live solely by my writing. Unfortunately, with the 'Net Neutrality" this will never happen. The name itself is misleading. It's not Neutrality, it is censorship of the worse kind. Currently the internet is open EQUALLY to all big corporations, small pop/mom shops or just a single person. (You know the basics we have to come to expect in the US.) By signing a law that allows BIG corporations to slow my site so THEIRS is the only site that is seen is WRONG on so many levels. What happened to free competition, free speech, or even the American Dream. An 'Internet slow lane' is unjust and uacceptable. We have laws governing all facets of our lives to ensure that you are not discriminated against because of your race, religion, gender, capability (or lack there of), but its OK to discriminate against me because I'm one person who can't PAY a HUGH toll to get in the FAST lane? Its a sad thing, that this has even become an issue. Big corporations and small businesses and individuals should have a level paying field, not charge HUGH sums to even step on the field to begin with. I hope you consider ALL sides and that this type of blatant censorship is NEVER allowed to pass.
—Wendy Lorraine, Rockmart, GA

I like freedom, I like the little people
—Benjamin Truman, Tucson, AZ

I am a freelance illustrator. I depend on the internet, as do many of my fellow freelancers. And we depend on its equality: we depend on the ability for any post, any comment, any website to be able to go viral, to be able to garner as much attention as possible from as wide an audience as possible. If an artist had to pay for something that has made the playing field level with large corporations for the last 5-7 years, I don't know what that would do to us. That level playing field has made it possible for many of my friends and coworkers to be able to support themselves without battling through many of the barriers of entry that exist in other fields. If you care about the American dream, if you care at all for equal opportunity for start-ups, then you'll keep the net neutral.
—Mel Manwill, Provo, UT

Everything from access to quality healthcare to our access lawmakers are already the exclusive right of the wealthiest people and companies. LEAVE THIS LAST EVERYMAN FRONTIER AS IT IS.
—Keri, Chardon, OH

I am an independent artist who makes my living by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. Not only will this destroy the livelihood of millions of small business owners like myself but it will effectively allow censorship of information. Countless men and women have died to protect our freedoms, America's internet can NOT become like the Chinese! It is your responsibility to the future of humanity that they protect REAL Net Neutrality. The “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—Shelby McBride, Chandler, AZ

I am an artist and I reach my audience through the internet. I can't afford to pay for favoritism. I also use the internet for educational purposes to hone and improve my craft. Anything that hurts communication between me and my colleagues hurts my whole industry. Thank you, Thomas Moore
—Mr. Thomas Moore, Chicago, IL

It's about fairness and truth.
—, ,

I am a freelance artist and conduct business via the internet. To undermine and destroy net neutrality would be to undermine and destroy my freedom to seek work and utilize the internet to share my creativity. I urge you, Chairman Wheeler and Members of Congress to trash these proposed rules and save the net neutrality of the internet!
—, Palm Desert, CA

Dear Sir/Madam, My name is Andrew Gaia and I am an independent illustrator from Kingston, PA. I am a 32 yr old highly educated son of a radiologist and father to a kindergartener. It is the freedom share and express my own content on the internet that allows me to earn a living and support my family as well as pay my taxes and live the American Dream. Our forefathers set out to this country in order to avoid the oppression set upon by the English government and their focused supporters. They wanted freedom from the powers that controlled their empire in hopes that they would create a new world where you could live work and play on equal footing to those with the money and power. The internet is the new free world. It is a place where I can build my own support, gather my own fans and develop my business without anyone holding down my potential. These new rules would not only destroy my potential in earning but would stop many other small businesses from developing and being able to support their families. Did your fathers and mothers work for Walmart, did they shop at target, get meat from price chopper, and learn all their information from television? Chances are they did not. They lived in a community where they supported their friends, their families and those closest to them without the added burden of powerful corporations holding them down. These new laws on net neutrality essentially disable the potential of those we love the most. Their ideas, their dream and their effort will be pushed down in favor of those with more. Is that how this country was built, is that why we sailed half way across the earth? Are we turning back to a system where those with more control cast aside our friends a families because they post a financial threat to billion dollar companies? It is not companies that suffer but families and friends. Without the "new world" of the internet their is nowhere to go. Our street corners are filled with chain restaurants and merchants, our stores stocked with corporation approved foods and textiles. All of these things come from close friends who had dreams, a family members with ideas, and communities with a desire to better our world. If you remove our potential to build on the internet we will no longer be able to support new growth and new ideas. Our dreams will be pushed aside for more re-packaged garbage. If growth is localized to one part of the human body it become cancerous, if water is not allowed to flow freely it becomes stagnant and diseased. You will be responsible for the stagnation of our American culture and the true dream of our people. The cancers will grow until even your job will be threatened if you dare support your family instead of a business. Your medications will be catered, your foods, your clothing even how you vacation. Do not let the freedoms of our time be crushed. This country was built on families and communities and if you side with those that threaten to block their success, you are condemning America to a dreamless stagnant world with no hope for people. It is our people that gives us strength and if you take away yet another avenue for their success then you are taking away the strength of our nation.
—Andrew Gaia, Kingston, PA

I am an independent comic book creator. I make a living by connecting with my fans through the internet. Reading my comic online is the number one way I get new readers who then in turn purchase my books. Please protect net neutrality! Changes to the internet where people like me could not afford to pay the fees necessary to have our work seen by everyone would kill my livelihood-- mine, and that of all of my colleagues as well. The comic book industry is hard enough to survive in as is. The FCC's proposed changes would force me and all of my friends out of jobs. Four years ago I decided that these powerful internet connections that my peers and I had with our readers could be used for more than self-promotion. So I asked 8 of my webcomic friends to participate in a fundraising drive with me to raise money to end human trafficking. We formed the Comic Creators for Freedom, and over 100 international artists joined forces for this purpose. In December we held our fourth drive and we've raised $30,000 for the cause. The internet is the most powerful tool that freedom has ever known. Please do not take that away!
—Lora Innes, Columbus, OH

Hello, I'm an independent artist in a very small country. I try to make a living working with what I most love, Illustration. The only way I can do that and reach as many clients and followers as possible around the whole world is through the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. When internet got popular where I live things got better because the internet meant freedom, equality and globalization (the good kind). I can say I have friends and co-workers around the globe thanks to the internet. This network is what makes it possible to me to work in illustration. I'm here writing today to remind you that it is your responsibility to the future of humanity to protect the real Net Neutrality (equality) and having the internet working in another way is unjust and unacceptable. We deserve equality. Best Wishes, Tânia A. Cardoso —Tânia Alexandra Esteves Fernandes Cardoso, ,

I'm an independent artist whose income partly depends on NET NEUTRALITY.
—Michał Peitsch, ,

Online NON-discrimination is important to me!
—Carol Gamber, Matthews, NC

I am an independent freelance artist who makes my living in part by the current neutrality of the Internet. I am young and trying to support a family and it's important for me and my family's well being that there is net neutrality. Please keep the internet a place of equality by keeping net neutrality.
—Matthew Shipley, Provo, UT

Why can't the big companies play nice will all the other kids in the sand box? Why must they bully everyone and take their toys? If the net slows down people will abandon it apart from doing what they have to on it. Please don't let the big boys bully the rest of us. We've all got a good thing going on don't ruin it.
—Mark, Westerham,

Net Neutrality is important because it allows artists to gain followings. It allows small ideas to grow successfully. It allows people to grow successfully. With a 'fast lane' only those who have money will get noticed. The rich will get richer and the poor will remain poor. That sounds like a terrible idea made by terrible people. Please don't let corporations abuse the internet for profit.
—Mary Rhodes, Boulder, CO

Open access to information, which the Internet in its current form is a conduit of, is a basic human right. The proposed rules must be scrapped and Net Neutrality preserved by reclassifying Internet service providers as common carriers. Thank you.
—Gregg John Virostek, ,

As an artist, I've spent a lot of time in my life connecting to far away people through the internet to try and get a better hold of what it takes to get better. Net Neutrality is important to me because without it, I wouldn't have a lot of the skills I have today, nor know all the people I do now. It would be just like denying someone better access to a phone if they needed to get in contact with someone because of high call volume, so I can't see why anyone would want that over the internet. This is a place of creative freedom and endless possibility, I'd like to continue growing up to see it flourish, not be distributed better to those who have more money than others. Please, put a stop to this, some of the worlds most creative minds are just around the corner and should not be limited.
—Yannick Toney, ,

The free Internet is a wonderful open platform that unites people from all over the world, and allows us to share our vision with others and possibly even make a long, being true to ourselves. The Internet belongs to everyone, not the chosen few. People matter. The Internet is the platform for all people, it is not a controllable media machine. Nobody has the right to take the wonderful open Internet away from people.
—Atli Hafsteinsson, Reykjavik,

Freedom
—Jeff Holtkamp, Madison Heights, MI

I'm a freelance artist and the only way I can market my services is through the internet. The proposed path would be a real desaster for me and other creative people.
—Luisa Preissler, ,

The internet is freedom. Net Neutrality is poison. Please stop.
—Phillip Johnson, Midlothian, VA

Because I am in the process of trying to make a living with my artwork, to which I have a degree in, also to what I am currently trying to pay back for. I don't plan on working in bars for the rest of my life, so please, leave the internet equal to all. My friends and I will thank you
—Jeff Versoi, Seattle, WA

As an artist and designer, I work every day with others in my field and every field through the web. Giving big companies the option to regulate the speeds of web is essentially like tolling a road that's already paid for. The internet was created by those seeking free and open communication, and to now make it a purchasable asset for those who can afford it is ridiculous. Putting chains on the single most important communication and global sharing tool for the benefit of big business is not only a slap in the face to every independent business owner and entrepreneur depending on fast web access, but a selfish and overwhelmingly bribed money-grab.
—Courtney Cotton, Georgetown, KY

I am a freelance artist supporting a family of 5. A neutral internet is the lifeblood of our income. I am not well known, and my entire patronage reaches me through a small corner of the internet. Ending net neutrality, or as it has also been described, "Net Equality" would see me competing to be heard amidst multi-million dollar companies. Ending net neutrality would not only give preference to those louder, more powerful voices, but would completely silence thousands upon thousands of smaller, but equally valuable voices like mine. I'm sure you know this already. But it matters to me, and to countless others like me.
—Adam Watson, Seattle, WA

Everyone has the right to free access on the internet. To escalate profit for AT&T, Verizon, Time Warner and Comcast monopolies of the internet is capitalism at its worst.
—jacques Gans, Bloomington, IN

I'm a budding artist. I'm learning and growing with my abilities and I wouldn't appreciate not being able to share my ideas with the world because I can't afford it. That's it. Simple. Now on a larger scale this is highly unfair. Not everyone in the world is privileged enough to have the internet at their fingertips, but by approving this act it'll make it even harder. Sweet and simple, it's not fair and please don't change it. Thank you for listening to what I had to say.
—Tina, Nashville, TN

Freedom of speech and equality for all to share online.
—Melchizedek Todd, Randallstown, MD

I am an independent artist who makes my living in whole or in part by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet.
—Garrett Papow, Farmington, MI

I believe in equality in all areas of our lives, especially for opportunity and education for anyone whom works for it. I am a middle class, small business owner, hard working American, and I'm tired of being squeezed out by big business. Creative, hardworking, entrapranuel peoples, have built this America, and as we all know the internet is the future. The lack of net neutrality would destroy what little hope there is for growth, in an already disappearing middle class, small business, rich diverse culture!
—Teri Farrell-Gittins, El Segundo, CA

Good morning, Mr. Wheeler. I'm certain that you've received countless emails concerning Net Neutrality, but I wanted to add just one more voice if I might. Thank you so much for your time, sir. Unlike many of the artists that you may have heard from previously, I'm a strong proponent of capitalism and free market ideas, and I understand much of what companies have to gain by pushing forward with this initiative. To make this as succinct as possible, though, that's my primary concern. Yes, it's understandable for the Internet to be channeled, so to speak, much like television is today, but the cost to future generations is incalculable. You wouldn't be able to just create a television program today and upload it to cable, if that analogy works, but that's what makes the Internet so miraculous, and so different from tv and radio. Online, all ideas are given a chance to succeed. It's a true free market – perhaps the last even. If something doesn't work, or only represents the view of a few, it won't last online. The Internet, in that way, is the final frontier for new ideas, inventions, movements and breakthroughs. We may never know how many or which world-changing thoughts will be extinguished if Net Neutrality is eradicated, but we know that they will be – for certain. That thought is horrifying to me as an artist, a father, and an American patriot. Please, sir, consider our future, and not just our present. I honestly feel that in many ways this is the most important decision our generation faces. Surely, there are many variables at play in culture, commerce, politics and world affairs – but the Internet touches them all. For our good, and the good of all future generations, the Internet must remain free and equal. Please do your best to keep it so. Thank you, Mr. Wheeler, so much for your time. Sincerely, Luke Romer Jacksonville, FL USA
—Luke Romer, Jacksonville, FL

Net Neutrality is important to me because I am an independent artist who relies on unimpeded and equal access to online media for myself, clients and fans, in order to make a living.
—James Gardner, Lindon, UT

I am a small business owner and depend on the business the internet drives to my door. Full access to the internet is a requirement for my livelihood.
—Kathy Watts, Albuquerque, NM

I am an artist who how is working a web comic. My dream is to make this story big enough with fans to expand into new mediums and increase my own income as well as that of others. Eliminating net neutrality would make it virtually impossible for me to meet newer audience members and editors alike. Everything.I have invested my life in would stop. I implore you to not let this happen. We deserve this freedom. We need this freedom to fulfill our hopes and American dreams.
—Chris D. Anderson, Studio City, CA

I see the internet as a pathway towards my future artistic career. As a student, there are so many resources for learning that has helped me so greatly in these past years. I've been inspired by the numerous creative people from around the world. Please keep Net Neutrality the way it always was. The internet is a chance for someone with so little to then rise up and gain success.
—Jennifer Erazo, Silver Spring, MD

I'm an artist. This would negatively impact independent artists. It would be a great disservice and disadvantage for small businesses and creative professionals as myself.
—Reyes Rivas, Long Beach, CA

Because as an independent artist, the way I work to make a living using the internet would be greatly effected.
—Michelle Yi, Sarasota, FL

I am an independent artist who makes part of my income through the internet. I can reach buyers at a low cost, which being an independent business person is crucial to my success. The "slow lane content" will not help me in this process and, in fact, will hinder me. Like the new Facebook changes, the buyers of advertising and corporations will have a stronger hold on what people see and are able to find and purchase. Openness is key to allowing consumers to find all of their options quickly and easily, not just the ones big companies with lots of money to spend want them to find. We need to help save the middle working class for our troubled economy, not hinder them, and the "slow lane" will hurt the content creators and innovators like myself, not help. As a regulating aspect of our government, it is your responsibility to protect real Net Neutrality and the "Internet Slow Lane" is unjust and unacceptable.
—Mark Vander Vinne, Chesterton, IN

Net neutrality affects me both as a creative entrepreneur as well as a consumer. I want creative works to be judged by the consumer on their own merit, not by big businesses who simply want a monopoly. Please, please, please don't give Comcast and Time Warner the keys to the internet to leave the rest of us eating the leftover scraps that they leave for us small businesses.
—Bob Shelline, Provo, UT

It should be coined " Net Equality" to be more straight forward. Our internet is an analog for what America used to be before the corporate conglomerates took over our freedom. It is the only thing left that we can use to promote ourselves, and make a business of our own. I am an art student that has incurred a lot of debt. In retrospect, I see how rediculously stupid that was considering all the better options there are for me to learn online. But I digress. The point I'm making is that I am going to graduate with more debt than I have ever had, and MUST make a living. The internet is THE best place to do this based on my own merits. But since FCC Chairman Wheeler-- who suspiciously is a former Cable company lobbyist-- is proposing a fast lane for big business, and a slow lane for the rest of us. I will not get the chance to promote myself without paying a toll that I most likely will not be able to afford. This would be a despicable course of action. Not only will it hurt innovation, creativity and basic freedom, it will give the once beloved platform to the corrupt politicians. Promoting deceptive campaign ads, and unleashing damaging information that will effectively squash their political enemies. I will fight for this, as I have fought of our freedom in our country.
—Parker Hinckley, Salt Lake City, UT

Net Neutrality is of the utmost importance. Because the Internet is an even playing field, it has become the invaluable tool it is today. By not protecting Net Neutrality, all of that is put in jeopardy. As an artist, I depend on the internet to communicate with fans, peers, and employers. I need it to remain reliable and bot biased towards the highest bidder. The cable companies demanding a "fast-lane" are engorged enough - there is absolutely no reason, besides the selfish pursuit of corporate wealth, to bow to their demands. Please, Chairman Wheeler, protect the Internet as you would any other valuable resource.
—Cheryl Johnson, Valley Village, CA

I and millions of other artists like me grow and survive because the internet does not play favorites and everyone, no matter how wealthy, can post and access a world of media and information without content discrimination. Please, please consider how this affects free speech and innovation and act to keep the internet neutral with no slow or fast lanes. I urge you to reclassify internet service providers as common carriers and save the internet's freedom as we know it. Not doing so risks destroying the lives and happiness of startups, nonprofits, and creatives worldwide.
—Chii Maene, Berkeley, CA

It doesn't make sense to block pages on high traffic websites. Why they don't do it on porn sites?
—Joel Vazquez, Miami, FL

Because I am working hard to serve my local community and my nation by starting a small design, development, and marketing business with the goal of providing high end functional design at fair prices. I have started this business without loans and opporate it on an incredibly lean budget. My business, career, and clients depend on fast and dependable internet that is free and open. If this is taken away it will put an incredible burden on my livelihood and the growth of my clients' and my own businesses.
—Jonathan L Clark, Carbondale, IL

Because I feel I have the right to free access. No one has the right to charge me more or create a "two-tiered" system.
—Yamel Solana, Miami, FL

It promotes growth and innovation for start ups and entrepreneurs which is the foundation and admiration this country has to offer. Do not stunt it by allowing big corporations to be the gatekeepers of internet service
—Claudia Cutlip, Brighton, MA

I am a freelance illustrator who makes a living by connecting with clients online. I'm also a recent graduate with most of my income going towards high student loan payments for the next 10 years. There's no way I could survive without Net Neutrality.
—Elizabeth Luntao, Lodi, CA

One of the greatest things about the internet is it's ability to level the playing field. Allowing a two-tiered system just perpetuates and exacerbates the chasm between the rich and the poor. This is supposed to be the land of opportunity, not the land of the bug guy crushing the little guy.
—M Canzani, Paramus, NJ

The internet is a critical bastion of communication, commerce and connection for American. It is critical that these channels NOT be controlled by corporations who are basically trying to profit off what we taxpayers have funded. As an independent writer and artist, I rely on the internet for my business and for connecting with people from around the nation and the world. If you allow corps unfettered power to control how the internet works then it will not only hurt my business and scores of independent business owners like myself but it will also hurt our customers, vendors and the average consumer. Think about how destroying the foundation of net neutrality will purposely REDUCE business activity for everyone including the major corps who are trying to control everything (ie Comcast, ATT and like). You are actually narrowing the bandwidth of possibilities for people and businesses! And this treads dangerous ground-- laying the tracks for fascism--exactly what FDR warned about. Please protect the interests and livelihood of Americans! We people in the creative industry are watching very, very closely. I urge you to respect and uphold American values and equal rights by deleting the current proposed rule change and reclassifying to reflect what Net Neutrality truly means--Net Equality and Freedom of Speech. Thank you!
—Edna Cabcabin Moran, Alameda, CA

I am an artist that is busy working on a range of interactive comics and games I want to release. If this law gets past my chances of getting a business of the ground in a country with one of the highest unemployment rates in the world and a declining economy means that I will be with out work and the no way to feed my family. Rather put more law and restrict porn and other porn related website out of business and clean up the internet for what it was meant and not some back yard porn shop.
—Erich Labuschagne, ,

The internet is a place free communication, where ideas can be rapidly exchanged, where thoughts can be shared. It brings people from all over the world together, whether it's to talk politics, or make art, laugh at stupid videos. A place like this is important to the world and it needs to remain as it is.
—Jesse Diaz, Chattanooga, TN

Net Neutrality (or more fittingly: Net Equality) is important because the internet should be the level playing field it's always been. The broadband companies trying to create a "hyper lane" for people/companies willing (and capable) to pay for it is wrong and unethical. Our country's broadband speeds are one of the slowest ones for a first world country, and as is, we the consumers already have to pay a premium price for less-than-mediocre service, because broadband companies are an oligarchy. The government and the FCC's failure to regulate an obvious industry-based monopoly is bad enough, and now the FCC is going a step further by ignoring the outcry of the people it's supposed to serve, and allow the broadband companies to further their freedom to abuse their consumers. In this day and age, high-speed internet access should be considered a basic utility that every citizen should have equal access to -especially in a developed, first-world nation like the United States- and not a product for the privileged.
—Christina Yeung, Brea, CA

Please don't let this happen. I am an independent artist who works and makes their living through the internet and the way the internet is managed right now allows me to do that. Please don't let this pass, treating the internet companies like common carriers is a good thing. This new bill will ruin a good thing for a lot of people. beg you please don't do this. I've been able to live my dream and make a living doing what I'm passionate about through the internet, please don't take that away from me. Sincerely, William Christopher Heffernan —Will Heffernan, Westborough, MA

Net Neutrality is important to me because my future depends on promoting my craft as well as sharing my skill with others. It's important to me as an individual artist I want to be able to inspire and delight people through networking and collaborating with other artist to craft the future stories that need to be heard! It's important because people are individuals and should be given the world's view and not a company's perspective!
—Christopher Stone, ,

Trying to fix someone that isn't broken seems silly but that's what your doing
—Tim Vargason, Nottingham, PA

I have a small business. Already paying way too much for entertainment/cable in this country to the big companies and now they want more.
—Scott Nance, McKinney, TX

Uhhhh because I should be able to do what I want with a service I PAY for. Suck one.
—Chase Holton, Detroit, MI

I am an artistic individual, and Net Neutrality allows me the freedom and equality to create and inspire using my creativity and merits alone.
—Jesi Thompson, Las Vegas, NV

Equality in all forms is important to me and we need to keep an equal internet. That simple.
—Rebecca Crothers, Rapid City, SD

I'm a photographer, and photography is a competitive and ever changing market. The Internet is how I communicate with the public, with my clients, and it's how people find me. Net Neutrality ensures that I can reach everyone, that anyone can see my work and find me. I'm not big or popular, but I'm getting there. Do I deserve not to be seen or found because I'm a startup and can't afford to pay for the higher internet tier? That doesn't sound like fair competition. It is, not to put to fine a point on it, un-American. It's in your power to keep the internet a fair and competitive place. Please do so.
—Deborah Kountz, Fresno, CA

I'm an independent creative who relies on the equal, neutral internet to pursue and develop my business. Do not pass these laws that will put control and access of the internet out of the hands of regular people like me. It would be wrong to do otherwise.
—Shara Mills, Ten Sleep, WY

It's the internet, not comcasts or Verizon's internet.
—Jim Kehl, Denver, CO

I am a new college graduate aspiring to be a professional artists in the animation industry. In this day and age, the only way I can reach that goal of making it into that industry is to create an internet presence with my art, to showcase my talent and abilities. Internet Neutrality allows me to do so. Without this neutrality of the world wide web, I would be virtually (LITERALLY) unable to make my voice heard, unable to pay the premiums, and unable to attract a fan-base to see what I can do. The internet was designed to be a free source of information for all. It is the one thing that can still connect and unite us. Without this freedom of speech, we will be throwing ourselves back in time to almost before the internet was created. Our freedom to create and share with one another allows us to grow and evolve intellectually and even emotionally as a people. This attempt at taking that freedom of speech away is against everything this country was founded on. It is unjust, and it doesn't do any of us any good. You are at the cutting edge of history, and you will be responsible for what happens to freedom and creativity. Don't let us down. Be responsible. Be accountable. And allow the internet to be what it was intended: Free Speech Around the World.
—Kathy McNeal, San Jose, CA

Net Neutrality is HIGHLY Important to me as an Independent Artist and a Creative because I am working towards making my living almost entirely on the equality (neutrality) of the internet! I am a digital artist so about 90% of my work, and me getting paid, is through the internet, SPECIFICALLY because it's a level playing field (Neutral) and I am able to do so...Passing these rules would be like choking to death the majority of the internet; Its innovators, its creatives, and yes, even its consumers!...it is our responsibility to the future of humanity that we protect REAL Net Neutrality and the “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable. Please, Do Not Pass These Rules....
—Eli D. Camacho, Allentown, PA

Without equality between different providers/services, the internet would very quickly descend into a monopoly only for the biggest and best established companies. Smaller sites and businesses would suffer. We've already seen providers using mob tactics to get their way, and it scares me knowing that THAT is the way of the future of the web. Shakedowns and increase in costs.
—Jonas Slott Hansen, ,

I am a librarian and work with students who use the Internet constantly to gather information, learn and research. This would affect them all.
—Ofelia Wiltz, Key Largo, FL

Hi There, I am an independent artist who relies on the internet for a living. Without net equality I hardly see how I can support myself and my family. And although I may not live in the states, what happens in the US often bleeds over into Canada. Especially since many online freelancing agencies are American based. All the best, Taylor
—Taylor Lenfesty, Edmonton,

I am an artist looking to make my way in the world right now (http://www.ashleydotsonart.po rtfoliobox.me/). To the innovators of this world, whether they are artists, entrepreneurs, inventors--the people YOUR BUSINESSES depend on--the free market of the internet is absolutely ESSENTIAL. This simply cannot be understated. Please, do not sacrifice the freedom of the innovators so that a few big companies can easily make a buck. They have to feel the pressure from us; they have to compete with us. That is how freedom works. I am in love with the American ideal and the way our Constitution was intended when written--laissez faire is of paramount importance. You've seen how our economy has suffered from crony capitalism and a few big companies and government controlling everything--it stifles growth and freedom. Open Internet shouldn't even be in question. I am begging you, keep the Internet neutral for everyone. Every single individual on the planet, and those coming to it in the future, needs this. Thank you, Ashley Dotson
—Ashley Dotson, Elkridge, MD

As a freelance digital illustrator and artist, my potential for livelihood is based off of networking and selling my work online. I will never be able to afford a 'fast lane' ticket with my income, but Net Neutrality has the potential to strangle my ability to find work with ease.
—Kathryn Brown, Shreveport, LA

I am a small business owner pursuing a dream on the Internet, and net neutrality is vitally important to me. Why? Because the Internet is one of the few places where the ideal of the American Dream remains tangible and real. I am an artist and writer. I share my work online to build an audience that cares about my work. A readership that buys my products and services directly, without middlemen. My husband and I formed this company because we believed in the open playing field offered online the only barrier between us and success was time and hard work. How does removing net neutrality benefit us or the American public? The only benefit I can see is to the telecom groups that are lobbying for it. A bid to give entities that already have a disproportionate amount of economic control an even greater, and increasingly unfair, advantage. I am concerned not only for my own small business, but for the unfair, government sanctioned distribution of power this gives telecom companies over all businesses that utilize the internet. I'm also concerned about the possibilities for telecom groups to forward (or deny) certain political agendas. How soon before the platforms of free speech find themselves in the slow lane for having opinions that the companies don't agree with? How many future law-suits and abuses of power is this proposal going to set in motion? An equal playing field is the basis for the growth and success of our current Internet. In a nation of increasing inequality, consider what removing this one realm of fair play could do. How will disadvantaging groups that are already playing terrible odds impact the small business owners trying to create jobs? Please, do not crush one of the last places where the American Dream can still thrive. For the sake of every American trying to improve their lives in already difficult times.
—Robin Childs, Aurora, CO

The internet is for everyone. Please do not limit it.
—Jennifer Sese, Arcadia, CA

Dear Sir, I am writing to you about my opinions on Net Neutrality. Please hear the voice of the people. The internet has allowed the American dream to come back. The internet has allowed the little people a way to be important! Someone who doesn't have connections and big money can create something and have a world at their fingertips! Net Neutrality is why this can happen. Comcast, Time Warner, Verizon and AT&T are big businesses and they have an agenda. Their agenda is to make more money...that is what a business does. Sometimes people who are so entrenched in their own agenda forget to lift their head and see how it is effecting the people around them. Then surround these focused individuals with "yes men" and suddenly they feel that it is only right to continue their fight. Other big businesses (the yes men) would love to own part of the internet with their money. Why not? they earned it! They think they deserve a special internet highway for the elite. The elite always want special entrances and such so they don't have to interact with the salt of the earth. Well, the internet is already a private entrance for everyone! We are not blocking their access to the internet. Why do they need to separate themselves? We already pay fees to these companies for the opportunity. If you allow the rich better access than the poor you have continued to encourage the caste system here in America. You don't think there is one? Look around, if you are rich you can't see it. If you are middle class you can see both sides. Here in America you need money to make money. That is true everywhere except the internet. Don't let them take it away! I don't think it should just be an opportunity but a right because of how heavily the internet is entrenched in peoples daily lives. Why do the cable companies think they need more money? Have they tried to live with in their means? Have they tried using a budget to cut spending? Oh wait...only "poor" people should do that! (that of course makes no sense, right?!) The internet has leveled the playing field for so many people. There is more communication, more art, more small businesses that use the internet to operate than we can probably count! I know a family who was supported by the father and his Fly Fishing Business, yes he made fly fishing rods and sold them on the internet! Pretty amazing don't you think? He couldn't afford to pay any higher prices than are already asked for to use the internet! George Bush (when he was still the President of the United States) was able to buy fishing rods from him because of the internet...evening the playing field at its finest!!!! Can you really listen to these big companies who say things like pricing for the consumer will go down? Why would they do that? They are trying to make more money!!!!!! The fact that they will make the internet slow down purposefully unless you pay more money is horrible. It is already slow sometimes...now imagine them making it slower on purpose!! (They are already big monopolies who have agreed upon which lands are their lands. There is no competition for them and therefore no reason to lower prices.) Think about all the ways in which people use the internet. It is not all Facebook...don't slow down the internet for those of us that are using it to work!! What about all the students who are required to use computers, need internet, for their work? There are plenty of families who could not afford higher priced internet...you've just hindered their education. What about people looking for work? Will the cable companies give special discounts to schools and libraries? Those are public places that don't have big business money! You might be rolling your eyes at this point. Those big companies didn't say that it would affect the general consumer that way. The cable companies just want to help their pals out. This is all hype. Please, think about their agenda!!! The big businesses in favor of this are bullies plain and simple. Nobody has hurt their ability to operate using the internet. There is no reason for them to try and hinder the general populace except that they can with their big money, their power. They are the bully in this scenario. We are trying to teach children in the public schools that bullying is wrong. If net neutrality is taken away we will be teaching them that we do the opposite of what we say. The people with power and money can do whatever they want...the bullys win. Tim Wu, a law professor at Columbia doesn't think this is hype. In an interview on NPR (you can find it on the internet!! http://www.npr.org/2014/04/24/ 306542099/what-do-net-neutrality-rules-mean-for-web-users), he talks about how there isn't any competition in broadband so the prices won't go down. He talks about how this is just a new way for cable companies to make more money. Do they really need to make more money? It says in this interview that the FCC,and you, have provisions to protect us from companies taking too much power. Do you really think you have the ability to police the internet and these companies? You think you can go through each complaint a user has and solve it? I think your email inbox will be so full of complaints that you won't be able to handle it. Tim Wu says it best so please listen to or read that interview!! This is also about freedom of speech. The internet is a platform for free speech and once we open the door to regulation the people will no longer have a voice. All we will hear are the yes men who agree with those in power. I thought we came to america to get away from dictatorship? This is sure sounding like another step toward the whole being controlled by a very small part.
—Anya R, Potsdam, NY

I am an artist, and I am trying to make a living via commissions and projects that I take on from other people on the Internet. Only the current state of equality on the Internet allows me, and many others like me, to do this. Countless people in my profession have become better artists and people because of the connections that they have made on the web, and slowing our access to the Internet would make connections like this close to impossible. It isn't equitable for companies to be able to control the Internet in such a way. Please restore online nondiscrimination and reclassify broadband as a telecommunications service.
—Melanie, Burbank, CA

For so many obvious reasons. What I want to know is, Is it important enough to you that you will fight hard for what needs to be done for humanity. Will you?
—Elizabeth T Allen, Prairie Farm, WI

The internet is a beautiful place fostering an exchange of ideas, learning, free speech, creativity and business. I remember when there were just a few universities online. The open and free nature of the internet has allowed it to develop and grow in such an exceptional way. Do not allow big businesses to take over that spaces for their own profit! Keep Net Neutrality! This is important for all the real citizens to have access to such an amazing resource.
—, San Francisco, CA

My business can only afford to find customers on the web. I also do not like having big stores shoved down my throat.
—Patty, Warrington, PA

I think the best thing about the Internet is the freedom and equality that everyone has to give out and receive information. If this freedom is compromised it will take away the voices of so many people, and the Internet will lose the quality that has made it so successful. If people need to pay a high price for their freedom, then the Internet will be limited to a very small group of people while the rest will probably transition back to the pre-Internet days. Net Neutrality I think is the most important thing for the Internet, and changing it would have grave consequences.
—Chandler Azling, Villa Park, CA

As a future freelance artist who plans to utilize the web and who has little money to be able to afford these fast lanes, it is a huge threat to my career and I for one will not stand for this change. I want complete Net Neutrality now, and I want it FOREVER.
—Tahla Tessier, Birmingham, AL

I am a freelance artist, and I make a great portion of my money every month via the internet. It's how I reach new clients, how I show my existing work, and how I transmit and store my current work. However, I do not make enough to add any expenditures, and any blow to my online reach would mean even less money for my wife and I. I cannt abide the ending of net neutrality, and I refuse to allow cable companies to have control over my business. DO NOT ALLOW THIS TO HAPPEN. This is not only wrong and clearly money-motivated, it's UN-AMERICAN. Thanks, --Dylan
—Dylan Pharaoh-Whitney, Oceanside, CA

I believe it's not just important for me but also for everybody in the world. You need it, but we need it the most. Everything good could start on internet. The world is going to a slightly better place for us to live is also because of internet.
—, ,

Hi, I am yet another voice writing to you in favor of Net Neutrality. I'm sure you've received a lot of comments, probably ranging widely in quality and coherence. So, thank you for taking the time to read this one. Simply put, I ask the following: 1. Reclassify ISPs as Common Carriers. This provides them legal protection against the content of any of the traffic they serve, and puts all data on a level playing field. 2. Support and enforce Net Neutrality. ISPs should not be able to "double dip" by charging twice for the same data. Having a two-tiered internet - a fast lane, and a slow lane - hurts the users and small businesses of the Internet. I know the cable companies try to claim that the two lanes would be a "high speed lane" and a "hyper speed lane", but that's simply absurd. Imagine if such a system had been put in place ten or fifteen years ago. The "high speed lane" would be 56 kbps (the fastest dial-up around), and the "hyper speed lane" would be the only one to see speed improvements. Which would bring us to a present-day of "uselessly slow lane" vs "actually usable internet lane". It may seem like we have fast internet now, but in the coming decades, we will be able to have Gigabit speed internet (that's 1,000x faster than Megabit speed internet, which is 1,000x faster than Kilobit). That's amazingly fast, and will enable fantastically useful features, and new businesses that we can't even imagine right now (who could have imagined Netflix in the days of dial-up internet?). There needs to be One Internet. For all the people. Indivisible, with equal access, for all. Not just for the wealthy.
—Tim Chestnutt, San Carlos, CA

Net neutrality isn't just important to me, it's important to everyone like me, and beyond. Net neutrality has allowed small businesses, freelancers, and people with innovative ideas and products the opportunity to compete on the same level as large corporations. Putting in place the proposed rules would be a devastating blow to anyone who isn't a large company that has the resources to afford a spot in the "fast lane". Not only is this proposition completely frivolous, foolish and anti-freedom, it would result in a fallout that might be far more devastating than we could imagine. Let's not find out, shall we? Thank you for listening to the people. The proposed law will do nothing good for anyone.
—Zak S, Lawrence, MI

So that charges won't trickle down to me the consumer. So that I can post things on the internet and know that people will be able to find and download it quickly. So that I can explain to my kids what a hypothetical monopoly is and I don't have to explain to them why there are monopolies.
—Mr. Tyler Wall, Lethbridge, AB

Please don't allow ISP's to exercise control over content that they should not have. Double charging the consumer and the service provider to transmit data is double dipping and greedy, pure and simple.
—Alex Poklewski, Campbell, CA

I am an independent artist who makes a living in part by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. Please protect REAL Net Neutrality. Protect the open Internet. Anything else is an attack on our rights to connect and communicate.
—Chris Perry, Fort Worth, TX

Chairman Wheeler, I am a Sophomore in college majoring in illustration. I aim to become a freelance artist so that I can work in a variety of industries on a variety of projects, work from home, and effectively manage my own finances after graduation. One of the main ways that I and artists like me get the exposure that allows us to make money through job offers and commissions is through sites like DeviantART, Tumblr, Behance, Facebook, Twitter, and other social media. With a "fast lane" type of prioritization for certain people on the internet (apart from other issues) it would make me and other artists - who are already being crushed by student debt, as art schools (CalArts, SVA, Pratt, SCAD) are a) notoriously expensive and b) notoriously do not offer much in non-loan based student aid - impossible to be noticed and make the money that we so need to survive and to create art that persuades, entertains, and inspires. And this is apart from the moral issue of opinions not being able to be heard on important topics. Please, for everyone's sake, keep the internet free and equal.
—Kate Sheridan, Philadelphia, PA

I am an independent artist who makes my living in whole the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. Please, It is your responsibility to the future of humanity that you protect REAL Net Neutrality. The “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—Malika whitaker, Poissy,

Net neutrality is, of course, indescribably important to me as an individual. Nearly all of my livelihood and probably my future depends on the internet because of countless reasons. However, I'd like to write not just about why it's important to me, but why it's important to everyone INCLUDING the telecom companies and ISPs. On a socio-cultural level not only would getting rid of net neutrality be utterly detrimental to thousands of livelihoods across the globe, but could also create a negative chain of events that we might not be able to see right away culminating in probable acts of violence and worsening the state of affairs in countries and regions of the world that are already in a turbulent position. One only has to think of recent events like the uprising in Egypt to show how transcendental the internet is. When something as massive and deep rooted in contemporary cultures as the internet gets uprooted, it's not far fetched to think the repercussions could be severe. This would undoubtedly start a chain of events that would lead to economic uncertainty for millions of people and, obviously, subscribers. Even in more stable markets. The reason why the internet is so huge and such an integral art of so many people's lives is BECAUSE of it's net neutrality. Take that away and you're guaranteed to begin to lose clients little by little. Maybe it'll be a few today and a few tomorrow, but it will eventually add up to huge losses for the telecomm companies. Honestly, getting rid of net neutrality doesn't end well for anyone. Not a single good thing can come out of this. The telecomms might profit in the short run, but eventually it will catch up. You just have to look at the history of humanity and realize a move like this is eventually going to cause issues for every party involved. On a more long term plane, think of everything positive that the internet is used for freely: education, science, discussion, freedom of speech, global communication, cultural diffusion, justice and everything in between. In what world does anybody believe that dismantling this is a good idea? Finally, a bit about myself. When I graduated from college I moved away from my family and they moved to a different country. I could've gone with them but I decided stay and try to start my life here. I didn't have much one of the few things that I always made sure to have was the internet. I didn't have a phone, not a tv, not even a smart phone. I just had the internet as a means of communication with my family overseas and as a tool to help me launch and maintain my career and put my life together. None of that would've happened without net neutrality. Dreams, hopes, objectives gone. I'm only one person though, and fortunately I've come far enough to say that I have some semblance of a life, but think of all of the future generations of people. Think of all the million that might not have the same opportunities. That's not just for them, but it's what any one of them might eventually go on to be and the things they might do for the benefit of everyone else. A lot of great ideas might never see the light of day. Getting rid of net neutrality won't just debilitate lives now, but it will also be the indescribably detrimental to the future for everyone.
—Fabian Cuevas, ,

I'm an independant artist who can not afford to pay for publicity.
—Justin Conway, Warrington, PA

1. It is the future basis for my income 2. I need! a fanbase to have a successful carrier and to be able to sustain my family 3. the internet has too much potential in order to hold that back 4. A free and open internet is the single greatest technology of our time, and control should not be at the mercy of corporations. 5. A free and open internet stimulates ISP competition. 6. A free and open internet helps prevent unfair pricing practices. 7. A free and open internet promotes innovation. 8. A free and open internet promotes the spread of ideas. 9. A free and open internet drives entrepreneurship. 10. A free and open internet protects freedom of speech.
—Flo Haeckh, Berlin,

Without net neutrality the job killing effect of 2008 would be much worse. The free internet allows many tiny, niche type business to provide specialty products and services to a small (but real) world wide audience. The economies of scale needed for a large company to address these needs do not exist - but not only can a "mom and pop" operation serve this customer base - they can make a living at it! Our world has been made much better by the free internet - it supports innovation, education and political action. It opens doors, provides venues and opportunities for individuals worldwide. It is the best thing that survived 2008. To allow the multinational, big players to shut it down (for most assuredly that is the goal) is to take a fragile recovery and stomp it out. We have seen what "answering to the shareholders" has done to so many of our communities - do not hand them this last slice of pie - for without hope a people perish and most certainly the internet does provide hope. Please protect and save it.
—Elizabeth Macdonald, Durango, CO

It is my hopes and aspirations as I'm an animator for the internet and know exactly what this all means. please please please stop this. The internet is an amazing tool for all. It seems as if all the greatest tools for mans progress eventually slips into the hands of people who do not use it for the greater good.
—Robert A Jones, ,

Hi, I'm an independent and free lance artist who is trying to make a living with my stories and creations. I need Net Neutrality to help me make my dreams a reality. Me and many others need a level playing field. Independent artist don't have the same advantages as the corporations.
—Jody, Jonesboro, AR

Hello, My name is Amanda Carbine and I am an independent artist living in los angeles. Im currently striving to become a character designer and eventually open up my own production company for animated film. Because of this, I must explain my distaste and concern about net neutrality. Giving cable and internet companies the ability and discretion to decide which websites are on the "fast lane" amd which are on the "slow lane" is not only unfair, but it is dangerous. It is a slippery slope that will undoubtedly lead to a less diverse economy and the stop of technological innovation and competition. With cable companies holding all the power in the internet like this, the budding Disneys, Zuckerbergs and Jobses of the world will not have an opportunity to build new and thriving businesses. As an artist the internet allows me to show people my work and contact other artists to collaborate. I will not be able to compete with others should this bill pass. And this is against the philosophy of america at its very core Please uphold the current standard freedom and competition. Do not allow this to go through. It will be the end of our country being a hub of technological and artistic innovation. Thank you.
—Amanda Carbine, Harbor City, CA

I do not wish to be censored and I want the freedom to access anything without restraint without internet slow lanes.
—Cristina Komaroff, ,

I am an animator with aspirations to utilize the internet as a platform to share my content alongside larger studio works. The creation of fast and slow lanes on the internet will make it impossible for small companies to have the same quality experience with their consumers as large companies would have. Content creators with more money should not be able to dictate the power of the internet. Only the richest will be able to communicate most effectively on the internet, and that is wrong. If ISPs want to provide better experiences for things like streaming services, they should use the billions of dollars they bring in each year to improve their bandwidth, not take it away from those who can't pay as much.
—Ryan Geery, San Jose, CA

I am an independent artist and I would be hampered from making a living if real net neutrality is not preserved. I sincerely hope the internet is preserved as an open forum for all those who require it to supplement their income.
—Justin Cornish, Milton, FL

The only thing this does is encourage monopoly and it stamps out individuals looking to make something out of nothing. If this bill is allowed to pass, you're essentially allowing companies to butt-fuck every customer and small business owner who can't afford to pay for that "hyper speed" service. You're stamping out change in favor of monopoly. This bill isn't even necessary, it's a power grab. Don't give them the power to break something that has and will always be for everyone.
—Erin C., River Edge, NJ

As someone looking to be able to self-employ myself and support myself doing something creative that I love, I need Net Neutrality in order to sustain my independence, self-sufficiency and creative happiness to be able to pursue my career online and to expose myself to other fellow artists' artistic endeavors. To end Net Neutrality is to end creativity and deny artists and their audience a way to communicate with one another. Ending net neutrality denies us our voices.
—Liz C Tolleson, Pittsburg, CA

I believe in the freedom this country was founded upon. This is a disgrace. The internet is not something to be controlled. It does not belong in the wrong hands. Don't we all love and enjoy the internet? Why would anyone want to destroy something so crucial to the freedom of expression in our society? I can't find any reason to justify that and I won't stand for it. I know the founding fathers would be extremely disappointed to see such tyrany and abuse of power. Find your humanity.
—Anastasiamcmanus@gmailcom, Beverly Hills, CA

As an artist trying to get established, an end of net neutrality would mean an end of many new possibilities for little guys struggling to get ideas to the marketplace. What would be left is a playing field heavily tilted in favor of those who already had an advantage.
—Matthew Beraz, Castro Valley, CA

Please support, uphold, and restore Net Neutrality, or Net Equality. // As an independent creator and artist it has been amazing to watch the last few years as small creators, businesses, artisans, anyone with little more than a good idea have been able to parlay that into successful, popular, industry-disrupting or world-changing phenomena. I hope to take a stab at some projects myself in the near future. // Without Net Neutrality, none of that would have been possible. Only the already-big dominant businesses would be able to reliable get word out to their audiences. // The Internet has become vital, and should be treated as a utility like power or phone. Subscribers pay for service, there should be no reason big companies get to pay extra to squelch rising competitors smaller than them. // Please, please, please support, uphold, and restore Net Neutrality.
—John Nunnemacher, San Jose, CA

The question states the answer.
—Harvey Barry, Whitehouse Station, NJ

Please, you must keep net neutrality. You are only going to hurt small people by doing this. People like me depend on net neutrality to get content on the web. Creating a "fee" for internet that you already pay for is ridiculous and unnecessary. PLEASE DO NOT DO THIS —Carrie Hankins, Murrieta, CA

Because without it, the internet just wouldn't be the same.
—Benjamin Hagan, Eddy, TX

I am studying to be an artist. I am always learning by everything I learn on the internet, but if certain corporations or companies who have to pay for my time block me from my favorite teachers, no one wins. How can I easily find Chris Oately's tutorials? Or watch a clip of a cool girl drawing something beautiful (and looking at her techniques) if a company could blast all it's "big schools of art" in my face and make it hard to enjoy looking online for a small independent artist? Also, if I can't even use the internet without feeling like I'm part of the "dirt road" compared to what the Trumps must feel on the "fast lane", where else can I find equality? Not only must I work long hours to earn a living, or spend a lot more time trying to find the other "dirt road" bound small artists, but I must also feel like the internet must be a little restricted for me just because I'm too poor to afford otherwise? I apologize if I got the wrong message or sound harsh. But this is important to me. To me, my experience on the internet is what makes my experience out in the real world just a little bit more manageable. Thank you for "listening" to my message.
—Shara, Wahiawa, HI

I am an independent digital artist who wants to create my art on a free Internet.
—Emily Barber, Ethel, LA

Net Neutrality is essential to me. I am a freelance artist that frequently uses the web to do business, share artwork, and receive feedback. I need it to grow. I need it to prosper. If there's no net neutrality, no REAL net neutrality, millions upon millions of people are cut off from prosperity. From knowledge. From aid. From communication. It shuts down the world as we know it. It will cave in on itself. Everyone depends on it to create and grow, to share, laugh, and live. No company should have control over that. It is an attack on our rights. As a creator myself, my own business would plummet, as would millions of others. Limiting the free network of ideas being shared will bring our progress as a human species to a standstill. Technological progress. Societal progress. Whole revolutions against inhumane administration quelled before they can get their bearings because they no longer have access to the basic tools that they need. This isn't purely an American thing. It isn't just whether or not we can access Facebook or social media quickly. It has a much larger range of effect. This affects everyone worldwide. With this kind of limitation in place, you could very much cause the end of many people across the globe. Do you really want that blood on your hands?
—James Thompson, Lansdowne, PA

Fairness. Equal access has engendered tremendous benefits. And I have a niece who is creating an ongoing webcomic, and she cannot afford higher fees.
—Ms. Carolyn Cliff, Charleston, ME

Because I'm a student who needs information fast. The elimination of net neutrality would make writing papers that much harder and would significantly impair students' abilities to learn. The internet has become essential to high school and college courses. Eliminating net neutrality would destroy our modern system of education.
—Kimberly Phippen, Los Angeles, CA

As a digital artist and a creative person the internet lets me speak and collaborate with other artists quickly and efficiently. It also allows growth of beginning artists to join in on communities they normally may not have access to like art tutorials and help. I know that net neutrality is very important to me and thousands others and that to pass these laws would be immoral and a great disservice to inventors and creators everywhere.
—Lepone Åagard, Sandy, UT

Be it a big compony like Netflix or a house wife checking her email, no one should be forced to pay more for internet then anyone else just so big cable Comping can line there already blotted pockets.
—Joe Colestro, olean, NY

As a young adult who has watched the internet grow, I cannot stand for net neutrality to end. Those in my generation have watched businesses grow from their internet origins. We have been inspired and motivated to succeed and innovate by them. The internet is the great new playing field for business. And for many my age, it's an integral part of the new American Dream. We go to college and learn of successful PR through the internet. We have classes on Social Media Management. Many of our favorite businesses, brands, etc. owe a great deal of their success, fanbase, and loyalty to the internet. Losing net neutrality means losing future businesses, services, and more. On an even more personal note, I am a minority. I am Asian American, an international adoptee, Jewish, and not straight. The internet has allowed me to connect with others and learn empowerment when living in places with no physical connection to these others like myself. For many people my age, we have found our voice on the internet. The thought that services streaming content and providing discussion spaces could find themselves cut off or severely cut back due to these new rules is heartbreaking. I could not imagine myself without the possibilities, opportunities, connections and knowledge the internet has provided. The thought that others who are struggling may, in the future, not have the same access I had breaks my heart.
—Hannah Rome, Assonet, MA

The internet should treat all data as NEUTRAL. IF Tom Wheeler get's his way, it will destroy the internet as we know it.
—Steve, Jackson, MO

Please keep Net Neutrality, it is extremely important to everyone with access to internet. It would bias everyone who uses it, in directions that are not necessarily in the best. This would be like controlling information, which is a violation of free speech and this is not acceptable. Thank you for helping to keep Net Neutrality.
—Zoe McCartney, Mill Valley, CA

I am an independent artist and net neutrality is important to me for connecting with people all around the world. Any one who has access to the internet should have equal access. The internet is the road to the future. Without individuals having equal access to the internet, innovation will cease to progress. New ideas are shared everyday online. Corporations are run by individuals. If they want their companies to progress the people in the company need to progress. They need equal access to information.
—Ian Smiley, Valencia, CA

the internet is my livelihood, my relationships with my peers, my opportunities to help myself and others create a better future. It would be criminal to end that opportunity now, when its just starting.
—Kathleen Kralowec, San Francisco, CA

The internet is how we get the news today, there is no other way-- television is going to the highest bidder, we as voters need access to the whole story and not what FOX curates for us. We have this tool now-- why go backwards?
—Kat, Mountain View, CA

I am in independent artist trying to share my creations with the world. At the moment the most easily accessible way to do that is through the internet. By creating Internet "fast lanes" and "slow lanes" the FCC would severely limit my ability to be self sustainable. In a world with quickly dwindling resources shouldn't long-term self sustainability be our top priority?
—Austin Root, Allston, MA

it is their responsibility to the future of humanity that they Protect REAL Net Neutrality and the “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable. Our nonprofit art studio for people with disabilities deserves to be heard from loud and clear!
—Yolanda E Propson, Rochester, MI

I'm a visual artist and it seriously infringes on my rights to free expression.
—Brent McCarthy, Brooklyn, NY

The internet is a massive source of communication, education, and innovation. Creative individuals and small companies need Net Neutrality to reach their audience. The internet has become a place where people can earn money to support families and themselves. Taking away the equal playing field would mean the devastation of many people's jobs and livelihoods. Please consider each and every one of these people and keep the internet as it is. Thank you.
—Gabe Brandt, Fremont, CA

I am striving to establish a career as a freelance concept artist and illustrator. Most of my business will be done over the web and I will need my professional websites to operate at competitive speeds. Ending net neutrality would make it 100x harder on my career to succeed.
—Gina, Los Angeles, CA

We the people need equality in the real life and in the internet. Thanks for hearing :)
—David Perez, ,

I am an artist and I value connections made on a net neutral internet.
—Madeline Chen, Morganville, NJ

Children in schools will seek online for information and will receive info from the fastest supplier weather it is true or not. I am also worried that people like me, freelancers, will not get the jobs I need to live because will not be able to afford the light speed internet. The internet is ultimately free speech. If this happens why would American users not find a new way around this, a new internet. Everybody would loose.
—, Felton, CA

I do much of my business via the Internet, and want to keep my client service sharp and my costs down. We already pay too much for web access for what we get compared to the rest of the world. Provide us with the ability to compete in the global economy without costly increases by Internet providers.
—Tom Mescall, Redondo Beach, CA

Net Neutrality is important to me because of education. A lot of Education takes place on blogs and personal websites, and if some of us get put into the slow lane, that will stunt the growth of others. I shouldn't have to pay extra to keep people in the community informed on what their children are learning in my classroom or educate online for those who had a hard time getting it elsewhere. Please keep Net Neutrality.
—Tate Mlady, Lincoln, NE

Net Neutrality is important to every American and it must be preserved. I work for a small business and we DEPEND on having affordable fast internet connections and we cannot afford to pay the kind of "tolls" that GIANT corporations can pay to send their business communications and large files. No one should have less access or speed on the internet. The internet needs to be handled like all our other utilities. My neighbors don't get cleaner water than I do by paying more for it and they shouldn't get faster internet than I do by paying for it either. Same goes for businesses. Equal access with equal speeds...Net Equality=Net Neutrality FOR REAL and FOR EVERYONE. Thank you for your time.
—Tantris Hernandez, North Hollywood, CA

My daughter and I have a small business on Etsy. Our shop is "open" 24/7/365 to anyone in the WORLD. We are on the same level as any other business, large or small. If "net neutrality" is abolished, and we are forced to pay a fee to compete against other companies, we will flounder. It would not be fair to us or to anyone else.
—Christine M. Irvin, Grove City, OH

The system FCC is trying to enforce is medival, greedy and completely pointless. It will hold humanity back, and for what? For the sake of the corperations purse. how this is even considered to be allowed is beyond me. Tom Wheeler, take the proposed rules, and throw them out the window. Take the chance to be a protector and hero of civilization.
—Johanne Workinn, , bad idea, nobody wants this. if you want feedback google it, see for yourself what the rest of us think about it.

—Ivan Grekov, Swampscott, MA

As an artist this could mean a whole new internet in the wrong direction. We don't want fast lanes or slow lanes or even medium lanes. ALL CONTENT EQUAL!
—Liz Davis, Sterling, IL

I've always followed the road led by others, told by others was the only way of doing things. I've been through school, graduated and see the world differently. This world is not what it used to be before the internet got big. We can't all go straight from school to apprenticeship to a career. Even when we do, there is a chance that the careers gets cut without our knowing. The internet has been the one place where I feel like I can still be somebody in this world! Not only is a platform for a struggling college grad turn hopeful-artist like myself to establish my brand, but it also a place where I find inspirations from. The massive amount of people, bloggers, artists, comedians, writers, etc etc. who are now free to express their life perspective and give advice for those of us who are still searching for our purpose has boomed over the years. That is only capable because starting out with barely any money, we can still get our voices heard. Even though there are things in the world which falters our hope from time to time, the way that the internet is open to everyone has been a foundation of this future. It is a future which we want to continue building, even if we don't have money like Comcast or other companies do. We have great ideas, we do matter and we can make this world better. Please know, creating fast lanes for a small percentage of people who can afford it will only create a narrow-minded resource for the future of America and of the world.
—Becca C., Concord, CA

I aim to get a job at a large animation company as soon as I get out of college. Having the Internet stay equal is important so I can continue to post my work, make important contacts from those working in the field, and collaborating with other artists.
—Katie Wyman, Union, KY

I make my living from the internet. Clients find me via my website and blogs. A change in net neutrality would affect me and countless other artists, business start ups, musicians, bloggers - basically everyone. The net should be for everyone not just those with money.
—Kenneth Anderson, ,

I am a graphic designer by day, single income, family of 6 (soon to be 7) to support. I am an independant artist attempting to build a business online, simple fare- independent children's stories and the like - I'm a small fish in a big, big pond. With the internet as is, I have a chance- equal free exposure to the masses and a level playing field for a shot at success. With the proposed changes I wouldn't have a chance. Sir, please. For the people, for startups, nonprofits and everyday Internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls proposed. Please don't do this. Thank you for your time.
—David White, Lake Forest, CA

I am an artist and a woman with interests in building a small business some day. Net Neutrality is something that would allow me the ability to actually gain some measure of success through that. Keep Net Neutrality! And, keep big corporations out of regulating our internet.
—Ashley Armanini, San Jose, CA

I've graduated from college unable to find the kind of employment I need to survive. So I've found another way. I'm an independent artist now, and I use the internet to run my business and build connections. Please, don't make this even harder for me. Thank you, Ellie Fortune
—Ellie Fortune, Arvada, CO

As a creator/designer, my website is the only place for people to see my work and (therefore) hire me. As a consumer with little disposable income, the lack of Net Neutrality would actually prevent me from subscribing from many internet services I currently use (Netflix, Amazon lending library, etc)
—Jacob Lowry, Memphis, TN

I am an artist, and Net Neutrality is highly important for me to reach out to potential visitors and build a fanbase. I feel the new rules are unreasonable and unfair for us creative people and we have to work hard to get what we want out of it.
—, Marietta, OH

The Net is supposed to be fair game for everyone. If it is no longer neutral than it isn't fair. Those who pay more should not be more important than those who can't pay as much. I post to free sites like deviantart and it isn't fair to us artist who use it as a medium to showcase our hard work.
—David Young, North Concord, VT

I'm working toward becoming an independent artist who makes my living in part by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. For the future of humanity, I respectfully remind you it is your responsibility to look out for the best interests of people and protect REAL Net Neutrality. The “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—India Cable, Madison, IN

To me, the internet exists as an infinite frontier; one rooted in the fullest of human potential, and expression. It acts as a leveling agent in a world marked by increasingly stark inequality, and continues to educate, instill a sense of social responsibility, and establishes a sense of community, potentially leaving nobody isolated...Likewise, I duly acknowledge the capacity for palpable evil--the degree of cyber-bullying, pornography, and addiction increases to near-pandemic proportions daily; nothing is sacred. However volatile this system might be, the degree of liberty it bestows upon so many outweighs any potential risks. To deny anyone of this liberty through regulation is nothing short of fascism. Please do the right thing as an American.
—Adam R. Fortin, Los Gatos, CA

I keep waiting for signs that will allow me to hope that greed will, eventually, stop hindering the development of the human race. It is because of greed that advancement is stagnant. Have we come far? Yes. But we could be so much farther a long. Incredibly and unbelievably farther along. The internet is a place for ideas and content. Sure. Many people misuse the internet. But there are some voices among that crowd of ignorant people that should and must be heard. If Net Neutrality stops, you'll shut everyone up. You'll stop development. You'll let greed drive. I keep hoping people will eventually stop making a priority out of making money. I keep hoping they'll look to bettering this cold, brutal world instead. How about it?
—Jean Paul Thewissen, ,

Dear Mr. Wheeler, As a storyteller in the animation industry, I hope to one day own my own studio and make animated shows that everyone can enjoy. Net neutrality gives me the ability to show the masses what my team can do and what we have to offer, and allow our business to grow into something bigger. It is my belief that even big businesses and most of the people behind them had earnest and humble beginnings and had to work hard to get to where they are, and if you value seeing ambitious folks from rural areas working hard to make a name for themselves, I urge the FCC keep the internet as it is: for everyone, no matter how big or small. Sincerely, Josh DuJordan
—Josh DuJordan, Yuba City, CA

Because the Internet is an essential resource for life and shouldn't become an elitist tool.
—Tabitha pujol, Staten Island, NY

Without net neutrality you will be sending a message to the 99% of us who are not in the elite category. You will be blocking the growth of intellectual minds everywhere. This is just so wrong. Scrap the proposal.
—Michele Fergus, South Lake Tahoe, CA

Equality is integral to balanced social structure. Without balance, we have oppression. Do not create the divide online that already exists in the physical world!
—Lisa A, ,

We will be getting fed advertisement everywhere we go, everywhere we look. Its being shoved down out throats. We wont even be able to connect with the artists we want to support. Please stop this net neutrality, for a better tomorrow.
—Frank, ,

I’m an independant illustrator and artist, ending net neutrality creates further barriers in making a living as an independant. It staunches creativity and innovation. Please stop the corporates from owning the creative world. Sincerely, Ciro Correia
—Ciro Correia, ,

Net neutrality is indispensable for the internet to remain the way it is, equal to everyone and free of government and corporate control. Taking it away would change forever the biggest invention of last century and put it in hands of corporations to make their businesses grow. The internet is now the only place in the world where one can speak freely, revolutions were started through the internet, change is made through the free internet and it should remain so.
—Federico Etchegaray, Savannah, GA

Net Neutrality allows us to start our own discussions, businesses and contents in the internet without the interference of big-time corporations deciding on what is 'commercially reasonable' or what is not. I want to be able to read or watch things in the internet that I discovered to be interesting by my own browsing in the internet, not because Time-Warner decided what web-series should be the most popular. The internet's state of Net Neutrality is synonymous to free-speech. To take that away from us because a content is not profitable is to take away our free-speech for the lowly reason of 'lack of profit'.
—Carlo Puche, ,

I am an independent artist who is working to make my living in whole or in part by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. It is your responsibility to the future of humanity that you protect REAL Net Neutrality and the “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—Poila Invictiwerks, ,

Net Neutrality is critical to myself and every fellow artist I have ever known. We need to be able to share our artwork in it's myriad of forms and be able to be seen and heard to make a living and feel satisfied as people. The internet is one of the greatest opportunities and most exciting thing to happen to us creatives! Please respect net neutrality. Creating an "internet slow lane" for independents is just unfair and unacceptable.
—Andrea K Haid, San Francisco, CA

I'm a freelance artist and I have a blog online that allows the whole world to see my work. I don't have money to market myself besides paying my above-average Comcast monthly internet fee. Also, I follow 250 artists on blogger as well as 108 artists on tumblr. I wouldn't want any of those artists to have to pay extra either. Also, right now I'm allowed to have Facebook, Google, Blogger, Tumblr, and Flickr for free. I would assume they would all start paying these new fees to keep up with the higher-tier. That might turn into me and all my friends having to pay for these currently free services. Also, I really appreciate the bargains on Amazon. I don't want them to have to start paying fees and thus the customer base having to pay more as well. Please consider this as you are making your decision about Net-Neutrality. I admit I may not understand all of the issue on both sides of the fence, but I want you to know what is important to me.
—Matt Watts, Orem, UT

Same reason as everyone else.
—Michael Firenze, san jose, CA

I make video games for a living and release them online. Without net neutrality I do not have a fair shot at making a living for myself and my family.
—Sean Keeton, Walnut Creek, CA

The internet is an important tool for information. Everyone deserves information, not just those who can afford to spend huge amounts. As newspapers cut back and TV goes to "reality", every day people need to be able to research and get real information.
—Bridget I, Doylestown, PA

I'm an artist and both of my children are too. It sounds like the end of net neutrality would not benefit anyone except for cable companies. It will make the world a little sadder for the rest of us.
—Sylvia Scott, ,

We live in a time where the American Dream--the ability to pull one self up by their own bootstraps and become a success story--is possible and prominent on a global scale thanks to the equality that presently stands among the internet. Eliminating net neutrality will reverse this entirely and put us in a world where only those in power get to decide what can succeed or be seen. I am personally an independent artist working hard to expose my ideas to the public world via the internet, a working father and husband who has little chance to travel. The internet is literally the only real way I can expose my work to the public and garner some attention and business for my craft. It would be terrible for me and artists like myself (and there are many, many of us) to have to abandon hope of being able to put our work out there unless we can afford exorbitant fees for the "fast lane" instead of allowing our works, our books and comics and animations and blogs, to have the chance to stand on their own merits. Net neutrality must remain. Internet service must be declared a public utility.
—Jonathan A Price, Philadelphia, PA

I work for a non-profit, www.ittakestwo.org, and the proposed changes would greatly hinder our efforts to expand our out reach. Our plans involve building a dynamic site with video and streaming resources. I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service. Thank you.
—Jason Wright, Upper Marlboro, MD

I am an independent artist who current equality (neutrality) of the Internet to promote my work, research and help contribute to me making a living. Please do not let telecome giants ruin the career I have worked so hard to build.
—Pei wei Li, ,

As a citizen of this country I request the FCC to keep the internet as an open network, free and usable for all peoples of the world. We have a rare opportunity to participate in a means to provide access to news and information, usable by all mankind. I use the internet for mail, basic information on all topics, a way to meet people from all countries and walks of life, education and entertainment. In times of crisis and emergency it needs to be open and quickly available to me for information and instruction for my family's safety. I see no reason to politicize the internet by allowing business interests a better access than the rest of us. Thank you
—Martha Clark, Cape Elizabeth, ME

The net should not be driven by greed!
—Summer Passmore, Los Angeles, CA

For equal access, equal rights, equal freedom of speech, and lack of a corporate takeover.
—Lara Sandygren, Seattle, WA

Im an independent artist who makes your living selling my art (or is working to make your living) in whole or in part by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. It is their responsibility to the future of humanity that they protect REAL Net Neutrality and the “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—Santosh G Oommen, Sierra Madre, CA

It gives me the right to explore the internet and learn. The internet gives me a foot up on what school teaches.
—Brian Walton, Plainfield, NJ

The internet is the most democratic and powerful platform for that mankind has ever seen, allowing anyone to deliver content, express their thoughts and disseminate artistic endeavors instantly to anyone anywhere in the world. For it to continue to thrive and grow, it is crucial that we maintain net neutrality. The FCC needs to do it's job and protect this critical asset and medium for free thought. Do not allow these telecom companies to further consolidate and modify the rules and services available to all.
—Zach Daniek, Portland, OR

The Internet needs to remain open to all! The FCC's proposed rules are going to destroy what we all know and love about the internet. These rules are progress in the wrong direction!
—Chris Moore, Mesa, AZ

The US was founded on freedom and equal access for all. We pride ourselves on having those values. The open internet allows all firms to play equally and ensure consumers choose servies because of their quality instead of internet speed. I worry about the slippery slope of throttling the Internet based on firm influence- dont you!? What would the US say if N. Korea did this? Isnt it a form of censoring? I want net neutrality, please! Thank you for representing this —Rachel Witalec, Stanford, CA

I believe in an equal playing field for the internet. That was how it was built and it should stay that way. Please use your better judgment and keep Net Equality.
—Adam Scott, Lindon, UT

Because if Net Neutrality is not preserved, that'll put multi-million dollar corporations at an unfair advantage over small, independently-owned businesses which in turn could negatively impact the already fragile economy. As an freelance artist, I depend on Net Neutrality for employment. This type of discrimination and absolute power granted to telecom giants is unacceptable.
—Angela Cheng, Bethesda, MD

By having a two tiered internet you are providing yet another way we as people will be discriminated against in terms of rich and poor more so than the way things are now. The lack of access to the information caused by an unfair division of people's earnings would also determine who would be educated and who could not afford it as the access to required information would be no less important for study; by that point you are taking away the rights to an education of all the people who cannot afford this ridiculous financial barrier and further cripple society as a result. Schooling would cost more because colleges and universities would still require a fast internet, less people would be able to work important jobs and the rate of educated peoples in Canada would plummet making us not much better than a third-world country.
—Danik Tomyn, ,

I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service. The internet is, and has been from the beginning, an equal and global platform. It allows people to share information, learn and collaborate with each other in a way that humanity has not been able to do before. The outcome is rapid progress in every field of interest, widespread education that inspires curiosity and exploration, and invention as people from opposite ends of the world can find those with similar interests as themselves, or discover problems that have not been solved that they are capable of solving. Net Neutrality has created a generation of people that are exposed to global culture and education in ways that nobody has experienced before, and it has allowed entrepreneurs to support themselves through inventiveness and appeal to niches that would have otherwise never been discovered. The proposal to limit this open channel is outrageous. It is nobody's right to redirect an open channel capable of indiscriminate communication. Channel prioritization should be the choice of the individual, the viewer, the communicator, not the salesman, not the service provider, and certainly not the law. This would practically be the equivalent of censorship. In fact, it is a direct violation of freedom and an unforgivable attempt at halting human creativity and cooperation. It is the opposite of everything that your country stands for ideologically: equality, freedom of speech, and entrepreneurship. It would be the first step in creating a society wherein the rich stagnate in their own ignorance, and the poor are trapped within their own misfortune. Do not allow this to progress any further. The whole world is watching, and this will certainly not be able to be swept under a carpet. If America is no longer going to be the beacon of liberty that you have long claimed to stand for, then you will have lost the only culture you have managed to create for yourselves.
—Daoyi Liu, ,

I understand that you have probably heard this from a lot of people, but please, PLEASE don't take our equality on the net away from us. This is blatant discrimination against anyone who doesn't have the right connections or money to get involved with the big companies, and also means that we could be losing a lot of the amazing things that people create or do on the internet, from their own small businesses. Things like this are beginning to make our world seem scarily Orwellian - taking our freedom and equality away from us just so that big powers can cash in on our losses. It is not right, or fair in any way whatsoever, so DON'T let this go through. Please, listen to the people for once.
—Emma, ,

I have just heard the alarming news that independents (self employed people like myself) may suffer if the latest Net Neutrality rules come into effect. We need the internet to promote our work and enabling a two track system, fast and slow, would immediately put many on the backfoot. How can we little people compete against the big corporates? This seems very unfair, so I have taken the time out to let you know how I feel. How can you restrict a World Wide information highway. What you are doing is wrong. I urge you to please reconsider. Regards.
—Deborah Peacock, ,

Art is an area of our culture where dissent, offense, and boundaries are pushed which is why it is considered "speech" and therefore enshrined in the first amendment. By allowing net neutrality to be compromised to the highest bidder, the beating heart of culture, uncensored art, would be compromised. What makes our country unique and inspiring around the globe is our precedence in this area. What makes our country the disappointment around the globe is our continual cashing in on our "freedom, liberty, and justice for all." Kill the bill and let freedom ring!
—Michelle Dowdle, Ogden, UT

Fairness for everyone- not just those who can afford it.
—Cathy Poll, Manitou Beach, MI

Net Neutrality is everything to the freedom and power of the internet. Everything being equal and fair across the board offers creativity and innovation on a level that without it, would cripple the thousands of jobs the internet has created. It would set us back into a recession. I honestly believe that. It would cripple what has finally got rolling again. I also firmly believe that if Net Neutrality is damaged, there will be riots. The internet can't be taken away now, it can't and shouldn't be harmed by anyone. It is the one thing I honestly believe we've accomplished as a species that actually matters. All causes can be supported equally. The entire population can be made aware of wrongdoings and disasters. We, as a people can finally see and communicate in a means that defies the ancestral methods that came before it. No business. No company. No one force should have an influence over it. I honestly believe breaking Net Neutrality will lead to riots. All it takes is a small motion to make a cascading effect. The Internet, and the people that subscribe to it do not want it touched. SOPA and any other legislature was universally panned and with outright hated. I don't want to see anything harm the potential innovation that the Internet, and the collective power of our species compromised by the fiscal interests of the few. Unlike the United States, it is the one true Democracy. So long as it stays equal to everyone that subscribes to it. I want nothing less than real Net Neutrality. I want laws to protect this. I want the Internet to not be interfered with. I want it, and I am doing everything I can to make sure everyone I know is aware of this danger to the internet's freedom.
—Kory Tierson, Newark, NY

I follow freelance artists and indie start ups, I myself work in the Creative Arts and this would see a lot of unneeded bias that we aren't interested in being bombarded with.
—Rose, ,

Hello Mr Wheeler. I'm a freelancing artist from Sweden. If the FCC lets the companies take charge over the internet, it's likely most of my american clients won't be able to find my work, and Since US residents make up half of my client base, that would make it impossible for me to keep working. I sincerely ask that you reconsider and stop these discriminative and greedy rules from getting approved. Vilhelm Bergendal
—Vilhelm Bergendal, ,

No corporation or single company should have direct control over what the public sees and hears on the internet. Taking control and turning the internet in what is today's television would be global mind control.
—Michiel den van Heuvel, ,

Dear Mr Wheeler, As a small time freelance illustrator and artist who depends heavily on the internet to sell my art to clients, I strongly oppose the implementation of a two tiered system for internet data speeds. Strongly supported by the cable companies who have the worst reputation with the public and who have failed to use the tax incentives granted to them to improve their infrastructure, giving them this power is a recipe for disaster. The recent throttling of Netflix speeds until they agreed to pay extra is a blatant example of their misuse of power. The internet is not only a form of recreation but has become a necessity for most people who need to conduct even the simplest tasks of daily living. We pay more in the US for slower speeds than many foreign, less developed countries and supporting a two tiered data pricing system will only increase that discrepancy. Throttling the internet will be throttling freedom, something our founding fathers gave up their lives to protect. Please do not allow this to happen. Respectfully, Carl Kocich
—Carl Kocich, Fort White, FL

I am a small freelance artist whose whose whole business runs on word of mouth and internet chatter from my FANS. With these proposed implementations I will not be able to run my business or my comic book online anymore. Please don't allow the cable companies to become like Facebook and render the whole internet useless. I can't compete with the big guys yet and quite frankly I don't want too. Thanks for your time.
—Rich Molinelli, Denver, NC

You're mucking about with something that doesn't need mucking with. The internet as it is is great, it's REAL Neutrality, Everyone has the same chances to get their sites out there. Artists can find fans, fans can become artists, all the political parties have their websites as do other big businesses. Not everyone wants to SEE those sites though, there's nothing forcing someone to go to a site they don't want to go to just because 'it's faster'. I like the net the way it is, faults and all, because it's truly open. I can go to sites like National Novel Writing Moth and meet someone from Egypt, or France or Japan and not have to wait forever for the site to load cause it's a nonprofit and couldn't buy the 'fast lane' you people want to put into place on the Internet. Don't take my fellow writers and friends away from me, don't take anyone's creative groups away from them just cause there's a 'fast lane' the websites can't afford. Leave the Net alone, guys! Sure it's faulty but at least it's Equal, just the way it is right now.
—Storm, Grand Rapids, MI

In a word, freedom. The freedom to connect to whom I want, the freedom to research what I want, when I want and at the fastest possible speed I want. I already pay for interment access. Allowing big cable companies to control content and regulate who is allowed in the "fast lane" while exiling the rest of us to a "slow lane" is reprehensible. The cable companies did not invent the internet and have no right to regulate it or control any aspect of it.
—Allan Ruble, Mebane, NC

I'm an independent artist who makes my living in part by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet.
—Brittny Beauchamp, Fishers, IN

As a (wanne be) artist I deserve the same lane of opportunities everyone else has to branch out, to inspire and to be inspired and to be able to find people I want to converse with. Want to kill creativity of web comics, indie games and indie movies ?Because that's all this law is good for. UMURRIKA land of opportunities ... where the government employs people that have used the internet about as many times as they have fingers on one hand trying to regulate a global service. Disgusting.
—Nigel de Graaf, Hoevenen,

I am a small business owner and a working artist. I truly believe that small businesses are the key to recovering our economy, both nationally and globally. Without allowing creators, artists and entrepreneurs the chance to promote and distribute their work in a fair market they will never have a chance to survive. We will be an economy ruled by companies that are “too big to fail”. These companies will focus on the bottom line, cutting jobs where ever they can, and outsourcing to unregulated labour markets that allow terrible working conditions. Jobs will become a limited commodity. With more and more citizens out of work, denying us the chance to create new jobs through our own businesses is comparable to signing a death warrant. Without a fair chance at opportunities to grow, expand and even attempt to create new enterprises, we are at the mercy of the Government. More and more citizens will need to use social services. With fewer and fewer citizens able to pay into these services we are reaching the end of a very short pier. The cycle cannot continue this way. Removing the opportunity for small businesses and creators to promote themselves fairly means they have no chance of ever being self-sufficient. The survival of these small enterprises means more jobs over all, more citizens paying into social services and creating jobs for others. This is one of the most important issues the global population is facing right now. I urge you to stand up for our rights. Only with a fair opportunity at success can we truly bring up the standard of living for all people across the globe.
—Jessie Dawn Trubiano, ,

Dear Tom Wheeler, I work as a games artist as well as a freelance artist whose livelihood depends on the current equality (neutrality) of the internet. Like the majority of indie games companies and freelance artists living in South Africa, we get most of our work through overseas clients. If these proposed rules for the internet are implemented, at the very least it would be difficult for us artists to connect with overseas clients and at the most impossible. South Africa also suffers from a slower internet speed in comparison to other countries due mainly to its distance from them. That is a problem I as a South African have to deal with itself. If the rules for the internet are changed our internet would be slowed down all the more and a lot of South African companies and artists would not be able to afford the rates for a faster internet. The creative industry is small in South Africa, but thanks to the current state of the internet it is growing. I deeply fear that if the rules for the equality of the internet are changed it would crush our infant creative industry before it can leave the cradle. The games company I work for, the artists I know, the livelihoods that they've fought tooth and nail for would be swiftly and ruthlessly taken away. In conclusion, if the Federal Communications Commission allows for the rules for the internet to change it not only affects Americans but the whole globe. Millions of people the world over would have to close their business and find another means of income. It would be immoral to ruin the livelihoods of so many people all over the world. Regards, Gina Viglietti (Games Artist and Freelance Artist)
—Gina Viglietti, ,

Profiteering is unconscionable.
—TC Wheeler, Tucson, AZ

It is the only hope i have for my start up business ideas, and i am certain there millions like me that agree. Please leave internet neutrality alone. Thank you.
—Joseph, ,

Hello, Mr. Wheeler, please keep the flow of free information and expression available to all America's citizens. This is one of the major principles that gives America its incredible greatness.
—Nicolas Palmer, Roswell, GA

The internet is one of the only remaining outlets for free speech in this country. We are regulated in everything we do in our daily lives. On the internet I can say what I want, illustrate what I want, and express myself in any way which I see fit. I use the internet to find new interesting people and to make a living. I'm a freelance artist and 90% of my income comes from internet clients. Don't block access to my living and take away one of the only remaining freedoms we have in this country.
—William R. Palacio, Prescott, AZ

Freedom. Freedom of information, ideas and speech. There are many ways for large corporations to make large amounts of money; destroying net neutrality is NOT one of them. In the long run the backlash from American citizens would cost them ALL billions of dollars, because we will stop using their products and/or services, no matter the inconvenience. Please do the right thing, FOR the people!
—Mike Sprouse, Manassas, VA

I am a student of Illustration and my future business depends on net neutrality to give me the chance of promoting myself and to be able to create my own services. Therefore my life depends on Net Neutrality!!!
—Julian Illy, ,

I want freedom of information and equal opportunities, a level playing field for everyone that has access to the internet. It's crucial for small business America to be able to compete world wide. If this goes through the big telecom companies will kill America. Yes some will become wealthy and that's probably the ultimate goal. But America would not be free, and run by corporations.
—Jon Otterstedt, Corona, CA

The internet is the greatest learning and information tool of all time, without net neutrality the internet would just be more bad tv.
—Thomas Clemmons, Amarillo, TX

Net Neutrality is important to me because I am an independent freelance artist who relies on this neutrality to make a living. I'm an animator and it is unjust to put my website and animation streaming in the slow lane simply because I can't meet the costly criteria. Getting rid of Net Neutrality will destroy any improvement to the economy and any shut down many startup companies who rely on an even playing field. Don't bring down the economy just to further inflate the big wig internet providers.
—Chelsea Corson, San Francisco, CA

I'm an artist and author and I reach my audience through an equal internet. Also, an equal internet is needed for the progression and improvement of the world.
—Andrea Skyberg, Milwaukee, WI

I'm a digital artist. Any money and notoriety that I've been able to scrape together in this tough industry has been because of the free range net. Also almost all my sources of inspiration and drive can be found within it. Please keep my livelihood and creativity from being stifled.
—Andrea Danielson, Coronado, CA

Because I use it for family, friends, for health, for good cause, networking, nonprofit support. People can't afford it to be like cable. It will ruin it for poor, low income, lower middle class, struggling businesses etc.
—Karen Dean, Pinckney, MI

I don't want the big industries to run over the little guys with your super highways of information that we can NOT afford to access or compete with. Net Neutrality for all and freedom of speech not to be controlled by Comcast AT&T and Verizon etc
—Doug Wood, Ann Arbor, MI

I need the internet to make my living! As a freelance artist and graphic designer, using the internet is absolutely integral to finding new clients and promoting myself. Please, Please, Please do the right thing for the people. The level playing field of the internet is practically the last vestige of an actual democracy that this country has at this point. Everyone knows Washington is in the pocket of corporations -- if you take the internet away from the people we will have nothing left but to be slaves to the will of the richest of the rich. Please.
—Janna Coker, Portland, OR

Net Neutrality is crucial to distribute my products on the Internet.
—Mahin Sarwar Khan, ,

Net Neutrality is important to me for two main reasons; first, for my future as an artist interested in making a name for myself on the internet which comes with communication and production of my own works. Second, for the culture of the internet, which for me is not only a source of entertainment, but is a great source of variety as far as inspiration for my own work, and education from others on the internet of different backgrounds. If Net Neutrality is gone, huge chunks of what I do appreciate about the internet will go with it, and it is your responsibility to keep this new culture of the internet alive. I hope all parties involved work towards keeping net equality.
—Dako Yazawa, San Francisco, CA

It is important that we dont give businesses anymore control than they already have over us.
—Michael Johnson, Antioch, CA

As an independant artist, I depend on everyone having access to my portfolio to be able to see my work, not just people or corporations who pay more to do so. Please help me maintain my livelyhood and make all resources on the web accessable to all equally. In this day and age, the Internet is used for everything: communication, shopping, finding a job, and even communicating with our government as I am currently doing by writing this message to you. Internet usage should be treated as a basic necessity, a right, not a luxury only to be afforded by the rich. Thus, I urge you to reclassify broadband as a telecommunications service. Thank you.
—Michael Dashow, Oakland, CA

The internet was created for speedy communication. It evolved into an accessible, beautiful forum of free speech. It is the embodiment of human kind, a transcendent reprepresentation of our collective hopes goals and choices. Your proposed rules will remove a great tool from the hands of the mass populace. A tool that combats inhumane political agendas, exposes crime and brings humanity closer together. Your rules also remove a fundamental right to choose. This is an unthinkable crime against humanity. Regardless of your opinions or your bank role, people have a right to think and choose for themselves the type of conversations, entertainment and products they enjoy. Selling the internet to the highest bidder is a selfish act which affects millions, not just in your country but all over the world. Those of us whose businesses thrive in the environment of the internet as it is rely on its neutrality, across the globe. The fact that I can freely connect and engage with someone from India or Sri Lanka, is priceless to me. The fact that they can purchase my book as we speak, is my welfare. You simply have no right to me and the millions of people like me out of touch with our peers, or out of business. Acts such as this create poverty and large scale economic instability. They set humanity back. Don't let your greed get the better of you.
—Meghann Doyle, Qualicum Beach,

Start-up businesses should have the ability to access the internet and potential customers without discrimination to foster innovation and growth.
—Robert Z Tillitski, Boca Raton, FL

I would like for people to continue to be able to grow, and tap into potential that we haven't even imagined yet on the internet. If we are dialed back behind big business, growth and ideas that could be life changing may never get the chance to come to fruition.
—Linda Beebe, Pueblo, CO

Net Neutrality conserves and protects rights for all Internet users including major online companies and regular users, therefore why would I or anyone else want to rid our shield from the corruption that can come with Internet service providers. I believe that Chairman Tom Wheeler’s proposal is recognizably a way for Internet providers to extract money from companies that in different circumstances, (outside the internet), would have no right to without question. This is not fair for anyone, except profitable for the service providers. ISPs are becoming the troll under the Internet bridge. If net neutrality becomes extinct, that means consumers will only be able to go through websites that pays all the fees to ISPs in order for the customers to get quality access to these outside websites that haven’t paid the troll toll. The Internet will become a place we do not have the right to choose or to be heard which are two rights we have as consumers. It is unfair for companies such as Netflix and Amazon as well. It is as if these companies are the small, freshmen in a new school and the ISPs are seniors who will stuff these companies in trashcans or lockers if they don’t pay their lunch money. Netflix and Amazon used the Internet as an implement to showcase their product and chose the Internet because of the open market. It is not every online website the ISPs are attempting to charge fees to; it is exclusively the largest online corporations. No matter how ISPs phrase what they are doing, or try and turn it, it is still discrimination. At the end of the day, these bullies are only what the ISP stands for: Internet Service Providers. They do not have a right to control the Internet or what website succeeds and what website fails. The government needs to step in now while it is legal to make this illegal before these providers gain more power and allow no room for our Internet speed, protection, and overall progress.
—Amy Morrell, Auburn, AL

It's obvious that giving preference to large corporate interests will only have a negative effect on small businesses, non-profits, creative workers and all people who support the concept that control of mass communications should never favor those who's voice is already over represented in all media, on all platforms. It's inherently unfair, undemocratic and clearly unwarranted and unnecessary. More Americans are employed by small businesses than large enterprises so why would we want to impede small business in their outreach to markets in favor of large businesses that already dominate those markets? To see the effects of this type of policy, where having more money translates into being able to dominate the public airwaves please take note of the results of the Citizen's United decision on our political discourse. Instead of thinking the FCC knows what's best for our country, why not ask individual citizens if they think this is such a great idea- I'll wager if you ask a broad sampling of Americans whether they prefer the current system or your proposed rules giving overwhelming preference on the internet to large companies over individuals and small business, they'll tell you to maintain the current rules.
—Gene Gouss, Warwick, NY

I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.
—Cecilia H Aiello, San Luis Obispo, CA

The idea of letting monopolistic companies such as Comcast or Time-Warner regulate internet speeds is ridiculous. They have no concern except their own bottom line. In the end they will gouge customers as much as they can by limiting internet speeds unless people pay through the nose.
—Keith Rupp, Derry, NH

It is an opportunity to have my work seen as an artist. It allows me a fair chance, same as everyone else, to be hired as a freelancer. It allows my work to be judged solely on its own merit and not because it is ahead of someone else's or on a different lane. Please do not take away net neutrality. Also, speaking as a citizen of a first world country, we are constantly bombarded by ads. They are on tv, on my way to work, at work, at cafes and diners, in the media and on the internet, everywhere. PLEASE do not make ads more important that people. Corporations have enough power as it is. PLEASE do not step on us little guys and girls. Thank you.
—Iuliana Niculescu, ,

Because everyone have the freedom to express his or herself, Internet didn't need to become an dictature.
—Julien MARIETTE, ,

I am an independent artist who works full time and lives my dream at night with my wife and child. I have a small company with friends. This loss of net neutrality will hurt our business. We don't make much, so all the help we can get helps us in the end.
—Matt Wright, Homewood, IL

Freedom of expression.
—Steve Sobocinski, Saint Louis, MO

Less government is good
—Lex White, O Fallon, IL

Opportunity. Its already hard enough to compete and not feel trapped in modern slavery. Net Neutrality is part of what little chance we have to keep creating new jobs for ourselves.
—Carlos Caro, Elmhurst, NY

I'm a digital artist, my entire livelihood depends on the equal opportunity provided by Real Net Neutrality. Please don't take away my chance for success, and my contribution as a functioning member of society.
—Yasmin Khudari, Lyall Bay, HI

Net Neutrality is key to my existence as a freelance artist. Please do not allow the internet to become crippled by a tiered system, jobs and lives are at stake. Our growth is at stake. Thank you, Clay
—Clay Osmus, San Jose, CA

I'm an artist, and this sums it up for me: http://chrisoatley.com/savethe internet/?awt_l=FvWmA&awt_m=3Z xDYrWRClUGLtM —Karen Forkish, Portland, OR

As an aspiring student artist, the Internet is essential if I, and many other artists and content creators are to become successful after graduating from college. We depend on the internet to create an online presence so that we can make money off of our work. Needless to say, if telecom companies are allowed to create a tiered internet, it already makes it that much harder for me and others to survive in such a competitive field. Most people starting out won't be able to afford the extra money that it would cost to get in the "fast lane" that directs traffic to their site. The very idea of a tiered internet goes against the principles of meritocracy and only goes to show that no matter how hard you work, if you don't have money, it doesn't matter. At this rate, we'd be no better than China, except instead of the internet being controlled by the government, it would be controlled by the corporate giants.
—Caroline Chiou, Torrance, CA

Please do not allow FCC's new proposed rules to destroy Net Neutrality! Creating a two-tiered Internet will hinder innovation and learning. Remember that Facebook was a start-up not too long ago and look a how it has changed the way people communicate and in turn, how they go about their daily lives. Look at how many jobs it created, and how many other companies grew by creating content for Facebook alone. I am an artist and share my artwork through the Internet, and know of many others who do the same and have even built their livelihood by solely creating online content. These artists have inspired me and countless others to learn and improve our skills as well as provided the means for us to do so. The Internet does not only serve as a means of entertainment, it is also most accessible form of education for many people. Please do not crush the hopes and dreams of people who are relying on there being a free and fair Internet to create what could be the next Facebook.
—Karlen Tam, Staten Island, NY

Freedom of information.
—Russell, Roy, UT

Never before in human history has so much information been available so broadly. Anyone with an internet connection can improve their mind, connect with the world or escape reality. The internet should be for everyone. It is as close as the real world can get to a true democracy. Eliminating Net Neutrality disenfranchises us.
—Amy Janzen, Oakville,

It's already hard for me as a beginning artist to make it out here, please let me keep my freedom to run next to do the big boys and let my voice be heard and work be seen!
—Ron Bomhof, ,

I am a freelance artist and animator. net neutrality will inhibit the potential of new and growing businesses and only enable corporations even greater visibility that would eclipse any competition of any kind we don't need to give them more power we definetly don't need to squelch divergent avenues of information ideas and trade
—Timothy Bowden, Bemidji, MN

I am an independent game developer and illustrator living in St. Louis, Missouri. My livelihood depends on being able to use social media platforms and various websites to share my work with others as a way of promoting my business as an artist. Being an independent content creator in St. Louis is made possible by the fact that you can share the work you create with anyone across the world. Many indies like myself live in St. Louis because they grew up in the Midwest, but also because it's possible to be independent here with the cost of living so manageable. Removing Net Neutrality would be a killing blow to small businesses and independent game developers in cities like St. Louis because we are able to thrive because of our determination and the value of what we create, not because of our budgets. Losing Net Neutrality would put a stranglehold on small content creators by limiting their reach and stifle any growth of new innovators and creators that are trying to share their work. I urge you to reconsider and maintain true net neutrality so that America's independent content creators can continue to flourish and not be limited in their ability to share their content and create a livelihood for them and their families.
—Eric Hibbeler, Saint Charles, MO

Net Neutrality has allowed me to make a living as a freelance graphic designer. My website is the #1 way I bring in clients, both locally and internationally. By sending my clients a link to my portfolio website, I am able to secure jobs and make a living. Without my website, I would have no way of making a living. If my website were relegated to the slow lane of the internet, I would literally be unable to work and provide for myself. I would have no way to compete with big ad agencies that have multimillion dollar budgets. There would be no way I could pay to have my website in the fast lane. I need Net Neutrality in order to survive.
—Kitty Brown, Monarch Beach, CA

Net neutrality is important to me because I believe that free and unbiased internet, devoid of (indeterminable) vested interests is a right of every individual and must be safeguarded at any cost.
—Aishwarya, ,

I am a small business owner, in the online industry, i develop and sell websites to small business owners, this new law has basically killed my business, thank you for making me homeless.
—Shane Sandwith, ,

Without Net Neutrality we would be thrown back to the corporate lions that are driver by greed for money. We already pay high prices for the services ISP provides and their balance sheets show that there not hurting by providing these pipeline services. Keep the internet equally available to all and consider methods to make it affordable to all. Without Net Neutrality we would be no better than many Chinese villages where the government controls everything. In this case it would be the ISPs.
—Taft Navarro, Hanahan, SC

My kids.
—Austin Garrett, Bonne Terre, MO

My wife and I both have online businesses and rely on fast internet access for our businesses to succeed.
—David Pentecost, Mulberry, FL

I am just an amateur artist whose dream is to draw, write and animate cartoons for a living. It was tough to come to terms with, since my first thought about it is that the odds of me achieving this dream are rather slim. However, I can honestly say that if it wasn't for the incredible capabilities of the internet, I would have given up this dream. That's right; I'd have been too scared to even try and put myself out there. Net neutrality gives an anonymous nobody like me a voice in the world. A voice that people can choose to listen to or ignore, but at least it's out there. And that's just me. There are literally thousands of other people who have the same opportunity to let their voices be heard, no matter who or where they are. I personally believe that the most amazing and important benefit of the internet is its ability to let people connect with each other. Making it so that they can gather and start a business, work on a project, help those who are less fortunate, etc. And that whatever they work on can grow if other people find it and decide to join in. The internet gives everyone the same unbiased chance to either succeed or fail at their endeavors based directly on people's responses to them. And as just one of the people who's trying to use that chance to chase his dreams, I'd really appreciate if the internet remained completely neutral. For myself and for everyone else who depends on the neutrality. Thank you for your time.
—Cristian, Culver City, CA

Net Neutrality is important to me because I run an online webcomic that is free to read and I am one quarter of a new startup online.
—Kerrie Smith, ,

Mr.Wheeler, I'm an aspiring artist. Thanks to the neutrality of the internet, I have been able to connect with other artists, post my work for people to appreciate and be a part of the creative community in my own small way. If you take this away from us, the honest working men and women in the different creative industries, you'll be helping wipe out communities. They'll be replaced with corporations looking for a new profit and the precious link creators, fans and associated people have with each other will be severely compromised. If numbers count, There are 3 or 4 corporate voices right now against the word of millions. That's what net neutrality means for us. It's a simple choice between big money and real people with real lives and communities that have come up organically. It's a simple choice, but the FCC will have to live with what it brings and takes away. I hope you have the courage to chose wisely.
—Pronoy Dutta, ,

Net neutrality is important to everyone in the world. We have the right to judge for ourselves what is in our best interests, and not for what the big cable companies want us to know, almost exclusively. Besides, I as many other people, depend on net neutrality to support our families with our online jobs. If you take this away from us, how will all of us support our families? How will our potential clients find us? Breaking the rules of net neutrality and taking it away from the world would not be fair at all. Please help us keep our freedom of communication, our freedom of live. Thanks, Paola Amador
—Paola Amador, ,

Net Neutrality is meant to keep a monopoly from occurring within the internet. This is going to make that happen and I believe that this is taking away our rights and giving them to huge corporations to pick and choose what they want. I do not think this is good for the United States citizens and should be banned from happening. Please keep Net Neutrality real and "neutral" and do not reclassify to aid corporate giants in taking over the internet!!!
—Josh, Dayton, OH

As a tax paying user of the internet, it disturbs me to see large telecom companies lobby to create changes in the laws that negatively effect me, while providing them with major control and increased revenue streams. Allowing them to discriminate over access speaks should not be allowed. In the united states we pay more than most in not all other countries for internet and cell service, while our access speeds have fallen well below most other industrialized countries. Although I normally do not favor regulation, in htis case I do. although the telecom companies are not strictly a monopoly, they are acting as an oligopoly, and colluding against the better interests of the users.
—Greg Arundale, Marion, IA

This would effect my business
—Karen, Windsor, CA

Net neutrality is important to me so that I can protect my privacy, so that I can continue building my small NGO, so that human rights and right to speech is not encroached upon. Its important so that the digital divide doesn't continue to grow! For a million reasons we need our internet to be neutral and treated as a telecommunications service. We must protect our citizens from the grip of large companies who stand to monopolize not only our internet access but already strong arm the government for their financial benefit.
—Krystal C Atha, Norwalk, IA

Net Neutrality allows for open communciation and information sharing for everyone. By allowing the FCC to allow Comcast and other telecom giants to cost tier the services, school systems, which are already financially strapped will be further constrained when teaching our kids.
—Susan Schaer, Naperville, IL

Dear Chairman Wheeler, I am an independent artist, working to make my living almost entirely through the current internet equality. A "slow lane" would be unacceptable and unjust. It would only benefit the large communication companies, and hinder everyone else, making it nearly impossible to reach our clients in a fair, open, equal forum. Please do your part in stopping these rules from becoming reality. thank you, Kevin Page
—Kevin Page, Woodland Hills, CA prevent monopolies and keep costs under some semblance of control

—Paul C Czarapata, Bolingbrook, IL

Because I pay for the service its mine, not yours
—Monte Brown, San Jacinto, CA

I have low income
—Danny Ruiz-Cruz, River Rouge, MI

Please Classify the internet and an internet provider as a telecommunications company so it is FAIR for everyone. say NO to lobbyists.
—Neal, Ogden, UT

Net Neutrality is the medium in which creative artists and people of expression can do what they do best and still make a living for themselves. Without this competitive free atmosphere, we and many others as a result will topple in our best efforts to express ourselves, be seen, and control our lives and destinies. With this "fast lane/slow lane" concept, everything will grind to a standstill, a monopoly will be placed on the internet by the companies whose fat wallets can afford it and the people who can afford that. This is a matter of companies an investors trying to control the goose that lays the golden eggs, to take those eggs for themselves, instead of leaving it equally distributed through anyone and everyone who wants one. Don't let this happen. Please, for the sake of the posterity of this nation, for creative artists and people, and everyone else besides, even the companies, don't let this happen. Save Net Neutrality.
—Brooke, Windsor, CA

I am a freelance artist and the majority of my work comes form my internet exposure. If people can't see my work because I am not a large, popular and wealthy company, then my means of income will disappear. I depend on the equality of the internet in its current state to reach out and be seen.
—Katya Bowser, Burbank, CA

Net neutrality is neutrality of information As a scientist, neutrality of information is paramount, the foundation of science itself As a small business entrepreneur, neutrality of information means fair business As a family member, neutrality of information means children can grow up in a democratic information system and be able to recognise and correct the mistakes of this generation
—K van D, ,

The equality of the internet is what I as an independent creative depend on to make a living following my dream in the field of freelance illustration and design. If that equality is taken away I see not only a lot of dreams and creative jobs being taken away from people, but also the death of what makes the Internet so powerful for media in general. Forcing advertising or "fast lanes" onto people will only irritate them and make them angry. It's the reason Netflix is more popular than television with commercials. People want freedom, and we as artists and people with things to say depend on that free platform that has changed media for the better. I sincerely hope that you will make the decision that is best for the people and their voice. Thank you.
—Jeremy Gordon, Sebastian, FL

Fight for Net Neutrality; not the oligarchy.
—Pieter H Wessels, Cary, NC

I want a level playing field for all businesses and ideas.
—Debra A Simmons, New York, NY

The proposed rules are immoral and unethical. All supposed representatives of these new rules should feel shame when attempting to sell them to any constituency and know that these people will not stand for such social injustices.
—Kelsey Reeves, Littleton, CO

Because no one should have control of the internet or what we choose to look at. This could potentially turn into a political thing, where some internet companies are strongly liberal or strongly conservative, such as much of the 24 hour news has become (fox news) and with out net neutrality depending on what internet w go with we can be influence by that.
—Jeff Lyons, Columbus, OH

Net Neutrality is important to me because it allows freedom of speech from anybody on the internet. It is also important for me as a film person to get my projects out into the world to be shared with people. I hope to one day make this a viable career and am currently producing content with out getting paid. I wouldn't be able to show case my work if capital gains took over my ability to communicate over the internet or be blocked because a corporate entity has a right to stop my communications because they don't agree with me or I don't fit their Brand message. I am happy to share the internet with those I don't agree because I too can be on it too. Sincerely Timothy Beebe
—Timothy Beebe, Pueblo, CO

Because I am a concept artist and I wish for my fans to have unfettered access to my work, rather than have it pushed into the background while favoured adverts and sites take up the majority of internet airtime.
—Colin Searle, ,

It's bad enough that theres a comcast monopoly in my area, I don't need them to up the cost for something as basic as this.
—Nyrax, Jacksonville, FL

It helps me as a student that majors in illustration at the university of Hartford to promote my artwork and get my name to the studios I wish to work for. Without net neutrality, people of all ages will be unable to find jobs, nor promote their own business. Net neutrality must remain for eternity so that it can no longer be in harms way like it is now for the benefit of all the people in the world. It is a valuable resource for people to find information. Without net neutrality, I wouldn't have been able to learn how to properly dress wounds.
—Ismael Reza, New Britain, CT

I am a website designer
—Melissa Collins, Ogden, UT

People everywhere understand that the Internet is a crucial driver of free speech, innovation, education, economic growth, creativity and so much more. They demand real Net Neutrality rules that protect Internet users from corporate abuse. The agency can preserve Net Neutrality only by reclassifying Internet service providers as common carriers. This is the only way to protect the open Internet. Anything else is an attack on our rights to connect and communicate.
—Rob Bird, Cabot, AR

I use the internet.
—James Saunders, Von Ormy, TX

Net neutrality is important to me because it has allowed me to build my business as an artist, if this is allowed to pass, a lot of people are going to lose their income and businesses.
—Martin Gill, ,

I am a creative artist with a following on many websites.
—Chander Lieve, ,

Because I am an artist and designer and the Internet allows me to make a living and to access any information, service, or person on a level(ish) playing field.
—Trey Jackson, Phoenix, AZ

Because next it'll be the UK.
—Matthew Meredith, ,

It is the democratic way of life. For all things to be judged by their own merits, regardless of the issues the creators support.
—Barathan Vidhyapathy, ,

I'm an up and coming freelance fantasy artist working out of South Africa. It's really difficult making a living like this at the best of times. Fortunately being able to reach out and chat to potential clients in America instantly has allowed me to turn around a profit for myself, my wife and soon to be born daughter. I cannot afford to lose the exposure, it would devastate my progress and impede doing what I love as a living. Please, please don't move forward.
—Mike W, ,

Good day I recently read about the Net Neutrality and what was being said about what it all entails. I think it is unfair and unjust to take such steps as a lot of artists, myself included, make our living by sharing and selling our art online. I feel that this should not be implemented and I feel that it is wrong to all the people who use the internet to make their living. Kind Regards Neal Strydom
—Neal Strydom, ,

We have a right to privacy, protection, and the same internet experience as everyone else. Keep America free for all!
—Traci Orwig, Tulsa, OK

I use the net for promotion and ti get clients. People can easily find out about my work with net neutrality.
—Martinho Correia, ,

Net neutrality is the primary reason most non-profit/indie comic organizations/webcomics exist. If net neutrality were revoked and the proposed two-tiered Internet plan were put into place, fans of mainstream media would be slightly more satisfied, but thousands of non-profit websites whose creators are struggling with enough already without the addition of government-slowed Internet would suffer, and so would the millions of fans of those websites. Some may even go out of business, the online equivalent of death. Is it really advisable to exterminate a vast online community in favor of the mild contentment of others?
—Rowan Turner, Trezevant, TN

Net Neutrality is way to us artists to express yourself and open our eyes to reality. A closed Internet is a locked door, keeping us all from being aware of what is actually happening around us. I was taught that the truth will set me free, but without the truth, we can never be free.
—Westley Nelson, Norfolk, CT

The FCC has proposed rules that would break the open Internet. This proposed path would open the door to widespread discrimination online. It would give Internet service providers the green light to implement a two-tiered Internet, with a fast lane for those who can afford it and a dirt road for the rest of us. This would be a disaster for startups, nonprofits and everyday Internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls. I urge the FCC to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.
—Zachary Wright, Clendenin, WV

Freedom of speech is needed in a free society
—Brien Zimmermann, Dover Plains, NY

Why wouldn't it be? Freedom of expression, communication and access are paramount. Is traffic prioritization really important, or are we just trying to build a larger capitalist machine?
—Ron Gicka, Windsor Mill, MD

Fairness and equality
—Julie Saugstad, Portland, OR

We are creators, designers, who need the internet to network, share, create and sell works and ideas.
—Andrey Kurnoskin, ,

Equality in sharing knowledge, building a level field, and keeping the internet fast for all.
—Ashwin George Jose, San Francisco, CA

Net Neutrality is CRITICAL to PRESERVING social and political EQUALITY on the internet AND in society as a whole!
—Robert Weatherly, Timmonsville, SC

The two tiered system would not only hurt many websites by restricting speeds but it would hurt the businesses who supply the connections to us. I'm not the only one who would drop an ISP because of slower connection speeds than what others are supplying for a similar price. Google has already said they would go into the ISP business and not use a two tier system, creating a monopoly or other businesses abandoning the two tier system entirely. Restricting speeds would also hurt all businesses who use the internet as a medium for income as now ISPs could restrict people from accessing websites due to inconsistently slower speeds. Please don't deal this damaging blow to the internet!
—Nathan Adams, Groveport, OH

We must preserve Net Neutrality to protect Free Speech, guard against corporate monopolies and prevent the stifling of future innovation!
—Mal Weatherly, Timmonsville, SC

A lot of entrepreneurial american artist are teaching me how o draw. This is only possible because I could fast and free, access their sites, which are small, compared to entertainment media, but for me for instance, extremely important. With the end of ne neutrality, not only I´ll less likely be able to have this access, but this and other important artistc enterprises will probably end. Please, do not let one of the most positive american cultural trait (entrepreneurship) be subject to big corporations. Let people decide, with their own free will, what deserves more attention and what not —Rafael Ramires Ferreira, ,

The smallest voices should be just as accessible as the big and powerful
—Kevin Breugelmans, ,

I think it goes without saying that the internet has become a vital tool in the lives of just about everyone in the developed countries of the world. Not only is it vital to society as a way to share information, but it is now vital to many of our livelihoods. If these new rules are put in place there will be an absolute destruction of freedom of information as well as entrepreneurial freedom. Please do not mess up a good thing. The internet is thriving just fine thank you.
—Brendan Draney, Durham, NC

I want to be able to access all sites at equally fast speeds and not be limited access to information on the web.
—Samantha Cao, Marietta, GA

Net Neutrality is essential for the cooperation between creative types to create, develop and achieve new works of art, design and engineering that would be more or less impossible to achieve without the collaboration and/or influence of other creative types. For the sake of our future, please reconsider and permanently support net neutrality.
—Jose L. Alfaro, Stockton, CA

Equality on the internet.
—Joe Campbell, Antioch, CA

most of my work comes from the internet, with much of my work already being outsourced, I need to have a fast internet just to survive.
—Lyn Martin, Chattanooga, TN

I am an independent artist who is working to make a living through the usage of the current net neutrality of the Internet. It is because the Internet is the way it is today that I have access to millions of stock photography pieces to practice drawing and painting with, along with the many free tutorial websites on drawing and painting. The current Internets Net Neutrality also gives me the option to take art classes online from reputable people who are art teachers and art creators themselves and who make professional use of the internet to reach out to people like me who want to learn more about art. If the Internet wasn't the way it is now I wouldn't have been able to come across amazing and inspiring artists whose work they post helps to motivate me to improve and post my own work as well. Please, I urge you to remember that your responsibility to the future of humanity is to protect REAL Net Neutrality. The idea of an “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—Rebecca Weis, Patterson, CA

Net Neutrality is important to me because both my fiance and I use the internet to promote our art and sell online. If these new rules go through, my fiance and I will not be able to make a living off our art anymore because it is hard enough to get seen and known on the internet already without the new rules. Please scrap these proposed rules and restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.
—Jessica Salehi, Buena Park, CA

It is YOUR responsibility to the future of humanity that you protect REAL Net Neutrality. The Idea of making an “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust, unacceptable, and quite despicable of you to be in favor of making such a thing.
—Brett Ciacco, Kansas City, MO

I'm a small town artist, it is important that I have the same opportunities as though with excess money.
—Candice Landsberg, Temecula, CA

All people should have access to all information and the freedom to consume the vast resources of the internet. It is already possible to create paywalls around premium services, and corporations are welcome to do that, but keep the pipes clear. Also - allowing yourself and the agency for which you work to be co-opted by these large, monopolistic corporations belies a strategy of greed rather than protectin of the American public from these behaviors. Please work to restore the good name of the FCC. I know there must be an honorable person in there. Thank you.
—Robert West, Seattle, WA

I don't think a tiered system is a good direction for the future of the internet.
—Nathan Rico, Anaheim, CA

The Internet is important to me because it is one of the quickest and most reliable ways to access information about the world I live in. I use it as a valuable learning tool and as a platform to promote myself via social media.
—Jordan Blossey, Clermont, FL

The Internet as it exists is open to everyone providing so much information and so many opportunities to everyone, despite their financial position to learn, grow, communicate, discuss, ideate. It encourages enterprenureship, necessary knowlege helping people to take care of their health and that of their families. To learn and see how other people live all over the earth, even when one can't travel. The most incredible wonderful invention. Please, for once don't let our or anyone elses government special interests RUIN this amazing rhing.
—Croll Carolyn, Philadelphia, PA

I am a professional illustrator who does nearly all of my work online; putting these kinds of restrictions on internet traffic will completely destroy all thousands of brilliant companies and projects that are being funded through means of the internet. Creating internet fast lanes for large corporations will serve no purpose other than to greatly weaken the best marketing tool that small business owners have ever had.
—Jon Neimeister, San Diego, CA

I own a business.
—Toni Greene, Bernville, PA

I am a freelancer who finds work on the internet, it's an amazing opportunity that never would be able to happen without an equal internet. Please protect small businesses and creatives. And please continue to promote the freedom of speech that we have online, where everyone's voice can be heard.
—Hanna Sandvig, ,

Net Neutrality is what makes the internet great and the single greatest invention of all time.
—Davin Hylton, Longs, SC

I have been using the internet for 19 years, and to be honest, I didnt know much about net neutrality tell about a month ago, but I have come to realize this is one of the most important issues of the 21st century. ISP's cannot be allowed to monopolize the world and I won't sit in my house and let that happen.
—Kyle L Bland, Daphne, AL

The Internet should not be ruled by a select few it is a creation by many. Why should we allow several dumb monopolies to have the right to control what we see and how we get information. We already have enough of that with the news on TV. Stop trying to butt your head into things that don't need fixing. Throw out your proposed rules and reclassify! We the PEOPLE want Net Neutrality. If you don't want to give it to us then you have failed this country.
—Matthew Houston, Fort Worth, TX

I am a future entrepreneur, and a artist. The internet is my best outlet to reach my audience with the resources I have now. Furthermore I feel this can easily lead into Censorship and the crumbling of the 1 st amendment.
—Stephen Rickman, Addison, IL

I am an independent artist who is working on making a living in whole or in part by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet.
—Andrew Del Valle, Sunderland, MA

I live in a rural area that already is handicapped because of limited internet providers. The proposed new rules further empower a few large companies who show no real interest in serving the needs of rural America. Net neutrality is critical to maintaining access, spawning new innovation and keeping the internet highway open to everyone.
—Lesli k. Johnson, Athens, OH

I am a freelancer and I make my living online. I need an equal chance with the big companies. I want my merits and nothing else to determine my place online.
—Jesse Minckler, San Diego, CA

Net neutrality is important to our freedom as Americans. the free exchange of ideas is vital to our democratic for of government. Please act to keep the Internet the way it is now. Reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers. Telecom companies should not be able to control our access to the Internet.
—Heather Wilkinson, Dacula, GA

The internet is a living, breathing entity that should belong to the people by whom it's content is made.
—Raychle, Buford, GA

Its important because of the culture we are creating. We want a new Dali, a new Mozart, a new Michelangelo... there is a lot of people who, if its wasnt for the internet, never be discover. But, if this restrictions are apply, its a huge step back for us as a creative species. Thanks for taking the time to read my concerns. Have a great day.
—Francisco Hidalgo, ,

I work for a startup - without a neutral network we would be at a massive disadvantage
—Bill Tribble, ,

I do not want to see internet access and thoroughfare determined by big business interests. Keep the playing field even.
—Richard Taylor, Atascadero, CA

the internet is a vital source of information for so many people and the largest database of information in the world. limiting people's access to a free internet is limiting access to equal education and inhibiting people's ability to practice free speech.
—Morgan MacRae, Pittsford, NY

We need net neutrality. The internet is a good thing, its a healthy tool for the growth of the lesser significant man. Don't turn it into a tool for those who already have enough power. Spare something for the man at the bottom. Please I appeal to the righteousness in you.
—Dalton Pietersen, ,

I am an artist who makes my living in part by the current equality (neutrality) of the Internet. I believe that it is your responsibility as representatives, to protect REAL Net Neutrality and the “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—Marlene OConnor, Brattleboro, VT

Fairness and open access for all!
—Solveig Spjeldnes, Athens, OH

I pay for it every month. It's mine. I don't want nor need anyone telling me what I can do with my internet service or charging me and arm and a leg for a small handful of websites the FCC deems worthy for my viewing. This is an OUTRAGE!!!
—Chad Benoit, Iowa, LA

With the current economy leaving few options for work and means of taking care of oneself, being able to using your skills to build a business is vital to survival. People are starting small businesses to feel in the gap from lack of jobs. If they are prevented from gaining customers right out the gate, well then our fragile economy will crumble. What's the point of making the internet a money business if few people will have any money to spend on it? I am asking to maintain Net Neutrality because it is a big part of what is keeping us going as a country. People are using the internet in all kinds of creative ways, making money and becoming customers. It keeps our struggling nation afloat, please don't poke holes in our life raft. Now, to get more personal, me and my mom, both collage grads with good grades, plenty of skills, and friendly natures, have been struggling to find any kind of work for the past two years. What has helped us survive is the fact that I can draw, sew, make jewelry and all kinds of crafts. I use the internet to gain customers and keep them informed of new creations. Still, we are not even making ends meet. Without this help from an open internet, well I don't know what will happen to us. We sacrifice many things to keep the internet on because it is our only means of survival right now. We're good people and don't expect much out of life, but if you work hard shouldn't you be able to at least live? Shouldn't you be able to buy food and have heat in the winter? I work very hard, so hard I developed sciatica and it's hard to walk sometimes, but I can take the pain if I know I'll be able to provide for my family. Help us live, please. Keep the internet a level playing field in a world where it is so very heard to find work otherwise. Thank you for your time and thoughtful consideration. May your decision be made wisely.
—Crystal Williams-Brown, Cliffwood, NJ

My freedom depends upon free speech, the same free speech that companies/corporations have, not anything less.
—Kenneth J. Kazmerski, Cocoa Beach, FL

Learn from the past or be condemned to repeat it. Please look at history. Law makers fought to keep big business from doing similar things in the past.
—Chris McKnight, Runnemede, NJ

Comcast is a monopoly--it is the only option I have for internet in my home. They must not be allowed to restrict my access, and I need more choice in internet providers as a consumer.
—Stephanie Cook, Arlington, VA

It is what will allow for the future of American innovation which will otherwise fall behind to other nations who have already approved net neutrality.
—Patrick Burns, Winter Park, FL

Keeping the Internet open is essential to keeping information accessible to everyone. Cable companies are just looking for new ways to charge customers more money. None of this supports anyone else. It's only going to support mega-corporations like Comcast and Verizon and no one else.
—Rosemarie Taylor, Hollywood, FL

The level of connectivity the internet provides makes the collective unconscious of the human race a physical reality. We are all united spiritually by this wonderful network where we're all allowed to express ourselves freely and in ways we couldn't possibly have dreamed of just a few decades ago.
—Eduardo Urena, Winston Salem, NC

Data must remain free to flow without impediment of ANY type and no person or entity should have the right to throttle or limit data transmission in ANY way.
—Bob Johnson, Erie, PA

To keep cost down.
—, Hilliard, OH

The fact that people who have access to certain providers would have a fast lane vrs people in rural areas where comcast or time warner have no foothold is criminal. Its a monopoly an we are against that in this country.
—Justin Kimbrell, White Hall, AR

Dear Chairman, You keep telling us that you are a champion for the open internet. Now, some people may believe you and some may be sceptical of your good intentions. But in 10-15 years there won't be any ambiguity and everyone will know what your true intentions were. When you choose your position now try not to listen to your old "friends" from lobbying days. Think about your legacy. Think about how you will be remembered in history. Do you really want the name Wheeler to become a shorthand for a sell-out who killed inventive, creative, entrepreneurial, fun, free side of the Internet? There is still time to be a hero of the people. But for that you've got to sever some old ties. It may sound scarry but it is going to be worth it. People will remember your choice for generations to come. Best regards, Oleg Volkov.
—Oleg Volkov, Dallas, TX

The big internet service providers are already too big and too powerful. Customer service is TERRIBLE - worse than any other industry I've dealt with. We have too few choices of companies to deal with, and any rules on the internet should cater to giving consumers better choices, rather than more power to these big companies. There should be no fast lanes, there should be open and equal internet for everyone.
—Casey Roe, Durham, NC

The internet is a conduit for free speech, education and other civil liberties that are my rights as a citizen of this country. Corporate involvement will impede my basic human rights and should be seen as a red flag. The two tiered system is divisive and will have a negative impact on the future of the internet. As a parent, I want my daughter to the have the ability to express and source information that is important to her freely and fairly.
—Christina Wisboro, Brooklyn, NY

I am a family man, entrepreneur and general technical enthusiast. Net Neutrality is essential to our rights and technical growth. we need this to stay neutral.
—Alex Wade, Columbia, SC

The internet should be a place where everyone can participate, innovate and create opportunity. These large businesses see an opportunity to loot and pillage unchecked and it's not okay!
—Myrica von Haselberg, Milwaukee, WI

I am an independent artist working on making a living on the internet. These laws could effectively prevent me from doing so.
—Ashley Dadoun, ,

I have built my career off of Net Neutrality and I feel that giving the power to large corporations will only create more division between the upper crust and the average person. This division has never worked to the benefit of society as a whole in the long run. Please don't do this.
—Jesse Smith, Chesterfield, VA

It is important to keep the internet free and fair, free of corruption.
—Joaquin barreto, San Jose, CA

The Internet is a place of opportunity for many individuals and small businesses. It is a universal resource available to a wide array of people that collectively improve its structure. Modifying this concept in any way is a violation of users rights that have evolved over the years.
—Sean Doyce, Chicago, IL

Hello. I've been using the Internet since 1995 and making a living on it since 1996. The work I've been able to have thanks to the web hasn't only supported my family ever since, but also has allowed me to gather knowledge and know people and places around the world I couldn't have known otherwise. I am currently out of a job but I'm working hard to fulfill a long cherished dream: create my own agency focused on character design and stories for kids. These days, you are not limited to your immediate surroundings to get customers and financial success. They can come from all corners of the world - you never know. Without the Internet, it would be virtually impossible for a single person like me to achieve this single-handed. Pretending to impose differentiated Internet access categories destroys the level playing field that has allowed me and countless other professionals to flourish and prosper, regardless of nationality, origin or wealth. Millions of jobs, specially in third world countries, will be lost. Many customers won't be able to find professionals like us, and we won't be able to find them either. And innovation, being the Internet a virtual synonym of it, will definitely stagnate. Everybody loses. The blind, oblivious greed of some big shot American executives should not impose itself over the jobs, interests and passions of millions of people all over the world. Going back to "the way things were" is not an option. Please reconsider the devastating worldwide effects such a rules placement may have. Thanks.
—Alberto Gonzalez, Miami, FL

Because it is my right, don't ask someone why he asks for his right...
—George Drone, ,

I need the internet to run my small business. My business runs on the cloud and speed and access are vital to our ability to run our business.
—Leo Daprile, Youngstown, OH

It is not important to me right now, but soon to be. I follow up on artists and have friends that are artists, who use the Internet as a very accessible way to promote and share their work. It seems that without Net Neutrality, this accessibility will be lost, and it would be very hard for them for their work to get the recognition it deserves. The main idea, I would think, that revolves around people's complaints about the impending loss of net neutrality is accessibility. Many artists found on the Internet have used this way of promotion because it doesn't require a large amount of money to be invested; noting that many artists are either freelancers or aspiring artists who don't have the money to promote their work in other, more expensive ways. The Internet, with Net Neutrality, also enables artists to share their work with an online community that is more likely to recognise it, whereas in many societies, art is not widely recognised. This Net Neutrality, I believe, would not only impact artists aspiring, or working in visual art. It may also affect any creative works, such as videos and music. Just like before, Net Neutrality enables them to easily promote their content without paying large sums of money to do it through other, less accessible means. So why is it important to me? I would like to think that as an aspiring artist, in the years to come where I would like to use the Internet as a means of promotion of my work, without Net Neutrality, it may make this attempt near impossible. In relation to this very moment, the absence of Net Neutrality may mean that further works of artists, as well as other creative content developers, will only come through to their fans and viewers with great difficulty, if it comes through at all. I really hope that this impending loss of Net Neutrality is halted, for the rights of those who work hard to make themselves and their content known via the Internet, which in itself is still not an easy process, even though it is extremely accessible.
—John, ,

It's my freedom and constitutional right as an American. What I do online is my choice I do not need, nor want a dictator or intrusive spy watching me.
—Sonia medina, Mesa, AZ

WE can barely make ends meet, don't have tv, don't go anywhere and the only joy we have is on the internet. If they do this I just wish we could all go without technology and live like the caveman, forget government forget it all....
—Tina Hesskew, Blanco, TX

It's hard enough to get your voice heard on the internet as it is, when you have something to say but no resources, but it is possible. This would make it impossible.
—Andrew Wright, North Hollywood, CA

Keep it FAIR!
—Christopher J Rohrbach, Nashville, TN

So I can choose what is important and not the internet.
—Jenine Wright, Portland, OR

I think all people, should be treated the same, rich or poor. I am now a senior and an everyday internet user, If I was charged for using something like surfing the internet for social security or other related things it would be a burden to me.
—Judy Woody, Lineville, AL

I use the internet every day and I don't want the way I use it to change to satisfy corporate greed. There has been limited access to the internet for low income and rural populations all along which keeps them from staying as connected as other people who have access. Enough with the "haves" and the "have nots". The internet belongs to everyone.
—Dian Rogers, Quincy, MA

The internet should be free. Period. I am so SICK of our society's profit over people mentality.
—Brittany Williams, Chicago, IL

Journalistic freedom, Free speech, Creativity, fair pricing for consumers, and truly fair competition in a truly free market economy.
—Jon Russell, Nebo, KY

I Demand nothing less than real Net Neutrality
—Tami, Montgomery, TX

Broadband is a communication medium, which should be equally accessible and for all.
—Charles Watson, Lancaster, CA

I'm appalled at the idea of losing Net Neutrality. As a consumer, I don't want my internet service provider dictating the priority of my internet content. I want the websites of my favorite authors and artists, my local paper, and my friend's blog - all of whom have limited budgets - to load just as fast as Netflix. If the big box stores start paying for the fast lane, we'll become accustomed to faster internet. And then everybody else's sites will feel incredibly slow. Ever try to use a dial-up connection after a year of enjoying broadband? It's painful! And if we're reluctant to visit the sites of small businesses, many small sites will eventually die off. Imagine how our cities would look if we ONLY had big box stores like Wal-Mart and Best Buy. Imagine independent bookstores, art galleries, clothing boutiques, and all the other little wonderful shops that give a town character disappearing. That's what will happen on the Internet if Net Neutrality dies. We will lose the wonderful innovation and idiosyncracies that has made the internet so incredible. What's more, we will lose the platform that enables startups and small business and entrepreneurs to succeed and become bigger businesses. A website is a vital part of a business's marketing plan, and hundreds of thousands of businesses would not exist if the internet wasn't a level playing field. Do away with Net Neutrality, and you do away with business, jobs, and a good chunk of the economy. As a web designer who works with small businesses almost exclusively, the thought of my clients being unable to sustain their enterprises because they can't pay for the fast lane is unacceptable. Much as I would wish it otherwise, there already is a limited type of "Internet fast lane" in place. Companies like Amazon and Target can afford beefier, dedicated servers that deliver their content faster that someone on a basic level shared hosting plan. So doing away with Net Neutrality is, in fact, unnecessary if the goal is to enable certain sites to load faster. If a customer (who is, let me remind you, always right) is dissatisfied, he or she can usually take their business elsewhere. Except not with internet services providers. In almost all neighborhoods, there's only one ISP to choose from. You can have internet, or not have it. You can't shop around unless you sell your house! And if ISPs have the ability to make more money by charging for fast lanes, they all will. We customers won't have a choice. A handful of cable company execs want to end Net Neutrality. They are not your customers. The government's customers are the American people, and we want an open, equal Internet where anyone can start a business in the basement and watch it become successful. Listen to your customers.
—Kira Woodmansee, Boulder, CO

The internet is simply, one of the most important inventions in human history. It is a true open forum for ideas and opinions to be expressed openly. To put the ability to control access to this information in the hands of businesses is wrong.
—Andrew Mickelson, Hyde Park, UT

It is important because freedom is the right of all sentient beings and the internet is my freedom.
—AJ York, Cincinnati, OH

Its giving the companies too much power. They will do anything to make more money.
—Aaron Jeffers, San Antonio, TX

The freedom of the internet has let to an almost unimaginable diversity of information and choice. We must preserve and expand this medium of free exchange, not relinquish it to be monetized by corporations with no regard for democracy. Please do the right thing.
—William Feetham, Eagle Point, OR

As an artist, as well as one who simply enjoys the online works of other dedicated visual storytellers, it pains me to hear of discrimination being in play in regards to the fast lane/slow lane proposition. Please, reconsider this proposition. Restore nondiscrimination.
—Kellie Robinson, Thousand Oaks, CA

The information superhighway should be an equal playing field that welcomes true democracy and competition. Why is there a need to provide different levels of internet speed for different companies? Let's not create a "Colored" and "White" water fountain situation for the internet please. Stop trying to suck $$$$$ out of everything that you do.
—Matthew Midon, Philadelphia, PA

This country started with freedom of speech, etc. I want to keep it that way.
—Debbie Zimmermann, Flagler Beach, FL

Internet access should be equal for all just as telephone service was, faster speeds and availability should not be up for sale as this is disparate treatment for certain classes of our society and access to reliable internet is vital for all.
—Candice Carden-Chambers, Canton, GA

The internet needs to remain open. A two-tiered system could enable exclusive deals such as having to subscribe to Comcast in order to watch Netflix or view certain popular websites such as Google.
—Jason Conner, Mobile, AL

If net neutrality were to disappear, small businesses and startups would continue to become extinct as bigger companies and websites will be a few steps closer to becoming a monopoly.
—Daniel Delgado, Chicago, IL

I support Net Neutrality. leave the internet alone please. Open, free.
—Charles C., Phoenix, AZ

freedom of information !!!!!!!!!!!!!!
—Gert Caspritz, Belmont, MA

As an IT student and online entrepreneur net neutrality has always allowed my customers to use my websites as quick and easy as the big companies. Without this, I fear my customers will go to the companies who can afford "fast Lane" internet because this day and age of people have no patience, especially when it comes to internet speeds. Changing the internet speeds will essentially cause an even more gross monopoly in this country.
—Andrew Scott, Waltham, MA

Im an advocate for democratization of everything.
—Emily Funk, Ames, IA

The ability to search whatever I need to is a freedom I can't live without!!!
—Julie Thayer, Caseyville, IL

Internet nondiscrimination is essential to our constitutional rights. Controlling the internet is controlling information.
—Erin Funkhouser, Rochester, PA

IT IS NECESSARY FOR OUR FREEDOM!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
—Keith Soto, North Hollywood, CA

The internet must be equal and free through and through, it is our source of information and has become a huge part of everyday life.
—Josh Perez, New York, NY

it's just wrong. taking the internet and using it to create more and more big corporations that take from the poor. the internet should be for anyone you use in private. period!
—Lisa Mezick, Ocean Springs, MS

Because the Net is the best avenue to truth for the citizen.
—Gary M. Griffin, Hyde Park, MA

Where does it stop? If you take away my free speech on the internet we are no better than we were before 1776. We are a country of laws and rules that are defined by the Constitution. By passing such a law you are destroying the foundation of the country. Do you really want to be responsible for the degradation of the greatest country? Crime will always happen and the internet may make it easier but think of it as job security for those that monitor the criminals out there. I strongly urge you to take into consideration for what you are trying to do and I hope you make the right decision in this matter.
—Matthew Bowen, Gilroy, CA

I don't want there being restrictions or additional costs to innovation or freedom.
—Sam Hawkins, Arlington, VA

I am already paying over $200 per month for TV access, by allowing the same companies to control my Internet access I can see it will soon be priced beyond what any reasonable user can afford.
—ben Berry, los gatos, CA

Everyone has right to be treated equally regardless what web content is provided. It is each individual's right to decide which web content to see.
—C H, Fremont, CA

It's important to anyone who wants to keep the internet alive, thriving and free from corporate manipulation.
—Brian R Wingrove, Streetsboro, OH

Thank you for your time. Keeping the internet available for all is just essential. Imagine the world during the 20th Century without, say, public libraries or schools - imagine the loss in basic human potential without those two simple things that we take for granted. The internet is that and more in this digital era. It's the way people of all ages learn, communicate, engage in entrepreneurship, share ideas and innovate at a rate and speed unheard of in recorded history. Putting these ideals and concepts in the hands of mega corporations is simply wrong - even for the corporations! An open internet is one of the only things that guarantees their future business - cutting your numbers by more than half to offer a smaller percentage of folks a quality experience? If you understand where "content" comes from, the stuff that populates the web, and keeps even the biggest sites, like Facebook, relevant and generating huge sums of money,you would understand how these new laws could destroy all of that - human and profit potential.
—Mal Little, Staten Island, NY

It allows the free spread of information and opinions of the American people to be spread without being filtered through major corporations and businesses.
—Ben Skelley, California, MD

I believe that the freedom to express views and consume content from a variety of un-screened sources is crucial to becoming an informed and engaged citizen. I believe that allowing ISPs to "gatekeep" and monitor or influence information flow will skew the wealth and power distribution farther towards large corporations and political parties.
—Jordan Fonseca, Albuquerque, NM

The downfall of true net neutrality will lead to even further polarization among our great nation. Ultimately this would give way too much power to large corporations, where those people with money will be able to continue to divide our nation into the have's and have not. Removing true net neutrality will have catastrophically negative effects on our society in the future. Please do not move forward with the currently proposed rule changes. We cannot even fathom the future implications this will have on our nation and society.
—Andy Pecora, Boston, MA

As a person who is a content creator, these new rules would extremely damage my way of making a living. "Net Neutrality" has come up again and again, and it's never been a good idea, and it still isn't a good idea. No company should be given this much power over our lives.
—Aja Moore-Young, Hagerstown, MD

I have been a comic artist hobbyist for 7 years now; I've dedicated a great portion of my best years to building an empire; I have not made waves like some comic artists and perhaps will never 'break into' the comic scene. Despite the internet being global, I've found that physical location reduces the chance of successfully networking and meeting with others in the scene (which holds most sway in the US). I've reached out nonetheless to the big-leagues for advice, exposure etc... but I've never been able to engage as a peer. The independent scene is the last bastion of those artists dreaming of having their stories heard and appreciated and has allowed people like myself to at least be a part of some sort of community without having to pay for the privilege to join. I happen to think I'm only ever one comic away from recognition; sure, just like every garage-band out there but I can't compete against this; this would be like america's got talent surely? In which there is only one winner and a great deal of losers. seems a sure-fire way to remain in obscurity. My experience has shown that comic artists (me in particular) use it as an expression since I suffer from social anxiety and depression; when I'm creating though (and feeling like this one picture will potentially reach anyone anywhere) I can feel for a short while, connected. I don't want to lose that; I'm not sure I'd know what I'd do if the internet went all hunger-games. this would activley limit young (and old artists); if this had happened in literature, would we be happy to allow only the wealthy and connected to write? This is one step from revisionism. please think on this and please, I would be more than happy to discuss this further (and a whole lot more eloquently) at your convenience
—David Mutton, ,

If we do not preserve Net Neutrality then we are telling the current and future generations that if you can dream it then you can do it...provided you dream it at one of the larger companies with the deep pockets. That is just plain wrong! If Net Neutrality had not been present when Google, Facebook, and Netflix where started then we wouldn't know their names today. Please, scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service.
—Shawn Peters, New Braunfels, TX

As a Republican and a Christian, free Internet is important to me. Being able to express my views on the Internet how I choose should be a fundamental right of Americans. Government should prevent a monopoly if the company has been exposed abusing customers with deceit, lies, and harmful practices. As a Conservative, I will make an exception to my belief on free trade on the basis that Comcast/Time Warner/Cox will ONLY get worse from here.
—Timothy Lanning, Cibolo, TX

This proposed bill goes against almost every bit of knowledge and common sense I have. Improve infrastructure and capabilities of our nation's Internet connectivity instead of giving another industry regulation that reverses innovation and growth.
—Joseph Goldstein, Purchase, NY

I'm an avid gamer and the idea that me and my wife need to pay extra just to enjoy ourselves is like charging you more for reading different kinds of books against your will —Vassily aliseyko, ,

The internet is the greatest tool for open communication and information that has ever been created. It is a wonder of the modern world and should be protected as a medium for businesses, communities, and learning. Also, anything that contributes to the ever increasing gaps between the haves and have nots in America is counter productive to the well being of the country.
—Charles Dickerson, Aberdeen, NC

While I'm sure your former employers would love to abolish net neutrality, without it our economy will suffer worse. What the ISPs want is to line their own pockets and to hell with anyone else. For amny people, the internet is a source for job hunting and de-stressing from either working three jobs to keep afloat or to distract themselves from having no income and being dependent on friends or family while they look for jobs that pay less and less in the hopes of finding something. The bread is already getting too pricey, do not cause the circuses to be only for the wealthy too. About now, those are the only things keeping the modern Rome from burning.
—Pamela Harris, Bayonne, NJ

The internet is and should always be a free collective of information. No one owns the internet, big business included.
—Kaitlyn Hix, Torrance, CA

please keep the democratization of the internet alive and scrap our proposed rules.
—Benjamin Orphan Eksouzian, San Leandro, CA

We are not a society anymore. It's now take as much as you can as often as you can.
—Uyless Muse, Clinton, LA

The Internet was developed with public funds. It be regulated like a public utility. Net Neutrality insures equal access for freedom of speech, information and the ability for small independent business to compete with corporations. Keep the playing field free and fair.
—Ross Adam Smith, Fairfax, CA

It interferes with freedom of speech when my isp can determine what i have access to —Sarah B, The Colony, TX

I believe in the right to an open internet, and I am opposed to regulating what information can be seen due to its origin.
—Elle Siegmund, Tampa, FL

Because the internet, arguably the greatest invention in human history, should remain an equal playing field for all parties involved.
—Andy Mool, Pittsburgh, PA

Fair trade and fair opportunities for all businesses and everyone who uses the internet.
—Nicole Brown, Ossining, NY

Internet = knowledge = power
—Josh Kucharski, Pittsburgh, PA

Net Neutrality is a key proponent to everyone. It is the one place where everyone can be on even ground, it doesn't matter age, gender, race, anything, we are all the same. The minute you allow "the man" to take control of what we see and what we do, and allow them to throw their political agendas in our faces, we lose all sense of that freedom. This would be unjust to Americans, and would give other countries free reign to continue to advance further than we allow ourselves. Please, keep the internet neutral with free access for everyone!
—Aaron Pratt, Clearfield, UT

I demand real Net Neutrality rules that protect Internet users from corporate abuse. The concept of fast lanes for those who can afford it and dirt roads for the rest of us is un-American.
—James Pleasants, Austin, TX

Where we live the best internet available is very slow.If this goes thought our internet would be unusable.
—Wesley Rogers, Portland, TN

Net Neutrality just seems like a given. The internet is a free, vast source of knowledge and resources, as well as exposure for creatives such as myself. Trying to limit that solely for profit will only serve to hurt the audience you're trying to control. The internet should remain open and accessible by everyone for the sake of small businesses, independents, and the general populous.
—Josh G., Kansas City, MO

The internet is not broken as stands. It is the voice of a generation and should be kept at the level playing field for all people. Please dont let your greed get the better of your morals and make a decision that we obviously dont want.
—Corvin Pryor, Minneapolis, MN

Keep freedom of speech free!
—Kevin Scicluna, Astoria, NY

I am one of hundreds of millions of "little guys (and gals)" in America. Net neutrality is the only way we get to have a level playing field with the "big guys" on the Internet.
—Kofi Opantiri, Los Angeles, CA

It affects too many aspects of our day-to-day lives and interactions with others. I would feel my rights would be violated in that, "Who are they to decide how I interact online and what I can see if I am paying for the service of accessing the WHOLE internet?!"
—Cristine Roby, Roanoke, VA

In order to safe guard our freedom
—Paul T. Allen, Livonia, MI

I am a small business owner & 99% of my clients come from online marketing.
—Tara Cope, Claremore, OK

As an artist I need a level playing field for my work
—Neil Kapit, Los Angeles, CA

Why is the ability to access all the information available equally important?
—Ryan Anderson, Miami, FL

Fairness to ALL!
—Denise Kline, Colorado Springs, CO

It is important to me because those who can barely pay the fee already would have to stop having internet
—Elizabeth, Madison, NJ

I was born in the USA in1946. I grew up respecting our government and believing this country was the greatest country in the world. I served in the USMC in Vietnam and believed in what we were doing there. I was wrong. I also believed that America was a free country and that we all had a say in our government through the political process. I now know that this is no longer true. Large private interests decide who will run for office through their monetary support. No matter which party wins the election, the candidates support these interests in return for the money to run their campaign. We no longer have any substantial value systems that we support as a government. We are no longer one nation under God. We have been involved in unjust wars that have bankrupted our country of its finances and its moral authority and taken the lives thousands of young men, while destabilizing the areas involved to a degree that ensures continuing blood shed. These proposed rules are yet another step to reduce the rights and freedoms of the average citizen while enabling the rich to become even more wealthy at the expense of the rest of us. This message will, I am sure, have no impact whatsoever on your decision because the America I grew up in has been destroyed, as President Eisenhower so presciently predicted, by the military industrial complex. I miss America and am deeply saddened that my grandchildren will never know the great country I once knew.
—Joe Schrader, Paso Robles, CA

From what I have read, I believe that net neutrality is the only way to keep the internet freely accessible for all users. I understand that the proposed new rules will allow telecom giants to control the internet and the costs to consumers, be they corporations or an individual like myself. Maintain the policy of net neutrality.
—, Milwaukee, WI

It gives the freedom to communicate to whom I want, as I do in my real life. No one can say to me to whom I can speak, or how to speak, where to go, etc. Seems like ISP's are trying to introduce a new way of Dictatorship? No one can take my right of free communication.
—Nikola Ivanov, ,

I have friends and family with business that depend on a FREE AND UNBIASED version of the internet... I and millions more now have a life that has been built upon this form of communication. Do not let a few "people" rule over us. This is digital imperialism and it stops now.
—Olivia Angell, Calistoga, CA

Duh! I'm a consumer who benefits from fair access to a wider variety of online content. Inhibiting my ease of access to products/services based on those entities ability to pay extra fees is ridiculous. There are plenty of other services that telecommunications companies can use to make more money, but anything that puts smaller companies, and the consumers at a disadvantage is seems like tampering with a free market.
—Rachel Hall, Mooresville, NC

Net net neutrality stands between freedom and a brutal totalitarian governance by an evil and cowardly elite.
—Roy Archer, Lanett, AL

A free and open Internet ensures fair pricing, promotes innovation, and creates competition between ISPs.
—John Delaney, Antioch, TN

Government over-regulation is the basis of everything that is wrong with the world - don't start it here and now. The Internet in and of itself is a Laissez-Faire entity, run of the people, by the people, and for the people. Any regulation of how the masses communicate and express themselves is a travesty and has no place in the United States of America.
—Brian Jones, New Hyde Park, NY

Please keep the internet free! That is what it was designed for!!!!!!!!!!!!
—Maura Wesen, Rosemount, MN

Painfully obvious that it stifle's innnovation
—Gavin N Lipscomb, Lawrenceville, GA

Net Neutrality is important to me because Internet is my main path of communication with the world.
—Diana Logreira, Washington, DC

Net Neutrality is important to the world. It allows everyone the same chance to start a company and be successful. Please do not create rules that allows billion dollar companies to unjustly enrich themselves at the expense of innovation and progress. Sincerely, Clark Kent ending net neutrality is a horrible idea.
—Clark Kent, Englewood, NJ

—Nick, Maryville, MO

It needs to stay open
—Kathy Viers, Johnson City, TN

Freedom of speech is a basic human right not just in the US declared in the Declaration and the Constitution but for every human being. Also this goes against a free market system it is like communism or extreme socialism on the internet. Lastly, the internet has almost become a necessity for the world especially in the developed world, and with the cost of living rising this will have to be forfeited threatening many opportunities.
—Dylan Pasco, Forked River, NJ

Since its inception, the worldwide web has enabled a platform to exercise free speech in an exciting and expansive way. Net Neutrality ensures that this expression of the 1st ammendment continue as is and without interruption. It is my plea that the FCC reclassify broadband as a telecommunications service.
—Barry Longhauser, Chicago, IL

Net Neutrality is a democratic right for all citizens for a desire to access information equally.
—Steven, Brimfield, IL

The ones that would suffer under these changes are not the big corporations who can afford to either pay these fees or pass the fees onto it's costumers, it is the people who make up the backbone of our country. Small business owners, the middle class, the poor and everyone who is not a supplier of internet of in the pockets of the internet supplier. The laws we live under should not be formed to make money for those who have enough but to protect and serve the people. I don't care if "corporations are people." They will never be more important that a living, breathing, feeling human being.
—Heather Bell, Colorado Springs, CO

because as a student I need an open internet for proper research for my assignments.
—Caleb Villegas, Kansas City, KS

As an internet user I understand the needs of a neutral internet for all those who use it for communication, education, business and recreational reasons. Keeping the internet open to all without restrictions is important for all the constructive uses we as people have found to be convenient and helpful.
—Winona Young, Albuquerque, NM

I think free speech will be curtailed and the great media lobby will get what they desire if this bill gets passed.
—Jason Cooper, Miami Beach, FL

Doesn't this nation have a core belief that we can build our dreams from the bottom up?
—Brittany J Du Pont, Chillicothe, IL

Not everyone can afford high priced things. It isn't fair
—James Santillanes, Albuquerque, NM because it allows access to everyone not based on wealth, well, almost.

—Suzanna Kaplan, Van Nuys, CA

Once again it looks like big money and lobbyist will have a greater influence on your decision than the betterment of the common good.
—Jeffrey Seborowski, Lake Orion, MI

As a small time blogger, I've just dicovered putting up my own flash video's and watching you tube to learn new things. Net neutrality allows me to speak up in a crowded place where taking this away will stifle me for the big dollar players. Once again if you take away net neutrality we will have pay for play and loss of free expression.
—Michael Vasko, West Chester, PA

I care about equal access for everyone. It's a civil right.
—Janine Gardner, Middleboro, MA

I support Net Neutrality because the internet is a service that is heavily depended upon by a vast majority of the united states, and should be considered a utility like telephone and electricity. Tiered internet would hamper users and creators who cannot afford to pay the extra fees and overall negatively impact the useability and value of such a vital resource. Internet is not a luxury, and everyone should be granted equal access.
—Zach Rubenstein, Saint Paul, MN

Because I'm use the internet for school and leisure and don't want a two tier system that would make speedy connection impossible for me to afford —Hannah Holcomb, Hollywood, FL getting rid of net neutrality will crush smaller sites and only help giants like youtube and facebook

—Ian Baker, ,

Freedom of speech.
—Cas, Lexington, VA

I am an independent artist who makes my living off of the internet. Net Neutrality is vital for me to take care of my family and my career. Please, for countless creatives and future creatives, throw out the proposed rules and reclassify. Keep the Big Money away from those of us who have a level playing field that is so vital for our survival. Thank you.
—Garth Bruner, Sandy, UT

It preserves my right to freely communicate and receive communications without discrimination and insures that content will not be blocked by a common carrier.
—Milana Tomec, Granger, IN

No one should have the right to discriminate.....bananas
—Georgette Collins, Dallas, TX

FCC Mr. Chairman you promised us and now you are just like the rest! The Internet should remain free and open!
—Steven Sanders, Parker, CO

it should be fast and affordable for all people
—Chuck Schwaben, Woodsfield, OH

I use the internet everyday! I already pay for internet connection I certainly don't want to pay more on top of that for decent service. The internet is the only place where you can express yourself freely regardless of anyone else's opinion or views. And think of all the personal information companies will lose! If people are restricted to certain websites or certain opinions how will you get accurate information on the most popular products? The most well agreed opinions? The internet needs to stay free! Support real net neutrality!
—Jodi Campbell, Lake Havasu City, AZ

Without net neutrality, ISPs WILL charge even more money without actually improving the internet. ISPs would also be able to legally “sensor” content they disagreed with. Losing net neutrality would be devastating to small businesses and/or startups that depend on internet sales to grow their business. It would also create modern, legalized segregation because poor communities who couldn’t pay higher prices to their ISP would no longer be able to use the internet.
—Gayle Bresnahan, San Diego, CA

Net Neutrality is important for this nation to strive, to learn, and to be the adventurous people we are. This adventurous behavior, such as an entrepreneur looking up something on the open internet so that he can better build his business will intern help our GDP in the long run and also help our nation. Restricting the use of the internet is not advantageous to our kids future, or education. Also, these companies that are trying to regulate the traffic on the open internet May own rights to data space, but have no right to monopolize one of our most glorious and most used freedoms.
—Slade Buell, Fort Worth, TX

Net Neutrality is important in my life because it allows me the right to do what I want on the internet, and not be forced in strict corridors. I don't want ISP's telling me what I can and can't do, and I don't want to be forced to be charged extra fees when my family is already poor. Please let us have our REAL Net Neutrality.
—James Matthews, Saint Johns, FL

It is important because we cannot let capitalism take control of the internet. Without a doubt, the internet is one of the most leading and prosperous industries in the nation. We cannot keep letting ISP Competitive Monopolies "take our lunch money and stuff us in lockers", by them enforcing that companies pay for fast lanes. The problem is that some of the websites are unable to pay the ISPs for the fast lane, leaving those who can pay for it more likely to succeed in terms of website performance. Free websites may have to get their users to pay for certain things within their website. We shall not let this issue be swept under the rug like we did in the 1800s with slavery and ended up having to fight a war to solve the problem. Now I am not saying that this will start a Civil War, but It will nonetheless cause a crisis upon the internet that may be catastrophic. I say we not only fix the Internet, but we must fix government agencies and branches. We shall also enact laws in which disallow the appointment in government officials that and or somewhat are affiliated with lobbyists or major companies. If we fix the FCC where only members have no affiliation with ISPs in any way, we can prevent this from happening again. Another possibility is to leave the decision of Net Neutrality up to "popular sovereignty", where the people vote for it on a national scale and give all decisions regarding the internet up to the people themselves. If our representative and senator leaders cant take action, then let the people represent themselves. The internet is created by the people, for the people, and in that it shall be equal.
—Matthew Dickens, Friendswood, TX

Because the internet helps with education and entertainment in a very big way.
—William Harrell, Reidsville, NC

I don't have to explain my reasoning, for as a free American of the United States, I demand to have the freedom to look at what I please whenever I please on whatever device I please AND paid for.
—Olivia Simonetti, Gaithersburg, MD

Would you do this with Roads? Water? Air? Only the rich can breathe high quality air and drink clean water? Unless we pay a huge fee, we drink putrid muddy water and breathe foul sooty air? If we are going to trust a Machiavellian private economy with our most precious resources the government must regulate them properly. (1)Those of us not lucky enough to be born into wealth have only the internet for quality education. Beyond that, knowledge is a fundamentally public good contributed to by those of all socioeconomic classes. The lottery of birth has already enslaved our bodies, our minds are the only freedom most Americans have. I was able to teach myself graduate level Quantum Field Theory with the Cambridge online video archives. MIT, Yale, Cal Tech, and plenty of other educational institutions offer free sublime quality educational materials online including actual lecture videos, notes, and homework assignments. Imagine a society in which anyone can learn advanced math and physics with the click of a mouse. Would we trust ISPs not to ruthlessly profiteer off of such services? If you understood the time and work educators put in, and the meaning, beauty, and enrichment that learners got out, you would protect such services like our national park system. (2) The internet has streamlined patenting, legal procedures, marketing, entrepreneurship, research and development, and invented entirely new economic activities to boost. Net neutrality will harm the economy irreparably cutting any type of competition against large-cap companies. These companies will become complacent, prices will skyrocket, and quality of goods and services will plummet. The internet was a great equalizer for the small business owner, now they could finally compete with established giants. Patents were easier than ever to secure so brilliant minds could prosper uninhibited by a dependence on venture capitalists. Again, don't trust an unregulated market system designed to harness human greed as a motor with playing fair.
—Kyle Bomeisl, Hawthorne, NJ

As a aspiring illustrator, animator, I feel the internet, as presently constituted, has enabled numerous creative individuals, partnerships and teams, from the U.S. and around the World, as small start ups, to compete with established incumbents and multinational corporations. This bottom up, diverse, pluralism, in creative content, will be threatened by a tiered internet which will reward the well capitalized businesses at the expense of international small businesses and start ups.
—Dennis R. Dix, Pinole, CA

It is vital since people use the Internet on their daily lives and with a proposal that gives benefit only to the companies, is wrong. The consequences are disastrous and a sequence of corruption will permeate. Why make the Internet service more complex? People deserve the right to use the Internet and making them pay more screams corruption.
—, Los Angeles, CA

The internet is how i learn things out of school because the education system is basically training us to be mindless factory workers.
—Becky Gonzalez, McAllen, TX

I don't want telecom companies dictating which internet company is going to succeed and which one it wants to fail.
—Renato HIdalgo, Oxnard, CA

We need our freedom even with internet.
—Caleb Conwell, Tulsa, OK

This threatens our constitutional rights. It gives unfair advantage to companies that are already ahead and dissolves innovation in it's initial stages. It hurts communication and diversity on the internet. It's oppressive and greedy!
—Abigail O'Sullivan, Clinton, PA

The Internet is one place where true freedom of speech and EQUAL access to information is available to all. Please, let us not corrupt that.
—Linda Lee Rathbun, Naples, FL

I'm a Professor of Medicine at Johns Hopkins University. I use the Internet to publish my widely-read column at Forbes and, more importantly, to distribute my research results and free software to thousands of scientists around the world.
—Steven Salzberg, Baltimore, MD

I am an independent artist who needs fair & equal representation on the internet in order to survive. I am only one in a very large community that would suffer should net neutrality be squashed. Our world deserves independent creativity, freedom of expression and access to information - not a corporate sponsored web that tells us what we should like.
—Miss Diana Roberts, Costa Mesa, CA

I already pay for my internet connection, I should be able to use that connection however I want.
—Jesse Shaver, San Francisco, CA

The internet is the world's stage. To allow unequal footing on the world's stage is Un-American.
—Caroline Kutschera, Ronkonkoma, NY

Net Neutrality benefitts small business, i'm working for.
—Mark Bröcker, ,

The internet has become possibly the most important way for people to communicate and make themselves be heard. Moreover, much of the content on the internet is made by volunteers, free of charge. What is happening is that the FCC will allow internet providers to effectively charge toll access for content made freely by others.
—Lars Juhl Jensen, ,

It keeps America on equal terms with most of the rest of the developed world.
—William Hofman, Fort Wayne, IN

It is absolutely necessary for an open, free society and for a strong, globally competitive economy.
—Andrew F. Seila, Bogart, GA

An internet that does not have a toll gate around it is important for the continued growth of the us
—Jerry Broughton, Harrisburg, PA

The Internet should be treated like any other utility, NOT by private providers.
—John Paul English, Austin, TX

I can't afford internet
—Charles T Miles, Philadelphia, PA

This goes against the Constitution
—Richard Moussignac, Brighton, MA

...are you kidding me??? this is supposed to be a free country "... with liberty and justice for all". I demand REAL Net Neutrality; anything less is an attack on my rights to connect and communicate!
—Bernadette Levesque, brooklyn park, MN

The internet as we know it has been one of the greatest engines of economic growth and open exchange of ideas this country has ever seen. It is a fundamental national and international communication resource, not a content delivery tool to be controlled by a small handful of for-profit companies. It is arguably as important, or more, than traditional phone lines for modern communication.
—Joseph Miska, TARPON SPRINGS, FL

We cannot have corporations monopolizing the internet and causing us to have to pay more on our already expensive services. This country was built on destroying monopolies. The passing of this would be allowing such activity to occur. STOP NET NEUTRALITY.
—Johnathon Zawadzki, Staten Island, NY

Allowing any near monopolistic company unregulated operational polices means POOR consumer choices and overbearing pricing.
—Tommy Reid, Baytown, TX

Because the Internet, as it currently exists, is how it should be. Monopolies like Comcast, Time Warner, etc., cannot be trusted to operate the internet fairly, as proven by the fact that year in and year out, they've either won or were in contention for the title of Worst Company in America.
—Angel Rodriguez, Elizabeth, NJ

Because without it, my business or furthering education with minimal cost would be, impossible.
—Bill Haley, Reno, NV

I am concerned about the potential for content censorship as well as monopoly control over such an important resource allowing cable companies to charge exorbitant fees to access certain content.
—Kimball Ward, Murray, UT

Without net neutrality, ISPs have too much control over content, and power corrupts. I don't trust these companies to not exploit this power, and think the potential gains are far outweighed by these costs.
—Ye Li, Riverside, CA

The telephone bill is complex enough; Let's not duplicate it!
—Stephen Wimberly, Atlanta, GA

Because I care about free speech
—Lina Faller, New York, NY

I don't think it's right to try and control Internet capabilities and retard the growth of the middle and lower class and their ability to innovate and improve by limiting what they can access based on what they can afford. Also access to information is so important in today's society and limiting that based on income is also ridiculous.
—Ashton Clawson, Aurora, CO

The internet is a resource, a tool, and a way to communicate with other people quickly and easily. Keep it that way!!!
—Lynn Kupfer, Scott, LA

As a citizen of the United States, I object to the proposed rules which would restrict my access to the internet.
—Ron Rosenthal, La Palma, CA

What is free speech if you are not allowed to communicate it.
—Sam Imigin, Knoxville, TN

The Internet is a crucial driver of free speech, innovation, education, economic growth, creativity and so much more. I demand real Net Neutrality rules that protect Internet users from corporate abuse.
—Peter Murakami, Baltimore, MD

I am an independent artist. My livelihood depends on the current equality / neutrality of the Internet. Respectfully, I urge you to remember your responsibility to the future of humanity and protect authentic Net Neutrality. The “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—David Gardner, Santa Fe, NM

These proposed changes will stifle innovation and create economic gain for few and close the door on hundreds of thousands of others.
—Paul Joachim, Oviedo, FL

Cable companies keep pushing for ways to grow/manage/profit and absolutely will not self regulate themselves. That is like asking a wolf to not eat meat. The FCC has rightfully taken analogue voice off the table which means all voice traffic will be on the Internet. The FCC needs to step up and protect Net Neutrality by declaring it as telecommunications now.
—Claude Hayn, Frederick, MD

This is where freedom really does matter. Our livelihood would be in danger of non-existence by censorship. Please do the honorable thing.
—Eric Schiszler, Fresno, CA

The internet is where I get all of my news and information it's also where I watch Hockey. I'm a shut in disabled person. Don't do this to the people. It's bad enough people have been stopped all over the country from creating their own broadband. Stop this from happening.
—Cynthia Brown Klangos, Pittsfield, MA

I access multiple websites and already pay premium prices for access (cable and mobile)
—Damascus Harris, Chicago, IL

7BQy3j qcwdutkvmojx, [url=http://nfptpkchqkxf.com/] nfptpkchqkxf[/url], [link=http://vwdfnqdrvpva.com/]vwdfnqdrvpva[/link], http://tuzevzcxaisr.com/
—Giaxmfku, East Homer, NY

Inernet access needs to remain open and not under ISP control. We the people have almost no way to openly discuss and access different views. If my cable company gets ahold of control to my internet choices and starts to charge more for their services then they had better start providing better, more reliable service. The cable company monopoly is outrageous now and will soon be even worse as they start working to take over the cell company providers. The GOVERNMENT needs to quit aiding and abetting the monopolies and start working to support the competion of providers. Big money seems to be the bottom line and the common person soon will no longer be able to support the big money.
—Timothy Boughner, Dodge City, KS

Just like having power and heat for my home, easy access to internet is key for my entire household. It is used by each member every day for varying purposes and we cannot go without it in this day and age.
—Mels Slem, Binghamton, NY

I am not a freeloader. I work for a living and make it. But I am not well off. I pay for internet service that I enjoy and if this action comes to pass I will have to pay more. This is what will happen: Try out “Basic Internet” package! For only $49.99/month, we’ll set you up for super-fast Internet, with 100’s of websites available – but wait, there’s more! Do you like Gmail? Get Gmail service for just $8.99 per month extra! Want to watch Netflix movies? Just $29.99/month for speeds almost as fast as you enjoy now! And try our “News Xtra” package featuring CNN for another $29.99! Sports? Of course! Our Active package, including ESPN, is just $49.99! But wait! Our special SuperNet package gives you all these websites and more for just $129.99/month!* Please do not let this happen. Please. -Garrey Adams London, KY
—Mr. Garrey Adams, London, KY

It's democratic, egalitarian, and it works.
—Amanda Mejia, Washington, DC

It is the new telephone and as such should be treated that way
—John archer, Long branch, NJ

Because it opens a world for people who would not have access otherwise.
—Katie Anderson, Lewisville, TX

I am a small biz entrepreneur
—Keith Conner, Newton, NJ

To keep the internet open and free will no large corporate control telling the consumer what they can see or read. The same way the government is telling me what is best.
—Scott Frater, Inver Grove Heights, MN

Because cable companies make enough money without the internet
—Ben Bicaj, Bronx, NY

This would suppress startups and hugely change business models for the worse.
—Dennis Ellert, ,

Protecting Americans' rights to access all information equally is of the utmost importance in continuing democracy.
—Valerie Comeaux, Prairieville, LA

I'm a content creator trying to build my brand from the ground up, and I need net neutrality to build my business.
—Justin Majornuffski, New Berlin, WI

Because they don't charge extra for a particular section of the library, now do they? A free and open net will continue to foster free thinking and a flow of fresh ideas into the cultural conversation. We are not sheep that buy things...
—Justin Proctor, Lakeland, FL

Equal access to information is a key component of maintaining a free society. Re-classify broadband Internet service as a “telecommunications service," which is precisely what it is, and maintain total net neutrality.
—Dana Laventure, Brooklyn, NY

For the betterment of America people and the country.
—Tom Hartke, Navarre, FL

Equal access to the internet is a critical part of economic development today. New businesses succeed or fail on very narrow margins; a website is often the tipping point. Allowing service providers to charge a fee for access on a site by site basis discriminates against businesses without the power to intimidate or buy off service providers. End users are harmed by restricting access to content outside the mainstream. Avoid the murky realms of free speech interference and economic drag and make real net neutrality happen.
—Chris Wolfe, Ogallala, NE

Many can't afford high-speed Internet. Giving priority to some carriers (who can afford to pay/charge for the service) over others only makes the "Golden Rule" a little closer to reality (those who have the gold make the rules). We're already seeing our Supreme Court make disastrous decisions in favor of corporations and against employees. Makes me wonder about the future.
—Bonnie C, Baltimore, MD

It's important to keep the internet and the information we get from it easily accessible to all. By increasing rates and allowing certain companies to pick and choose what websites are available to us you are crippling the public's education and knowledge.
—Rachel Gonzales, Keller, TX

As a freelance artist, the internet plays a large role in connecting me with new fans, new clients, and new opportunities for my art. If a "two-tiered Internet" were put into place, I would no longer stand a chance of being found. The very framework of my business would suffer from such an action. Please consider keeping the internet a neutral, level place for independent business people like myself. It is very important to us.
—Veronica Kosowski, San Diego, CA

I am an artist, a creator, a student. Net Neutrality is crucial for me as I find other artists and creators to share with, to build communities with, to express creativity with. You will be stifling creative freedom of the individual and collaboration of communities if you implement these rules.
—Sylvia Kosowski, San Diego, CA

As a writer and artist, I want a certain degree of visibility online. I want people to be able to find me online or even stumble upon my work just by browsing. I don't want to be buried under a pile of advertising for big name companies just because I and other individuals like myself can't afford to pay big bucks for priority advertising.
—Marysia Kosowski, San Diego, CA

The FCC should not be "in bed with" or lobbied by the cable companies to create rules that destroy net neutrality only to make the cable companies more money and give companies the opportunity to effectively censor web sites by charging more for them. If these cable companies are "people" with constitutional rights, then they could argue that certain internet sites are "against their religion" and they are not going to allow access to them. This cannot happen.
—Carla H Kruger, Montgomery, AL

Without net neutraility, beginning artists like us won't have a chance to express and create content that will be seen by a large audience. Small companies that started out like the creators of bioshock and bastion won't be discovered if net neutrality was not implemented.
—Ian, ,

The Internet is an essential tool for modern living, like electricity and water. It is truly a utility and should be classified as one. It enables market-driven innovation to thrive. Any effort to slow any part of the Internet will harm our economy.
—Jane Brown, Durham, NC

As an aspiring artist who plans to make at least part of his living through the internet, net neutrality is of the utmost importance to me, as I, and many other independent content creators would not be able to keep pace with the telecom companies, and would see our opportunities needlessly limited. I urge you to act in the interests of the people you represent, and to keep the internet an open utility for all to use and enjoy.
—Eric Rauvola, Duluth, MN

I am a mural painter and illustrator. My clients predominantly come from viewing my website and blog online. It would affect my visibility, client base and potential income if larger companies gain all the speed on the internet. I am a very "small fry" that's trying to grow. Net Neutrality has kept an open field for me and others like me so we can compete with the larger creative companies. Please don't take that opportunity for growth away. Thank you, Allyn
—Allyn Howard, Brooklyn, NY

Small companies, artists, artisans etc should have the same access to the market as the biggest corporations
—Millree Hughes, Brooklyn, NY

Because I´m independent artist who is working to live, the way I can do that is in equality (neutrality) of the Internet. According to FCC they have the responsibility to the future of humanity and need to protect REAL Net Neutrality, and the “Internet Slow Lane” is unjust and unacceptable.
—Alan Dukardt, ,

My job, my livelihood, my customers all depend on Net Neutrality.
—Margaret Carspecken, Fair Grove, MO

Because as an creator, i think that there must be a non-localized un-biased equal but different act to the internet. the independent must not be limited by the corporations, no matter how well meaning, to express themselves. Those who are not able to afford the higher way, should not be limited, and the internet should not be turned into a business in this way. the businesses should not own the internet, but should continue to do these things on a privatized level.
—Steven A. White, Whiteville, NC

A free and open internet breeds innovation which is what has made America a great country down through time. Are we about to give this up so corporations can increase their profits in the short term? I say no and I hope you agree.
—Charles Green, Mesa, AZ

I'm an artist and part of being one is being free to paint, draw, model, and create my passion with freedom. Me and my fellow artists need the net to stay neutral because that's how we share our passion on the web. If the government takes control of the internet, our freedom to express ourselves could be very limited! I'm sure many people have cited Chris Oakley in these e-mails (his post http://chrisoatley.com/savethe internet/) and I agree 110%. Take Machinima.com for example. It's a website dedicated to sharing content users have made with video games or so that's what most people think. Years ago, anyone could make a video game related movie and it could be seen by everyone and generally the content was pretty good quality. Now let's fast forward a couple years to 2012. Now Machinima regulates would videos show up on the front page. Whether it's a badly voiced game walkthrough (let's play), or it's some misleading title, Machinima will sponsor it and they will go out of their way to promote it and essentially cut out the little guys. The ones who built Machinima in the first place. Basically this is what you're doing if you give the government control. The government's only going to promote sites, people, etc that fit its interests. The quality of the internet will be gone and those that made the internet the way it is today including artists like me won't be heard. Keep the internet neutral. Let's also take a look at China's government related internet. Now China's government goes out of its way to block content it doesn't find favorable. Now I know you may think our government could never get that extreme, but as history has proven, if you give someone enough power, anything can happen. I beg of you Mr. Wheeler, without the neutrality of the internet, artists won't be able to express themselves and we'll only be able to ever see the government's favored interests on the internet. If that doesn't convince you, let me present with a quite plausible future in a world without net neutrality. So, one fine day, you decide to hop on the 'ol computer and you recall a certain youtube video so of course you hop on youtube. Turns out, the government's really into the next Jersey Shore reality show, well guess what? Front page of nothing but Snooki and your cat video? Gone. The only thing Youtube has now are videos purely about the Jersey Shore. Ok, so maybe it won't be that extreme but I can guarantee that any video on YouTube the government doesn't favor will most definitely take a longer time to load because if it ain't Jersey Shore, it's not in the fast lane. Thank you for taking the time to read this, Mr. Wheeler and I hope you keep the internet as great as it is. Neutral and for the little guys like us artists. From Chris Froehlich
—Chris Froehlich, Spring Lake, NJ

Dear Mr. Wheeler It is with a great deal of concern I'm sending this message to you, regarding the possible end of internet neutrality. I want to be as straightforward as I can, and I'm ready to speak if you find it needed. To make my point, I want to consider the human nature as it is. Why do I approach it that way? We all know that humans are basically concerned about themselves and their own survival as main priority in a way that, on a scale, creates a foodchain. If we think of a market as an echo-system of professionals, it has the same basic behavior. This foodchain isn't necessarily a bad thing. It keeps good work flowing and makes people really thrive based on their necessity and goals. And that, I believe is a fair way of making people grow. That is a way of seeing neutrality. I believe that the break of neutrality is gonna limit this environment, not for the fittest, but for people who not necessarily earned their places, creating a weaker and, on a long term, inhospitable environment. Take Facebook for example. I used to follow my favorite artists and also put my artwork out there. Now, I can't see the posts of artists I like and what I receive are only advertisements. Facebook only allows the people who pay to get a main vision of content. Comes to a point where not only I have no point of using facebook, advertisements on your "personal space" are the most annoying thing in the world. Not only that, if you google the name of any artwork I did, it's gonna show up on every site I posted them... Except facebook. Facebook created a small example of what the end of neutrality can be, and right now there are, surely, a lot of people using it, but for HOW LONG? I've seen it before, and I believe I'll see it again. This is gonna last for a LIMITED period of time, until people get tired of seeing the same things over and over, and not getting anything in return. Even if you recicle what they see in a period, mass culture changes with generations and eventually they'll move on. Happened with MTV. Right now, a lot of artists, such as I, have the opportunity to share their work, and bring a fair competition to the market. If FCC makes Net Neutrality go away, all we're gonna have is a priority to a limited trend, which will have to be reinvented at a larger cost, not only of money, but of talent. If you limit the variations, you limit your reach, and consequently, you become, as the metaphor I was bringing earlier, a lazy and unreliable creature. Artists are not gonna be inspired people on the long term, because they're not receiving information that inspires, and therefore, maintaining the quality of the limited resources will be harder. It's like trying to cultivate a soil where you only planted corn on the last 20 years. The quality is gonna change dramatically and nobody in charge will clearly notice until you start starving. People eventually accept it, until a new kind of exit is created, leaving the main environment unattended, and not really profitable. We have the deepweb as a bad place now, but this comes, how is it gonna turn out? On the other hand, we don't have security nor laws for industries affected by internet, such as the music industry. A lot of people could be earning good and deserved money out of educational videos, records, various services, and that's not what's happening. Countless artists are not getting what they deserve, because a lot of people find ways of releasing pirate content all around and people download it with no problem. Also, contests disguised as "cultural" or for "publicity" are released daily only to make artists work for free in exchange for empty promises. I believe that as freedom of speech exists, there is a fair way of dealing with it, that will help more talent to emerge, and not only that, they'll be ready to fight to keep your institution up, if this institution makes them thrive. I know I would. So, what I came here to say is that there are several ways of dealing with problems and opportunities. Faster and slower, more or less profitable, but Human nature has a way of coming back on a long term, and it is directly related to what you and anybody else who's running things, bring to it. We all have a symbiotic relationship, wether we see it or not. I really hope I made a good point here. Please keep internet neutral for the sake not only for art and jobs, but for the sake of freedom and opportunity. For BOTH of us. Art feeds the world with culture. Thank you for your kind attention. Yours sincerely, André Meister
—André Meister, ,

I am a visual artist who relies on the internet as my medium for distributing my content. An internet that makes it difficult for me to connect with my audience is an internet that denies me my career. If America is a country where all are equal, then our livelihoods and voices are as well. This proposal is discrimination and apartheid, based upon the all-powerful dollar. This will not encourage business except for those who already enjoy juggernaut-status in the economy. Without internet neutrality and equality, how will there be a free market, let alone freedom of speech? Please, do not approve of this proposal. Internet is a vital telecommunications tool. Do not take it away its efficiency from the citizens you serve. Sincerely, S.D. Weikel
—SD Weikel, Palestine, TX

The internet should be an even playing ground as far as content delivery and viewership is concerned. Without Net Neutrality, the worst can and will happen -- and many people, like me, already don't have much of a choice as to who their ISP is. The end of NN could also damage indie creators strongly based in the internet, struggling to get their content viewed by a wider audience, who are hosted by throttled providers.
—Jessica Cantlope, Nashville, TN

Why should i loose my freedom ? Do you dare to ask the question why freedom is important to you ??
—Sateesh, Gaithersburg, MD

Please throw out your rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Kathryn Lynn burke, Rochester, IL

The Net is for everyone-equally!!
—Shane L. McCune, Manhattan, KS

Net Neutrality is essential for the survival of democracy in the 21st Century.
—Devin Nordson, Boulder, CO

I do not want someone else deciding what Internet content I should and should not see, or what Internet content I should see for free and what for cheap and what for expensive.
—Elizabeth Hartung, Magnolia, DE

I believe that without protection for Net Neutrality, several of my friends who small, online businesses will be destroyed by larger companies with more money.
—Katherine Buffington, San Diego, CA

Are you crazy!! Not having net neutrality will charge the foundation of what the internet stands for: innovation!
—James Fishback, Burbank, CA

Why should we be giving the Telco's the monopoly? Serve the people, not the corporations.
—Marshall Neill, Maysville, OK

There is only one way if we want to keep being a democracy: the Internet must be reclassify as a public utility. Anything short of that is a sell-out to wealthy companies and will hurt the American people. Which one will you choose: a plutocracy or a democracy?
—Claude Guillemard, Lutherville Timonium, MD

No two-tiered internet! Reclassify ISPs as common carriers, if that's what it takes.
—Lorna the internet open. This is not Holmes, Hillsdale, MI

Please keep the internet on even ground for everyone. As an owner of an online e-commerce store and a partner in a company that focuses on small to medium size business websites it is essential to our profitability! Thanks again!
—Matt McClard, Dallas, TX

The Internet is a utility that people use like any other utility. It should NOT be sold to the highest bidder so that consumers are fleeced by powerful corporations, with the blessing of those whose job is to PROTECT CONSUMERS, not rip them off!
—Robert Starr, Sacramento, CA

Stop playing games with the internet! Seriously, no industry ON EARTH is self-policing, the large carriers will abuse your ruling and limit free human speech! Do we have to fire you in order to make you understand! KEEP THE NET NEUTRAL! Do the bidding of the American public! YOU WORK FOR US
—Dustin Blair, Denver, CO

Lick My Fuckin Pussy?
—Professor PoopyPants, Nevada City, CA

Equal access to information is a fundamental part of a free society.
—Barbara Bibel, Berkeley, CA

You represent the People, not Corporations!
—Alan Gibbons, Atlanta, GA

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Ignacio Melo, ,

We need a free neutral net to contact others.
—Jack Robins, Iowa City, IA

Come ON!!!
—Jason Reed, Coos Bay, OR

Net Neutrality promotes the formation and growth of new businesses.
—Andrea Polli, New York, NY

It is fair and will stimulate global economies.
—Frank Paul Sabatini, Exeter, PA

I depend on Net Neutrality for daily business.
—Allen Rapatz, Minneapolis, MN

Because I want a fair, free and neutral Internet. ISPs should be reclassified as common carriers. The Internet is a public utility. Or should be.
—Marcia Hutchinson, Sherborn, MA

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. Also, as a librarian, I firmly believe in the necessity for being able to provide good internet service to all users. Society is becoming increasingly integrated with and dependent upon online services. For example: many employers only accept online applications, and while this is convenient in many ways, it is difficult to apply for jobs without online access. I have seen many poor people trying to apply for jobs and they are dependent upon the library for internet access. The public library in town has terrible internet speeds and an ever shrinking budget, and this has a negative impact on the ability for people to apply for jobs. That is only one example of an already an existing digital divide, DO NOT MAKE IT WORSE BY ALLOWING ISP'S TO CHARGE A HIGHER RATE FOR FASTER SPEEDS. THIS IS NOT BENEFICIAL TO THE VAST MAJORITY OF PEOPLE. I DEMAND NET NEUTRALITY.
—Ellen Davis, Anchorage, AK

The only legitimate classification for ISP's is as common carriers.
—stephanie K, Jefferson, CO

All Americans deserve a fair and open internet
—Barbara King, Los Angeles, CA

Net neutrality is the only way to protect the economic potential and social value of the internet. Please don't let these big companies essentially tax our access to information.
—Holly C Holloway, Palo Alto, CA

STOP SUPPORTING YOUR FORMER BIG TELECOM/WIRELESS BOSSES and START SUPPORTING THE AMERICAN PEOPLE WHO PAY YOUR SALARY Mr. Wheeler.
—Ril'riia Kil'urden, Lewiston, ME

Stop the Cable monopoly - All companies need to offer services that customer wants not bundles they put together
—Robert Nieves, Nashville, TN

For Christ's sake, let's leave a little something for the little guy !!!
—Richard Burrows, Bonney Lake, WA

We have the slowest and most expensive internet service in the industrialized world, the new rules would make it even worse.
—Herman Rhein, South Padre Island, TX

Tom— don't be a wholly-owned subsidiary of the telecom giants!
—Glen Kohler, Berkeley, CA

it's not fair to allow corporations to dictate the rules of the game. one person, one vote. no matter what the supreme court says corporations are not people.
—Bob Segal, Tucson, AZ

The internet is a utility, and must be shared equally by all.
—Bernice Meyer, Saint Louis, MO

Without net neutrality, the Internet cannot continue to thrive.
—Steve Olson, Aptos, CA

I am on a fixed income. It is not fair that I am restricted from accessing some things on the internet just because I can not afford ro pay big businesses to do so!
—Donna Walsh, Las Vegas, NV

For the good of the public everyone needs to be equal on the net!
—Mr. Whitt Jackie, Greensboro, NC

Net Neutral is the only sensible choice.
—Laurence Hotchkiss, Riverside, CA

Net neutrality is essential for freedom to speak in our democracy and I will defend it to my death. Beware! You are outnumbered.
—Nelson L Johnson, Guerneville, CA

We have the right to use the internet since 1996. FCC it, and YOU'LL BE SORRY!
—Navin Bharadwaj, Fremont, CA

You've made a huge mistake.
—Omar Jasso, Rockford, IL

We, the people. Remember us? Does anyone in our government remember us?
—Robert Goldberg, Casselberry, FL

This is one more example of where the rich corporations get preferential treatment over the ordinary citizen. Do not let this happen!
—Tom Reed, Bryan, OH

I need to be able to keep my small affiliate website that earns income.
—Susan Weschler, Boston, MA

I use the internet every day at work, and we cannot afford to pay more for faster internet speeds, as we are a community college.
—Edward T. Hills, Westland, MI

Stop the corporate take over of the net.
—Lj Lombardo, Beaumont, TX

Fairness for All
—I Engle, Village 0f Tularosa, NM

Democracy online is key to the vital dissemination of information and the education of our nation.
—Mark Stock, Portland, OR

The Internet is a utility service that everyone needs full access to. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers, because that's what they really are.
—Martin Frost, Half Moon Bay, CA

I work for a small non-profit tech start-up. Our success, and the success of tens or thousands of other ventures like ours depends on the internet as a fair and level playing field.
—Benjamin Kamm, Brookline, MA

As a programmer at a small studio, it's important to me that consumers get equal access to our products as well as those of larger companies.
—Justin Miller, Seattle, WA

Don't let greedy corporations take over the Internet
—Rick Henry, carlsbad, CA

I need net neutrality in order to compete on a level playing field.
—John MacPhee, Ottawa, NY

The Internet should be open and available for everyone. No corporation should be able to control it.
—Melissa Pappas, Saint Paul, MN

Without net neutrality, citizens will have only 19th century means of affecting their government
—Mr. Edward Costello, Santa Monica, CA

How much are they paying you??? ISPs are common carriers!!! I am an IT professional and I rely on a fast connection. I can't afford to pay more for it, maybe you can but I can't! Please reconsider your rules and classify ISPs as they should be; Common Carriers!
—Jesse Riggan, Durham, NC

Net Neutrality's important to me because it's like my Amendment rights to the Constitution, if that's changed, then nothing will be the same again. Do not take away my freedo to the Internet.
—Gabriella Brown, Chicago, IL

Net neutrality is one of the most important factors in a free Internet.
—Timothy Day, ,

Net Neutrality is very American and should be left alone at all costs. Please don't destroy it like other nation's have. We are NOT China or North Korea, and American internet users do not deserve more ill treatment due to corporate greed and bureaucratic lunacy.
—William D. Prystauk, Easton, PA

We need REAL net neutrality now! The chairman's plans will destroy the internet.
—Ben Rheault, Toronto, ON

FCC to throw out its rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. This is the ONLY way to protect real Net Neutrality. DO IT!!!
—Jahnavi Stenflo, Boulder, CO

Please toss out the FCC proposed rules and, instead, reclassify ISP's as common carriers. Thank you.
—Patrice Pop, Providence, RI

Open Internet which is what Tom Wheeler claims to support means no discrimination, equal access for all and for all websites and access for all. FCC's new plan doesn't reflect these values. Do the right thing; reclassify the internet as a telecommunications service!!
—Carolyn Knoll, Kailua, HI

Can't believe that the FCC is a traitor to the people, selling us to the highest bidder. US Government... the best government corporations can buy!
—Bruce Johnson, Carson City, NV

A public highway has one speed for everyone. The net is a public highway. No one has a right to manipulate access.
—Ms. Amy Martin, Nashville, TN

I agree with this letter. I do NOT like the FCC's proposal which gives monopolistic companies ever greater power & control & stomps on individuals & new growth of new companies.
—e Johnson, Oakland, CA

This will devastate the economy of this country. All these rules will do is allow the corporate monster to remain on top, and small business to not be able to compete what so ever.
—Joseph Mixen, Lebanon, IL

throw out its rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. This is the ONLY way to protect real Net Neutrality.
—Luis pineda, valrico, FL

Net neutrality ensures equal access to information and resources. Without it, you are expanding the gap between socioeconomic levels, which is not a fair way of doing business.
—Ashley Williams, Saint Louis, MO

We need the FCC to protect democracy by keeping the internet egalitarian and not caving to corporate profits
—Marc DiPaolo, Weatherford, OK

I may end use of internet if neutrality is lost.
—Kevin B Vaught, Antioch, TN

The internet is the last commons, the last stand for democracy. It is also the collective brain of the human race and to turn it over to monopolists and profiteers would be highway robbery and a waste, since history has demonstrated repeatedly that it would lead to stagnation and the death of innovation. You would only be cutting off our nose to spite our face. It's clearly an act of both stupidity and cupidity.
—Catherine Curtis, Santa Monica, CA

An open internet is crucial to a free and fair America. DO THE RIGHT THING!
—Joe McAneny, Vallejo, CA

The Internet needs to be a neutral transit system. It should not care what App I'm using or what site I am trying to get to. It should just get data from point A to point B, no strings attached.
—Corey Anderson, Big Lake, MN

Seriously, stop this. It's not going to happen, you're going to have the entire World population at your throats.
—Rafael Turgeon, ,

I do business with a lot of small companies over the internet and I want to be able to contact them in a speedy manner.
—Ms. Sue von Theiss, La Verne, CA

Don't let big money buy the Internet too. Whatever happened to freedom in America?
—Liz Lambregtse, Lebanon, NH

I need net neutrality as I use the internet to keep up with my family that lives far away. Also, companies should not be allowed to discriminate and determine who gets fast speeds and those who don't!
—Nicole Look-Christensen, New Brighton, MN

If we don't keep the internet neutral it can and will become a tool for censorship. Keeping net neutrality is so crucial! Please do not take it away!
—Kristen Barry, Brooklyn, NY

As someone who has worked on the internet for nearly two decades, I find it appalling that you would sell this taxpayer funded utility's services to the highest bidder.
—Nate Marino, bellingham, WA

Other than God, the internet is the real glue holding our world together. Please classify it as a common carrier.
—Linda Yow, GlenAllen, MO

Other than God, the internet is the real glue holding our world together. Please classify it as a common carrier.
—Linda Yow, GlenAllen, MO

Equal Internet Access for ALL! Thank you.
—William Shaw, Santa Cruz, CA

so that the content I want (not from major corporations) doesn't take a back seat to big business
—Janet Childress, Helena, MT

the kyoto protocol???
—Dimitar Dolnooryahov, village of strelets, IA

Here is a novel idea, how about make rules that the PEOPLE want, instead of what your corporate buddies want.
—Corbin Stack, ,

I teach distance education courses in a state university. I am really worried that we will not get the bandwidth we need for the multi-media instructional resources we utilize. I am also worried that non-profit organizations on the web will have a hard time getting out their message.
—Rebecca Scheckler, Draper, VA

each website is equal in value to a seeker on the web
—Michael Gomel, San Diego, CA

The Corporate Media has become America's Pravda. the only source of real information is the internet. Your Corporate Masters want to destroy it and you seem to want it destroyed, also! RE-CLASSIFY ISP'S AS COMMON CARRIERS! Do you have any idea HOW ANGRY THE AMERICAN PEOPLE ARE ABOUT THIS??
—Jeff Crane, Lincoln, NE

It's a matter of rights -- equal rights!
—Shireen Parsons, Washington, DC

Please, PLEASE don't let a twi-tiered internet come into being. Please instead encourage telecom companies to invest in and improve infrastructure to make the internet better for everyone. Two Tiered Internet will kill neutrality and cost consumers extra for already inferior services.
—Erin Hall Lewis, Pasco, WA

Why not really defend the free market on the internet? Defend the same opportunities for everyone and dont a handful of corporations make the rules.
—Joaquin Revilla, ,

Net neutrality is CRITICAL to American global competitiveness.
—Eric Singer, Pittsburgh, PA

Equal access to all start ups, bloggers and others looking to make it online.
—Jason Nelms, Hermitage, TN

Please allow equal freedom and access for all. Not everyone can pay their way to the top- I know I can't.
—Caitlin Hoffman, ,

We have terribly poor internet compared with other countries because of the control these companies already have. Why make it worse?
—Peter Shaw, Portland, OR

Any tiered structure is contrary to basic principles of Net Neutrality. If the FCC is serious about preserving an open internet, it must reclassify. Please honor your mission to safeguard open and democratic internet communication. Chair Wheeler's rules are 100% unacceptable. Do the right thing. The American people are watching.
—Ruth E. Kastner, Gloversville, NY

Allowing the creation of fast lanes is the same thing as allowing the creation of slow lanes. No thanks.
—Mr. Eric Gramond, Culver City, CA

America is still the land of the people, not the land of Corporate Greed.
—Brandon Christopher Williams, Houston, TX

I want a free and open internet WITHOUT having to pay for it. I'm on the low totem pole here and couldn't afford to pay for the internet. Please keep it as it is now; free and open to ALL.
—Gayle B. Rosenberry, Baltimore, MD

Please stop the greedy corporations and join the rest of the world in providing better service cheaper.
—Lawrence Cohen, la, CA

Really, we know what you are trying to do. Back off and leave the Internet free. Capitalism is really just about creating monopolies and the biggest corp wins, right? We don't want to play that game any longer. THe jig is up!
—Diana Skill, Kansas City, MO

Abolish the FCC for complete failure to work for The People over the greedy corporations!!!!
—Harold Nemecheck, Battle Creek, MI

Because information should be equally available to all. The internet is a tool, not a toy for the rich elite.
—Ian Cannon, Oakland, CA

I don't want my speedy internet to be available only when some large user allows it. The internet should be free and fair and available to all users in the same manner. No favorites. No buying into better service at my expense.
—Wayne Foote, Smithtown, NY

I am retired and use the internet for pleasure and education. To slow my access would be a hindrance to me and decrease my quality of life. If carriers are allowed to charge extra, they should be taxed accordingly.
—Hank Shiver, SNELLVILLE, GA

We already have slow and expensive internet access in America. We should be working to alleviate these problems, strive to give affordable access to more Americans, and not make access more difficult and expensive while denying equal access for all Americans.
—Kathleen Ryan, Sacramento, CA

There must be a level playing field.
—ALVERA99@bellsouthnet Pritchard, MIAMI BEACH, FL

Strong regulation is needed to keep the ISPs from strangling the Internet. The current course will lead to them short-sightedly doing exactly that.
—Jeremy Brown-Hayes, Bloomington, IN

ISPs are no different than telephone companies.
—Tom Dewille, Owens Cross Roads, AL

The Internet grew to be the robust entity of today precisely because of the "first come, first served" aspect where all content and all users are treated equally. Allowing ISPs to implement a "paid-for" "fastlane" is the very antithesis of the internet. We have far too many years of broken promises by telcos and big businesses to actually believe any promises that a Verizon/Comcast/AT&T can make - unless you are suspending your skepticism and are being willfully obtuse (and in the pocket, paid of otherwise, of the telcos and cable providers.
—Richard Taylor, Lexington, KY

There can be no fast lanes on the Internet -- no paid prioritization. I know the chairman says his proposal doesn't allow this but it's not true. Paying for faster service should not be allowed, period -- we need a competitive marketplace and ISPs must be regulated like utilities to provide it.
—Jason Rosenbaum, Washington, DC

Net Neutrality is very important and should continue to be a key component of the Internet. Creating "fast lanes" on the Internet is effectively creating "slow lanes" for startups, small business, and anyone not able to pay ISPs for this, proposed, segmented Internet.
—Kurt Zenisek, Cedar Rapids, IA

Because net neutrality is what we need.
—Aaron Cordero, Weslaco, CA

Net neutrality is so important for democracy. If you continue this road it a kill switch for the entire human race and all for corporate profits. It's wrong!
—Michael Bankare, ,

Allowing these ISP giants to charge extra for unbiased service would just continue to set the US behind other top nations.
—Daniel Chang, Concord, NH

We need to keep slow and fast lanes out if the internet. Especially with such heavily profit motivated corporations setting the rates.
—Kevin M. Dufresne, Bangor, ME

To kill Internet neitrality would put research adn academic groups in the Unites States at an even greated disadvantage compared to the rest of th world. We're already falling behind, why are you tyring to kill us off completely? Research and academic organizations absolutely depend on the Internet. They will not be able to afford the fast lanes. FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler claimed that he supports Net Nutrality. So far his actions by supporting ISPs like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon had proven him to be a liar. He can take actions to disprove that and keep his word.
—Jim Bodie, W. Henrietta, NY

At age 84 I depend on the internet with its net neutrality for information, social contacts and just plain fun surfing.
—Jim Glass, Redmond, WA

I don't understand how ISPs can not be classified as common carriers. Every citizen relies on internet access as part of their everyday life. We cannot trust ISPs to fairly govern themselves. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Jennifer Fiorito, Quincy, MA

This is ridiculous -- why are you allowing ISPs to bully internet users, their customers and non-customers alike? You need to protect the open internet.
—Tiffany M. Rapplean, Westminster, CO

I grew up with a free Internet! Equality for everyone! It is our right to have that freedom! You can shove Verizon and the major carriers up your ass! I for one will protect a free Internet.
—Sabrina Williams, Washingtonville, NY

The internet should be open and move at the same speed for everyone. If only the people with large amounts of money would be allowed to send and receive with speed, it would stifle innovation. It would ruin the one thing that openly connects the world.
—Logan Davis, Pittsboro, NC

We cannot afford to allow corporate giants to dominate the Internet for their own marketing and propaganda purposes. The Internet is a public utility created with public funds and as a mainstay of democracy the FCC must regulate the Internet as a common carrier.
—Jeff Labovitz, Bolinas, CA

I feelthe internet should be used by every one without any fast lanes or slowing down of services.
—Brian Runyon, Cincinnati, OH

This gives to much power to big business and will ultimately cost consumers much more money. It will INDEED stifle innovation as newer companies with great idea will not be able to compete with large corporations' deep pockets. To that end -- recent government tactics have tried to convince the world that "corporations are people" -- if this is the case, then this decision is no different the discrimination or racism in that preferential treatment will be given to first class citizens of the net... Lastly, the majority of the public isn't technical enough to understand that a given service is being slowed down by an ISP and will therefore blame the service itself as being "sub par" when in reality superior products may be less performant if their companies can't afford to pay for preferential treatment. This is wrong in so many ways...and on so many levels....
—Ryan Headley, Mc Farland, WI

The Internet is meant to be free!
—William Oeseburg, San Diego, CA

As a teenager who plans to find a career in technology, the open internet is vital for preserving my possible career paths.
—Ryan Seffinger, Wyckoff, NJ

I cannot find one person who thinks this would be a good thing
—Mrs. Karen Raccio, Maple Grove, MN

ISPs really ARE common carriers, and act as such. There are no 'fast lanes' allowed in telephony or CATV. there should be no such thing online either. The FCC needs to act on behalf of the people and their best interests, not the communications industry. STOP SELLING OUT!
—Arthur Alenik, Capo. Beach, CA

I run a small business (sole proprietorship). I cannot compete with large corporations nor can I survive when companies pay big bucks for better Internet access leaving me with their leftovers! Remember the countless small businesses who rely on the Internet to compete with the big businesses. We need a neutral Internet.
—Peg Kelley, Watertown, MA

I work for an internet based tech company, we do a lot of work in the USA and hope to expand out market share in the US. If these rules change then we could see our ability to talk too our clients and give them data hurt very badly. These rules for us to be held hostage to our own data, this would mean the end of the US investment for the company and the people we employ in the US.
—Richard J Laing, ,

No one entity should ever have complete control over the internet.
—Andrew Costigan, Norwood, MA

Innovation and technological advancement are integral to our survival as a species. These rules you're proposing seriously impede innovation and networking. This is SO SO important. Far more important than the money Comcast is giving you to support them on this distruction of the open Internet.
—Alex Richards, Hayward, CA

The neutrality of the internet is so much more important that 99.99% of people realize. It is perhaps the last source of actual freedom that we have. Letting the corporations take it over is such a terrible, terrible idea, and it underscores exactly what is wrong with our governing forces. Listen to what Woz says.
—Adam Bellinson, Detroit, MI

The Internet should be free and available to all, not a benefit to those big companies with big cash. This is wrong, equal for all!
—Steve Stevenson, Chilliwack,

Wheeler’s plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. These companies would have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. And no one would be able to do anything about it. This will cause stagnation in our economy as other countries innovation will not be stifled and instead continue to flourish. Net Neutrality will make everyone more money in the future, and ending it is as short-sided as burdening students with the amount of loans they currently have. The bubbles will pop. Don't make a new one.
—Chris Nicolaisen, Seattle, WA

Once again, money decides our future! Keep the internet free.
—Laura Collins, NY, NY

I would like to know what assholes on the FCC voted against net neutrality and who bribed them for their vote!!!
—Robert Parker Stellato, REDWOOD CITY, CA

This is my personal take on these rules: Welcome to the USSA, check your rights at the border becuase we brunt the constitution. I.T jobs, they are canned becuase every last cent of growth money is spent on the ISPs and the Dictatorship of America. Just anotrher push of the "People" to launch a civil war. Are you willing to make that move? As it is 80% of America believes we need a goverment reset, and this is one of many reasons why...
—Robert Emminger, Covington, TN

Corporate control of government has to stop. The connection between Mr. Wheeler and the cable companies is a prime example. Do what is right and work for the people.
—Jayant M. Thomas, Toledo, OH

Really, why not just let corporations bid on the rights to oxygen or education.
—Homer Turgeon, New York, NY

Please reclassify ISP as a common carrier. What were you people thinking????
—William Shepherd, Cedar Falls, IA

Chairman Wheeler's plan would let ISPs like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees — and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. These companies would have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. And no one would be able to do anything about it.
—Daniel Yost, Philadelphia, PA

The internet is the last "free" place on earth. An ISP is the same as a phone provider, they should both be common carriers and follow the same rules. Yes ISPs are more complex but their service is the same. Do not sell out to corporations and hinder the internet for humanity just so you can get a bonus check.
—Rob Brock, Englewood, CO

This is a public utility and must be a common carrier.
—Edward Tharp, Riverside, CA

Net neutrality is extremely important to new entrepreneurs, to students, to people in rural locations and most of all to every American who depends on reasonable access to make decisions in democratic processes such as elections!
—Dr. Norman Howden, Dallas, TX

Equal access for all content. Stop taking it up your rear from some telecom providers Tom. Stand up for citizens and the big picture, not corporate profits.
—TJ Firebrook, Raleigh, NC

Because these ISP's effectively have monopolies and duopolies (I have a choice of 2 at my home, and 1 where I'm moving to), we don't have a choice to get better service. This plan will put some websites in the fast lane, and everyone else in the slow lane! First, we should require that in the USA, there is no place where an ISP has more than 50% of the market share, and then we might have a competitive enough situation to fix this problem. In the rest of the world, internet service is 3-5x faster and half the price, even throughout Europe and Asia.
—Haydn Huntley, Makawao, HI

ONLY net neutrality protects Free Speech and Free Press!
—Elaine Becker, Roanoke, VA

It is all about America's future - without net neutrality, we will be a divided nation with only the wealthy having access to substantial technology - the poor will be left with servitude - low wages and little future... America will become a second rate nation - whoops, the conservative direction since Reagan have pretty much taken us there - 30th in education, 37th in healthcare... even worse in infrastructure - you have the ability to turn this trend around!!!!
—Randy Johnson, Bend, OR

Get real -- this is the 21st century, and the Internet is a utility, not a "product." Classify ISPs as common carriers immediately.
—Elizabeth Bell, San Francisco, CA

As an academic researcher, I often need to access performances and informational videos that are never going to be able to pay for the use of a "fast lane". Moving towards such a model is guaranteed to stifle the free flow of information in favor of a model based on corporate profits.
—Marshall Tuttle, Troutdale, OR

As a web developer for the past decade, it's important to me that the work that I do is visible to the widest audience possible, not simply limited to those with the means to afford a better connection. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers, and regulate them as the utilities they really should be. My livelihood, and the success of countless future startups depend on a level playing field. Thank you.
—Jesse Ross, Minneapolis, MN

The web is the last, truly democratic arena. Let's not squash it for the deep pockets of corporations who are only out for their interests. The internet is for everybody. Big companies and especially media/internet providers are doing just fine with out this discrimination.
—John Stislow, Brooklyn, NY

There is no benefit to this proposal except for financial gain and power giving to companies that are undeserving. The world relies on net neutrality. Please do not be greedy.
—Joseph Paul Schwind, Walton Hills, OH

Businesses put profits above all else, that is their "function," and they will create those profits at the expense of this country and her people. The "Public Trust" is put into the care of those in government to act in OUR best interest, which is less and less the same than the interests of businesses. They will abuse any control of the Internet they are given, especially the all-important "last mile." They should be designated as "common carriers" because they can't be trusted to regulate themselves.
—Andy Ritter, Fenton, MO

I'm a freelance writer and Net Neutrality is the single most important thing in today's world, as it's increasing reliant on Internet as a major media and news carrier. There is no way we will allow anybody to tak that away from us.
—Filip Galeković, ,

The ONLY true Net Neutrality rule is the reclassification of ISPs as a common carriers. Anything else is a pandora's box of discrimination and should be rejected outright.
—Steve van Damme, Brighton, MI

Stop bowing down to big business and do what is best for the American people.
—Johnny Wilson, Gainesville, FL

Getting access to Internet is hard enough to some people, we don't need anymore of our money getting sucked into it. The government makes us pay enough money for normal things as it is, don't make it hard for is to have to dish out more money.
—Solen Williams, Lawrenceville, GA

The Internet needs to be open for everybody not only big companies
—Diego Teran, Santa Ana, CA

I depend on certain online news sites. They do not have deep pockets. They will be so slowed down without Net Neutrality they will no longer be competitive enough to stay alive. Do not let this happen. You can prevent this from happening.
—Janis Dolnick, Sebastopol, CA

Internet discrimination is unfair, plain and simple !!
—Patrick Carey, Toronto,

This rule is a cave to powerful interests; it will stifle what is left of free speech and democracy and close the internet to all but those who can afford it.
—Max Barack, Glenview, IL

Net Neutrality has allowed for so many things that have benefited the American people. Improved communications, innovation on several technologies, and the free flow and exchange of ideas. The rules proposed would ultimately destroy net neutrality and harm millions, if not billions of people in the process. To avoid this, the FCC should throw out it's proposed rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers/Title II telecommunications service.
—Matt Ringquist, Redwood Falls, MN

The internet is not a commodity for the rich, it's a utility for the people!
—Eric Andres, Shoreline, WA

Being a small business owner, ending Net Neutrality would absolutely kill my business.
—Linda M, Cranston, RI

Without an open internet, innovation is stifled. Under these proposed rules, startups with new ideas will reach a smaller audience under less favorable terms than before. We would not have most of our popular social media and entertainment sites today if they had been developed under these rules. The internet has virtually unlimited possibilities, but not if the power and control is taken from its users and given to profit-driven corporations.
—Jennifer Brill, Brooklyn, NY

I'm a web developer who does not want his work squelched.
—Michael Monroe, Brookline, MA

Without an open internet, the free exchange of information that creates tomorrow's tech pioneers and scientists and doctors is jeopardized. This is absolutely detrimental to the future of our country.
—Daniel J Cox, Framingham, MA

Net neutrality is essential for the distribution of the rights of the american people, life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. If you constrict the free speech of the american people the people will speak up to break free.
—Ward Kuentzel, Carthage, MO

Creating financial impediments to the free and open use of the Internet is absolutely critical to the social, economic and political vitality of our nation, as well as all of our global neighbors. The FCC was not created to benefit those individuals and enterprises that are well-funded; particularly in terms of unfettered access for all!
—Kenneth Koerner, Miranda, CA

I urge the FFC to leave no loopholes that would allow the big guys to discriminate against users, companies, groups, ethnicities, governments, etc online. Do not offer them any way to ruin a free and open internet, where beautiful and great things happen ever day, including job creation and economic stimulus.
—Jason Oeltjen, Wylie, TX

Okay, so you're blatantly disregarding what the public wants to push your own agenda. Nobody wants a fast lane, unless the whole internet speeds up and everyone has equal access without monetary incentive. In a nutshell, please reclassify ISPs as common carriers and pave the road for more competition and new companies. Not doing so will inhibit the flow of communication, knowledge, and insight on the internet until it is throttled. In South Korea the speed is 100mb/s, prices are around $25 a month, and there are a MULTITUDE of companies competing. You take away competition, part of what the FCC should be protecting, then prices go up and quality or service goes down.
—Ms. Danielle Witte, Minneapolis, MN

Keep the net free> I stand for net neutrality>
—Raymond Perry, Hurricane, WV

Why should ISPs make more money?!? They provide expensive crappy service as monopolies or duopolies!!! Internet service in just about ANY other relatively advanced country is faster and cheaper! You should PUNISH them, not conspire to make them richer!!!
—Garry M. Doll, Williamsport, PA

Net neutrality is fundamental to vigorous commerce, technological innovation, free speech and a healthy republic
—Mitchell B Stargrove, Hillsboro, OR

The internet should be free for everyone!
—Aidan Soubry, ,

Please do not proceed with your current proposal for new Internet rules. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers and keep the Internet open for all.
—G Flores, SPOKANE, WA

Save net neutrality! Save true expressions of freedom and liberty for all! Not only the elite.
—Emily Kincanon, Riverside, IL

THE INTERNET IS MY NEWSPAPER....DO NOT SCREW IT UP. LET IT BE FREE.
—Anthony Marchione, Welaka, FL

We already pay over $ 50 a month for turtle slow service with all kinds of problems ! Trust me, this will only make it much worst !!!!
—Mrs & Dennis Roderigues, Pinellas Park, FL

Net neutrality is the single most important thing that we should be fighting for. If we were to lose net neutrality we would lose a large majority of our constitutional rights and with that some of our human rights. This cannot be allowed.
—Riley Benson, McKeesport, PA

Letting corporations pay for better service destroys any chances for start-ups to gain traction, and is ridiculously unfair for average citizens.
—Margaret E Esaak, Central Lake, MI

Monopoly means death to creativity and innovation.
—Shawn Sarwar, Washington, DC

Neutrality supports Democracy which we as Americans are sworn to uphold.
—Ken Box, Austin, TX

Unfettered access to information is an essential element of democracy. Any two-tiered system under corporate control will amount to defacto content discrimination (censorship) by entities that have no public-interest mandate.
—Keith Berner, Takoma Park, MD

These proposed rules are clearly in favor of a select few corporations, and they will severely stifle the internet economy that so many Americans, like myself, rely on.
—Eric Iffland, Riverbank, CA

Bribery of FCC officials is the issue. PAY OFF by BIG COMM Cons to FCC Whores.
—Malcolm Moore, Portola, CA

Placing any rules, regulations, or allowances regarding the Internet, regardless of who they benefit, would completely destroy the openness of the Internet.
—Adam Balchunas, Weehawken, NJ

don't take this profound opportunity to gain vast wonderful information, follow the world and communicate with everyone away from all of us. that would be simply evil.
—Gwendolyn L. Waring, Flagstaff, AZ

I've been a Web developer for 17 years. My livelihood, the livelihood of all my peers, and the health of my company all depend on Net Neutrality.
—Ron Cox, Alexandria, VA

As a consumer, I am tired of the trend in communications in general. What was once "free" and "open" (for example, radio and tv) is increasingly becoming a "what can you afford" proposition, and too many people will be alienated and pushed aside because of it. Each and every one of us should demand Net Neutrality - our last resort for free, open communication for all!! Thank you.
—Henry Mastroberardino, Harrison, NY

The internet should be free for everyone!
—Aidan Soubry, ,

The internet was created to be open. The FCCs actions will put the future of the internet in the hands of a small handful of corporations. America is already behind when it comes to internet and broadband communication speeds. This will just put us even farther behind.
—Mike Brown, Charlotte, NC

Don't do this.
—Frank Garrett, LONG BEACH, CA

My small business relies on the Internet. I can't possibly compete with the giant corporations who want to buy a permanent advantage and roll over the rest of us. I know many people just like me who scratch out a living through e-commerce. How will we make a living when our internet marketing efforts are erased with cash by the largest corporations in the field? The Internet is an essential utility now, as fundamental as the highway system. Please don't make it into a tollway system.
—Ms. Peggy Ross, Decorah, IA

Internet access is crucial for businesses and consumers alike. Allowing someone to pay for an edge is going to have a terrible effect on competition and on the economy and on innovation! We need more small businesses and less big business advantage to have a healthy innovative economy. We need to know that ordinary people can be heard and not throttled. We need a truly neutral internet with equal access to the backbone for all traffic.
—Vicki Fletcher, ,

The internet is abut the free trade of thoughts and ideas. If you implement fast lanes and slow lanes, you give power to companies that do not care about the thoughts and ideas of people. All they care about is how all this extra cash will look as it lines the pockets of their respective CEOs. Give us back our internet as it was —Alexander Stults, houston, TX

This isn't the Corporate United States of America. Net Neutrality provides for all.
—Tina Noland, Saint Louis, MO

Allowing service providers to take control of the internet and make us pay to use it would be dirty and underhanded, only creating problems in the long run. Discrimination does not belong in the 21st Century, and it should stay that way. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers, for the good of normal people.
—Rebecca Smithson, Clayton-le-moors,

There is no reason to get rid of net neutrality except to allow ISPs to make huge profits by having large corporations pay for premium access to the detriment of small businesses and non-profit organizations. This change does not benefit the public good, only shareholders. You should be ashamed.
—Christopher Parman, Palm Springs, CA

Broadband is as essential as water, electricity and other utilities. It should not be able to be manipulated by big business.
—Nick Lavely, Saint Paul, MN

As a paying customer, I feel Comcast will start collecting on BOTH ends. Myself as the customer and companies like Netflix as a content provider. Reclassify ISPs as a utility!!!
—Salvatore Mete, Lake in the Hills, IL

Don't ruin the internet for future generations. Consider the long term effects of your decisions today.
—Ryan Bates, Fairport, NY

Reclassify ISPs as common carriers!
—Toma Popov, ,

Enough with the greed. The internet is the ONLY free speech platform left to the citizens of this country and you do NOT have the right to give this platform away to big cable interests. We, the people. DEMAND Net Neutrality!
—Michael Simonet, piscataway, NJ

Having 2 tiers of service is inconsistent with historic American values. We should not favour those with lots of money over regular people in managing what is, in effect, a public utility. It's unfair, and therefore not right. Please reclassify ISPs as the common carriers they are.
—Susaan Straus, Newton, MA

I'm sick and tired of being treated as a 2nd class citizen. Stop representing the interests of big business, and start representing the interests of us, the people!
—Mr. Jonathan Gatarz, Hayward, CA

The ISP wants to bill like a utility, make them a utility. It is the only way to start bridging the 'digital divide', and prevent further degradation to the benefits the internet provides —Richard Nelson, Louisville, KY

Entrepreneurship and the free, unimpeded exchange of ideas are critical to the health of the United States, if not democracy itself. Without net neutrality, both will be severely curtailed as those who can pay are the only ones who will have unrestricted ability to disseminate ideas and use the Internet for their financial gain. The open, neutral Internet has been a tremendous driver of democracy around the world, of scientific achievement here in the US, and of the burgeoning ranks of entrepreneurs. Failing to truly safeguard net neutrality will risk all of this and will only benefit the large ISPs. Any restriction on net neutrality is an absolutely horrible idea, and it will severely impact the economic and scientific health of the US. Please re-think your approach!
—Roy Turner, Hampden, ME

Keeping the internet open is good for business. The next Microsoft or Apple could find their efforts stumped if they sign on to the wrong firm.
—Alex Greene, Wrexham,

You clearly know the difference in the public interest and special interests. Your mission is to protect the public interest. Surprise everyone, and do your job!
—James Kellett, Springfield, MO

The internet must stay absolutely neutral to keep the world free!!!
—Phillip Mullen, Stephenville, TX

We depend on a free and neutral internet.
—F Robert Wesley, Ithaca, NY

Our democracy requires Net Neutrality; no other plan -- or compromise -- will work.
—Ned Flaherty, Boston, MA

Only the rich and powerful will dominate the net without Net Neutrality!!
—James Sheley, Tucson, AZ

In the age of unlimited political contributions and corporate spending on elections, indeed.. money is speech? The last bastion of equality is the internet. Any two tiered system will demand
—Wood Souders, Feasterville Trevose, PA

Just stop it already! Do you want to continue making the public angry at you?
—Kyle Krause, Miami, FL

Neutrality insures open access for all,the more minds using an open system the greater the productivity.
—Scott Kallio, Albuqerque, NM

We in the U.S. already pay more for slower broadband speeds than other developed countries. Reclassifying ISPs as common carriers would go a long way toward remedying the competitive disadvantages resulting from lack of competition in many areas of the country where one major provider controls the market.
—Craig Fausnacht, Uniontown, PA

Please reclassify broadband. If not, consider yourself responsible for the death of the open internet.
—Matt Weidman, Ames, IA

This is the last free public forum. Don't destroy it.
—Patti Ford, Brookdale, CA

Stand up for Net Neutrality, Mr. Wheeler, or you will be instrumental in the downfall of this country’s competitiveness in the global economy. Is that really the legacy you want to pass on to your children? Is that the kind of damage you want to do to the Wheeler name?
—Peter Crosby, foster city, CA

This proposal harms the very idea of net neutrality, allowing larger companies to afford "fast lanes" while stagnating innovation from smaller players (like YouTube in 2005). This would be a huge disservice to the internet and is not needed. The internet should be treated as a public utility, as it's an essential part of life nowadays, just like water or electricity. Please throw out this proposal and reclassify ISP's as common carriers!
—Miguel Asse, New York, NY

I strongly believe the internet should be considered a public utility and regulated for fair access to everyone. Real net neutrality is more democratic. It's more equitable. And it creates a more dynamic, fast-moving economy.
—Donald Harrison, Ann Arbor, MI

Too much control by the "Big Boys"
—Kathy Oliver, Santa Barbara, CA

I'm a software engineer specializing in start ups. I feel this proposal will severely inhibit my ability to do my job and grow within my career. This proposal will also put a stranglehold on innovation by drastically limiting the reach of new companies (who might not have money to compete with bigger, established players) as well as limit communication around and the development of emerging technologies (which almost all rely on an open, neutral, accessible Internet for progress, information dissemination, etc.). Essentially, you'll be putting our economy and our citizens back in the (technical) dark ages.
—David Long, Playa Vista, CA

My career depends on having an open and uncorrupted internet connection. Why, Tom Wheeler, do you insist on doing your best to ruin this for everyone? Reclassify this as a common carrier and stop catering to whoever is bribing you. You work for the United States people now, not cable companies.
—Patrick F Collins, Austin, TX

Net Neutrality would kill what the internet has created; a sphere for the little man to become big beyond their means in a public forum, a situation not seen elsewhere
—Taylor Poole, Reno, NV

All people should have equal access to the Internet. It must not be placed in the hands of giant, for-profit corporations.
—Shawn Gustafson, Broomfield, CO

This is the land of the people and for the people! Please don't allow the degradation of the U.S.A. and turn us into the land of the corporations for the corporations! Protect our free internet!
—Jessika Ojea, Wonder Lake, IL

I helped build the internet... don' t mess things up!
—Paul Geuzebroek, Costa Mesa, CA

We will vote out anyone who votes to approve Tom Wheelers rules on the internet. I call for Tom Wheeler's resignation.
—Steve Peterson, moorhead, MN

Small startups should not be at a disadvantage! Scrapping NN will stifle innovation.
—Jonathan Crosby, San Francisco, CA

The internet was, on every level of development, TAXPAYER-FUNDED and created by, for, and of the people, NOT CORPORATIONS or private interests, and should NEVER nor in ANY WAY be controlled, throttled, discriminated, or profiteered by such interests. The internet, in its incarnation, definition, maintenance, and usage, is a COMMON CARRIER PUBLIC UTILITY.
—A Ward, Eugene, OR

DO NOT BUY ANYTHING OFF THE INTERNET IF THEY CANT KEEP IT NEUTRAL. USE SNAIL MAIL. CB RADIOS.
—David Marinsik, Santa Rosa, CA share nicely and please don't be greedy

—Nicholas C Baylis, Bristol,

Billion dollar corporations and people who rely on the internet at their local library and everyone in between all deserve the same access to online content. Do what is right for all Americans and reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Jon Bassinger-Flores, Pacoima, CA

Net Neutrality is so important to freedom of speech. The system we have now works and is fair. To restructure how the internet works so big business can take advantage of it, for absolutely no reason aside from big business using this to push out competitors and small business, is so wrong.
—Megan Butler, Port Orchard, WA

A level playing field is critical to creativity, new enterprise, and communication. PLEASE keep the Internet open to all!
—Mary Hager, Leverett, MA

Anything less than this could not be otherwise take than evidence that public officials at the FCC have not only contempt for the public interest, but clearly bow to the deep pocketed interests of mega corporations with profit motives at stake. If that is not corruption, what is? Reclassify. Defend the public interest.
—Francis Hittinger, montclair, NJ

Why must something that encapsulates the very essence of democracy be exploited by greedy corporations? Can there not be one sacred place that says no to their encroachment?
—Carol A. Longhenry, Rockford, IL

Net Neutrality is important to me, because the internet is the last place in the world where a common person (i.e. non-monied person) has any ability to obtain info that is useful to them, and to express themselves. Otherwise, it's whoever has the most money wins, and that's a SHITTY SOCIETY. If corporations spent more resources trying to build up humanity, and help create more emotional and mental and nutritional intelligence, rather than trying to strip every last resource from others to make a profit, we might have a chance at building a sustainable world. The internet allows common folks to get access, and if you are going to allow rules so that monied interests can reach others at greater speeds, you're going to crowd out valuable online content contributors unfairly. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers, Tom. Stop being a corporate lobby pawn. How do you and people like you sleep at night? Thanks for listening, Dave
—David Hayes, Deerfield, MA

I believe that the internet should be equal speed and access for all. It should be treated like a common carrier that gives NOBODY greater priority over other users or providers of information. Doing anything else will squeeze out those who are not paying the priority fees to put their outfit at the top of the list. This is already happening with certain search engines which put the paying company at the top of the list , irregardless of the relevance of that company. I find it a problem and a irritant.
—R Ackermann, Oswego, IL

I am for an open internet that is free from discrimination. This cash grab by certain ISPs and their lobbyists will mean the end of an internet that promotes innovation. Please do not let this happen. I make a living from the web, and it is important to me that the internet stays a viable option for small businesses and startups to make their dreams a reality. Drew Blumberg
—Drew Blumberg, Nashville, TN

freedom of internet is important for ecomonic —Justin A Winnicki, moreno vally, CA fixed income senior, presently, net access is too expensive.

—Christopher Lunn, Genoa, NV

The Internet should be for all not a few who can afford it.
—A Andaloro, St louis Park, MN

Surely it's become readily apparent how everyone feels at this stage of the game. Please make the right decision.
—Steve Sturgill, Louisville, KY

Equal access to the means of communication is a fundamental requirement to effective democracy. To protect this equal access, it is essential that you reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Most of the communications that used to happen by phone or letter are now happening over internet connections through e-mail, social media, and skype. You should list ISPs as common carriers because that's what they are.
—Leith McCombs, Renton, WA

I use the internet all the time and am on sites that would get slowed down!
—D P, Madison, WI

Because the government should work for all people even the poor people who will not be able to afford the higher end and faster services and rather, be stuck with their children in a slow moving train getting nowhere and wasting time.
—Ron Grande, RUTLAND, VT

Being able to do my job depends on free and open access to resources on the internet: please don't create a two-tiered internet. That's classist baloney.
—Mara Karapetian, Brockton, MA

Because it works for everyone
—Deborah Remy, Carmel Valley, CA

ISPs MUST be reclassified as Title II common carriers. Any other action -- or inaction -- is completely unacceptable.
—Remington Jones, Sylva, NC

Do not limit the infrastructure that so many of us rely upon for creating and building a better future. Please protect net neutrality and do not privatize one of America's greatest resource.
—Keenan May, San Francisco, CA

I seriously cannot believe that we actually have to tell people like Wheeler how to do their job because they're not smart enough to realize what a ludicrous idea this is. Then again, I'm not surprised that people like Wheeler cannot take a moral stand and do what is in the best interests of the people rather than the best interests of the telecoms. These FCC lackey's are so out of touch that they actually believe these rules and mergers like the Comcast / Time Warner deal are actually good for everyone... It blows my mind how much our society has shifted over the last several decades because of lack of character and morals in our society and elected officials.
—Jose Paradis, Peabody, MA

Otherwise the internet becomes a commodity to be exploited by corporate America at the expense of consumers
—Ruth Pennoyer, Wet Orange, NJ

Our democracy depends on an open Internet.
—Richard Selleseth, Lodi, CA

Currently the U.S.A is already behind most other countries in terms of network bandwidth preformance. Allowing for a "two-tiered" system would put us even more on a back foot in the innovative technologies of the World Wide Web.
—Evan Hisey, Tuscaloosa, AL

Our access to the open and unrestricted internet, regardless of 'tiers', is a hugely important part of our freedom. Information access, communications, the ability to spread important news... these should NEVER be throttled.
—Alex Perea, Basking Ridge, NJ

Because Freedom of Speech was important enough to remain in the Constitution.
—Amy Hanson, Chelsea, MA

All internet should be free and equal
—Fred Lavy, Harrisonburg, VA

I depend on Net neutrality for education, communication, music and shopping. Please keep the Internet open to all.
—MM M. Healey, Santa Fe, NM

I need net neutrality. I'm a student who does 95% of my schooling and work online via the internet. I am in no position to pay extra fees to be able to use all of the resources I need for both work and school. I need net neutrality.
—Jessica Harker, Lisle, IL

Government should exercise great care in establishing precedents which might infringe upon the rights of citizens. Excessive deference to corporate interests rarely serves individual liberty.
—Robert W. Haynes, Laredo, TX

ISPs must be regulated as common carriers! Represent US (https://represent.us/)
—Manor Askenazi, Arlington, MA

Without Net Neutrality, my family won't be able to run their business, nor will we be able to stay in touch with loved ones who lived in other parts of the world.
—Carling Kirby, N/A,

Just do the right thing. And the right way here is to make them into common carriers, ending discrimination altogether. Why is this so hard?
—Peter Park, Fairfax, VA

Net Neutrality is all the people have left of trust busting. No monopolies on Communication.
—Frances Goff, Valley Village, CA

the internet is not broken. Stop trying to fix it
—Dallas Moore, Middle Island, NY

Our small business depends on a free and open internet. Your rules will hurt us and millions of others. The best idea is to reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Deborah Byron, Fayetteville, AR

Information must be free and accessible to all, not only those who have the means to pay for it, for the good of the human race.
—Du Hoang, Brooklyn, NY

This is a public good and should be protected as such. Everything is neither for sale, nor should profits take precedence over PUBLIC good.
—Stephanie Zappa, Oakland, CA

Because NOBODY wants to pay exorbitant prices for crappy serivce. In a recent article posted online, a trend of horrible customer service and overtly high prices leads to a steady decline in Cable and ISP providers. Do you want people to pay out their butts for something they can't use?
—Adam, Hudson, NH

Freedom to choose is one of the great freedoms of living in the USA. I want to keep the freedom of watching what I want, where I want, without a large corporation dictating what I can and can't see by how fat my wallet is.
—Lauren Henry, West Chester, PA

It keeps rich fascists from controlling the flow of information.
—William Randolph Pearce, Beaverdam, VA

YOur responses to my previous emails all claim you stand in favor of Net Neutrality, yet your plan for a two-tiered system is anything but. PLEASE reclassify ISPs as common carriers and SAVE that which you claim to favor. Most of us have almost no voice left. Do not sell what remains to the highest bidders.
—Lawrence D. Snyder, Davis, CA

If you really believe in the Open Internet as you say, then prove it. Reject rampant discrimination online!
—Deborah Cate, Philadelphia, PA

In today's world, Internet access and access to many sources through the Internet represents the most important element of the freedom of the press for Americans. You have an opportunity to stand up for these fundamental freedoms, and an obligation to do so. Serve the American people, not the corporations.
—Nathan Wittmaier, Warrensburg, MO

Please leave the Internet fee and discrimination free. Please reclassify ISP's as common carriers, for the people.
—James D Winders, Ridgeway, SC

I want to be able to start my own online business and not be encumbered by infrastructure costs others have already paid for.
—Chris Adams, San Francisco, CA

This IS the last vestige of Free Speech that we will ever see. Please don't destroy it!
—Steve Helms, Monroe, NC

Radio, television, and telephone are all classified as common carriers. And yet, at this point in time all three now primarily flow through the Internet. Not reclassifying the Internet as a common carrier thus essentially removes the historical protections on every form of communications now employed by society. Classifying the Internet as a common carrier needs to happen. Anything short of this threatens to alter and even cripple the future of all communications in our society.
—Julia Allis, Syracuse, NY

ISP Giants "reimagining" ways to carve up the same resources we already have, but for more money is not acceptable. These are the most hated companies in America according to surveys and they should not be rewarded for their mediocre performance and high prices (compared to other countries). Reclassify the ISPs as common carriers to rectify this horrible situation.
—Stephen Lucas, Salinas, CA

Remember when the people that had all the money were the Porno web sites? The internet was nearly unusable for a few years. Just imagine what will happen when money from special interests (such as big communication) can legally collude to fix their fast lanes to give priority over innovative startups, and non-profits and the lowly individual. Legitimate uses for abusable technology like bittorrent will immediately be terminated completely by comm carriers under the excuse that they are "managing their network". They've done it before and lied about it. With this new set of rules they won't even have to hide it. They don't have to be USING the bandwidth that they're paying for. They only have to occupy space to keep it away from their competitors. This is a huge tool for monopolistic practices among big communication providers. That's not an improvement to the internet. It's unquestioningly detrimental to our national communications infrastructure and must not be permitted.
—Phil Gilmore, West Valley, UT

Data discrimination is one step removed from despotic censorship. It cannot be allowed in a democratic society.
—Jay Treat, King of Prussia, PA

We do not need government of the corporations, by the corporations and for the corporations.
—Bill Gallagher, Scottsdale, AZ

I worry that the voice of the affluent will stifle the voice of the destitute if internet service providers are not classified as common carriers. Please keep the internet a level playing field for people from all walks of life.
—Kurt Lehnardt, salt lake city, UT

net neutrality favors the consumer and will keep access to internet content equal, enabling a truly free market. Do the right thing and favor REAL net neutrality
—Richard Dahlstrom, Seattle, WA

please consider seniors on fixed incomes
—Frank G Christian, arlington, TX

I am opposed to the proposed rules that allow for certain entities to pay for faster internet service. I believe that any policy that allows for discrimination among customers and internet service will eventually lead to inequities that favor richer customers and hinder poorer customers. Such effects will stifle the creativity and entrepreneurship that has made the internet such a boon to the United States. Please preserve net neutrality! If this requires reclassifying ISPs as common carries, by all means do this!
—Jeffrey J. Derby, Bloomington, MN

The people depend on non-discriminatory ISP's. Don't disappoint us.
—Alejandro Bupara, Walnut Grove, CA

The internet is the one of the very few places where everyone is on an even playing field. Do not take that away.
—Kacy Trujillo, Torrance, CA

Startups and individuals should not be disadvantaged by having their content transferred slowly compared to big, established companies (or business partners of the cable companies).
—Jeremy Monat, Fairfax, VA

Because I work for a small tech company. We will never be able to compete with large companies on a level playing field.
—Nick McNeill, Johns Island, SC

The new rules threaten the next new big thing (such as the next Google, Facebook, Apple etc.) not coming out of the United States. The new rules are communist and unamerican as they unable incumbents to stifle competition by getting preferred services. The FCC chairman should be ashamed of his high treason against future entrepreneurs.
—Christian Geib, Glasgow,

The the only right and fair thing to do, but I know why you are doing it and it's to restrict and censure those who have discenting opinions and that is just plain wrong. It's your country and freedoms too that you are helping to erode.
—Elissa Mericle-Gray, Berwick, ME

Keep the internet open to all. It's the one place that is open to all Americans.
—Jonathan Perry, Camarillo, CA

The ability to access the internet should not be based on how much I can pay. I shouldn't have to pay more for what should be a public service. We collectively created the internet; it shouldn't be privatized, which is what these rules effectively do.
—Heath Eddy, Exton, PA

There must be unfettered communication between people if we are to progress as a globalized society.
—Paul Mazzella, New York, NY

Our legislators have been bought off by large cable lobbys....there is NO good reason not to have Net Neutrality!
—Michael Aazarian, West Hollywood, CA

It boggles the mind that the United States, the mastermind behind so much great innovation, could possibly be on the verge of destroying one of the greatest inventions in modern times by handing it over to a few monopolistic companies at the expense of information sharing, all sorts of organizing and advocacy, and innovation. Chairman Wheeler, what on earth are you thinking? I cannot tell you how terrible it feels to now live in a country where it seems that those with money and the ability to buy policies they like to protect their interests will always seem to triumph over the needs of the broader public. And this is from an FCC appointed by a Democratic administration. Please do your job and protect he public interest by reclassifying the internet as a public utility and finally demonstrate to the American people that our government still works for us and not only those with deep pockets.
—Kristina Aiello, Arlington, VA

Anything less than open access to information results in retarding innovation. Innovation is what has given our country a competitive advantage for decades. We are losing that advantage because of awful regulation such as this one.
—Freddie Rosario, Oviedo, FL

So essentially you are creating a pay-to-play situation where the companies that have money will have access to the "fast lanes" that you are helping to create. This will kill innovation as start ups won't have the resources to compete. Please keep the internet open, and don't take these steps any further than you have.
—Sean Lavin, Cleveland, OH

It's not fair to exclude working class people from accessing the internet that provides them with information and contact with friends and family. We rely on the internet a source of medical information, a resource for kids to study, as well as a way to access distance learning and to telecommute to work.
—Ellen Tracy, Ellsworth, ME

The entire structure of how we regulate the internet needs to be looked at. Its important to keep the internet neutral so big companies can't take control. Whats more is that the whole industry needs to be changed so that there is competition, this is the only way to bring down the pricing while driving up the speed of what consumers need.
—Kevin Callahan, fenton, MO

The free exchange of information was considered so vital to the Founding Fathers that they provided for a post office to guarantee the delivery of newspapers to the citizenry. We cannot forsake this cornerstone of democracy for the expedience and the greed of the Internet carriers today. ISPs need to be reclassified as common carriers in the name of democracy and the Constitution. You will do it or we'll find somebody who will. Your choice.
—Peter Rogan, Royal Oak, MI

Open internet for all not chosen few —Richard Exley, San Tan Valley, AZ

The Internet has become a "utility", something on which everyone depends, like clean water, sanitary sewers, or reliable electricity. It is NOT appropriate to let the big corporations discriminate between who they want to have a fast-lane and who they don't care about. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers NOW!
—Robert Slaven, Goodyear, AZ

You're job is to protect people not corporations.
—Anne Wayman, National City, CA

Destroying net neutrality is vital to tech development in the US. If we are to remain a world leader in innovation we must ensure that the net remains neutral. Binding new companies with fees and costs will stifle advancement. Don't sacrifice our economic future for a quick buck now.
—Tyler Mason, Seattle, WA

No pay for play. That will stifle innovation. Preserve net neutrality. Stop catering to big money and listen to the citizens. Time to reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Erich Vieth, Saint Louis, MO

You've proven yourself to be nothing but a prostitute for the big money interests--what a surprise !! (not)
—R Rykart, Saint Louis, MO

This is a public utility and we want a level playing field that's fair to ALL of us
—J Talbot, austin, TX

I build mobile applications for the nations nonprofit organizations to be able to facilitate their life changing services. I demand net neutrality so that our nations nonprofit orgs can do their tremendously important work without fear of carriers limiting their ability for a profit.
—Chris brereton, Santa Monica, CA

Net Neutrality is critical to entrepreneurship on the internet and must be protected.
—Ken Johnson, Lincoln, NE

reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Bruce Eggum, Gresham, WI

Net Neutrality has become a basic consumer right, and an essential tool for small businesses as well as large ones. If nothing else, the economic impact would be terrible.
—Anna M., Allston, MA

The internet is the greatest invention since the printing press for the spread of information and education.
—Dr. Fred T. Ponder Ph.D., Houston, TX

I work with the internet on a daily basis. Some clients that I have are strictly internet based. If the proposed rules are put in place this could not only severely hamper future innovation but also put many small internet based companies in a bad place. Please reconsider and think of the general public and let there be an open internet!
—Bryon Kuehn, New Ulm, MN

The Internet is central to our daily lives, in matters of personal interest as well as business. Free and equal access to it will be essential to maintain anything like an Economic engine for America in the 21st century.
—Matthew Miyares, Lorton, VA

COMMON CARRIER AND NOTHING ELSE.
—Sharon Roark, Canton, OH

I don't feel that special interests with deep pockets should corrupt the open internet we currently enjoy.
—Bill Gussman, Southampton, PA

Throw out your rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Dont be a trashy person.
—Andrew Ciaravino, vestal, NY

Killing Net Neutrality will affect the entire world and for what? Greed and Money, please be reasonable and don't give in to this silly law.
—William House, Cocoa, FL

Important for the safety and preservation of the internet
—Bennett A Carson, Red Wing, MN

Allowing bigger corporations to choose who gets to push ahead of the others will only discourage the multitude of small businesses online from moving forward and providing useful products and services that help inspire new ideas and stimulate business and the economy. It can also be easily abused to ensure only select groups and content get the premiere focus over others, limiting free speech and creativity. Please do not allow this plan to pass. Keep the Internet open for everyone, not just people with the most money who can push the system into favoring them and dooming everyone else.
—Matt Willard, Jacksonville, FL

I disagree with creating further monopoly of the internet than verizon and comcast already have. Money does not equal free speech it is pretty plain to see who has lobbied to end net neutrality.
—Jonathan Hagarty, ,

Net Neutrality is important to me as a web developer because it protects my livelihood!
—Mr. Alex Miramontes, Chicago, IL

A free and open internet where all bytes are created equal is the last hope WE THE PEOPLE have to save our democracy. AT&T, Comcast and Verizon are doing just fine in an open internet. Why on earth would you stack the deck even further in their favor!?!?!
—Kathy Condor, LaVale, MD

My work as an aircraft accident investigator relies on net neutrality to document accident information as soon as possible. I can not be impeded by a Corporation looking for more money! Mr. Wheeler has been apparently bought by these Corporations! He must step down as soon as possible!!
—Ron Maynard, Melbourne, FL

I have published online news for 12 years for my community...everything is free as it's a volunteer news site...we are small and yet important to my readers...it's bad enough that communications are becoming more and more a monopoly by mergers, etc. Why don't "they" just leave us alone...so sick and tired of the "big boys" taking everything! Please, just stop it now! I suspect "they" don't read these petitions or if anyone does they just ignore us. But, at the very least we can still comment, so far.
—Dixie Walter, Eatonville, WA

The internet is one of the last truly democratic spaces that the American people have left. Please keep the internet free!
—Christine Lafferty, Cleveland, OH

Life and Death
—Carlo Fiore, Chalmette, LA

Few things in life are as important as a free internet! We gain knowledge from it, and it should neither be viewed as the playgrounds of the rich and famous, nor the greedy sociopaths! Equal access for all!
—Jack Spallino, Anaheim, CA

Internet providers need to be reclassified as common carriers in order to give the FCC greater regulatory power over an essential resource - so we won't be put over a barrel by the very companies the FCC is supposed to oversee.
—Philip A. Cherry, Mandeville, LA

Innovation will be hampered without real network neutrality. Evolution of technology and health of economy depends on implementation of real Net Neutrality.
—Bulat Filin, Brooklyn, NY

Dear Federal Communications Commission: FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Michael Davis, Anchorage, AK

This is shameful that the the FCC is proposing such rules. We the People - remember?
—Joe Volpe, Malvern, PA

People like myself actively rely on the vast resources made available by a free and open internet to keep informed on the issues that really matter. With the loss of neutrality, this grand resource is threatened and I cannot imagine a world where big media has its hooks in the distribution of all of this information. Please reconsider your stances - a free and open internet benefits us all!
—Casey Jones, Sumner, GA

You want to shut people up by censoring internet. Whatever you call it. Stop that. Keep internet free.
—Pierre Halfquiz, ,

I'm a retired person on Social Security and I depend on Net Neutrality to keep in touch with those friends who are still alive. Why in the bloody blue blazes should I be given second and third-rate service simply because I'm NOT a rich corporation? Answer me that!
—Rose Marie Ash, Buffalo, NY

Net neutrality is what makes the internet a unique and extremely valuable communications tool. To do anything other than maintain net neutrality and treat internet service providers as common carriers would be a disservice to US citizens, the world, and our future.
—James Ford, Southport, CT

My work requires open access.
—Wendy Paff, Pittsburgh, PA

The internet is a tool that all should have equal access to. It drives innovation and should be available to as many people as possible, not just those who can pay more for faster speeds.
—Patrick, Morral, OH

Net Neutrality IS internet.
—Ozgur Zeren, Cercedilla, NC

Pres. Obama promised to keep the net neutral. Try to follow his lead.
—Roger Walker, East Lansing, MI

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protest the open Internet by reclassifying ISP'S common carriers.
—Ricardo Castro, Sacaramento, CA

I work in a business that would be very negatively affected if broadband is not classed as a common carrier.
—Kelsea Moore, Woonsocket, RI

Without net neutrality, hundreds of companies would never have been able to start up. By killing net neutrality, you stagnate the system, allowing for less and less competition, all controlled by a system which quite clearly cares little about what develops.
—Riley King, Satsuma, AL

It is appalling how the FCC as under minded the American public in this way. Destroying liberty and access to information to Americans. It is just wrong and yur actions are contributing to a harshly controlled, communist style country. May god have mercy on your souls and may u har the foresight to correct the error of ways
—Vanessa lasko, Va beach, VA

Mr. Wheeler, please take a step back and take a holisitic, OBJECTIVE view of the situation. I cannot say much more than that because it is difficult to conclude anything but you are a marionette for your prior employer and the industry lobbyists.
—Sean Halverson, Omaha, NE

The Internet would lose most of its true value if it is yet another big-business controlled revenue generator. Please don't let this happen.
—Mark Schmidt, Harrisburg, PA

I ask that you protect all of us equally. My wife and I don't have a lot of money. Please don't let us become second class citizens on the Internet.
—Douglas Long, Rio Rancho, NM

Thanks to net neutrality, anyone with some programming knowledge and a good idea can create something that will eventually be seen by millions. Without net neutrality, the internet will no longer be full of innovative new ideas because good ideas will never be able to become successful!
—Will Guy, Leicestershire,

Even if you don't care about having a free and open internet that gives the same access to the little guy as it does to the big guys, there are reasons to oppose your new rules. These proposed new rules may make sense if there were more options for broadband internet providers in this country because the market would decide which company survived. A person could choose between getting their internet access from different companies, whether it be the one who charges for a content "fast lane" or the one who doesn't. We could decide with our dollars. But since Comcast, Time Warner, and Verizon have all agreed not to compete with each other in huge geographic areas, there is no true competition for broadband internet access. To this end, I implore you to reclassify ISPs as common carriers and enforce net neutrality on the way they handle our data. So as not to give them yet another pat on the back for being non-competitive and abhorrently money hungry.
—Pat Williams, Hopkins, MN

ATT and Comcast are already the worst companies on the planet, they don't need to get any worse or greedier. An open and free internet is the key to improving the quality of life for everyone on earth. Don't screw that up. Don't turn us into China.
—Scott Hillson, West Linn, OR

I demand that you represent MY interests and the interests of the common person by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. I heard that Chairman Wheeler said that if these rules are passed, and the few monopoly companies begin unfair practices which would limit net neutrality, that those companies will then be regulated to somehow to stop the behavior. What a bunch of nonsense! Once they start ending net neutrality, it will be over. They will win the courts because they have the money and they will win at the FCC because they have the money. I do not have their money to swing this thing. All I have is Chairman Wheeler who is supposed to be representing me and the millions like me who do not have the money to influence politics. We need him to take a strong stand for regulation now and RECLASSIFY ISPs as COMMON CARRIERS. These proposed rules are a disaster and go against what Chairman Wheeler and President Obama have declared should be net neutrality. Stephanie Roche 6405 Phinney Ave N Apt L Seattle, WA 98103 jumpforjoy2day@hotmail.com
—Stephanie Roche, Seattle, WA

Net Neutrality equals Freedom of Speech, the constitutional right.
—Margaret Hasan, El Cerrito, CA

Communications is Communications regardless of the form it takes you must treat ISP's exactly the same as common carriers. Period.
—Rich Fuller, Longmont, CO

Seriously, stop fucking with us before we start fucking back.
—Erik Kelly, Lincoln university, PA

I am a long term, academic computer center management type. I was here when the internet was invented. This is precisely the big fear we all had when this started, that it would end up like Cable TV. YOU are the ones who can ameliorate this.
—David Barnhill, Lawrence, KS

Dear Federal Communications Comission, CC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Daniele Dohring, Los Angeles, CA

The internet is not owned by one or two companies. It's a collective ownership by everyone. But, by passing these rules your are destroying this idea and giving power to giant corporations!
—Michael Schatte, Burleson, TX

If you don't ensure continued net neutrality, the internet will cease to be a force of democracy and become merely another advertising platform.
—Rowan Everard, Portland, OR

Net Neutrality matters to me because I work in the IT industry. The internet was founded to share information. If we destroy it by allowing for a "fast" and "slow" lane many issues will arise. In addition the tax payers have already subsidized hundreds of billions of dollars to have these fiber backbones built, so Mr Wheeler you as essentially allowing big ISP to triple dip for the same service.
—Darren Holmblad, Fairfax, VA

Please keep the internet equally available to everyone!!!
—Lane B Adams, Louisvile, KY

The internet has become a necessity in today's modern world. Everyone needs the ability to access that necessity equally to encourage growth and innovation.
—Matt Ludwig, Brooklyn, NY

My business depends on equal access to the internet. After being laid off in 2011, I built my own company from the ground up. If Net Neutrality is destroyed, my business could go with it.
—Jen Luckwaldt, Brooklyn, NY

I don't want to pay higher rates or have slower service.
—Noreen Stevenson, Chester, NY

As a freelance media technician, it is vital that I have optimal internet speed. To create two classes of internet speed, the faster of which would be more expensive would cut into my already limited profit margin. and quite honestly the service providers which are owned by large corporations do not need more profit for the same service.
—Tyler Bennett, vestal, NY

Net Neutrality is important beacuase it is FAIR. Does justice really matter in America?
—Elias Bastos, South Lake Tahoe, CA

Imagine that one day we will return to a democracy and your kids and grandchildren won't think ill of you.
—Mr. Jacob Stilabower, indianapolis, IN

I work in education, arts and journalism. Activities in these fields are crucial to well-rounded, well-informed American citizenry, and should not take a back seat to raw, unadulterated commercial activity that benefits only the already-wealthiest in our society. It is well, well past time to classify Internet service providers as the common carriers they actually function as.
—Kenneth Zahnle, Macomb, IL

Internet access is an essential form of communication and expression for me. Dump your proposed rules and reclassify internet service providers as common carriers.
—Anthony R Parent, Las Vegas, NV

It's important for all thoughts, commerce and online communications to have the same access. Anything less tilts the internet to the favor of large corporations. The internet is a public commodity.
—Richard Cervi, St Petersburg, FL

It's going to be very interesting in the future when someone ferrets out how Mr. Wheeler is going to profit financially from his plan, and who it is that is paying him off.
—Terry Fisher, Dallas, TX

Our country can't be the one to stop freedom of speech and freedom of information. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Rebecca Sears, New York, NY

A corporations profits should NEVER override the needs or the people. Classify ISPs at Common Carriers and force them to treat all net traffic equally.
—Frank Boisvert, Ridgecrest, CA

Net Neutrality is important to me because the Internet didn't get to where it is today with paid prioritization. Tom Wheeler you piss me off.
—Mitch Stehlin, Cincinnati, OH

Without real Net Neutrality the Internet will be governed by the other Golden Rule -- he who has the gold makes the rules! That will leave the American consumer with high costs, poor service, and little or no competition!
—Duane Baker, Powell, OH

Tom Wheeler, I am angry that you emailed me and basically lied to me when you advised that you would push for what you termed "open internet" and then turn around and push a two-tiered internet with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. As FCC Chair, you should be looking out for the interests of US citizens and not the interests of wealthy, greedy corporations like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon.
—Elizabeth L Audas, Des Moines, IA

Corporate monopoly does not belong in a free USA or on a free internet. Back off, Ma Bell.
—Tyler Whitesides, Hillsboro, OR

The internet is the most important tool in today's modern society. Equality in internet access is as important in equality amongst people. Do not take away this most vital communication tool and set society on the wrong path.
—Samantha Turetsky, Ormond Beach, FL

The web was developed and paid for, and maintained/policed, by taxpayer funds. No corporation should own or control it in any way just because they provide point-of-use access. Throttling or other speed control is discrimination based on use and therefore based on speech, and we have plenty of Supreme Court decision saying that NO SPEECH CAN BE DISCRIMINATED AGAINST!!!!
—E Fredric, Eugene, OR

The net needs to be freely available for all - with no discrimination. Allowing for a possible two-tier system is morally wrong - and will cause problems for many!
—Les Reed, London,

The internet expanded exponentially and companies were founded and grew well under the equality imposed by the Net Neutrality that has ruled the internet until now. Ending Net Neutrality is bad for new companies trying to enter a market and it is bad for consumers as fair competition for their patronage dies in a monopoly of large companies that can afford to pay higher fees for better delivery speeds. Why mess with success? Let Net Neutrality continue to be the rule of the road for the information superhighway.
—Monica Sanchez, New York, NY

Please do not hurt the little guys. Big business should not be allowed to regulate the internet. We have seen time and time again that when big business is left to make moral and ethical decisions, they fail. You must regulate for them. The internet is exactly the same as the telephone. It is used to transfer communications between people over wires. This should make internet regulated just like telephone.
—Robert Motter, Ardmore, TN

I strongly urge the FCC to NOT make the change currently proposed. Net Neutrality is critical if we are going to continue to have free speech in the country. Robert L. Tripp Reston, VA
—Robert Tripp, Reston, VA

The internet was designed as an open medium, with content accessible to everyone without discrimination. To go ahead with a 'fast lane' type of plan would severely impede individuals who cannot afford the higher tiered plan, stifling innovation, education, and communication. An untold number of people require and rely on the internet for their livelihood, and this proposed tiered plan does nothing but threaten that livelihood in the name of ill-gotten profit.
—Samantha Davis, Scranton, PA

I feel that the net must be equally accessible to all people. Many people benefit every day from the wealth of information available on the internet!
—Lori Melton, Pittsburgh, PA

I am a licensed private investigator. Internet searches make up a bulk of my work. Do not make them more difficult.
—James Spell, Valdosta, GA

Net Neutrality is vital and must be kept. If Isps are not reclassified as common carriers, then this could create an Internet monopolies and bottleneck any information disapproved by an older and richer generation of the populace.
—Ariel Salas, Passaic, NJ

I work in the tech industry building websites and other online services. If net the net becomes divided, my job and everyone in my industry, will suffer because our products will be more difficult and painful to find and to use. Do not make our lives and our jobs more difficult. Do not divide the internet.
—Brandon Schlueter, Jackson Heights, NY

Let's not let the democratic nature of the internet be destroyed by corporate dollars, as is sadly the case with our current democracy.
—Jude, Lehi, UT

These proposed rules are short-sighted and have the potential to affect the commercial nature of the open Internet in very negative ways. The FCC should change this and support an open Internet that is good for everyone -- businesses, users, customers -- and not just for the large commercial players.
—Tim Lapetino, Chicago, IL

As a small content producer (videos and music) I don't want my offerings to be completely drowned out by Big Business. The US Govt and the FCC need to represent the human people of this nation, not the corporations, and that needs to start now!
—Jeffrey G Thomas, Minneapolis, MN

I work online. I need the internet to give me all the information that I need. With all of this information, why would you as a country, hold it from citizens in a society that is supposed to be capitalist? It's a rather socialist move, and I demand you leave our internet alone!
—Rusty Hoyle, SEDRO WOOLLEY, WA

The internet is a public utility. We all must have access to it. Please consider changing these rules to move towards net neutrality. Our future depends on it!
—Matt Osmundsen, Kirkwood, MO

I believe in net neutrality and taking it away would ruin the opportunity the internet provides individuals to speak freely and do business on the internet. I would like to start a business in the future and by imposing these rules ISPs like Comcast won't let that happen.
—Joseph Z, Boca Raton, FL

Net neutrality ensures an even playing field.
—Cynthia Stewart, Nashua, NH

Not only will the proposed changed stifle business, but will cause the US to lag behind Europe and Asia. High Speed internet should be a right and this goes against the entire idea of the internet in the first place.
—Sam Rutherford, New York, NY

Net neutrality is important for the livelihood and well being of small businesses, entrepreneurs, start ups, and anyone with an idea and dream they want to get out into the world. Don't cripple those of us who don't have the means otherwise. The Internet is one if the last places the American Dream is feasible. Don't take that away.
—Myriam Bloom, Lawrence, KS

This country is already too divided between the people with lots of money and the people without. Allowing big companies to buy "fast lanes" would just encourage this divide, and further reduce opportunities for small business and entrepreneurs. Don't throttle innovation in America! Reclassify ISPs as common carriers and keep the internet available to EVERYONE. Thank you.
—Janice, Duluth, GA

Equal access to the various resources on the internet is a necessity! Don't sacrifice net neutrality for the sake of profit.
—Claire DeWilde, Huntington Beach, CA

If there is would be no net neutrality that would be a huge backlash to the small companies. The big companies would profit alot and rule the market wich would be bad for the consumer.
—Rasmus Driving, ,

Net neutrality is super important. Its just as important as social discrimination, but this time it can be used to extort money from people. We need to prevent this horrendous decision! Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers!
—Austin Hed, Portland, OR

What you are doing is the same as if you allowed landline phone service to select which customers get better service.
—Alan Lambert, Los Altos, CA

The end of an open Internet would mean the end of opportunity for small businesses, and would harm American students' ability to be competitive against their global peers. The end of the open Internet will be disastrous for the United States, both economically and educationally, while aiding already-massive telecom companies.
—Dan Royles, East Elmhurst, NY

I internet is an ever expanding world of opportunities and ending net neutrality would kill that by giving big businesses control.
—Walter, Astoria, NY

I truthfully believe that the internet is the next major advancement to writing in human civilization. It enables us to expand our knowledge beyond generations to be archived beyond physical means. The internet should not be discriminatory, owned, or controlled. It started as an open idea, and should continue to be - simple as that. It certainly should not have imposed laws due to corporate interest. FCC, please do not allow ISPs to be anything other than common carriers without discriminatory rights, and if Tom Wheeler thinks this is a good thing - we the people need a new chairman to represent us better, because we've been saying for years that it is not; Again, and again, and again.
—Mr. Derek Keith, Denver, CO

Net neutrality is the only way to ensure the Internet stays open to innovation and small business, doing anything else ensures monopolies and worse outcomes for consumers.
—Sean Bennett, Saint Paul, MN

We just simply cannot commence with a new way of doing things based on monetary agreements, this is something that will affect pretty much everyone and we need to have everything stay the way it is. Simply put it is just not fair and everyone deserves to have the choice to do what they do online and utilize things such as Netflix and internet and all things related.
—Sky, Hampton Bays, NY

Please reclassify. Creation of fast lanes = arbitrary slow lanes.
—Gerardo Talavera, Brookline, MA

The FCC protects consumers' right to have access to reliable phone service and to provide airwaves that support the common good, so it boggles my mind that protecting a free and open internet (which is quickly replacing TV, radio & phone) wouldn't have those same protections. The handful of media conglomerates that control the content and the access to the content have way too much power as it is. A fair and open internet is the last glimmer of hope for free speech and innovation in our online world. I can't overstate the importance of protecting internet neutrality. Protect consumers. Protect freedom of speech. Protect internet neutrality.
—Tom Gale, Wilmington, NC

im tired of the man raping me of my freedom
—Kimberly Moore, Purcell, OK

Do not make the internet a limited resource.
—Grant S Dalgliesh, Blaine, WA

Please take action to ensure complete net neutrality - without exception or waffling.
—Robert Buzzard, Chesapeake, VA

Please do all you can to protect net neutrality.
—Thomas Scott, Fairfax, CA

Please exercise your authority to regulate Internet Service Providers as common carriers. This is the only way to ensure the Internet remains the true two-way, open system of communication we cherish.
—Robert Gehl PhD, Salt Lake City, UT

The Internet was designed to be a free and un encumbered. Do not let private interests control the Internet. They will destroy open communication.
—George Zinn, Newaygo, MI

Please classify Internet providers as common carriers to protect net neutrality.
—David C. Berkshire, Houston, TX

As an informed American, I would like to be able to receive my news in a timely fashion from multiple online news sources, for the large cable companies like Comcast to give priority to large news corporations (who can pay their fees) severely impacts my ability to stay informed. Independent and varied points of view should not be bottlenecked, because they can't afford to pay "high speed fees"
—Eric Kwok, Baltimore, MD

As a small business owner I need REAL net neutrality so I can compete fairly with large corporations. Your proposal has already been responsible for losing my business money and loans to expand. Your proposal will put me out of business.
—Brett Ellis, Watsontown, PA

The current openness of the internet is what allows the internet to function on a useable and unrestricted level and as these current rules are proposed, I cannot consciously allow them to be made into law or as any sort of enforceable merit or any legal or binding policy. Current laws and regulations that have been operating as Net Neutrality are sufficient and should continue to operate as is without any changes. I have also heard and am incredibly concerned about Chairman Wheeler's intentions with his proposed internet rules and believe that they would be a detriment to all who do not have any sort of political or financial interest in them being implemented.
—Brian Westermann, Trenton, MI

Because Net Neutrality means freedom and prosperity. I'm tired of being a slave to corporatism, I'm tired of democracy crumbling, and I'm tired of government lobbyists getting their hands into everything while politicians like Wheeler bend over.
—Mike Doane, Jarrettsville, MD

Our country is already falling behind others and in large part due to our archaic treatment of the internet. It is not a luxury, it is a UTILITY. People today need it just as much as they need electricity, and it needs to be unfettered, and it needs to just work. Please don't cripple it. Our abilities as a nation and our wellbeing as citizens depend on it.
—Justin Long, Los Angeles, CA

These new rules would help billionaires and hurt the public interest. I urge the FCC to scrap them.
—Winfield Carson, Poway, CA

I've been doing business online since 1994, and to see everything I've come to expect from the Internet as I know it being endangered makes me nauseated. If we don't protect net neutrality, the Internet we see in 10 years will be a shadow of its former self. Let's not make a terrible mistake — one that out grandchildren will resent us for having made.
—Adam Chadwick, Orlando, FL

Obama appointed Wheeler to head the FCC knowing full well that Wheeler is an unabashed supporter of corporate profit over all else. So, of course Wheeler is acting in the interest of COMCAST, VERIZON, ETC. This is blatantly unfair, and wrong on so many levels. We, the people, insist on reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. Wheeler has no shame and he will not listen to our pleas. This is just a ploy to quiet the crowd and then he will proceed with what he intended to do from day one. Just look at the ugly Michael Powell, he is now making money hand over fist helping the corporations. There should be punishment for this not rewards. the people have no voice. horribly UNDEMOCRATIC.
—Patsy Lowe, Simi Valley, CA

I am sick of large corporations running our country. The internet should remain an open playing field for all. I want all ISPs reclassified as common carriers. Allow the little guy an opportunity, as that is what allowed us to get here today.
—Laura, Dallas, TX

Innovation comes from smaller companies. It has been proven many times that when big companies dominate a sector, innovation suffers. The result is users suffer from stale technology and high costs.
—Tom Helm, Santa Rosa, CA

We should not have upper vs. lower classes on the internet.
—Janis McCabe, Port Chester, NY

The internet is not for sale. Any attempt to do so will gravely damage our democracy, and must be stopped as much as any terrorist attack. If Barack Obama is true to his word, Tom Wheeler should be fired immediately.
—Erik Roth, Minneapolis, MN

I am a user of the internet and I have my own website. I resent having to wait in line or have my users wait in line while the monied, corporate interests cut in front. No one likes to have someone cut in front of them in line. It's unfair and they are bullies.
—Ms. Kay Rosen, gary, IN Equal opportunity for all content creators!

—Justin Lamb, Brooklyn, NY

people like myself that are lucky enough to work from home will suffer because we depend on the internet for content delivery (I'm a video Editor). If my internet connection slows down, I will not be able to meet deadlines.
—Damian D, Spotswood, NJ

Without Net Neutrality, the internet would become a simple monopoly.
—Tatiyana Lee, Vineland, NJ

Without Net Neutrality, ISPs could be able to throttle government Internet use as a way to increase revenue from federal agencies.
—Ryan Rardin, Charleston, IL

An open and free internet is a much a part of our first amendment rights as any other form of comunication. No corperation should be given the power to filter or monitor what the individual can acsess or how.
—Anthony Ievoli, Newark, DE

REALLY?? Let's keep our net available for all.
—Tracy and Dieter Bury, Bellevue, WA

Because people I know and some I have befriended rely on the internet for their work, both for online only jobs and for partially online jobs. It is also a source to pay for other utilities and check account balances. By making the internet further unfair (as regions, companies, and base fees vary as it is), you are essentially telling people that if they do not have enough wealth, (as an analogy) they might as well not have the right to a car and should only walk simply because they cannot afford the prettier model.
—Michelle Hobbs, Elkton, MD

The idea that ISPs should be given the chance to decide which content people can access it just wrong. Stop this madness now.
—Ross Pendleton, ,

Removing Net Neutrality is anti-competitive. It is a transparent power grab on the part of the companies that are lobbying to end it. Please protect the People from CEOs by defending Net Neutrality.
—Nick Cron-DeVico, Los Angeles, CA

This system would destroy startup companies, for one (among many) issues. Small businesses deserve a chance.
—Karen Tiegren, Atlanta, GA

I feel that we do not have a choice when it comes to broadband internet access, and it has become a necessity. Therefore, Comcast, et al, should be regulated as providers of a public utility, and net neutrality is an important part of that. Thank you.
—David Erie, Lawrenceville, GA

Because it is freedom of speech
—John Bidleman, SEBASTOPOL, CA

Net Neutrality is important to make sure online surfing can be free and fair for everyone.
—Lotus White, ,

we need the net just like it's always been. please make no changes. can we the people have anything? thank you
—Lynwood K Fields, Glenside, PA

Millions of Americans will revolt if you allow Net Neutrality to die.
—Dean Terrell, Glassboro, NJ

The internet is not for sale to corporate America. It belongs to EVERYONE!
—Jim Yeaman, Montgomery, AL

Access and quality of the internet should be equal for every citizen on our planet who wants it, regardless of income or net worth. Keep the net open and free and out of corporations' hands.
—J Z, Pittsburgh, PA

The internet must remain free and open! Has our whole government been bought and paid for?
—Mr Edward Armm, Lake Hopatcong, NJ

Net Neutrality needs to be protected. If there is no Net Neutrality then the big companies will ruin internet speed.
—Hunter Farley, Prospect, PA

Reclassifying ISPs as common carriers is the only way to protect real Net Neutrality. I hope you keep this in mind and repeal the proposed rules. Thanks, Tom —Tom Wright, Austin, TX

Why should those with money get preferencial treatment? The internet id for EVERYONE EQUALLY!
—Bob Miller, Aliso Viejo, CA

No free press, no open internet = no democracy.
—Judy Landress, Corpus Christi, TX is no other way

—Rocio Lario, Naples, FL

Keep the Internet free for all of us so we all have the same opportunities!!!
—Nancy Viraldo, Muskegon, MI

We need to maintain a fair and open internet.
—Dr. Kenneth Adler, Sylvania, OH

Hindering creativity will destroy culture.
—Eric Heavin, Boise, ID

An truly open internet is necessary for innovation
—Ryan J Gaillard, Miami, FL

The small business I do work for - uBloom.com - would never be able to afford fast lanes and therefore become hindered in its effort to grow its audience and grow as a business.
—Kelly James Blank, Comstock Park, MI

I believe in a free state, deregulated commercial America. My dreams can never be realized, because while I believe in ideals like freedom of action, rational thought, and practical living ... corporations have other ideals: bottom lines, overhead reduction, and profit margins. Net Neutrality is important to be not because it frees me... but because it protects the freedoms that I already enjoy. Please reconsider.
—Daniel Neeley, Gwynn Oaks, MD

Please resist such corrupt corporate lobbying and keep the internet open and free for all!!!
—C Margitan, ,

Letting corporate interests charge extra fees or pay to be priority traffic is NOT what the internet is about. One needs to only look at the press and TV news to see that corporate control damages the content with the lack of reporting to the masses. Please reclassify ISPs as a common carrier and stop this nonsense. Also, PLEASE stop the discussion about using phones on airplanes! It has been discussed repeatedly, people don't want it, now let it rest. Regards, Van Welborn
—Van Welborn, Phoenix, AZ

We are moving into an era in which the internet is the primary mode of communication and information gathering. Net Neutrality is critical for the development and spread of human knowledge in both adults and children. Please protect Net Neutrality!
—Chelsea Marsh, Rochester, NY

Without Net Neutrality the internets' viability and practical and entertainment usage alike will likely fade into oblivion.
—Ben Standard, Longview, TX

Real Net Neutrality is critical, vital, and fair. Profiteering is generally not. Simply reclassifying ISPs as the common carriers is SMART, SIMPLE, and FAIR.
—Don Van Duren, Grand Rapids, MI

The internet has become a utility in our lives, and it's time to make our regulations reflect that. It's not fair to let companies who have more money have better access to the market.
—Johnny Furman, Elmwood Park, IL

Keep the internet open!!! Do not change the laws! The American people will not stand for it!
—Luis Villarreal, Northridge, CA

Everything revolves around the internet. You better keep it fair and neutral. Capiche?
—Iggy Makarevich, Cos Cob, CT

Bogus internet lanes, Bogus ISP terminology, everyone knows that the ISP's are currently holding back internet speed for users for extra money. Money they got from the government to build the net highway yet never delivered, and now they are trying to get us to pay for an internet that WE the people built, we made to grow! what a load of nonsense!
—Zackary, Crosby, TX

The internet is like the highway system. Yes, we have toll roads (a nasty idea), but generally our roads for everyone free of charge. Let's make the internet that way.
—greg nichols, lawrence, KS

This is our public airways and should be protected for ALL!! BIGGER(consolidations) are a joke! REGULATE as a utility.
—Sharalynn Rocha, Denver, CO

Your plan will allow the monopolistic large internet providers control the content and speed of what they want us to see. It will also allow them to gouge us on IP pricing and pay more and more to see the internet we really want. This proposal would basically turn the IP industry into a cartel, much like the cable TV industry is now.
—Michael Eagleson, Marietta, GA

We will never be ok with this no matter how big the companies , that are influencing the FCC, keep the internet Neutral. This will have a big back lash and some of you in the FCC will be fired and it will be overturned even if it passes.
—Nizar Sibai johnston, Austin, TX

No other form of expression is as free as the internet is, don't take that away.
—Andrew Bahnken, Goleta, CA

Please don't do this, If you do most of us won't be able to afford the internet any more. How do you think this will affect people who need it for school and work and just to keep in touch with family and friends around the world?
—Katherine Schwirzinski, Toledo, OH

As a newspaper journalist, I can't believe that the American right to free and equal speech is at risk. Please think of what this country stands for and keep the Internet free for all.
—Nancy Sharp, Manlius, NY

In the modern world, democracy, creativity, the development of new commercial ideas, all depend on free, open, and EQUAL access to the Internet.
—Carol Fox, ,

enforce REAL net neutrality!
—Kelly, Carbondale, CO

This is the worst idea that has hit the Internet since 4chan!
—Harry "Licenseplate" Mitchell, ,

The more we give in to the needs of the few (wealthy internet providers), the more we limit the ability of everyone else to climb up the ladder of success. I should be the one deciding what I can and can't easily view online, not companies with agendas. The internet should be a level playing field for all, not something that more or less gets dominated by only a few voices. Why are you creating these different lanes of access? Who's interest is this most in? Not mine.
—Paul DeNola, Arlington, VA

Mr. Wheeler keeps responding to me that "I'm a strong supporter of the Open Internet, and I will fight to keep the internet open. Thanks again for sharing your views with me." Faster access and streaming if you pay for them, isn't a free and open internet!
—Barry Southwood, Jenison, MI

Given that increasingly, most Americans receive their news and information from the internet, Net Neutrality is essential to maintaining a truly democratic, representative society. Please do not cave into the big-money interests, and have the courage and foresight to protect the rights of all American citizens, not just the few who can afford to pay what promises to be ever increasing fees, in the event you fail to reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Thank you for your very serious consideration of the views of the majority of U.S. citizens.
—Cynthia J Kimball, Sparks, NV

You will aid in the killing of small businesses.
—Tony A Testerman, Abingdon, MD

Net Neutrality is pretty much the only thing that allows us to express ourselves at any meaningful level nowadays. Without it, freedom as a concept may as well not exist anymore.
—Roy Fisher, Monroe, WI

Keep the internet the way it is!
—Benny Wijatno, San Francisco, CA

Everyone should have equal service regardless of wealth
—Dan Brown, Bluefield, WV

I rely on the internet for important communications and information from a variety of sources. Television has more and more offerings and grows ever more expensive while its quality continues to plummet. Back in the 1960s, one of your predecessors derided television as a "vast wasteland". It still is, especially the news.
—Jerald Vinikoff, Mechanicville, NY

The FCC is supposed to be working for and representing the people not the corporate, monied interests. This needs to be reflected in your dealings.
—Vincent J. Patti, Long Beach, CA

Pay to Play provides an unfair advantage to the establishment. The economy of the United States has benefitted tremendously from the expansion of internet businesses. In just a few years a startup can go from a website hosted in your garage to a multi-billion dollar industry. The establishment is trying to create barriers to entry to protect (and charge a large fee to do so) established internet business interests. This will curb innovation, lead to corporate censorship of the internet, and in general do great damage to our collective economic and political future. I urge you PLEASE protect the open internet by reclassifying ISP's as common carriers. There is no communication link more important in the world today that the internet. If the old rules for net neutrality cannot be enforced, internet service must be reclassified so that rules protecting neutrality can be permanently put in place. Look at these companies histories. Look at the fines Verizon has had to pay over the years. They will no protect our interests. They do not refrain from breaking the law if they think it will benefit their bottom line (the massive fines they have paid are proof of that). They will exploit us and squeeze every last penny from the internet at the cost of innovation and economic growth. They are not to be trusted, and the only way to protect us from them is to put strong rules in place to enforce net neutrality.
—Mr. Thomas Bottom, Rochester, NY

Startups and small non profits rely on a level playing field.
—Stephen Andruski, Clifton Park, NY

I am now 70 years old and have watched as the Internet has leveled the playing field for hundreds of thousands of people, poor and rich alike. It has provided a platform for creative sharing beyond all expectations. I am asking you on behalf of my extended family of seven children and sixteen grandchildren, as well as my many senior-friends on fixed budgets, to KEEP TRUE Net Neutrality for the internet!!!!!!
—Madelynne Engle, Fallbrook, CA

An open, honest Internet is the only way this country will survive! Getting the truth out is just important today as it was 240 years ago. You allow this to happen and you'll be classified accurately in history as worse then Benedict Arnold!!
—John Kuca, Little Rock, AR

Do you want porn gone? Because it will go away after this —Joshua Ortiz, Poughkeepsie, NY

Your recent ruling is further proof that this country is a fucking oligarchy and not a democracy. Good job working for the 1% Tom Wheeler! Hope their money assuages your guilt. Not.
—Jaime Becker, Berkeley, CA

As a senior citizen email is a very important way for me to keep in touch with friends and family and Net neutrality is very important to me.
—Christeen Stone, St Paul, MN

At the moment, the United States already has the SLOWEST internet at the highest prices available in the world. If the carriers/ISPs are capable of faster speeds, force them to make them available to everyone, and keep net neutrality in the USA.
—Robert Waldbauer, Wind Gap, PA

ISPs are nothing but utility providers. And their services need to be treated as such.
—Vlatko Salaj, ,

Everyone who has access to the open internet like now, would ultimately lose out to the more affluent who can afford the fast lanes, as proposed and be left out totally ! Please reclassify the internet as a utility NOW!
—Anthony G Franklin, BEDFORD, OH

The Internet has become one of the most, if not the most, important source of information for the modern era. By classifying it as a common carrier, it would ensure neutral, unbiased access to news and information, unfettered by second interests or corporate biases.
—Emily Teng, Bellevue, WA

The US is way below other countries concerning Net speed.Everyone who hosts a website should be able to get their message/ services onto the web under a multiple tier plan big companies (Disney) will pay huge bucks to develop their content but small sites (non-profit, NGOs) will be harmed as their operating expenses won't allow them access.
—Larry Day, Danville, CA

Without net neutrality, innovation will be stifled and the U.S. would likely lose its technological edge. Interfering with an open Internet is short-sighted and self-destructive, a terrible idea that must be stopped. Please ensure future growth by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Geary Yelton, Asheville, NC

Separating the internet into different tiers of traffic is against the most basic of our civil liberties. We have a freedom of expression in this country, and the internet is our most used means by which we invoke this freedom. Arbitrarily limiting the means by which the internet can be used limits and even threatens our freedom of expression thereupon. It is therefore an assault on our basic civil liberties, and must be stopped.
—Patrick Sauter, Palatine, IL

I do not want the biggest commercial entities on this planet to dominate the flow of data and information through financial leverage. Please assure that the internet is treated as a common carrier.
—Dan Watson, Easton, MD

Internet service providers should be reclassified and therefore regulated as a telecommunications services. That is what they are.
—S J Munson, Winston Salem, NC

We need a free an open Internet not a two teir Internet with the rich taking the fast lane and leaving young entrepreneurs in the dust. A thriving financial market needs to replenish its energy supply and have full access without corporate interference. The FCC needs to trash it's rules and reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Thank you, Antonia Herbstreit.
—Antonia Herbstreit, Champaign, IL

Net Neutrality is a fundamental right of every citizen in our nation. It is the explicit charge of the FCC to provide fair and equal communications. Stand up for the fundamental right of net neutrality for the people of our nation.
—Daniel Zachs, Dorchester, MA

If my company cannot reach the max amount of customers because I can't pay for the fast-lane internet, it will be the end of Capitalism as a whole.
—Jason Marshall, Harrison Township, MI

It is important because the Internet is suppose to be an open platform where we can all meet on an even leveless. The Internet is a place where all can collaborate and grow together, there are so many benifts to an open Internet. The internet is important to me the way it is.
—Josephine Erin Payment, ,

Please do not turn the internet over to a few companies!!!
—Clare N. Shumway M.D., Mechanicsburg, PA

US "broadband" is slow enough to barely be worth the name as it is. Even in major US cities; I can't imagine what it's like to be in rural US. The last thing we need is one more way to get nickel and dimed for our already astoundingly poor service. Plus, I don't even have landline phone service any more. I have the Internet and mobile phones, and I use the phone less and less. ISPs and cellular providers should be treated as public utilities with a responsibility to schlep data to and fro without distinguishing what that data is or charging based on it. It's time they realize their common role as Fat Dumb Pipes, the same as the electric pushed down my power lines and the water and sewer that flows in and out through pipes.
—Jeremy W. Sherman, Atlanta, GA

My career since 1992 has been involved in Internet and systems security. If the provisions for allowing services to fill the bandwidth of users are implemented, security services WILL NOT be able to contact and use the servers that house these services. Everybody's security online will be at risk. These are poorly thought-out proposals that do not enhance the users experience.
—David Lawson, Phoenixville, PA

I'm for a democratized internet that does not filter out people based on socioeconomic status. Access to information and media on the web is too important to risk censorship fueled by a corporation's bottom line. Net neutrality is a must!
—Jason Mabry, Dallas, TX

The American people paid for the internet and they benefit greatly from this (rightly so). The people's benefit should not be "privatized".
—Michael Sullivan, Marshfield Hills, MA

Protect the open internet and reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Cindy Sharp, Scottsdale, AZ

Throw out the rules and reclassify internet service providers as common carriers! The future of our society and information sharing as a whole is hinged on this decision. Do the right thing, protect net neutrality.
—Lisa Roscoe, Raleigh, NC

Because I read comics from many smaller sites, and it wouldn't be fair to the writers of said comics if ther sites would load slowly, all because Netflix and other bigger sites can pay more.
—Maddie Lininger, West Des Moines, IA

This would hurt small businesses, competing larger businesses, and most of all, consumers. Please uphold net neutrality.
—Karen Wickert, Medford, MA

I am not able to go do things like I used to so I depend on my internet a lot. Also on a fixed income so don't want to have to pay more for it than I do right. now.
—Gracie winters, Newkirk, OK

As an 86 year old teacher I cannot afford paying more for the Net so please continue to provide good service at no rate increase. If rich users want faster service let them pay for it.Thanks.
—Edward C. Martin Jr., Black Mountain, NC

I want to keep the freedom of speech alive and you companies are just trying to multiply all your money it's disgusting. Someone up there must be thinking "oh! I can earn another million on top of my hundrets of millions, by pissing off everyone else on the planet! Great idea!" think twice rich man! We've come to stop you.
—Stefan Harich, ,

I am astounded how you are ignoring the needs and wishes of the common man. I actually got responses from yourself and two other members to previous comments I had made wherein all three of you indicated that you supported Net Neutrality. How then is it that the FCC is not taking steps to ensure total Net Neutrality for all. Reclassify broadband and be done with this. Keep the internet a place for ALL, not just the 2%.
—David Moyer, Waukegan, IL

The Internet has had a profound impact on the human experience and should be open, accessible and performant for any and all who choose to use it. In order to protect and promote this wonderful situation, ISPs should be reclassified as common carriers.
—Ron Turner, North Vancouver,

Right to information
—Eric Hendershot, West Des Moines, IA

Please find something else to regulate and leave the Internet alone. It is working just fine now.
—Mike Watrous, Blue Springs, MO

My internet connection is just as important, if not more so, than my telephone, TV, or newspaper for getting the information I need as a citizen in a democracy of, by, and for the people. Net Neutrality is critical in a free and open democracy. Period!
—Dana Allen, Corvallis, OR

I'm a designer that has benefitted from knowledge that is easy to access. Do this and you kill that spirit of free sharing of thoughts and ideas and you make a difficult economic recovery even worse by giving more power to the terrible corporations that you were once a part of. Your legacy is already in danger. Why not make the right call on behalf of the American people rather than those corporations.
—Rob Sauer, Severn, MD

It is detrimental to our progression as a society if our primary source of communication can be manipulated by a monopoly with an agenda.
—Bronwyn Burns, Los Angeles, CA

We cannot allow the internet to be controlled by the entity with the most money. We've already seen the negative effects a system of 'bought influence' has on our press, politics and environment. An open internet is the last egalitarian institution available in our society. It needs to be kept that way.
—Matthew Barbato, South Pasadena, CA

The internet is the most important technological revolution we have seen in centuries. This proposal would fundamentally undermine precisely what makes it so revolutionary.
—Bruno Torquato, Ft. Lauderdale, FL

Fairness is very important to me. The internet is a magnificent resource for practically everything and creating a two-tiered internet will definitely be detrimental to that no matter how you spin it or word it.
—Joseph Lanigan, Harrisburg, PA

This country has been brought to its knees by profiteering and unregulated capitalism! I would hope you'd be realizing that by now. Don't let another good thing be exploited by unfettered greed and tell us it'll be "good for everyone ".
—Loren Lewandowski, Grand Island, NE

The Internet is a utility. Giving the ISPs a "hydraulic empire" to exploit free enterprise and the public is unacceptable governance. Frankly, you should be ashamed.
—Colin Brady, San Jose, CA

As an adult I have no wish for corporate interests to dictate the content I receive or the speed which it will be delivered.
—James Minion, Federal Way, WA

Reclassifying will prevent ISP's from inserting themselves between American citizens and the content they are already paying for. A non neutral Internet is one controlled entirely by the service providers including all Internet commerce. Do not pave the way for the death of a free and open Internet. They must be reclassified.
—Dustin leale, Davis, CA

Please keep net neutrality in place! The internet is a well of knowledge, and everyone should have access!
—Stacy Rempel, Glendale, AZ

This is the only way the net can be truly neutral. Without this neutrality corporations will have control of content and the people who rely on the net will be subjected to the whim of their decisions. This simply cannot happen.
—Mr. Craig Byrd, Los Angeles, CA

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Efrayim Ben-Avraham, Ridgeland, SC

The proposed rules would put everyone but rich corporations at a potentially insurmountable disadvantage. That is not how America should work. Keep the playing field level.
—Ms. Jan Kimbrough, Valley Village, CA

As a student in computer science, I feel these regulations will seriously affect my ability to develop and add content to the internet.
—Mitchell Robert Vollger, Eureka, CA

As I understand the new proposal, it would let some companies pay more to get better access. But apparently they want access to me, the net user. As a net user, I don't want some companies to have specially good access to me. If the FCC can't give all content providers the same fair access (I think it can and should do that), then at least it should require companies that have paid extra to include a warning notice on all messages and sites: "This company has paid extra to get extra access to you."
—E W. Browne, Ithaca, NY

Net neutrality is an absolute must for the free flow of information. The net should be free, not a plaything for the rich.
—Daniel Gutierrez, Dublin, OH

There is no middle ground for the Open Internet. There is no "reasonable" amount of discrimination. These proposed rules will help no one but the ISPs, and will, in fact, hurt consumers and content providers. Broadband internet should be a Title II Telecommunications service. It should have been a long time ago.
—Russell W Brooks, Providence, RI

Broadband is a basic utility these days. The FCC should be ashamed of itself, it is clearly changing the law to serve big corporations rather than every day Americans.
—Tirzah Blanche, Chicago, IL

Why ist always about money ,and not about the social benefit for all citizens?
—Judith Foote, Indianapolis, IN

This is the digital divide! The phone companies got HUGE BREAKS from the govt to lay fiber optic cable for ALL AMERICANS. already rural americans get lousy service, and now we will also penalize low income folks who use the internet to go to School! What is the matter with you!
—Jennifer Sheetz, North Richland Hills, TX

We the internet users will not tolerate anything less then net neutrality. I am a war veteran and I demand that you stop trying to destroy net neutrality.
—Allen Albright, allentown, PA

The internet is no longer a fun toy or a convenient service. It's a culture of it's own! For some people their friends are on it, for others it's where they like to hang out, and for many their entire career is on the internet! But now some want to use this to make a fortune because they know the internet is so deeply ingrained in so many peoples lives that they'll have no choice but to accept any extra charges or rules made. The internet is more than just a service that people can control. It's become a way of life in a sense.
—Nathan Compher, North East, MD

they MUST be classified as COMMON CARRIERS , they CANNOT BE TRUSTED to NOT ABUSE the system
—Pat Williamson, Huntington, WV

Internet is a UTILITY and NECESSITY, not a luxury.
—Amanda DuPriest, Portland, OR

The only way to ensure innovation and competitiveness is to classify ISPs as common carriers and not the arbiters of a tiered internet.
—Owen Freeman, Oakland, CA

I am the senior software engineer at a software company. We enable our customers to transfer data and documents across the Internet, and proposed Net Neutrality rules would compromise our ability to deliver a good product and therefore also compromise the viability of our business. To maintain our livelihood, please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Ben Artin, Malden, MA

Stop this crime. Leave the Internet alone. Stand up for what's right for a change.
—Lester Fowler, Suisun City, CA

I use mainly websites that would download slowly under the new rule. If more bandwidth is needed, I'll be happy to pay more taxes to expand the Internet infrastructure.
—Patti Batchelder, Georgetown, MA

I am no fan of the big companies being able to choke their competition by preventing start-ups from getting anywhere.
—Max Norstrom, ,

It is much like the electric utility, it is used for just about everything, it is truly a necessity.
—Napoleon Salvail, Titusville, FL

For the future not executive pocket books
—Andrew Morgan, newport,

Pay-for-play Internet is inherently contrary to the net's position as a level playing field.
—Marc Maloney, Sacramento, CA

Get real people. We want net neutrality. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Cathy Goodrich, Verdugo City, CA

It's not the job of ISPs to censor and restrict content. Their job is to transport bits from one point to another. Nothing more, and nothing less. There is already a huge problem (conflict of interest) with "bundled services", and this is just the latest symptom. The first step to fixing the problem is to reclassify ISPs as common carriers. After that, make sure they aren't allowed to produce content or bundle other services. Transport bits, that's it.
—Aaron Ten Clay, Hillsboro, OR

The Koch brothers shouldn't be able to pay to drive traffic to Tea Party sites or away from the truth. Internet access needs to be a basic service in this modern age.
—Subrata Sircar, Sunnyvale, CA

Net Neutrality is important because it allows all of us, whether we are rich or poor, the same accessability to information and so it is important for all the people of the country.
—John J Nunes, Milton, MA

The Internet was created by the government for all the people. It is maintained by our taxes. It should be, therefore, freely and equally open to all citizens. Corporations should not be given any preference over the people!
—Stuart Russell, Concord, NH

Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers. America is a nation built on standards of equality and freedom. Preserve the integrity of the internet.
—Benjamin Hansen, New Orleans, LA

Net neutrality is important because freedom of speech is important in a democracy. It's not only important; It's imperative. Surely not everything in our country is to be put up for sale; Surely freedom of speech should not be on the auction block.
—Helen Taylor Crisp, Denver, CO

True Net Neutrality needs to continue so that everyone has fair, and equal access to the Internet, if it were to go away a huge portion of people would be essentially blocked from the freedom of browsing and speed of Internet which they currently have. To take away these things would destroy the Internet, this cannot happen.
—Robert Dowhy, Bar Bar,

Please keep our Internet free and open, the way is was designed to be.
—Jon Talbot, Niles, IL

ISPs ARE common carriers. Period. Stop this nonsense and classify them as such.
—Bret Van Horn, Washougal, WA

I am one of the kind that can't just afford the best services for internet use. I can't sink in a bucket load of cash to be able to get a stable, fast-connecting, reliable internet connection, though the one I do have now is quite enough for what I want to do. Not only does this go against everything the internet is supposed to be, a neutral place for freedom of speech and dissemination of information, but this is just an abusive decision that only benefits those who are already benefit in the world we live in and the huge corporations that already are guaranteed their fair amount as the internet is something people need to use to be able to live nowadays. This is only a lose-lose situation as it'll just turn around to be something where people wll start to be uncontent with the services provided to them and will end their contracts with whatever provider they have. That all beggining with the consumer, the main focus of market, being completely hurt during the process.
—João Lucas Michel Brum, ,

An open, fast, cheap internet is necessary for US business and democracy. The internet is a communications service and utility.
—Tom Fitzgibbon, New York, NY

This is the World Wide Web, not the Corporate Wide Web.
—Dennis Cox, williamstown, PA

For the future of journalism and freedom of expression we must have an open Internet.
—Joshua Stearns, Easthampton, MA

Don't allow the BIG Companies to screw us - net neutrality must be secured. What will history say about you and your decision, what legacy will you leave your children?
—Aurora Insurriaga, CHICAGO, IL

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Casey Scott, Odessa, TX

I work for a small ecommerce company. We're already struggling to survive given the horrible state that the economy is in. Without net neutrality, we would be forced to pay extra fees just to be able to show our goods to potential customers. We can't afford to pay for a fast lane just to be able to compete with all the big businesses out there. The FCC is taking the ability of business owners to present themselves to the masses away and replacing it with a tax that will do nothing but inflate the ISP giants' pocketbooks. Think about the real cost of hurting the backbone of this country's economy, small businesses, before you decide that fattening your friends' wallets is a great idea.
—Michael, Mc Cordsville, IN

With Net Neutrality, everyone has their opportunities to speak out freely about all sorts of topics. These range from being highly controversial, to simplistic materials and ideas, to whatever else he or she wants to discuss without any repercussions. But if you, Mr. Wheeler, push through with these pathetic excuse of rules- then expect the wrath of the world to fall on you.
—Spencer Blais, Greenvile, RI

If Net Neutrality is destroyed, a primary means of communication will no longer be open and will instead be subject to the whims of those in power or with the most money. You might as well ask China about their government policies, 'cause that's where we're headed if Net Neutrality dies.
—Daniel DeSantis, Williamsburg, VA

Tom, are you not able to see the impending problems of your plan for the internet? Why are you knowingly going to impede the progress of technological advancement and the improvement to the quality of life? This is ridiculous. Please do not go down in history as the person who single-handedly destroyed one of mankind's greatest treasures.
—Dillon Cao, San Diego, CA

The longterm economic viability of the United States depends on common access to Internet resources.
—Andrew McConachie, Albany, CA

A fast lane for large service providers will be disastrous for small business owners like me! Please reclassify ISP's as common carriers.
—Diana Hrabowecki, Culver City, CA

Without Net Neutrality, the 2012 elections could have been stolen by partisan ISP owners blocking emails, web sites, and donation transactions for the side they opposed, and no one would have known that it wasn't just "bad luck" that those emails kept getting lost and the web sites kept crashing, until after the votes were counted. And unfortunately, in politics, unlike sports, a win by cheating is still a win, with no consequences for the cheaters. DO YOU WANT OUR COUNTRY TO BE HIJACKED IN A FUTURE ELECTION?
—Allan Richardson, Marietta, GA

We all have a right to an open and neutral internet. We are responsible for the content of the internet, not cable companies. Restricting access is criminal and unconstitutional. This is our internet, leave it alone.
—Helal Touryalai, Astoria, NY

I use the internet to connect with people around the globe. I refuse to let my relationships with them take a hit because some big-wigs want to stuff their pockets.
—Erin Howett, Cincinnati, OH

The Internet is for and should always be for all opportunities and all equal levels and starts of business
—Mark, Philadelphia, PA

The internet should be treated as a public utility and new rules for 21st century life should be written by the FCC. The current rules are rediculous and cater to the rich and corporations.
—Everette L Rice, Portland, OR

Dear FCC, How ending network neutrality in any way shape or form seems like a good idea to you is beyond my comprehension. I've read one article on the benefits and frankly it came across as corporate paid shills trying to send disinformation. I would propose that all websites specifically throttle all traffic coming from the FCC to any website. Furthermore, I would promote that anyone in favor of this wretched idea of killing net neutrality be slowed down to dial up speeds for every website they visit. Maybe a taste of your own medicine is what you need to help stop the corporate greed from ruining the freedom and interconnectedness the internet offers. Sincerely, Jeff Mays
—Jeff Mays, Streamwood, IL

Net Neutrality is important to me because I rely on many free services and small websites/companies for my daily work and enjoyment. These services would suffer without Net Neutrality and so would I, and many many others as a result. The internet was meant the be open and free, and it's shameful to propose something which would allow the internet to be something else.
—Ian Maines, Orono, ME

The net is a common currier akin to the US Postal Service. Treat it as such. Don't sell us out to the giant telecoms!
—Bill Weston, Hudsonville, MI

Internet Service Providers must be deemed a public utility because they are. They are an instrument of democracy. You can't sell the internet to the highest bidder without great harm to our freedom and democracy. Monopolies and trusts are anti-American. You would take all fairness out of public communication if you bow to these greedy corporations.
—Mary Rocco, Los Angeles, CA

The Internet is about speech. Its about what I say (regardless of how this is encoded) being treated equally with what others say. If you hand the Internet to monied interests you destroy the greatest tool for democracy ever created, and for what? Hollywood?. Don't do this. Hollywood is last century, they just don't know it. Don't get stuck backing last century's horse. Have a backbone, frankly, and be a statesman. Please note that I have been a software developer for over 20 years and have been privileged to see the Internet grow from nothing to what it is. It did so all by itself and it flourished with our current rules. So is it about the money or the people? Make a decision and be prepared to defend it ad infinitum...
—Scott Keefe, Pawtucket, RI

Paying for priority content delivery isn't "making a fast lane". It's giving existing infrastructure to the big companies who have money. The remaining leftover bandwidth will fall like crumbs to the rest of us. Imagine how the phone network would have been 30 years ago if wealthy folks got a dial tone, and the rest of America might or might not get a dial tone. That's where we're headed if the internet doesn't remain even for all users.
—David Peale, San Diego, CA

Reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers. We the people created the internet and we have the right to access it free from barriers to entry.
—Jonathan Morisi, Park City, UT

Please reclassify all ISP's as common carriers. The mass majority of thos country is poor. We give our taxes to the law makers and now they want to take the little bit of money we get! No, we will stand up and reject this.
—Valerie Alvarenga, Winnetka, CA

Modern democracy is meaningless with a skewed internet.
—Clancy Hood, ,

The entire economy of the United States is dependent on free and open access to the internet. Allowing a few companies to establish a monopoly on access to that internet and charge both ends (receiver and provider of a web service) allows them to place a stranglehold on the internet and would cause irreparable harm to the future of the United States. You might as well take us back to the days of America Online.
—Keith Knudsen, Ann Arbor, MI

Internet is an utility, it should be treated as such.
—Miguel Hernandez, San Francisco, CA

The internet is a utility. Allowing companies to arbitrarily and unreasonable hike rates based on competing corporate interests will only serve to harm Americans and move us back in time.
—Matt Thompson, Antioch, TN

Net neutrality matters to me because it´s a place where we can meet and interact with other people from all over the world without having to think about big corporations always trying to sell us something (At least not in the same way as with television f.eks) Making it so people can "own" the internet is the worst idea i have ever heard in my life and making this happend will litteraly mean the end of free spech. Also i want to add that you americans do not have any right to take ownership over the internet as it is not yours it everyones. Even us wierdoes up in the north.
—Espen Thorkildsen, ,

Pay for Play bears a striking resemblance to Payola. It is discrimination at its worst and the antithesis of the Open Internet that Chairman Wheeler says he espouses. Setting up a Pay to Play system would put us at a significant technological disadvantage in relation to the rest of the industrial world and stifle development and growth. It would be a surefire way to tank our economy.
—Mary Ashcliffe, Henniker, NH

A neutral net is important to me! Kick starter companies are already backing out of start up companies that are designed to stream media. The proposal is not even in effect, yet it's already hurting business.
—Trevor, Fairfax, VA

This gives us the freedom to view and look at what we want, without giving ISP's the ability to control our content!
—Jasper Lynn, Arcadia, CA

The internet sources have to have equal access without any disruptions of speed access/ availability controlled by the cable companies and others seeking profit. Internet should equal to freedom of speech, it should not be choked nor controlled and made only available to those who can / are willing to pay the bill. It's unacceptable that any of the contents and end users get discriminated against and violates our constitutional rights.
—Svetlana Zakharov, Arlington, MA

At the age of 88, it is hard enough to pay for the limited service I now receive. I dread to think of what will inevitably follow the end of the open Internet. No two-tiered arrangement could possibly be fair, equitable or justified. THINK AGAIN!!
—Joan Prum, Watertown, MA

Keep the net free and available to everyone and don't sell it to the highest bidder (or the company that lines your pocket!)
—Harish Rao, Hershey, PA

I don't want an internet where I have to wait extended time periods for a site to load in order for me to read something or look something up. I don't spend my day looking at adds and looking at huge corporate or shopping sites. I use it for my classes. I'm sure the sites I will need to look at for reading articles, or looking up information will be the slow ones.
—Janet Yasenchak-Votta, Eastpointe, MI

Communication should be affordable and easily accessible for everyone. This rule would only increase more discrimination into the world. Go for common good, not money.
—Kristen, Corvallis, OR

This is a very important issue that I urge you to reconsider with your constituents -- THE AMERICAN PEOPLE -- in mind rather than the corporations whom this affects.
—Andre Goree, Oviedo, FL

I'm paying my ISP to provide me access to the internet, they shouldn't be able to discriminate against data providers, charge them extra or charge me extra based on the kind of data I'm receiving. Make ISPs common carriers!
—Gordon Williams, Fairbanks, AK

This country is founded on freedom and access for all citizens. It's what makes us great.
—Layna Berman, Camp Meeker, CA

This must be available on and equal footing, equality for all,special preference , no.
—Becky Thatcher, Glen Arbor, MI

As a web designer my livelihood largely depends on my ability to quickly access a wide variety of online resources. Over half of the tools of my profession are web-based in some shape or form. Allowing my ISP to decide which websites load quickly and which load slowly could potentially destroy half of my tools. Ending net neutrality could not only destroy competition between online businesses, but could also destroy the ability of small businesses like my own to even operate.
—Stig Greve, Aliso Viejo, CA

The Internet is more than a pubic resource; it is interwoven into the fabric of our daily work and personal lives. Please move to protect its usage and viability for the common citizen!
—Amanda Hafner, Snowflake, AZ

Promote the general welfare of citizens: reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Jay Dugger, Plano, TX

If I don't get net neutrality, I'll hold my breath until I pass out! But really, I believe that one of the basic freedoms that we should/do have is the freedom of privacy. U guys suk ;(
—Billy, Cleveland, OH

The internet needs to remain a free, open, accessible utility available to all, and not become a premium "service" for big bucks players. Preserve Net Neutrality.
—Mary Haywood, Golden Valley, MN

An environment where the one with the most money wins is a detriment to us all. Take a stand and keep the net free for everyone.
—Justin Musclow, ,

Don't make the internet as two sided as reality. Keep everyone equal.
—Michael Gilmore, Edmond, OK

The internet is the best platform for people of all backgrounds to gain knowledge, not just become cogs in a corporate system.
—Chris Ward, Salt Lake City, UT

The internet is communication, and must be protected by the first amendment. No organization, ISP, or otherwise should have there right or power to control, impede, redirect, delay or snoop communication conducted on the internet. The internet should remain neutral for all parties.
—Keith, Katy, TX

This country was built by small businesses being able to build itself up ad sell it's products to the people. Without net neutrality, you will be killing these businesses.
—Joseph Cha, Las Vegas, NV

I believe that fair competition, on a level playing field, is required in order for companies to not get complacent and charge more for inferior products and services.
—Eric Kwan, Arcadia, CA

Net Neutrality is what guarantees our First Amendment rights on the internet. We are born with these rights and need them more, than AT&T, Comcast, ect need extra money in their pockets.
—Caitlin Savino, Ithaca, NY

...And to the plutocracy for which you stand...
—Mitchell Diamond, Sunnyvale, CA

The only people who benefit from the new FCC plan are that small group who can afford a few hundred thousand dollars in lobbying. Most small businesses suffer without Net Neutrality, and all consumers as well. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers!
—Danielle Charles, Sunnyside, NY

I don't buy electrical appliances from the power company; I don't buy a stove or water heater from the gas company; I don't buy glassware from the water company. All I want from my ISP is a data pipeline. I'll decide what to do with it. I neither need nor want more "services," and I certainly don't need my ISP deciding the priorities of my data needs.
—Henry Velick, Ann Arbor, MI

All voices deserve to be heard.
—Lee Garvey, San Francisco, CA

Keeping the Internet affordable.
—Ronald O. Watson, Capitol Heights, MD

The internet should not be for sale to Comcast, AT&T and Verizon! KEEP the INTERNET OPEN.
—Ms. C Allegrezza, HYDE PARK, MA

If you can't see why it is inherently wrong for CORPORATIONS or anyone to control the flow of information, then the FCC needs to be disbanded. Less focus on Janet Jackson's boob and more focus on keeping the ISP quasi-monopoly from stomping on the rights of citizens. OK?
—Ada Rubin, San Jose, CA

As a scientist, the free exchange of ideas and information is absolutely critical to the advancement of knowledge. The net neutral Internet has transformed the way science is done and has dramatically accelerate the rate of human progress. Net Neutrality is crucial in ensuring the free and open exchange of ideas necessary for scientific advancement.
—Brad Rosenberg, New York, NY

Net Neutrality is an essential part of today's free market system. Allow ISPs to create this tiered Internet and you're killing any chance of a truly free market on the Internet. You'll kill all chances of upstarts being able to support themselves and rise to the heights of these same companies who want this plan to pass because they won't be big enough to afford the higher tier access. The Internet is not something you can put a price tag on and hand it over to big corporations to sell to the masses. The Internet is a place of collaboration, cooperation and ingenuity. It's a piece of public property and we need to keep it that way.
—Amanda Castillo, Laredo, TX

We have the right to have free fast Internet to contact our family and friends around the world. If those that can't afford to pay the network package, then what will happen?
—Christiaan W., ,

Don't let big corporations stifle our country and our freedom. The internet belongs to all of us.
—Judith H. Bell, jamestown, RI

Dear Chairman Wheeler, When the Circuit Court of Appeals decided to rule in favor of Comcast in 2010's Comcast v. FCC ruling, its intended message was not to say that some providers are more equal than others. The comments from the bench clearly indicated that the FCC was wrong in its interpretation of the Telecommunications Act, particularly by classifying internet service providers as a Title I "information" service under the Telecommunications Act. Many American citizens, myself included, agree with the court that Title I is an inappropriate classification for the companies that, in many cases, are the sole provider (or one of only a small handful of government-mandated monopoly providers) of Internet access. This early classification mistake has led us into a brave new era of payola, "bundled service fees," preferential content prioritizing, and other behavior that would not be out of place in a robber baron's company town in the 19th century. I strongly urge you to draft new rules that would re-classify Internet Service Providers as Common Carriers under Title II of the Telecommunications Act. This would send a clear and unambiguous message that Internet traffic must not be tampered with in any way or form. With regards, Adam Rose
—Adam Rose, Montoursville, PA

My wife is bedridden. The internet is her main "window to the outside world." If that window is shrunk down so that only the top, most wealthy corporations are given access while the smaller companies/websites she uses regularly cannot afford the high bandwidth fees (video chat with support groups, family, etc; information websites with educational videos to help us learn about her condition), it will be her getting trapped all over again - only this time, it won't be her disease, it will be the mega-corporations and corrupt politicians preying upon her!
—Shawn Williams, Lancaster, PA

Please regulate Internet Service Providers as utilities. Anything else with consolidate power, innovation and choice to the richest and to the media providers. The internet is a valuable resource; please do not allow it to be ruined.
—John Montgomery, Branford, CT

In small, rural states like Kansas, it is difficult to find more than one cable provider, so the provider can charge and do as they wish. If we do not continue net neutraliy we are doomed.
—Rex Romeiser, Salina, KS

Net Neutrality is important and should be important to EVERYONE OF YOU as it is the free...emphasis on FREE - way to exchange information. It is the future and ending Net Neutrality will give control to ISPs who will then dictate what information we can and cannot get. Is this the United States or China??!
—Brent Burbidge, San Diego, CA

As someone who telecommutes to work every day, having a fast, smooth connection to my clients and my co-workers is incredibly important to me. The possibility that an ISP could throttle internet access to my clients' webpages or my company's servers or, indeed, my own connection is horrendous. This means it's possible for me to lose clients based on something totally out of my hands. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers so people like me can keep their jobs and their clients.
—Adam Day, Williamsport, PA

In a democratic society the neutrality of the internet is central, for the proper preservation of the democratic process.
—Francois Perez, ,

I have spoken before about my lack of financial resources and a two tiered internet system would not help me at all in my chosen career or in my studies as a college student. This is more about financial resources however, this is about making the internet open to anyone regardless of financial resources. Arguably of course a two tiered system would still provide access to the internet, but it starts there. Soon corporations are going to want to control what we can and cannot access on the internet, limiting freedom of speech and social movements that have begun online. I urge you to choose net neutrality, do not give the one percent what they want.
—Alinda Lawrence, Honeoye Falls, NY

Taking away Net Neutrality would turn the internet in to everything that is there to keep us from. It allows us our freedoms, it allows us to voice our opinions, it allows everything that is supposed to be protected under the constitution.
—Grant Sadlowski, Denver, CO

Please, we beg you not to do this. If anything, the FCC should be declaring the internet a public service. If you move forward with this plan, you threaten economic growth and America's technological strength in the world.
—Chris Lamb, Charlotte, NC

We need fairness and protection from ISP's. Classify ISP's as common carriers and protect net neutrality.
—Bryant Cochran, Alexandria, VA

With our society so reliant on the Internet for commerce, education, and entertainment, it would a deathblow to the exchange of ideas to allow internet service providers to control access to websites via "fast" and "slow" lanes. Thanks to other poor decisions made in recent years by the FCC, we as a nation are seeing our media under the control of fewer and fewer "voices," which is in stark contrast to the charter of the FCC. If the internet is allowed to be "tiered" like cable TV services, there will be less people able to connect their ideas with the rest of the world without paying a premium to ISPs, both locally and abroad. Our free society shouldn't need to rely on those with power granting those without any a chance to be heard. We aren't living in a Dickens' novel, and we shouldn't need to ask if we may have some more. Please listen to the people of the United States, and not just those with money and influence. I know it is foolish to appeal to anyone's sense of decorum or decency, but think not of the fat paycheck you and you alone will receive and as unofficial thank you for ruling in favor of ISPs and think instead of the legacy you will leave, and the fate of those citizens who will gain nothing and potential lose everything.
—Terence Dollard, Laurinburg, NC

I am a semi-retired person who is forced to stay at home most of the time to care for my wife, who has Alzheimer's Disease. The small amount of income I am able to generate with my home business is completely dependent on free access to the Internet.
—Leslie Gerber, Woodstock, NY

I am a Web Designer, small business owner, and Entrepreneur. Net Neutrality is critical to the betterment of our society. It allows the freedom of access to information regardless of wealth, social standing, or political power. My livelihood, creativity, ability to educate myself, and ability to help others would be severely diminished by removing Net Neutrality. The only benefits of removing Net Neutrality are for ISP's and their profit margins. The negative impact, however, upon our future and our own people will be tremendous. Do NOT let money and politics dictate our ability to work, communicate, and build a better world. Leave the Internet open - It is one of our greatest achievements as a species, and our most powerful tool. Thank you. Jay W. LogicDT.com
—Jay Wright, Phoenix, AZ

Ending net neutrality would be like privatizing highways and only allowing certain companies to use them. It would be terrible for consumers and business. If you oppose net neutrality, fuck you
—Joel Raposo, Arlington, VA

Everybody knows who you work really for, and it ain't us! Prove me wrong.
—jack miles, Albuquerque, NM

Keep the internet neutral. That is the way it was, is and should be. No need to change anything. For once give the people their freedom!
—Christopher mcgean, Phoenix, AZ

Net Neutrality is important to everyone! It means freedom.
—Martha R Bartels, Chicago, IL

As free speech is withering into oblivion and our rights get chipped away day after day, this plan is like tossing a truckload of coal right onto the edge of an already burning wildfire. Don't encourage restriction of the internet! Stand up for free speech and open internet, Mr. Wheeler! Don't be a part of the stifling of society!
—Afton Jones, Blanco, TX

Tiered speeds are unfair to small startups. Allowing big business to choose who can do business is completely opposed to the idea of a free market! Classify internet service providers as common carriers to keep information open and keep the market fair!
—Kyle Keine, Lakeland, FL

Keep the Internet FREE!!
—Hannah Stanton, Dallas, TX

Needs to be fair. For all. Not those with most money.
—William Teixiera, Sacramento, CA

"...and crowned thy good with brotherhood..." NOT corporatehood.
—Dahlia Wasfi MD, Dover, DE

Our democracy depends on everyone having equal access to the internet. We do not need an internet where you have to pay to play.
—Naomi Cohen, Gap Mills, WV

I've come to depend on the internet just as much as I depend on electricity, water and heating or cooling. If it came down to paying for heat or wearing an extra sweater, I'd be bundling up while I use the web. The internet is how I learn, how I communicate with family and friends far away and how I relax. Some people use a hot bath, others use a hot laptop.
—Tor Nichols, Las Cruces, NM

I'm a graduate student and depend upon net neutrality to access articles and other research materials online. Without net neutrality, I may not be able to afford faster speeds which might be necessary to download archival documents and I could have limited access to archival material online if the archive cannot afford or chooses not to pay for certain internet services. We should follow Europe's lead, which treats the internet as a public utility, administered by private companies. It costs consumers less and protects freedom of speech and access online.
—Mollie Madden, Minneapolis, MN

Equality for all
—Bill Rivera Jr, Dunnellon, FL

With out Net Neutrality the internet is fucking pointless! Big businesses only care about them selves, not the consumers. The internet belongs to everyone and everyone should have free and open access to it! The disillusioned idea of a fast lane online is fucking pathetic and the fact the Wheeler would follow this means he's nothing but a worthless puppet! I demand representation for the free people! And if the FCC follows through with killing Net Neutrality then we won't have that! Fuck the companies, and fuck everything they stand for! If you fucks don't do your jobs then I will personally go to every voter's door and tell them that the FCC needs better leadership and tell them that they should never vote for pathetic fucks like you ever again! Not only that but I will continue to fight for a free and open internet until the day I day! ISPs are nothing but pipe lines and to call them anything else is nothing but pure dumbassity. Stop shitting ont he voters and DO THE RIGHT FUCKING THING YOU WORTHLESS CUNTS!!!!!!! NERD POWER!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
—Colin McMahon, Kansas City, MO

Please don't quash innovation by making a fast internet available only to those who are already established enough to have the money to afford it. Everyone should have access to the internet. Don't create a two-tiered system equivalent to allowing electricity or running water at only certain times of the day for the "plebs," while the aristocrats have unlimited access! Thanks, Maggie Frank-Hsu
—Margaret Hsu, New York, NY

The internet was designed to be a place where information was exchanged FREELY, not so service providers could make a quick buck!!
—Ian Cameron, Richmond Hill,

Please do not implement these new rules. I beg you to reclassify ISP's as common carriers. The web is a precious thing to millions and we would ask you to not end Net Neutrality.
—Kevin Ted Hayman, Jackson, MS

Consult your conscience and do the right thing: protect democracy and REJECT FASCISM!!!
—Amy Irene Anderson, Kingston, NY

It's pretty simple: without net neutrality, there is little possibility of the next Google, the next Facebook, the next Big Thing from the little guy. Any type of fast lane means slow lanes; you cannot have one without the other. Fast lanes would incentivize forcing companies to pay to use them by degrading the slow lanes or not keeping up with increasing speed requirements. In short: a bad experience for everyone but cable companies, whose incompetence and malfeasance are already on record. Do the right thing and recognize the internet as the public utility and necessity it has become for a modern democracy.
—David Fuchs, Arlington, VA

neutrality is about creating a neutral internet. The basic principle driving net neutrality is that the internet should be a free and open platform, almost like any other utility we use in our home (like electricity). Users should be able to use their bandwidth however they want (as long as it's legal), and internet service providers should not be able to provide priority service to any corner of the internet. Every web site (whether it's Google, Netflix, Amazon, or UnknownStartup.com) should all be treated the same when it comes to giving users the bandwidth to reach the internet-connected services they prefer. Your electric company has no say over how you use your electricity—they only get to charge you for providing the electricity. I don't want the ISPs to be given too much power because it could easily be abused. Imagine that Verizon or AT&T don't like the idea of Google Voice, because it allows you to send text messages for free using your data connection. Your cellphone carrier could block access to Google Voice from your smartphone so you're forced to pay for a texting plan from them. Or, they see that a lot of people are using Facebook on their smartphone, so even if they have the bandwidth to carry that traffic, they decide to charge you extra to access Facebook, just because they know it's in high demand and that they can make a profit.
—Mara Crim, Newport News, VA

Net Neutrality is so important if we are to maintain an open and fair internet. Please reclassify ISP's as common carriers.
—Paul Richeson, Dallas, TX

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Rhoda Keprta, Arlington, TX

The Internet is one of the few democratic things left. There shouldn't be a privileging of those who can afford to pay more.
—M Lara Hoke, WORCESTER, MA

Net Neutrality is a subject very important to me. I feel we all deserve a free exchange of information, without discrimination from big corporations and government. Please re-evaluate your rules and reclassify ISPs as common carriers
—Marshall Hubert, San Antonio, TX

Dear Mr. Wheeler, Please preserve Net Neutrality. Your plan is unconscionable and serves to protect the interests of only the large companies who are going to hire and reward you later. Please don't do this. Regards, Alex N.
—alex N., ann arbor, MI

The internet now offers a level playing field for all participants from all socio-economic levels around the world allowing access to important educational sites, health information, social justice causes, vital international and local news, social media, etc. It bridges gaps and brings much needed information to many isolated communities. We witnessed the value of a neutral internet during the “Spring Uprisings” in the Middle East. We’ve seen the incredible money raised through the internet after disasters around the world and the immediate ability to respond because of this money. When you allow cable companies control over content based on greed and their own political and vindictive agenda, once again "We The People" lose! We already pay exorbitant amounts for cable and internet access in our homes, to add surcharges for websites, blocked content, etc. means a further gauging of the American people. No one should own content except those that produce that content and noone should be able to have exclusive service. Preserve strict Net Neutrality by reclassifying service providers. Net neutrality is the corner stone of the democratic promise of the Internet to deliver information all over the world. Don't we all get up in arms when we hear China and many other countries block websites, limits access and controls content on the internet. Stop the double standard; this is exactly what's going to happen if you reject net neutrality!
—Coleen Scherf-Ghara, Newport Beach, CA

This is a First Amendment issue of Free Speech. Please consider the importance of this forum as a dynamic arena for growth of our Nation.
—William Ferguson, Los Angeles, CA

Internet access is today even more fundamental basic service than the classic phone service, as more and more of business, public services, and private life activities depend on it. Therefore it is definitely a common carrier service. Sufficient access and performance must therefore be available to everybody, and no ISP should be able to favor one customer more than another.
—Teuvo Telaranta, Houston, TX internet is not for you it's for the people

—Mina Matta, ,

first amendment
—Myrna S. Freeman, North Fork, CA

The willful fascist/corporatist move to gut Net Neutrality puts this country and, indeed, the world directly on the path of George Orwell's "Ministry of Truth" described in his novel 1984. Soon the only "truth" will be what the oligarchs that own the government allow to circulate on the web.
—Sulyen Mason, Atlanta, GA

Why do you have to mess with something that isn't broken? An internet with a "fast lane" and "slow lane" will stifle the economy, and don't let some money-grubbing CEO tell you otherwise.
—Jennifer Svitko, Ithaca, NY

The Internet is the driving force of innovation in the world today. Allowing a few companies to control the Internet and discriminate against new services cannot be allowed. The future of our economy depends on an open Internet. As there is no significant competition, all providers should be treated like the utility monopoly they are and regulated accordingly. The tool for that is Title II Common Carrier classification. This should apply for all types of broadband, wired and wireless. All of the Internet should be free and open, regardless of how one connects.
—Travis Tabbal, Herriman, UT

Please do not let big business step all over the little guy by eliminating net neutrality. I do not want an internet where there are two tiers of service. We need ISPs classified as common carriers. I will not support online discrimination.
—Pete Myers, Memphis, TN

There seems to be few things Americans can agree on in large numbers, but the utter failing of their ISP/Cable providers as businesses who care to deliver a fairly priced product to their customers, and to treat their customers with respect, is about as close to an objective fact as one can get. Giving them leeway to control the rate at which ostensibly neutral packets of data will travel to their computing devices is only inviting that decision to be based solely on profit. While I don't begrudge their right to pursue profit, the issue at hand is whether the most important development in human history will be compromised significantly. I believe it will be simply based on the sociopathic personality demonstrated by so many ISPs. They will never make a decision that will not short or long term benefit them financially, even if the alternative is the integrity of the very infrastructure they rely on as a business.
—Jason Woerner, Ambler, PA

Net neutrality is important because it is one of those few things left that hasn't been privatized. The privatization of the internet would be awful and completely unfair.
—Murron Paeth, Liberty, MO

Media conglomerates own neither the air waves, nor the internet. Yet they've prevented both from being open to local news and public affairs, educational programming and fair coverage of news. They've used their control of the air waves and the internet to close access to a free and open press and media. These rules will consolidate their denial of fair and open media to US citizens. Please adopt rules that benefit, not impoverish access to free and open media. Robert Robinson Washington, DC 20010
—Robert Robinson, Washington, DC

Don't follow the money, like every one else is in politics. It's even worse now thanks to the Supreme Court, which has a couple of judges who are clearly bought off (see Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas). Bottom line, we will be watching.
—Robert Fox, Hudson, FL

Network neutrality is simply a bad idea that has run its course.
—John M Powell, Salt Lake City, UT

If not for Net Neutrality we might not have some great companies that we now have no eBay no netflix no hulu no facebook ect These companys could now pay for the fast lane but what about the next upstart Facebook might not have made it if myspace was the only one to afford the fast lane
—David Gallager, Nacogdoches, TX

We consider democracy important, so we must keep it in our internet.
—Pamela Parris, Exeter, NH

I have several small online businesses and I want to make sure my customers can still access my online shops. Also, I don't like the idea that I may have a harder time staying connected to the political and non-profit organizations I interact with online: I'm concerned my views might be censored (or at least hindered) without net neutrality. That would be un-American and also might be a Freedom of Speech issue!
—Sally Small, Clarington, OH

Stop protecting and favoring corporations over people; stand up to big money; have some backbone and do what's right. Tell your children you did the right thing instead of the easy thing; the right thing instead of the profitable thing.
—James Rolle, Bronx, NY

Before that horrible court case (by a bought and paid for judge?), it took me 15-20 min in the morning to check my finances and emails. Immediately after that, it started to take me 1 to 2 hours. (And my Internet service isn't particularly cheap, either.) I consider this a huge theft of my time.
—Stan Benton, Von Ormy, TX entities with more money already have to much power. don't give them more our Internet equality promoting system

—Sandy Diaz, barstow, CA

Dear Chairman Wheeler, I am 25 years old and have worked in startups throughout my career. Net neutrality is about more than my principles. Ensuring that small firms have the bandwidth to innovate is part of my livelihood. Please reconsider creating fast lanes for companies with deep pockets. Thank you, Alan Satkin
—Alan Satkin, Santa Ana, CA

My name is Aaron Nestor. I'm a freelance designer who's online presence is absolutely necessary in obtaining, and maintaining clientele. Yet, it is just me. I have no large lobbying arm. I have no friends in congress. I do not know the Google guys. By opening the Internet to a tiered "pay-to-play" structure, you are stacking the deck in favor of the big guys. Perhaps you need a more theological analogy. Let's say that I'm David. And the ISPs and their various cohorts are all sorts of Goliaths. The thing is, I know longer have a sling. I only have part of the sling. And now the giant is smashing my skull. And now I'm bleeding out on the floor and now.... Do you understand that the people do not want what you're selling? Deaf ears must be removed, one way or another. Please keep the Internet free and open. It is my lifeblood.
—Aaron Micah Nestor, Phoenix, AZ

The Internet needs to be a free and open environment everyone to allow for the propagation of legitimate news from oppressed nations and for the education of the next generations.
—Devan Snow, Russell Springs, KY

The Internet needs to be a free and open environment everyone to allow for the propagation of legitimate news from oppressed nations and for the education of the next generations.
—Devan Snow, Russell Springs, KY

What's next? Water?
—Sharon Malinowski, Redford, MI

The United States is already behind the rest of the world in broadband availability. Please do not create rules that give ISPs the power to prioritize the "fast lane" only for those who can afford it.
—Rebecca Stuurwold, KALAMAZOO, MI

I depend on an open internet as a consumer, as an employee of a small business, and as a citizen. Undermining net neutrality means undermining innovation and entrepreneurship. This means undermining our economy, and the future of our country.
—Donald Merand, Dorchester, MA

It is important because it lets everyone be happy for no neutrality is chaos and war shall be let on to you. It will not be pretty and we deserve our rights !
—Kyra Torres, Colorado Springs, CO

The internet was made to share knowledge equally, what the FCC is trying to do will kill that.
—Mr. Ezequiel Davidovich Caballero, Buenos Aires,

As long as big money is involved, no progress will be made, only a regression. You are giving big money a chance to mess up the internet further by letting them pay you to have their way !
—Michael K. Bonner, Cleveland, OH

The internet was built on our hard work and creativity, the infrastructure providers are just the middleman. This new proposal is good for large companies and bad for everyone else. Source: I am a software developer, IT professional, and internet entrepreneur.
—David Muir, Gainesville, FL

The Internet is NOT a commodity. Don't commodify it.
—Frieda A. Stahl, Pasadena, CA

The internet is based on sharing access to computers bandwidth. All servers must route information equally regardless of who owns it. Breaking the internet traffic flow will cause great damage to how information is shared.
—Jed Miner, Brooklyn, NY

Communication in this century as important as running water, electricity and gas, and sewage service in previous centuries. It is now a utility and as such internet providers should be reclassified as common carriers. This is important because equal access to information is the bedrock of a free, open and democratic society. Take away equal access and you've got corruption and the rise of the oligarchy.
—Loreli Fister, Corvallis, OR

My small business nor those of my clients will not be able to survive without true Net Neutrality. Chairman Wheeler DO YOUR JOB for the PEOPLE or step down and let someone who can do the right thing!
—Derek Durivage, Baltimore, MD

Your proposed ruling does not serve the people, only big businesses. Please remember that people are the ones who vote - even when business has the money - and you should support initiatives that serve the people who voted you into office instead of corporations trying to bribe their way into getting what they want.
—Frances Jessop, Santa Fe, NM

Obama could stop it,he's paying back AT&T, Comcast and Verizon for helping the NSA.
—Ed Poder, Johnstown, PA

Keep the playing field even!!!
—Kathy Loeb, Lexington, KY

By rejecting Net Neutrality, you are handing the keys over to big business. Once again, the 1% win out and the little guy on the street pays the bill. SHAME ON YOU
—Deborah Baker, Brighton, MA

Come on! Pay attention to the citizens! Not the big names! Keep the net neutral!!
—Lynn Mcclure, Snellville, GA

Allowing the big media companies to decide what companies get fast access is the wrong decision. Please don't vote for this proposal
—John Daly, Sunset Beach, NC

Reclassify ISPs as common carriers
—Talea Cornelius, Vernon Rockville, CT

The government should not be providing rules for the internet. We need an open Internet. This is another step toward Communism or Nazism.
—Charlene Knop, Charlotte, NC

The internet needs to remain unmonopolized, especially for those who don't even have access to the monopolized companies.
—Marshall, ,

no good reason except money and that is discrimination
—John Anderson, LaPorte, CO

As an open source software developer/integrator I depend on internet access, please consider classifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Robert Hedges, Saint Louis, MO

Please tell us the price for Tom Wheeler so we can start a fund "by the people" and eventually outbid the companies he's working for. That seems to be the only way to put some sense into the FCC.
—Fahad Zafar, Catonsville, MD

Please stop denying the obvious fact that the Internet was misclassified on purpose in the first place, and that it is a "bi-directional" common carrier telecommunications service!
—Todd Johnston, Oxford, MI

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Ms. Elaine Smitha, Olympia, WA

Simple, it's freedom is our precious.
—Shannon Callahan, San Diego, CA

The beauty of the internet is that it's open and easily accessible by anyone with a connectable device. The current proposal would be a boon to large cable and phone providers at the expense of consumers. Please don't let this pass.
—Matt Lewis, Jersey City, NJ

.. this proposal is all about the bottom line .. and further separates the have's from the have-nots .. re: % inequality.
—Anthony Vincent, Seattle, WA

I am truly disappointed in Mr. Wheeler's decision to move forward with his plan that would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. These companies would have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. And no one would be able to do anything about it.
—Jacob Bartlett, Tallahassee, FL

The internet should be treated as a utility. Citizens are already being charged huge fees just for a high speed connection. To allow a two-tiered Internet is financial racism. You make enough money - do your job!!!!
—Kay Levin, Hockley, TX

The internet is a vital and necessary resource that promotes education, connectivity, and has become necessary to exist and thrive in our society. Allowing ISPs to discriminate between website speeds and give preferential treatment to the highest bidder further widens the gap between those who have large pockets and those who do not. I want the country I call home to not operate under the premise that having more money entitles you to a different set of rules. To truly protect the common citizens, you must classify ISPs as common carriers. The concerns of the majority of citizens must be put well ahead of the concerns of companies recording record profits, while being given resoundinglt negative feedback from their customers.
—Eric Braband, Chicago, IL

Keep the internet free!
—Mike C, Camarillo, CA

Stop this attck on the middle class!
—Paul Adrien, Eustis, FL

This is the right thing to do for our country!
—Karen Bowman, Westminster, CO

Net neutrality is the key to freedom of speech and to democracy. Please do not kill net neutrality.
—Boris Katan, Fairhaven, MA

It's a disaster whenever Big Businesses of Any Stripe are allowed to run roughshod over the competition, especially smaller companies. Equality is tough to handle, but nothing works better than that.
—Dale Reynolds, Glendale, CA

Open internet is vital to small business owners and start-up entrepreneurship.
—Madeline Carpenter, San Juan Capistrano, CA

Real business must be based on equal flat playing fields, not on who can cheat with the most money, !
—Rich Adams, Dayton, OH

Please classify the isp's as the common carriers they actually are.
—Andrew Brodie, Holliston, MA

I'm tired of being gouged by ISPs.
—Joshua Spain, Watervliet, NY

The internet is the ultimate democratic communication channel in human history. Allowing ISPs to divide it into fast and slow lanes would be a huge blow to the ideal of what the internet is and should be.
—Michael Wilson, Brooklyn, NY

Everyone, no matter their economic circumstances deserve unfettered access to the internet. Creating anything other than complete net neutrality is unacceptable. The President endorsed net neutrality and I expect his appointees to deliver on that promise.
—Randy White, Washington, DC

There should be equal accessibility for everything and everyone on the internet.
—Joe Vita, Plainville, CT

Leave the internet alone!!!!! This is something that we use and do not need FCC slanting the net to favor big corporations over American Citizens who deserve better. Government has already screwed up the vote process by allowing big corporations to buy seats for their favored representatives who favor them and not the American Citizens. Don't be part of this trend to screw the majority in favor of the rich few. Internet must stay as it is for the good of all!!!!!
—John L Grand, Green Valley, AZ

The proposed regulations are a thinly veiled attempt to restrict economic and social freedoms. It is being done under the guise of investment and quality regulation, but at it's core restricts access for individuals to access content and services. It limits new business opportuniy and provides an unfair advantage to an elite few, allowing the providers to ultimately have the final say in what I as a consumer or as a business owner can do. It's straight up crap and everyone but the FCC and their cable buddies seem to know it.
—Keith, Studio City, CA

Open access to Internet speed has allowed small business to compete on a nearly level playing field, the arts to showcase itself no matter whether a small theater company or a city metropolitan opera, and individuals communicate in open forums. Internet infrastructure such as ISPs should be reclassified as common carriers, much like telephone and radio in a previous age.
—Jacqueline Read, Louisville, KY

PLEASE do not increase our nation's already awful inequality with this 'toll road' approach
—Dolores Cellier, Rancho Palos Verdes, CA

Open internet is one of the only ways that small voices can be heard and where those with minority viewpoints can easily connect. Free speech and association should not have to be paid for. Please don't let the government treat the internet like cable. It is fundamentally different because the it is a two-way street.
—Jenny Zhang, New York, NY

I am just an ordinary person, not a very wealthy person by the 1% standard, who uses the internet for shopping, vacations and work. If the internet is not reclassified as a common carrier and Mr Wheeler goes ahead to make it in effect "a pay to play", my use of the internet will be greatly diminished. Everything in this country is based on wealth, lets NOT make the internet part of the inequality that has hurt this country and our democracy. Lets keep it a REAL net neutrality and classify it as a "commons" as it really is.
—Patricia Szot, Auburn, WA

Tell the FCC to throw out its rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. This is the ONLY way to protect real Net Neutrality. I'm really disappointed in all of you. You're supposed to represent the people, not the oligarchy. Please reconsider your decision. Keep net neutrality.
—Kayvon J Ghaffari, SEATTLE, WA

It is vital that the FCC maintain real net neutrality. I work in online education, and believe that both content providers and content consumers are entitled to their material being treated equally by ISPs. The ISPs also have far too many hands in the pie - they cannot be trusted to fairly treat content providers (especially those with which they directly compete). This is just another example of an industry attempting to use regulations to stifle innovation and competition. I say NO to your proposed rules. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers and protect and ensure true net neutrality that will protect both American citizens and business, and keep the internet a place where diversity and innovation can flourish.
—Benjamin George, Logan, UT

The "Free Market" needs to be maintained. Mergers of this kind destroys this. Stop it now!!
—Arlyn Erdman, Pacheco, CA

If the FCC starts deciding what we can see on the internet you might as well tell us how to think. A perfect example of this is how Facebook decides who's posts show up in the news feed, in actuality they are deciding who we interact with and when. Mental slavery if we are not allowed find the information we are looking for we are essentially as closed minded as public media. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Philip Schneider, Denver, CO

As a free country, with free speech guaranteed, I find it reprehensible that you would allow corporations to dictate the level of service I receive from other corporations based on the depth of their pocket book.
—Ben Casner, Denver, CO

Small rural areas like the one I live in would be adversely effected by this ruling. People in our community heavily depend on the local library to access the internet. This puts unfair burdens on those that do not have the deep pockets to afford the new fees. We are already under served in cell phone service and now we will have a two tiered plan for internet? Our community depends on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open internet. Reclassify IPS's as common carriers. Respectfully Janis Pielech Bayfield Colorado
—Mrs. Janis Pielech, bayfield, CO

An equally available Internet has been one of the most positive cultural, intellectual, and commercial innovations in history. Net neutrality must be preserved!
—Carl Cole, Charleston, SC

The Internet is something that should available to all, not just the people who can afford to pay a toll for the fast lanes.
—Lauren Avren, Phoenix, AZ

By forcing a feudal-era class system on the entirety of the nation, small and medium sized businesses who depend on the net to function will not have a chance in a discriminatory environment that Chairman Wheeler would create. This proposed plan is abhorrent to liberty and should be immediately aborted.
—Ryan Wallace, Canton, MS

Communication can't be held by corporations in a REAL democracy.
—Kevin Kelly, Portage, WI

Please don't let the internet be compromised for people like this. It is the biggest and most important organ for freedom of speech and much more, and should not be put into bondage with a two-tiered system for the haves and the have-nots. Please!
—david Webster, San Francisco, CA

What is more important to me even than Net Neutrality is the active FCC bias that favors corporate wants above what is best for the vast majority of American citizens.
—Lewis Redding, Arcadia, CA

Please throw out the FCC internet rules and reclassify ISPs as common carriers!
—Nicholas Woodbury, San Francisco, CA

One reason that the net is so successful a phenomenon is because it has been equally available to EVERYBODY! Changing this will undermine much of what makes the internet tick. Please reconsider and make the net neutral.
—Ms. Wanda Metcalf, North Andover, MA

If you are approved these rules would mean the end of Net Neutrality, then deaf community would struggle to care their billings because of million deaf low incomes over this country. We are depending on videophones to avoid communication barriers.
—Jan Struhar, Prince Frederick, MD

Why aren't ISPs considered common carriers? They provide very similar functions to phone companies. In some cases ISPs ARE phone companies. This seems like a no-brainer to me. Corporations should never have the level of control proposed in the FCC's current plans. The current plans only allow them to take advantage of consumers, and to pick and choose which businesses they want to be successful. Ultimately this will discourage innovation and reward only established corporations. That is completely unacceptable. This isn't rocket science. Common carriers for the Internet make sense. Fast and Slow lanes do not.
—Jason Carlin, Hamilton, OH

Seriously, this is ridiculous. This is exactly like saying people who have more money can get more heat, or electricity. You can't even get a JOB without being able to connect to the internet. The entire concept was created to ensure equality to anyone that wanted to participate. I'm not paying providers to decide, for me, who gets better bandwidth. I'm offended that you would even consider this course of action. FIX THIS. Do not kill the open Internet. Maintain Net Neutrality. Don't go down in history as a sell out to big business.
—Julia Nowels, Littleton, CO

Those who support Tom Wheeler's corporate instigated plan really don't give a crap about the public. As long as more corporate profit is at stake we know exactly how they will vote. Maybe they should go back to lapping more directly and openly at the trough, Arriana Huffington described it as pigs at the trough and I can't think of a more apt description of the majority of politicians, lobbyists and nefarious others. Pathetic.
—Robert Rucker, Santa Fe, NM

I do not want to pay for higher internet. What you are proposing will bring this to light. Do not follow through with 2-tiered internet.
—Anthony Chen, Rockville, MD

Internet is already broken into bandwidth classes why do we need to break it down again? The FCC needs to classify isp's as common carriers and enforce the people's rights instead of the corporations.
—Lucas Mcmillen, Fulton, MS

The internet has become an essential utility, just like electricity. It must be regulated as such.
—Carolyn Jordan, Arlington, MA

The internet is for everyone, not just large companies
—Kim Adams, Columbus, NC

Is there any aspect of our daily life that big corporations can not buy and hold ransom? Would you allow companies to charge folks differently to access public streets? Physical freedom of movement and online freedom of access is functionally the same. Do NOT put control of access to the internet at the whims of major corporations!
—Peter Willett, Oakland, CA

As a senior on SSA, I don't have the money to pay for internet usage. If this goes though, you will be cutting seniors like myself off from a lifeline to the outside world. You will force us to stop our internet use comepletely, and will cut income to internet providers.
—Sheila Dillon, Willmar, MN

ISPs need to be classified as common carriers & net neutrality preserved! Otherwise we'll have a fast lane for big corporations & the rich, and a slow shitty internet for the rest of us. This is unacceptable!!
—Gary Henderson, Apache Junction, AZ

We beed net neutrality to ensure we are all on the same playing ground! Are we truly free if we can't voice out opinions or are monitored every second of every day? Do you know any one person on this planet that hasn't made a mistake in their lives, or better yet, make mistakes or manipulate a situation to help themselves out? Do you think ever person from Big Brother is truly their to help the people and not just themselves? Do you think people should be ruled by governments or governments should be there help unify the world on an equal playing field?
—Kyle R., North hollywood, CA

Please make the ISP common carrier
—Casey, alpheretta, GA

The internet needs to be simply classified as a common carrier to make sure it remains available to all people. This is very important.
—Dianne Stromberg, Santa Fe, NM

The internet was created as free and open and should remain as such. Our society is already far too divided between the 'haves' and the 'have-nots' and we should not allow an opportunity for business to further divide us. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers!
—Ronald Sebben, Bloomington, IN

"The Internet is a global system of interconnected computer networks that use the standard Internet protocol suite (TCP/IP) to link several billion devices worldwide. It is a network of networks that consists of millions of private, public, academic, business, and government networks, of local to global scope, that are linked by a broad array of electronic, wireless, and optical networking technologies. The Internet carries an extensive range of information resources and services, such as the inter-linked hypertext documents and applications of the World Wide Web (WWW), the infrastructure to support email, and peer-to-peer networks for file sharing." This is what it was created for, not for profit of specific providers. A free and open internet will continue collaboration and foster continued growth of private as well as public domains.
—Robert Andersen, Thornton, CO

I hate that tech infrastructure in the US is falling further and further behind. The most sickening part is that its due to greedy individuals like Tom Wheeler who directly profit off of crippling our infrastructure. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers before you completely destroy internet access in the US.
—Alex Crawford, San Francisco, CA

Don't get ahead on the backs of the working poor and keep your back scratching cronies out of our pockets.
—Dean Rocissono, Wolcott, VT

It is absurd to think that you can divide the internet like a cake and give more to those willing to pay. The internet has, and always should be, a collaboration of every human on this planet - and every human should have the right to access it, free from restrictions. It is the single greatest achievement of our time and to even think that access to it should be limited so someone can get rich is asinine. For the love all that is holy realize that absolutely NO NORMAL CITIZEN wants to have to pay more to get access to the same internet as everyone else. Keep it free. Keep it cheap. Keep it neutral.
—Andrew Lydiard, Reno, NV

Dear Federal Communications Commission: FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Kris Tennant, ,

We are sick of the pay to play in every facet of our political lives. A two tiered internet allows better service for people with money. The internet needs to be fast and free to allow for the free exchange of ideas in a democratic society. Cheryl Geyerman
—Ms. Cheryl Geyerman, San Diego, CA

To the FCC, Your rules that condone the creation of multi-tiered internet threatens the very foundation of what makes the internet great. By allowing this, you pave the way for ISPs like Verizon and Comcast to destroy startup companies before they even begin. What startup can attract investors when their services will require this premium internet speed that you have allowed to come into play? Sites that dominate the internet-- Youtube, Netflix, Pandora. These are new and exciting sources of income for a young world and your rules-- the rules that counter rules put in place to prevent monopolies and similar market-breaking objects-- will see the death of new innovation on our front. Not only will we kill innovation based in the US -- the largest online presence to date -- but we will be FORCING new companies to come to places like China, Russia, and nations all-throughout Europe. These are nations that will steal from us what makes America great, and what's more, stunt us in the next 20 years as the internet becomes an even more important source of income for our shrinking world. Please don't let short-sighted decisions be the end of our long-term superiority. Thank You.
—Jeff Warner, Pittsburgh, PA

As WE THE PEOPLE sit back and watch our country get sold off to the highest, sometimes only, bidder. The internet is the last bastion of hope. Communication with anyone at any time. The fact that the ISPs have to pay more because of heavy traffic is a burden they will just have to bear. What happened to all the money we gave them for infrastructure that they never fixed? Classify the ISPs as common carriers. Don't let them nickel and dime consumers to death with high rates, slow speeds and shitty service(ComCast and Time Warner Cable have been voted the worst companies year after year and yet you want to let them merge)
—Jonathan Thomm, Milwaukee, WI

Net Neutrality is critical to a properly functioning internet. Doing away with it is essentially class discrimination, and it is unacceptable. The internet needs to be open to everyone equally, so please, throw out these rules, reclassify ISPs as common carriers, and save Net Neutrality!
—Steven Muniz, New York, NY

for those like me who depend on using public internet terminals at our local libraries, slow streaming rates would further cut into our assigned session time, which is even more frustrating than on a personal device. again,please preserve the one tier level of net neutrality by re- assigning the internet as a common carrier. and don't try any watered down approach. to this issue.
—Jordan Francis, phoenix, AZ

Toss your rules and reclassify service providers as common carriers. We the people want net neutrality! Your current stance is not fair to the little guy or gal!
—Dawn O'Donnell, Greenfield, NY

THERE IS NO FAST LANE. We cannot possibly expect companies with shareholders to please to properly maintain a public asset, when there's money to be made. Why would the FCC ever consider this a good idea? Is the FCC bought and paid for? Is there NOBODY in the government looking out for the citizens anymore? I am appalled and outraged by this blatant insult. I DEMAND Net Neutrality! There are too many problems to be solved, without crippling one of our greatest tools for solving them.
—Skaught Bowden, Lexington, KY

As someone who uses the Internet for both work and play, preventing a two-tiered (or more) Internet would be reprehensible. While the ISPs may say all day that they have no plans to do so, anyone who has even a modicum of intelligence knows that is the way that they want to head. End it now, and classify them the same as telephone service.
—Dale Moore, Starkville, MS

The proposed rules will have a severe impact on the exercise of First Amendment rights as well as adversely affect the political process. By allowing those with more money or the "preferred politics" of the gatekeepers to influence the speed of content delivery, not only can Free Speech be restricted, but it will even interfere with critical underpinnings of the American political system. Smaller, independent political candidates will find themselves unable to provide campaign information via the Internet, which has become a valuable media for the political process. Instead, only those with multimillionaire backers will be able to reliably promote their campaigns. Certainly, that these rules are being pushed, promoted, and proposed indicates that the end-goal is to use them as a political tool for strangling opposing political factions.
—Jessica Schlenker, Houston, TX

Please just make ISPs common carriers. It is the right and just thing to do.
—Jonathan Morgan, Evanston, IL

Everyone and every business should have the same access to the internet.
—Kate Kerr, Portland, OR

The same monied interests that deregulated banking and brought our economy to a halt, now want to regulate the Internet for their benefit. The Internet is like a public utility and everyone should have equal access, not just the ones that can use their money to lobby.
—William Gieseke, Northfield, IL

This is unacceptable. We MUST have ALL traffic be treated the same. If we do not, we instantly obsolete the entire idea of the internet, and within 5 years no one will use it anymore. It will be replaced with a new system not developed or controlled by the USA. I am a Network Engineer by trade, no one knows better than I exactly how badly this would screw us all.
—Avery Lewis, Las Vegas, NV

In the end the average man will be priced out of everything or go broke paying for telephone, tv and computer services. In my life time tv was free, and a telephone was $4.95 plus long distance. Wages are going down instead of up.
—Glenda Van Slyke, Crossville, TN

The internet is no different these days than phone server, and is just as important. If we were discussing whether or not you were forced to pay your phone provider more for acceptable audio quality on your phone calls, this would be a no-brainer. The internet should be the same, and charges for tiered access should be unacceptable now and for the future. I work as a web developer by trade, and I fear the impact that tiered access might have on job security for individuals in my line of work. Higher fees would have to be passed on somehow, and if it makes sense to someone that "since we've got to cut costs, perhaps we don't need that web guy anymore since we have to pay more to our ISP for people to get to our site anyways." When those additional costs get passed on, someone always has to pay the price. By simply reclassifying ISPs as common carriers, the FCC will reassure everyone that they have the interests of common people like myself in mind rather than catering to big business types who only care about their bottom line. This also runs the risk of setting a precedent that could then be extended to phone service as well. I urge you to exercise some common sense and reclassify ISPs as common carriers and thereby preserve an open Internet and Net Neutrality. Thank you for your time.
—Stephen Leavitt, Dickson, TN

It is vitally important that the internet remains free, open, and equally accessible for the good of us and our posterity.
—Brett Porcelli, Bayport, NY

I rely on equal opportunity internet service. It will really disturb me to find that some of my services are slowed or interrupted because non-profits and others cannot buy the fastest delivery service.
—Toddy Perryman, Corvallis, MT

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Simon Lord, Astoria, NY

The internet has become an unexpected tool for social change and transparency. It works because it is open and organic. It is so much more than a delivery system for media content. Please do not compromise it's potential by putting business interests in charge. We had no idea that the internet would become what it is. We have no idea what it may yet become. Let us not continue to make the same mistakes.
—James Jentile, portland, OR Anything but strict net neutrality, like the currently proposed rules, betrays the essential foundation of the internet as the most democratically accessible communication path ever existing in human history. ISPs, no matter how large, knew that was what they were getting into when they entered this business. They should innovate their way into a successful business model under that understood and accepted baseline policy. The FCC should not cooperate in the distortion of the Net Neutrality policy to make BIG ISPd more profitable.

—Douglas Benedict, Santa Monica, CA

I am on fixed income and a senior. I spend a lot of time on research and this would hinder me greatly
—Sharon Craig, Normal, IL

Without net neutrality, I, a student hoping to work on networks as a job, cannot have any hope of taking off due to the required bribe that the ISPs will demand. I will be forced to move my servers and money out of the US economy, something I don't want to do.
—Jacob Slater, Santa Rosa, CA

I want the internet to remain true to the principles of the USA, the FCC, and the original founders fathers: a telecomm common carrier that supports and enhances the local and national marketplace of ideas.
—N Burns, salt lake city, UT

Net neutrality is important to the capatistic society that we have developed and dreamed of. WIthout it, then new businesses won't have equal access to all possible consumers. Especially if you are just starting out, you can't handle the extra costs of having to pay providers more, just to deliver your content. We are already paying for the infrastruture through internet fees, what extra is this suppose to do, except put more money in the pockets of the ISPs. We already pay more for internet access that most other civilazied people across the world, and we have slower speeds than most. So, we continue to have sub-standard access and pay more for it, and then they want to charge extra to those that want to use that bandwidth, it seems inappropriate and nothing more than a money grab. And furthermore, say it was determined that only those above a certain bandwidth per second would have to pay these extra fees, then who is to draw the line and what assures that that line won't be progressively lowered. ANd then what prevents people from saying that you have to pay, even if you are not-for-profit, or a at-home business with minimal income. That is just my thoughts, and feel that net neutrality should be maintained.
—KEelan Tuel, Loma Linda, CA

I want to make it very clear that I am with the large majority of U.S. citizens that wants to protect TRUE Net Neutrality. ISPs should be reclassified as common carriers and the rules proposed by FFC Chairman Tom Wheeler are not acceptable. Thank you for your time and consideration.
—Joseph Manietta, Longmont, CO

An open internet is critical to an equal starting point for future generations to step beyond the geographic and financial barriers. This will allow people to achieve and communicate and learn in ways that they may not be able to do without equal access.
—Michael Blake, Washington, DC

Net Neutrality is important because the internet is important. I wonder how much the ISP's are paying you, Tom....
—Arran F Clarke, Machynlleth,

The Internet IS the communications service of the modern age. The pipes to users must be "common carriers" to prevent oligolopy distortion of traffic. Content providers MUST NOT be able to discriminate based on others' content.
—Paul McQuesten, Leander, TX

It's not fair that people get better access to the Internet than others because of money.
—Lourdes Best, East Palo Alto, CA

The internet is a vital conduit for information, business, and communication. It is imperative this unique framework be preserved for the common good and classified as a common carrier.
—Powder, Minneapolis, MN

The internet is our way of sharing information. We cannot allow it to be throttled or bought.
—Victoria Husson, Smyrna, TN

The government's role should be protecting us from corporations and little else. You are failing.
—Josh Raab, Santa Monica, CA

The internet is my main means of communication as well as a means to supplementing my income. Marginalizing the speed at which people can access my site could easily put me on government assistance for food and medical care, which right now I don't need. The internet is both a computer and mobile device communications tool which allows fast response - I won't be able to compete for the 'fast lanes'. The capacity to find ways to limit who can access the internet is deeply disturbing, the worst of privacy violation. These rules would enable companies to do pretty much what they please with what is now an essential public communications service.
—Janice Gipson, Falls City, OR Ni!

—Ale Abdo, New York, NY

Two-tiered internet service would be a disaster for our economy and our democracy. It would turn the Internet from a vibrant incubator of commerce and collectivity into a wasteland of schlock dominated by a few giant corporations, as commercial television has become.
—Nita Sembrowich, Cambridge, MA

protecting net neutrality is essential to moving forward in a modern information age. without it, corporations will replace governments representing the people as the powers that rule the world.
—Zachary Fleischman, Fort Collins, CO

We need an open and economically viable internet. Citizens, small businesses and non-profits will suffer if your allow corporations to control the cost of access. We have seen the impact of these increasing costs in cable and wireless firms. Honor freedom of speech and freedom of access to speech. Classify ISPs ad the common carriers they are. Honor the infrastructure of the 21st century.
—Constance Bevitt, Silver Spring, MD

Please don't let the "big guys" run the show. I like having the internet as it is.
—Harold Wilson, Nampa, ID

I am shocked that the FCC would hand over such power to the big ISPs. The internet need to stay neutral and equally available to everyone. I beg you not to move forward with these new rules.
—Chris, Redondo Beach, CA

Net Neutrality will mean the difference between an open future, and one that belongs only to the wealthy. Keep the internet open for all.
—Paul Batteiger, Tulsa, OK

The whole world depends on the internet being a free and open exchange of ideas and information. The broadband providers did not build the internet or it's audience, the people did. These companies deserve to be paid for they're services but they cannot be allowed to cherry pick information and media. Please, for the future of the human race, reconsider this proposal.
—Michael Mohr, Austin, TX

Mr. Chmn. Please stand for the PEOPLE you represent, the technology, innovation and creators that will shape the future. Not with your corporate benefactors, whose only goal is to profit from both sides of the internet equation. Protect REAL net Neutrality. Regards, Stephen Rosen
—Stephen Rosen, New York, NY

The current proposed path would open the door to widespread discrimination online. It would give Internet service providers the green light to implement pay-for-priority schemes that would be a disaster for startups, nonprofits and everyday Internet users who cannot afford these unnecessary tolls. The ISPs were only to be conduits that carried data to and fro as quickly and efficiently as possible, without considering its source. It maintained a “neutral” stance, thus, “net neutrality.” But Wheeler’s new proposal kills this. I urge you to scrap these proposed rules and instead restore the principle of online nondiscrimination by reclassifying broadband as a telecommunications service. Please, stand for people and not the business models of large ISPs. People not profits.
—Lindsey, Washington, DC

This whole idea about killing Net Neutrality and discrimination is just too absurd to take lightly! Tom Wheeler's plan is just way too stupid! Internet's always been open to everyone and that is the way IT SHALL STAY! Just because you idea letting actual PEOPLE to suffer and companies and whatnot taking over is WRONG. DEADLY WRONG!!! TOM WHEELER AND EVERYONE WHO SUPPORTS THIS STUPID PLAN SHOULD BE PUT OUT OF THEIR LIFE'S!!! STOP THIS INSANITY NOW! LET US HAVE THE OPEN INTERNET AND STOP MEDDLING AROUND!! EVERYONE WHO ACTUALLY SUPPORTS THIS OUTRAGEOUS PLAN; YOU ALL ARE PATHETIC!!! STOP SCREWING UP THINGS!!
—Jani Valtavirta, ,

Serve the public interest, like you're supposed to do. Not do what corporations want.
—Edgar Arce, Ocala, FL

The freedom and level playing field that fair, open internet creates is it's greatest attribute. Surely you wouldn't want to take that away from tax paying Americans in favor of special interest groups.
—Heath Holbert, Gillett, AR

The internet is as important to the way our society works as our roads are. It facilitates our entertainment and academics, lets us connect with people all over the country and all over the world. If we truly live in a democracy, where the voice of the people matters more than the ability of a corporation to manipulate a government, then the FCC will protect the open Internet and preserve Net Neutrality by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Michelle Anjirbag, Madison, CT

Without Net Neutrality, Internet Service Providers can slow service discriminately, using their clout to force other companies to pay, essentially killing the open Internet as we know it. It gives ISP's too much power. Say the ISP is in dispute with another company... they can simply slow them down to a crawl killing their business. ISP's could illegally slow another company to kill their business while owning stock in another... insider trading? Yeah, this is going to be a nightmare to regulate. Please open the Net back up and make everyone neutral as it should be to allow creativity to flow. Look at what has been done in just the last 10 years in terms of computing, look what is possible from our PHONES... taking away Net Neutrality will slow this process significantly. Do what's right!
—Sarah C. Shechner, Canoga Park, CA

I do not use much band width. But some people who do not work for big complanies really need it for their work. Changing the rules will destroy a lot of people´s livelihood.
—Deborah Black, Sonoma, CA

The INTERNET SHOULD BE EQUAL for all; not just those who could afford the fees charged. The two-tiered internet proposal kill chances for many of improving not only their education, their lives, but their future.
—Jennifer Dayton, Bensalem, PA

So, once again, as we've seen so many times of late, those with the money get to move faster, farther, and higher than the rest of us. Chairman Wheeler, you've contributed, sadly, to the trend in inequality that seems to be running rampant presently in the U.S.
—Howard W. McCoy, Centreville, MD

This is an anti-democratic proposal
—Raven Deerwater, Mendocino, CA

When are corporate profits enough? When we no longer maintain any semblence of common sense?
—Chris Dashke, Saint Paul, MN

If the ISP insist that they not be treated like a common service, what is it that they fear? I've been places in the world were the internet is metered and controlled by the providers, and it leads to nothing but narrow mindedness and limited information. If this is truly the land of the Free, let the words we say and the information we share flow freely as well. Stop worrying about your wallet and start worrying about the MILLIONS of people you work for who you are making very mad. Keep free speech free, I'm not going to pay $0.99 per gig to read news Comcast or version disagrees with.
—Joshua baratta, Loveland, CO

I am a Retired Senior Citizen and use the internet daily to manage online banking, online shopping, email for personal and business correspondence and active participation in the political process to contact legislators and to sign petitions on important issues. In addition I follow local, national and international news. I need an open Internet with good speed and no special speed nets with higher rates. I am familiar with the work of the FCC as I was involved in Public Safety communications. I hope that the FCC remains focused on the communications needs of all citizens as I experienced it during my professional career.
—Joseph Friend, Columbia, MD

Stop the corporate prostitution
—Chris Matera, Northampton, MA

The internet needs to be open and accessible to all, large and small, rich and poor. Any priority access to the rich will end up blocking the poor, and would be the end of the internet.
—Robert Harley, Cottonwood, AZ

I pay for high speed internet access for ALL the content I chose to look at. Why should the provider be able to limit me by slowing down what I chose to do on the internet. If they want me to watch their content, they have to make it appeal to me. I am already limited by who I can get internet access from, now I will be forced to pay higher rates because I am not favoring the ISP's content.
—Dennis ST.Pierre, Venom, CT

Free and open Internet allows for equal access by everyone.
—Jonathan Butler, Bellingham, WA

Please do not allow large corporations have so much control of the internet. It is not in the interest of free speech. It is not unlike the Supreme Court's decision on equating money and speech in reference to voting. We all know that money influences voting results. I hope you will decide in favor of the consumer.
—Nancy R. Neilsen, Louisville, TN

net neutrality fosters competition.
—Jason Bogosian, Arcadia, CA

Is the Oligarchy that rules this country big and powerful enough without taking away the voice of the people over the internet? Strengthen Net Neutrality, don't sell out and destroy it!
—Eugene Fetherman, Milwaukee, WI

The current rules codify the increasingly criminal behavior of Comcast. Stop support cyber crime!
—Jesse Ledbetter, New Wilmington, PA

Net Neutrality matters. It matters because our democracy demands it. When you introduce "fast pass" or preferential treatment, you end up degrading the experience of everyone else. What starts as speeding up netflix, ends with throttling bandwidth towards sites that are "controversial". Finally we arrive in a world where only those willing to pay a toll can gain access to the World Wide Web. The ISPs control monopolies. The "burden" of additional bandwidth is not much of a burden for them. Rather the end of net neutrality signals the end of the "burden" of regulation. Unless these providers are regulated, their total lack of competition will lead to price gauging on their part. For the love of all that is good and holy, stop this insanity and stand for net neutrality.
—Andrew Dobbyn, Durham, NC

Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers. It is the only fair way to run the internet.
—Lauren Flahive, West Covina, CA

The internet has changed the way the world communicates and facilitates commerce. It has spawned countless innovations and of course we are seeing big media companies with lots of infrastructure attempt to control as much of it as they can. There is a growing perception in the public that big business lobbyists and government regulators have a nice little synergy, and will regularly scratch each other's backs. This needs to stop. Allowing fast lanes basically renders moot the idea that a new start-up could turn into the next big company. Rather, that same start-up will now basically come up with something innovative which will be purchased by a media conglomerate and either get set aside or further developed depending on the company's agenda. The internet is the most important thing for creating a true global economy and culture. Please do not tamper with it.
—Riley Schiefelbein, Coon Rapids, MN

A level playing field for customers and content developers is crucial to fostering the best in innovation for the US. Providers who wish to infringe upon an open internet in order to boost their own profits are doing so at too great an expense to the innovators and citizens who greatly outnumber them.
—Robert A. Smielecki, Buffalo, NY

1) I'm already paying my ISP a hefty sum to deliver the packets I want in a timely manner. 2) Small companies (the backbone of our country) will never be able to afford paying "high priority" packet handling. Without Net Neutrality companies like YouTube could never have succeeded if large ISPs had a competing product. Please abandon this approach and reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Look at how many broadband providers are available in European cities compared to our own country. Time to take the lead on this!
—Jeff Blaisdell, Colchester, VT

There are other ways to compensate ISPs commensurate with bandwidth usage. The FCC already has an extensive set of regulations set up for Common Carriers, ensuring that network access is neutral, and that small and large businesses both can rely on the network services at a fair price. Reclassifying ISPs as Common Carriers allows those rules to prevent market abuses specific to the oligopolistic nature of the Internet access business. Then you can focus on how they may be compensated commensurate with usage of their networks.
—Paula Gordon, denver, CO

Net neutrality is the ONLY way to keep the internet accessible. The internet needs to survive without "toll roads" that discriminate against small business owners and entrepreneurs as well as those of us trying to utilize their services. Honestly: How many people do you know who don't need regular access to the internet? It's a utility; no longer a luxury service.
—Beth Stanberry, Asheville, NC

Living in America should promise everyone the same chance to succeed as your neighbor. Now if my neighbor and I have identical internet business plans but his wife happens to be the daughter of a Comcast CEO, his business will get preferential internet speeds. Can we just open our eyes and use some common sense here? The internet should be a right. Everyone should have the same access available to it. There should be no preferential treatment. Think about it.
—Justin Simunek, Richmond, VA

Because I shouldn't have to pay extra because certain sites may threaten a company's profits.
—Chelsea B., fayetteville, NC

Net Neutrality is needed to promote innovation.
—Ron Munden, Scottsville, TX

This is a terrible idea. Having heard you on C-SPAN, I was not impressed. For me, I know that the likes of AT&T, COMCAST and Verizon are only thinking about themselves. I can recall when Cable TV was first talked about. How it would be commercial free. How it would be great for the public to be able to watch commerical free TV. Yet what do we have today? I do not for one minute feel that letting them go to this two tier system will have anything good happen for the American consumer. But it will greatly improve the profits of these corporations "on the Backs of the public"!
—Randy Juras, Homer Glen, IL

The Internet is clearly a public utility, created with public tax money and given away when its utility as a military and security agency protocol had expired. It's OURS. Just admit that it's a "common carrier", i.e. a public utility, and stop selling off pieces of it to big telecoms as a step-wise "back door" privatization of what BELONGS TO US.
—Steve Ditore, Seattle, WA

I want to be able to choose my providers and my services independent of each other without losing quality of the services.
—Lisa DiPippo, North Kingstown, RI

The internet is a place in which is equal, the only truly equal place in this world, and to limit it like this, even for the better, is not something that should be done.
—Jason Tu, Paoli, PA

Anything that allows Corporations who make mega-bucks providing uneven service already, in my opinion, to make more money providing even more uneven service is an economically idiotic idea and perhaps less than Constitutional.
—p turner, kennett sq, PA

The Internet has become such an important component of American life that to treat it as a luxury would be to degrade the quality of life for many who use it for communication, education, and commerce. The Internet must be treated as a utility. ISPs must be reclassified a common carriers
—Abigail Farrell, Charlotte, NC

Access to and content-neutral operation of the Internet is crucial to all aspects our society. Education, politics, entertainment, research, communication, etc. Any world where the default legal requirement does not insist that all data be given equal treatment is one where ideas, businesses, individuals, and freedoms will be marginalized.
—Wesley Miaw, San Jose, CA

Because I believe in the American dream and I think this rule can put a hold to it!
—Danny Soto, Kansas City, MO

I need it free to use in my business life. I paid for it by taxes so why give it away to US corporations.
—Gary Thomsen, Newport Beach, CA

Classifying ISPs as common carriers is the only way to retain our democracy. What you propose will inevitably and continually feed the oligarchic movement that is increasingly eating away at our democracy. I'm going to assume you support democracy, so please just do the right thing, and well within your regulatory authority, and classify ISPs as common carriers.
—Edward Berge, Albuquerque, NM

Put greed and money to the side for once
—Patrick Mitchell, ,

Net Neutrality is important because the internet is not something that ISPs should own. The very essence of the internet is the free exchange of information, ideas, and innovations with anyone on the planet. ISPs are meant to be providers of the infrastructure to access this wonder of the world, not the overseers of who gets to send what at what speed. It goes against everything the internet represents, as a forum for free speech, as the archive of human knowledge, and as the engine behind the biggest economic growth since the industrial revolution.
—Juan Gutierrez, Glendale, CA

It is discriminatory and just another way to contribute to the economic disparity in our nation which is already embarrassingly high —Catherinemn007@gmailcom, Washington, DC

Please keep the net COMPLETELY NEUTRAL. Fast lanes will only benefit the massive ISPs; small business and consumers will suffer immediately with numerous unknown consequences down the road (lack of funding for technology start-ups, etc.). Fast lanes are not necessary. If I, as a consumer, need more bandwidth at my home to watch Netflix without issue, I will order the appropriate bandwidth package from my provider. These "bandwidth hog" services are already priced into the market via the bandwidth profile I purchase from my ISP. The internet should be treated as a utility, plain and simple. Regards, Tyler Chester Ridgefield, WA
—Tyler Chester, Ridgefield, WA

The FUTURE! To maximize the creative capabilities of our culture, the accidentially open internet must remain open.Had the internet been as restrictive as the early bulletin boards and networks(AOL, Compuserve etc.), many of the wonders of our modern life would ,very likely, still be in the future. These new rules regarding parsing of internet traffic into slow and fast 'lanes' are the 'thin edge of the wedge', and though this may be dismissed by some as a slippery slope argument, the World Wide Wonder will soon be divided into haves and have nots. Net Neutrality is not unlike Free Air. If we had to pay for air, how long would we last?
—Cliff Martinez, DALLAS, TX

I am forced to live on social insecurity, and do most of my financial business, and purchases on line to save gas (it is fifty miles to town). If Net Neutrality is compromised this will put an even bigger burden on me trying to make ends meet. Please keep an Open Internet.
—David Blakeman, Dolan Springs, AZ

The proposed changes are contrary to sense and, by implication, freedom of speech.
—Greg Cameron, ,

We can't rely on companies to go by their word when they say they won't treat certain companies differently when charging for access (higher speeds) to the internet. We need laws in place to ensure this doesn't happen. The internet is the great equalizer in this day of age as it gives us all the equal right to information. With a limited amount of competition in ISPs, we need to ensure they keep the access equal.
—Jacob Miller, Santa Barbara, CA

I want an open internet free of discrimination and control from a handful of service providers! Keep the internet neutral!
—Francisco Madrid, , we ALL need to be winners - not losers!

—james Nessheim, San Diego, CA

Net neutrality is vital for a healthy internet. It was how the internet developed to become the crucial public utility that it is today. Google, Amazon, and all the other major internet players would not be here today if not for net neutrality. It is time to stop favoring corporate interests over private citizens.
—Mike Hood-Douda, Lebanon, OR

To take away Net Neutrality is to remove all sociality and worldwide communication. Killing it is just something the world can't bare to afford, let alone the united states.
—Nicholas Lee, Montgomery, AL

For shame, Chairman Wheeler. I'd hoped better of you. I'm a small business owner on the edge of bankruptcy. I live and die by internet access: 2014 could be the year I finally thrive, or the year I go out of business. Your new rules for a tiered Internet pretty much insure that I cannot compete with the unfettered access that big business and their lobbyists have wrought. A slow Internet is a dead zone, for those of us who will not be able to pay higher fees for higher access. If we want America to truly get out of this recession, we need to foster Net Neutrality - not sell it off to the highest bidder.
—Marian Crane, Phoenix, AZ

Internet is a necessity and a utility, not a luxury.
—Tessa Dick, Crestline, CA

The internet now is as important to commerce and communication as phones, TV and radio. Reclassify now as a common carrier. Do the Right thing for us, not for the big telecoms.
—Howard Mittleman, Schenectady, NY

Reclassify ISPs as the common carriers they are and stop lying about the fact that your ruling as currently proposed will be the end of net neutrality. Really, how ever do you propose to actually monitor and rein in ISPs that discriminate if you allow them to put in 'fast & slow lanes?' The agency is doing precious little to curb big media as it is. Classify ISPs as common carriers, please.
—Lyn Lowry, Takoma Park, MD

Tom Wheeler you have done what the majority of people told you not to do. At this point you are nothing more than a sock puppet for the lobbyists of big telecom. Hopefully history rightfully identifies you as the person who ruined the open internet and turned it into the 21st century version of broadcast TV . nice going sellout.
—Houmehr Aghabozorgi, Falls Church, VA

The Internet belongs as much to me as it does to any of the mega-corps. I pay my bill to access it, there is no need to debate anything else. Don't be a lackey for corporate pressure, do the right thing by the people who actually pay the bills (tax-payers) instead of by the people that don't contribute to our economy.
—W B, Littlerock, CA

It is scandalous that Government Regulatory Agencies like the FCC cater to Corporatist and Bankster's interests, rather than defend the common people.
—Paul Barbara, London,

A free and open internet for all is what allows companies to start with nothing and expand. This would be like carving out a section of our interstates and charging the shipping company for the fast lane. These companies have many sources of revenue already lets not put all the power in their hands. Lets leave the greatest tool for communication invented alone. Let it govern it's self. I already pay to subscribe to their network I should not have to pay to choose the delivery.
—Nate Dailey, Platteville, WI

I think that these new regulations serve the interests of large corporations only, the service providers need to be regulated as common carriers. That is the strongest way forward.
—Trace Harris, Portland, OR

As an innovator on a small project, allowing fast lanes on the Internet will prevent me from competing with well-established, large companies by preventing me from delivering my content to my users if I can't 'pay up'. These rules will kill small businesses as we know it on the Internet, will stifle innovation, will force people in these small businesses to lose their jobs and slow down our economy.
—Peter C Warrintton, cambridge, MA

This country should be all about free markets and everyone having equal opportunities and a fair shot. These rules won't allow that. Please reconsider and restore net neutrality to the way it was.
—Aram Hacobian, Burbank, CA

Let's be adults about this. The internet is now a completely necessary utility for US citizens. Letting monopolies take control over a basic service for all purposes, not just commercial is a travesty of proper government. We should regulate the internet as a common carrier. W. Sterner
—William H Sterner, Chicago, IL

I am a senior citizen on a fixed income. I cannot afford the increased rates for Internet service your proposal will cause. With no TV, if I have to drop my Internet service, I will lose my connection with the news and my family and friends.
—D Bell, Veradale, WA

The only way the little guy can get ahead is if there is a level playing field. Net Neutrality helps to level the playing field.
—David Klinke, Airmont, NY

Net neutrality is essential to our 21st century democracy. We must not allow the internet providers to charge extra for fast lanes because many people will not be able to afford them and will lose out. The internet and airwaves belong to the people. They are not the property of companies.
—Jack Keyes, Portland, OR

Equal access matters to most of us, the ones who aren't millionaires. I spend every day, all day publishing a political blog. Without net neutrality, I'll have to find something else to do, because readership will inevitably drop. So much for "free speech."
—Peggy Albrecht, Westlake Village, CA

Net Neutrality is what the internet is all about. If we lose that, we lose what makes it all worth while. Large corporations control too much of our lives as it is. A 2-tiered internet would destroy competition, as well as confine our choices, not to mention jack up prices. If I do a search, I want to see everything that's out there, not just what the big guys have to offer.
—Donna Profeta, Ballston Lake, NY

The Net should be open and free to ALL! No exceptions and No $$ being tied to that freedom!!
—Maggie Shields, Worcester, MA

Mr. Wheeler, I believe that the proposed changes to Net Neutrality would be absolutely terrible on multiple accounts. Allowing large corporate interests to force websites to pay for fast tracking would be absolutely terrible. It would further discourage competition on the internet itself, allowing big websites to acquire unfair advantage at the expense of smaller, low budget websites. Furthermore, it would grant even more power to the Internet Service Providers in the United States. They already virtually monopolies that practice market predation, provide a lower quality product than much of the developed world, and are the least popular companies amongst American consumers. Do not allow them to become any worse. Allowing fast tracking of particular websites would harm competition and make these companies even more capable of providing terrible products at unreasonable prices. The internet should be classified as a public utility in this day in age. It is clearly necessary in order to succeed in any field in the modern economy of the United States. Allowing Internet Service Providers like Comcast to continue to rule the lives of the American people is unacceptable. It is the equivalent of water not being a public utility. Internet access is necessary. I do not expect the FCC to reclassify the internet as it should be. That sort of drastic step, while the obviously correct decision, is a little bit too much to expect from a group of people so clearly bought out by corporate interests. But please, if only this once, do the right thing. Protect net neutrality in this most basic of ways. Do not go forward with your plan to allow fast tracking and to ruin the businesses of smaller websites around the internet and the country. Do not allow Internet Service Providers to get away with yet another abuse. Stand up! Take action! Do the right thing, for all of us!
—James Billard, Henrico, VA

Destroying Net Neutrality is an enormous offense to free peoples everywhere. You are prioritizing corporations over citizens, which is a morally corrupt and soulless option.
—Alexander Sexton, Philomath, OR

Preserve a level playing field!
—Dan Owen, Carbondale, IL

I am a head and neck cancer survivor and my computer is my voice... please don't make it any more difficult for me to communicate.
—Toni Caldwell-Clark, Kansas City, KS

Reclassify Internet Service Providers as common carriers. That is the only way to ensure genuine net neutrality. Don't knuckle under to the ISP's lobbyists' demands. Don't listen to the big media companies who don't want competition to overthrow them. Net neutrality over net discrimination!
—Jordan, Bloomington, MN

I refuse to allow the internet to become what you have proposed. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Just because one major mistake has been made does not excuse going forward with another; two wrongs certainly do not make a right.
—P Roberts, Knoxville, TN

My small Internet Marketing business depends on equal treatment.
—Jerry Nokes, Newman Lake, WA

Net Neutrality prevents the entire country of Internet users from being bullied by corporations into paying money for something that has always been free: having a voice. This is a sickening reminder that our government officials are either completely out of touch with the current decade or are greedy slaves suckling at the teats of billionaires, no different than prostitutes with more official sounding job titles and a better salaries. So which are you?
—Jake Parker, Burbank, CA

The Internet is for EVERYONE and should not be controlled by cable companies out for profit.
—Kate Babb, Kailua Kona, HI

Since the American taxpayer funded the development of the Internet, it is therefore part of the commons and a public utility, and should be classified as such.
—Frank A. Brincka, Sussex, NJ

Keep the internet free from Billionaire manipulation. Keep the internet EQUAL for ALL.
—Stan VVantech, Rancho Dominguez, CA

Two tiered internet presents and unfair financial burden orn those who can afford and denies access to free speech to those who cannot. It further unfairly enriches the ISP's and the consumers users expense.
—Jeffrey Brooks, San Jose, CA

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Matthew Beckwith, henderson, NV

The internet has become an essential public utility. It is essential to commerce, to civic engagement, to expression, to emergency response, and increasingly, to health. It is time it officially be designated as such. Much has been made of how innovation in broadband delivery will cease with regulation. But where is the innovation now? The US lags behind all other developed countries in the speed and availability of high speed broadband. The internet is crucial to our society; open access cannot be risked. Chairmam Wheeler's plan tries to eat its cake and have it too. We can't take the chance.
—Jonathan Horton, Ventura, CA

If we're ever going to have equal opportunities in the physical world we need equality on the web as well. With Citizens United and McCutcheon, money can buy speech. That means that speech is not free anymore. Mega corporations and the mega-wealthy have already taken over the networks. The internet is the only place the inquisitive citizen can find information not colored by the corporations that own the networks. A society run by corporations is not a democracy. It's called fascism and it's already here. A free and even internet is our last hope for democracy.
—Dave Easley, Covington, LA

The internet is the last vestige of open communication that we have in the world. It gives everyone a chance to make their voice heard. Whether that voice be of a single person, small buisness or giant corporation everyone can and should be given an equal chance at providing their content on the internet. Without net neutrality we will lose one of the greatest aspects of the worlds most valuable communication tool.
—Barclay G Iversen, Redwood City, CA

We already have enough of a class divide, let's not make it even harder for people, okay?
—Savannah Haider, Astoria, OR

The United States has recently been classified as an oligarchy. The government, researches have proven by studies of vote patterns, pays exactly zero attention to the constituents for whom they are supposed to be working. Instead, the only people they pay attention to are corporations, wealthy people with enough money to make major campaign contributions... or groups of people, coordinated enough together as to be able to offer sums of money or influence equivalent to that of a corporation. What does this have to do with Net Neutrality? Simple: the internet is the one place where it is possible to find others of similar political opinions to oneself, and form a group. If citizens are diligent enough and dedicated enough, they can form a group with sufficient power and money to get the attention of the members of Congress, the president, etc. This means that the internet makes possible the last remaining shred of democratic action possible to United States citizens. Without it, our country will be pure tyranny, with no trace left of the great self-government experiment of the eighteenth century. Lincoln prayed, in the Gettysburg Address, that government "of the people, by the people, and for the people" not be allowed to "perish from the earth." If you do not take action to protect the free and open internet, it will have done so. Please don't allow that to happen. Classify the Internet as the public utility it should be, and protect the tattered remains of democracy until a brighter dawn.
—Naomi G Rivkis, Seattle, WA

The internet was meant to be used by everyone and not intended to be controlled by a select group of parasites, skimming from the public commonwealth.
—Thomas E Shaw, Reno, NV

Net Neutrality is a question of freedom for the people by the people. don't allow the constitution to be altered by the big corporations and interest built by lobbyist to affect the future of us in the present and our children s in the future. Thank you
—Marco franceschi, Miami, FL

I have no choice of ISP where I live. If the ISPs are allowed to discriminate between different pieces of Internet traffic, I will have no choice but to tolerate whatever horrid policies my particular ISP plans to implement. I refuse to pay for sub-standard service, but I also cannot choose to live without access to the Internet. I make my living as a result of a free and open Internet; your proposed changes to net neutrality law can truly cripple my livelihood.
—Ryan Brenner, Hamburg, NJ

ISPs should be classified as common carriers. This is the only way to ensure my freedom of speech rights.
—Rev Dan, Atglen, PA

I remind you that you serve the People of the United States and not moneyed interests. Do what's right for the people.
—Gil Young, Columbia, SC

The Internet is such an integral part of society in this day and age and to have it hindered by big business would be terrible. I believe ISPs should be classified as common carriers.
—Josh Sempier, Parsippany, NJ

Without Net Neutrality there will be no source of news, censorship will prevail and the business's the chairman really represent will make even more money by stealing from the people. The chairman, nothing but a shill for the industry should resign or be fired ASAP.
—Robert Beverly, Orange, TX

Our democracy hangs in the balance. We can not give the power over our free speech yo a handful of powerful corporations.
—Kort Jackson, Belmont, CA

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Elvin Martinez, New York, NY

This is a sacrifice of personal rights for something that does not benefit the consumers or the citizens.
—Ryan Witmer Keating, Frederick, MD

Another gift to the corporations--leaving out the individual and the rest of us. This is plain wrong. It must not happen.
—Liane C Casten, Evanston, IL

I already pay for a tiered internet plan - with varying prices for varying amounts of available bandwidth. If the proposed rules go into effect, the ISPs will be able to charge both the content receiver, and the content provider. This is the equivalent of Comcast charging me for cable TV service, and charging the content providers to provide me cable service. Additionally, small companies that rely on the internet, such as VOIP companies, will no longer be able to compete in an open market, and everyone will be forced to use the big providers if they expect any kind of reasonable quality of service. Given the major ISPs track record of terrible customer service, especially when given a monopoly (calling Verizon's telephone customer support should be one of the levels of Dante's Hell). The American people will lose big if this goes through.
—Daniel Lawson, Weehawken, NJ

In a democracy, it is really unfair to see rules put into place that only benefit a couple of huge corporations that are already essentially monopolies. The FCC should be doing all it can to ensure access to high-speed internet service to any citizen who wants it, not giving huge corporations leeway to restrict access.
—Paul Rappaport, Atlanta, GA

The Internet is supposed to be an open and indiscriminate place, what you are doing in immoral and wrong and you are ruining your reputation and what the Internet stands for
—Kartik Sareen, ,

Fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us is unfair. Please save the internet from a two-tiered system.
—Craig Hollander, Los Angeles, CA

I want small websites to have the same load time as the big ones.
—Stacey Dunleavy, Upper Montclair, NJ

This rule change is not needed. Keep an even playing field and classify ISPs as common carriers. It's the Democratic way.
—Mary Ryan, Pottstown, PA

How dare you?
—Joseph Clark, Chapel Hill, NC

We do not want corporate america controlling the internet. If you don't keep the internet neutral, then you will see millions of americans with drawing from the internet. Keep this nonsense up and it will happen.
—Barbara Campbell, Vidor, TX

Please reclassify ISPs as common carries. Net Neutrality is important to our current way of life and a disruption of that guarantee would cause critical harm to the future development of the internet as a fair medium for commerce.
—Patrick Burns, Lexington, KY

Please represent the interests of the people and not the corporations. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Jeffrey Rix, asheville, NC

Dear FCC, fuck you
—Jeremy Markel, Athens, GA

I'm not a billionaire or a large corporation, but I need a free and open internet to have some tiny bit of a voice in this oligarchy we live in.
—Thomas Wilson, Colorado Springs, CO

Rampant discrimination is not acceptable! Do not allow this to happen.
—Kathie Daviau, Billings, MT

one of the last freedoms!
—Grazia Bittner, Batavia, IL

My livelihood is wrapped up in innovation on the internet. Allowing ISPs to charge for so-called priority access would harm many jobs, including mine. Allowing them to charge me for what their customers are ALREADY paying for is absurd!
—Caleb McCombs, Bothell, WA

It's very disheartening to have to keep fighting for a free and open internet. It's very disheartening to feel the the Chairman of the FCC is not paying attention to the strong message from the public that we demand equal access for all users of the Internet. The Internet belongs to the public, it is a public good and it must serve the public, not Comcast, Verizon, or AT&T's monopolistic self-interests. The consumer has been screwed quite enough already by the major telecoms, and by the FCC quite frankly. We are locked into long-term contracts, forced to pay for cable channels we have no interest in in order to access the few we do wish to watch. We endure horrible customer service, unfulfilled service guarantees, "bundles" that force us to purchase services we don't want or need, and an overwhelming lack of choice in our telecommunications options already. Do not limit our options further.
—Alix Rabin, Philadelphia, PA

Killing Net Neutrality will stop all the innovation that has made the internet we have all became to love and depend on. The internet needs to remain as market place with an even playing field. Last thing we need is for a few monopolies to control the marketplace.
—Claudio Carmona, Winchester, MA

From the beginning the "net" has belonged to the people. Do not let bussiness hijack it for all of our sakes.
—Chester Kendra, BRANTFORD,,

I'm not convinced that this ruling would not end in a "have and have-not" situation for many people online. The internet must remain open on all levels to ensure fairness. NO slow-lanes!
—Phillip Schneider, Bow, WA

Because I'm sick and tired of corporate fascism deciding the fate of free Americans .
—Michael Smith, Yakima, WA

Net Neutrality is the essence of an open university, where almost anything can be learned and communicated. This is the end-result of Gutenberg's great invention. Don't take us back to the stone age.
—DC Leslie-Pringle, Santa Monica, CA

The internet belongs to everyone. We should all be able to use an open internet.
—Laura Feeney, Austin, TX

Net neutrality is essential because it allows everyone equal access to this network of people. Behind every website is a person or group of people with aspirations and dreams just like you and me. By eliminating net neutrality, you're limiting (even eliminating) creativity and community. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers and protect net neutrality.
—Travis Yates, Ontario, CA

Does your phone call slow down if you aren't paying extra? NO, of course it doesn't, so why should my internet?
—Kerry Kuhn, Schaumburg, IL

The internet is a vital means of communication and education. The FCC has a responsibility to protect open access to the internet for everyone, not just those wealthy enough to afford special services and speeds. The FCC has a responsibility to American society, not to corporate shareholders and industry friends.
—Frank Rhoden, Tampa, FL

Low income individuals, small businesses and entrepreneurs will be pushed out of the Internet because the 3 big companies are all about income streams and making more millions. The Internet should be free and equal.
—Thelma Walker, Evanston, IL

Might does not equal Right. More money needs to stop meaning more power.
—Brian Furby, Lincoln, NE

USA tends to set the trends of Internet policies worldwide, so the rest of the world is just as concerned about the fate of net neutrality in the US as your own citizens. Please, spare a thought for the rest of us!
—Juho Paijula, ,

The internet is not a luxury - it is something that we all use every day! Children use it at school, employees use it at work, researchers share their findings, news is delivered... To split the internet into multiple lanes creates complication, segregation, and an environment ripe for abuse. Look out for all of us please, and protect the freedom and accessibility of the internet.
—Tiffany Jansen, Latonia, KY

The FCC needs to protect the rights of people.
—Alicia Donnelly Kessler, Gloucester, MA

Net Neutrality is vital to an equitable and operational modern society. I teach at an inner-city school and get paid very little for my hard work. Still, I feel that my work is important, so don't mind the pay gap between my amount of work and my actual salary. That said, I receive such a small amount of money because I believe in serving my community. I shouldn't be punished by this by receiving inferior Internet just because of my income. Access to the Internet is one of society's great equalizers. Those who live in poverty can still access the same resources as the wealthiest members of our society when they log on to a computer. I need the Internet for the important work I do, and, without net neutrality, will struggle to be an effective teacher.
—Jennifer Leavey, Jamaica Plain, MA

The Free and unfettered exchange of information is the foundation of the internet: A tool which has helped break down the boundaries of knowledge, ignorance, and communication for years. Without this concept, the internet will no longer be the ultimate resource what it was created to be.
—Otto W. Mayes IV, Hillsborough, NC

Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet should not dominate high-speed internet. If they want more fast lane Internet, let them build it, not steal it.
—Robert Wical, Culpeper, VA

We Who Can Afford It Should Not Get Better Service Than Those Who Cannot.
—Gregg Oelker, Altadena, CA

Big business already controls enough of our country, please don't allow this...
—Sean Winter, Denver, CO

The internet should be treated as a public utility and maintained free for the use of the people.
—Quilla Miralia, Tallahassee, FL

It's really important to me because I think it's really ridiculous to even think that such a rule would be put into place by the same government's and officials who propose freedom to the society on other fronts. This rule does not make sense also for the fact that the world is not an equal place, with so many middle-class or average-income families who would not be able to afford such costs. But why charge people for the internet in the first place when we are already paying up for it through mobile carriers, operators and electronic gadget manufacturers. When the whole world is talking about free press in other countries, it's ironical that the USA wants to impose dictatorship-style rules on the "internet". The creator of Internet, Mr. Tim-Berners Lee, did so to "share" information with everyone and to provide "everyone" with access to information. What's the point of limiting it to the very few people who can afford to pay up? This will give rise to more inequality and segregation in the society as well as leading to a mass imbalance in education and innovations in science and technology.
—Sudhir Sivakumaran, Cambridge, MA

The United States is already the laughing stock of the global community when it comes to broadband connectivity and network neutrality. We need to step up as the 'leaders of the free world' and do things the right way, not the money way.
—Allen Adams, Austin, TX

Equal access for all!
—Ms. Helen Colby, Miami, FL

I want free access for everyone, regardless if they can afford or not higher access fees. keep it free and open for all.
—Mr. Kurt R. Schwarz, Ellicott City, MD

I am a small business that streams broadcast tv channels over the public internet. To have my traffic prioritized lower, and/or have to pay more for the fast lane is ridiculous. On top of that these ISP need to take their billions in earnings and build out their infrastructures to support their customers. If i pay $75 for 50Mb down/5 Mb i should get that speed 24/7. These data limits are crazy. If an isp cant support 50Mb down then they need to not offer it, and only offer what they can support. Its simply math.
—Joe Winston, Davenport, IA

The Internet creates enormous business potential for startups. If it is tiered so the big bucks get the bandwidth, entrepreneurs across the country will suffer a huge setback.
—Tana Moore, Southfield, MI

Defend net neutrality as a true net neutrality.. Internet service as it currently is, is already behind many first world countries. There should be no reason to degrade it more than it already is. It's been shown that infrastructure is not an issue, just the ability to get away with giving customers subpar internet is.
—Kevin Huynh, Santa Ana, CA

Mr. Wheeler take the high road! Remember who you work for; the people of United States of America not the Corporations of America. I am one of the "People" who made your job possible and pays your salary (today). Think about what is good and right for me; not what is right for the corporations that are likely to offer you a job once you leave the FCC. It doesn't and shouldn't matter if this would be good for business even if it would create new jobs (which it won't) or lower the cost of broadband content (which is won't). If only once person is harmed by this proposed policy shift; you have not done your job.
—Eric James, Elgin, IL

I cannt believe this is happening. Many other countries have faster, cheaper internet.... Yet another thing greedy U.S. Corporations screw American citizens on! Net neutrality NOW! Thank You!!!!
—Barry Evans, Dayton, TX

The public owns the airwaves not the corporations that will profit from the end of net neutrality.
—Joseph Pratl, Spring Hill, FL

We need net neutrality! It is the equivalent of the free-market for the internet. The US balks at anything close to socialism that would be in the way of free-market commerce, why would we allow this for the internet? We are not sheep. We are people. And we are watching. America is already far behind on broadband speeds when compared to other top countries around the world. China has twice as fast internet speeds at half of what we as Americans pay. Do you really want to put the US behind a communist country? History and the fierce patriotism that I see tells me no. We need net neutrality. The internet is a necessity now to business, finance, and the personal affairs of all Americans. Don't you dare end net neutrality.
—Sara Gross, Rapid City, SD

please
—C B M, hoechst,

This is the first step of Corporate America and OUR Government controlling the Internet and will lead to the stifling of the free trade of information.
—Sean Murphy, Vero Beach, FL

I want all folks on the internet to have the same opportunity with out being able to by speedier access for the few with the money.
—Rob Hilbun, Paia, HI

There are enough fees and taxes imposed on the middle and lower classes as well as small businesses who can not afford any more. We have to protect the balance between classes as best as possible. Real Net neutrality helps that balance.
—Veronica ODonnell, The Plains, VA

It is absolutely clear that Internet access is a public utility and should be regulated as a public utility. The only persons to whom this is not absolutely clear are persons whose financial interests cloud their vision.
—Richard H. Ebright, North Brunswick, NJ

The internet and wireless communications are now the new telecommunications' utilities. They need to be protected and regulated just as we came to regulate the old telecommunications and broadcast industries..
—Donald Gangloff, Derwood, MD

It seems clear to me that internet access is fast becoming a basic necessity, just like access to electricity or clean water. Therefore, it is only logical that the FCC must reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Net neutrality is essential in a democratic society.
—Jan Cheah, Gainesville, FL

We need the internet for job applications, research, filling out forms for doctors' offices, you name it. We don't need greedy companies obstructing our access to various sites based on their whims.
—Miranda Guy, Durham, NC

Are you for the people or for the corporate entities who claim they are people?
—Elanne T Palcich, Chisholm, MN

Net Neutrality is critical to open and equal access to the internet. I strongly support full Net Neutrality.
—Michael Grossman, Saint Louis, MO

I'm pretty much done with the internet if you don't reclassify ISP's as common carriers. The do the exact same thing as Telephones. Many companies drive you to the internet for all contact. This isn't about information and entertainment purposes only. Critical communication takes place over the internet. I know you really don't care what I or millions of others think and you aren't really there to protect our interests. Just letting you know that there are plenty of us out there who will just quit subscribing to the internet if Net Neutrality is not sustained. It has become un-affordable ALREADY. Fair notice to ISP's we will unplug.
—Sharon Kurash, Howell, MI

Net Neutrality is essential for equal opportunity.
—Yiman Liu, Mountain View, CA

I have been running a consulting practice for 25 years and all of my clients world wide find me for the first time through the internet. I do extensive internet marketing and my income depends on a high speed connection and making sure that we all have equal access to the internet. In Japan and other countries the internet speed is much faster than in America and this is due to Comcast ATT & T and Verizon controlling the speed. Everything they do is for their own profit and now they want to make more profit by providing a faster internet with higher fees to those who can afford it and the rest of America has a slower speed. This directly affects what our nation was founded upon. We are all created equal. The internet is for everyone not just for a select few. The FCC needs to protect the Open internet by reclassifying ISP's as common carriers. Sandra McKnight, Santa Fe, NM
—Ms. Sandra McKnight, Santa Fe, NM

More and more of what people are doing is online--we (society) can't afford for some things not to work because individuals and startups don't have the deep pockets that some established companies do.
—Derek Meyer, Alexandria, VA

The internet is a utility and should be treated as such. Without net neutrality, ordinary people like myself will be subjected to the whims of huge corporations whose only interest is THEIR bottom line. While the bottom line is of singular interest to big corporations as it rightfully must and should be, it has nothing to do with my interests as an ordinary person. Are my interests not at least as important as those of large corporations? Who, mind you, are not even people at all? Money will always find a way to be made, and it is your responsibility to ensure that, even in times of great economic crisis, that the pursuit of making money by large corporations is conducted in a manner that DOES NOT VIOLATE the interests of the common person. If you can honestly tell yourself that doing away with net neutrality benefits the common person more than corporations, then by all means, pass the proposal. I depend on an open and free internet every day, every hour of my life. It is like accessibility to clean drinking water. Please respect my needs of an open internet and don't fall victim to corporate pressure and greed. You serve the people -- not the corporations.
—William B Barsan, Astoria, NY

Keeping the internet free of any type of blocks is key to innovation, creativity and growth - economically and intellectually as a nation. Allowing for a two tiered system will not be helpful for our national progress.
—Evan Conn, Alpharetta, GA

The ISP's are distributing data to everyone, they are a public service and need to distribute evenly to all, not just the few.
—Larry Goodwin, Gaithersburg, MD

I use the internet daily for both business and personal use. Relegating ordinary citizens like me to a slow lane would seriously hamper the usefulness of my internet experience.
—John Hendrie, Sacramento, CA

Depending on a case by case basis of what is reasonable allows for cronyism run rampant. Maybe more bureaucracy isn't the absolute best, but may be the best solution for the people of this country.
—Mary Bennett, Seattle, WA

The internet is how I keep in touch with what's going on in the world. It's the only way I have to take action on causes I believe in. The open internet is vital for information and innovation. Don't hand it over to corporate greed.
—Varick Thompson, Kissimmee, FL

The Internet is no longer an option for life, it is a major necessity for life. Please do NOT implement the new rules as outlined by Chairman Wheeler. They are counter to the public good.
—Albert Lopez, Blue Bell, PA

As a web developer, Net Neutrality is vital for my business and trade. Creating a two-tiered Internet will not only affect my ability to get companies up and running quickly with their new website or application but it will really hurt the small business customers looking to increase their revenue on the Internet. If they cannot afford to be on the fast lane, they will lose customers.
—Charles Julian Jr, BROOKLYN, NY

This new rule would destroy the internet as we know it. Big corporations already control the government through special interest groups. We cant afford to give away this last bit of freedom.
—Adam Sivakoff, Denver, CO

I can't afford to pay a middleman for access to my friends who live across the country. I can't afford to pay a middleman for access to my school records or my health records online. I can't afford to see the free software I use to supplement my education start to cost money that I don't have.
—Jane Doe, San Mateo, CA

This brings forth a whole wave of issues. Is this not an oppression of the opportunities of the impoverished? Does this not allow more opportunities for the rich?
—Jared Smith, Thousand Oaka, CA

It is critical that you classify ISPs as common carriers and enshrine net neutrality. If you do not, ISPs will foster access to the big content providers, such as Netflix and Amazon, at the expense of others, such as the Gutenberg project (free eBooks of classic out-of-copyright works), Library of Congress, and 100's of startup sites that will be coming into existence. You say that ISPs will be required to maintain the minimum throughput that a customer has contracted for, but once you have opened the door to the idea of pay-for-access, it won't be hard for AT&T and Comcast to manipulate this so that web hosts ante up or become inaccessible. When this happens, Instead of the web being a springboard for innovation, it becomes cable TV, with all of its content controlled by a small number of providers. Which hurts us all. John Cleave
—John Cleave, Evanston, IL

Freedom. We don't need middle men or gatekeepers. The internet is for everyone. It is open for all.
—Brian McCracken, portland, OR

This all sounds like a variation on a Communist theme! Instead of a central government controlling the dispensation of goods and services, it's corporations who parcel out the quality to the elite, and the mediocre for the masses. I'm already paying Comcast and AT&T too much money and getting mediocre service in return! The U.S. government should stop catering to corporate interests over the interests of the 99% percent who pay their taxes! Keep the internet free flowing and open to all without further restriction.
—Kenneth Glidden, Olympia, WA

The open Internet has allowed small companies to turn into big companies. If the ISPs, notorious as monopolies, get to pick the winners and losers, we will all lose.
—Michael Rothrock, San Francisco, CA

The Internet was created in the same principle of this great country, by the people, for the people. The loss of Net Neutrality would be a loss to what we value most, Freedom.
—Luis Gonzalez, Fort Greely, AK

Our ISP had no data caps ,the ISP did switch and bait , if you done protect people we all will loose even more smaller data caps then fast lane if you don't pay more Then all out emails everything will be like dial up days please help I'm old now fixed income .all I have is Internet to read news and keep in contact with my grand children ! I can not afford Internet like others I go with out some medication and food , so I have some connection with outside world . What free TV is limited out west where I live in country .
—Ed Cibor, Bend, OR

Only guarantee of ADA compliance for persons with disabilities
—J Angell, Rescue, CA

The Internet fosters creativity and inginuity. Don't let greedy assholes take advantage of it.
—Dan Falconer, Bismarck, ND

Big business and wealthy corporations already get all the breaks. How about some level ground for small businesses and the public?
—Jeanne Sipahigil, Liberty, IN

It's paramount that the FCC reclassify internet service as a utility.
—David J Smith, Denver, CO

Classify ISPs as common carriers, it's important and it's what the American people want!
—Jack Schlesinger, Baltimore, MD

The internet should stay as it always has been. Free and clear of corporate influence.
—Mr. Sean Cain, North Hollywood, CA

I depend on an open and unencumbered internet for my career and livelihood. Entrenched players want to hamper competition because the internet is the largest equalizer society has known to date. Allowing it to be crippled would stifle innovation and set back progress indefinitely. Please don't kowtow to monied interests when the job of the FCC is to provide communications mediums for all.
—Matt, Fort Mill, SC

From its inception the Internet has provided neutral service. If it now has to be classified it should be considered a common carrier, which it already is. To cave in to corporate interests would be a grave dereliction of duty on the part of the FCC.
—Wheeler Thackston, Cambridge, MA

Come on now. It's a no brainer. Please don't break the Internet. Thank you.
—Noah Roberts, Lacey, WA

I want free internet. If this proposal goes through, then this will be a dictatorship controlled by the ISPs. Which would be the worst thing that could happen to the internet. Please bring back net neutrality.
—Nick guillen, Clovis, CA

These rules will stifle innovation and choke the developement American of on of the most successful sectors of our economy
—Jake Huffman, Oakland, CA

Net neutrality isn't your to take away. You don't control the internet. The internet is everybody's, not the corrupt governments! Without net neutrality, there is no equality among anyone and millions of people will be affected. If you take away net neutrality, I will have certainly lost faith in this shitty countries government to do what's right, and to do what the people who make this a country (and make your wallets fat when in reality you don't really do anything) want you to do! Keep net neutrality or I will certainly never pay another dime to make your wallet fatter ever again! - Nathanial Lance —Nathanial Lance, Laveen, AZ

We are all citizens of the internet... No one should be discriminated against. Furthermore, the opportunity for discrimination should not be granted to anyone. Reclassify these rules!
—Carlin Scuderi, ,

Your job is to protect the rights of US citizens, not to line the pockets of the major ISPs and cable companies. DO YOUR JOB!
—Howard Bornstein, Lake Oswego, OR

Please throw out your proposed new rules on ISP's and instead stand up for what is right. Please reclassify ISP's as common carriers.
—Mimi Iversen, Belmont, CA

I appreciate your agency's attempt to improve a citizen's access to the Internet. However, the latest set of proposed rules does the opposite, in my opinion. Living in a rural area for a portion of the year, I don't have access to broadband Internet via a cable company or a phone company. So I am dependent on cell-phone service for my Internet. I am concerned that your proposed rules will make it even less likely that my family will get to be fully a part of the information superhighway -- and continue to be an under-served part of the population. The Internet should be as central to an American's life as electricity and clean water. Your proposal seems to do the opposite -- creating an HOV lane for certain businesses and only a service road, not even the rest of the highway, for a lot of the rest of us. Your own analysts should be able to inform you regarding the current Internet's impact on GNP. Why would you want to create a split-level Internet favoring a select few firms and penalizing the rest of the American citizenry. The BEST action you could take for me is to reclassify Internet Service Providers as common carriers. Henry Prince —Henry Prince, Sarasota, FL

I own a small business as a record producer. As these days people send me records to work on via the internet, my business depends on being able to upload and download massive amounts of data quickly.
—Jamie Hill, South Pasadena, CA

Providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon are creating a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Chad Preslar, Garland, TX

I am a small business owner and the web traffic to my site matters to me. I can't afford to pay Amazon prices to get traffic to my site at a decent speed.
—Garrett Dangerfield, Palm Springs, CA

The Internet is an amazing technology that has changed the we we work, play, and communicate all across the world. The way it became so ubiquitous in our everyday lives was due to the open, neutral conduit that everyone makes use of today. If the FCC approves the new proposed rules against net neutrality, then the Internet will cease to function in the way in which we've all grown accustomed. Please take my comments and opinion into consideration, along with the many, many other voices of dissent when placing your final vote. Thank you, sincerely, Scott Young.
—Scott Young, Katy, TX

The internet's role as the backbone of the 21st century is dependent on equality of access. This is so easy. Don't destroy it.
—Juliet deButts, New York, NY

The internet SHOULD be regulated just like the electricity that comes into your home! Your neighbor should NOT be allowed to pay more for higher broadband speeds just because he or she can afford it. The welfare of our democracy should not be put at risk just for the benefit of some companies. NOTHING LESS THAN 100% NET NEUTRALITY IS ACCEPTABLE!!!!!!!!!!!!!
—Geoffrey Quinsey, Chico, CA

An equally accessible, democratic internet is a key check in place against powerful interests. In a two-tiered internet world, if one of the huge corporations does something bad, bloggers and independent news sites reporting on this could have a much harder time getting the news out. Really, this comes down to the free-flow of ideas. I believe this free-flow is vitally important. Please, keep the internet a level playing field for all -- regulate the providers like a utility.
—Randy Childers, Merriam, KS

if you implement a 2 tier system how will the next twitter come about ? a packet is a packet and it should be treated as such. please do not implement a 2 tier system.
—Keith A Westgate, andover, MA

I want more options for getting video online....not just my cable provider. Youtube and Netflix are a good start, but I want to see a lot more start-ups join in.
—Thomas Kent, Saint Louis, MO

Represent the people rather than Corporate America for a change.....Unlikely.
—Robert Obeid, Bakersville, NC

Net Neutrality is good for the citizens of the US. These are the people you should be working to help, not the ISPs trying to make more profits that they haven't earned.
—Nathan Falat, Cedar Rapids, IA

What's wrong with the internet as it is now ? Please maintain Net Neutrality.
—Gerald Lysne, Encinitas, CA

please keep the net neutral
—EDGAR WONG, Tampa, FL

The current plan in effect creating another 1% slap in a common man's face is not acceptable. Equal access to the internet was somewhere where one of the 90% could feel good about himself. Now we are getting knocked down to size once again? No, this is not acceptable. Why must the little guy always be on the losing side?
—Peter A Joannidis, astoria, NY

The internet must not be "owned" or "regulated" by anyone but (in the USA) the federal government. NO CORPORATION should be allowed to decide anything about the internet. Neither should any corporation be able to puwsh the government around, as it appears they are trying to push FCC around. The corporate interest is NOT the national interest.
—Mr. Peter Belmont, Brooklyn, NY

Everyone should have fair and open access to the same internet. There is no viable future for technological advancement if a portion of the population who cannot afford it are hindered.
—Ryan Hoe, urbana, IL

Getting rid of Net Neutrality is a horrible step backwards. So many people depend on the internet to do research, share ideas, and keep in contact with friends. Please don't take this away from us.
—Michelle Pacheco, Atwater, CA

Please stop the BS with Our Internet!
—Thomas Libbey, Seattle, WA

Everyone needs access to the Internet equally!
—Karen Johnson, Peterborough, NH

RECLASSIFY!!!!!! Don't sell the internet out to corporate interests!
—Mr. Anthony Chun, Los Angeles, CA

Speed for fees that are unearned profit penalizes those who can not afford the charge. That is, most of the people using the net.
—Barbara Hughes, Sanford, FL

The price. They want to charge us for something we already have. Their profits are already obscene. Leave us alone, stop milking the little people.
—Diana Day, Monterey, CA

I'm only one individual, but...I should have the same opportunity to reach web users as any large corporation. The internet should be treated as a common carrier. Please don't let ISPs play favorites!
—Charles M Northrip, Seattle, WA

Keep the playing field level. We don't want money determining what we can see on the internet. The internet should be for everyone.
—Ellen Delahanty, White Plains, NY

I do not think it is at all desirable to have a two-tiered Internet, with lower speeds for those who have providers who aren't the big companies. I also think it would increase the digital divide and put those who are in the lower middle class and below in the worst bind. Throw out your proposed rules that only benefit wealthy companies and those who can pay their ridiculous rates! Reclassify all ISPs (Internet Service Providers) as common carriers. Protect Net Neutrality. Do the right thing! As part of the U.S. Government, you are there to serve the public, not Big Business! As a professional journalist who also holds a M.P.A. degree, I am disgusted with your attempts to end net neutrality. Anne Seebaldt, M.P.A. 1993, Central Michigan University
—Anne Seebaldt, Milford, MI

A free press means net neutrality. The people of this country demand an end to corporate control of information. We do not want a caste system which is proposed by your recent action.
—Portia Weisfeld, miami, FL

The current proposal presented to the FCC is a lot of empty promises to the public with everything ISPs want. The FCC should recognize reality and classify ISPs as common carriers.
—Joey Baker, San Francisco, CA

This is a form form of censorship that is morally wrong and very dangerous. You know this as well as I do.
—Michael Smith, Winchester, MA

The internet was developed for everyones use not as a cash cow for some lucky corporations. Please stand up for the 99%.
—David Jenkins, Hillsboro, OR

Allowing AT& T , Comcast and Verizon to control the internet is the equivalent of allowing them to control who and when any company or individual receives electricity. Justifying support for this approach can only be seen as a demonstration of special interest in the matter.
—E Miranda, Oakland, CA

Please do not turn the internet into a business playground.
—London Reid, Orem, UT

To hand over control of internet content and access to a few corporations infringes on basic human rights, including the right to free speech, which is crucial to maintaining a free country.
—Maret Gable, Mashpee, MA

Justice should be our first consideration. Justice includes equal access to the society's sources of information and use of the 'commons' for each individual's benefit. The use of the internet for the ability to apply for jobs has now become a prerequisite for getting many of those jobs. The average citizen is so stimied by mounting costs of everything, adding more cost to get access to the internet may shut many more people out putting them at a disadvantage. Same with entrepreneurs who use the internet. Free access to full-speed internet is now an absolute requirement of living, therefore it must be an element of the commons and kept as a 'common carrier' for purposes of FCC regulation. All states should be required to fund free internet access in all parts of their state, urban and rural.
—Christine Besozzi, Perrysburg, OH

Net Neutrality needs to stay because it helps so many people connect with each other and do the things they need to do. With this proposed plan, it will make everything harder, and nothing easier. Speaking as someone who can have fast internet, I know many who struggle to pay for it, and this will make many revert to having slow connections and nothing to do about it.
—Paul M. Swiers, Saratoga Springs, NY

I feel this decision benefits corporations and not people. Who are you doing this for? Why would you do this if you truly represent the people and not special interests?
—Angela rhoten, Albuquerque, NM

Ending Net Neutrality is fascism.
—Zach Cosgrove, Schererville, IN

The internet is a public utility. No discrimination!
—Peter Burkard, Sarasota, FL

Without Neutrality, basically everyone who isn't rich will be blocked off the internet. This is just absolutely terrible for anyone starting a small business, as the big corporations will take control over everything and small business will never appear as an option. I do a lot of my shopping online and I would flat out refuse to pay an extra fee for a "premium" service that allows me to get access to the shopping websites I go to. This is NOT what the internet was intended to be. I am so disappointed that we the users have to go through so much trouble to get this Net Neutrality campaign to be successful. Money really does talk and it's pathetic that money that a couple of rich corporations are throwing around is even considered a viable excuse to end the internet for millions of people when everyone knows it is unethical and shady. You can be assured that if these companies kill off Net Neutrality, I WILL NEVER support them again.
—Kelly Ortega, New Providence, NJ

I have blogs that I enjoy, and I am so tired of big business making thing more expense for the little person. The internet is working just fine the way it is, there a lot of people who use it to communicate don't take their 1st amendment right away.
—Sandra Goettling, Logandale, NV

It is vital to keep the Internet as a level playing field.
—Robert Lovejoy, Sylva, NC

Throw out your rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers.This is the ONLY way to protect real Net Neutrality.
—Eboun Sing, Minneapolis, MN

Don't give away the internet to big corporations like we did with the air waves
—Don Fritz, West Hartford, CT

Net Neutrality is huge. There is already enough of the corporate environment dictating to people what they should look like, how they should dress, and, really, who they should be. Throwing away net neutrality is a continuation down that path. I don't want Comcast or Verizon deciding that I no longer like to read my friend's baseball blog because it's 10x faster to just head to ESPN, or to steer basically the entirety of our internet into these specific lanes. All it will do is slowly strip away all of the vibrant creativity that is out there for people to appreciate. The telecommunications companies already have enough of a say in how we live our lives and manage our time, they don't need any more. Additionally, has anyone bothered to take a look at the headlines? $45B for AT&T and DirecTV merger, billions of dollars for the Comcast / Time Warner merger. These companies are stating that they need to be able to set special pricing and that they're taken advantage of, (see encrypting all cable signals and requiring a box for every TV), but at the end of the day, their bottom line is greater than 99% of the businesses out there. I am all for working hard for what you get and keeping what you earn. 100%. But that doesn't mean we should put down laws that just force millions of people that actively oppose the idea and tens of millions more that are ignorant to the whole situation to just lay down and shell it out for them.
—Aaron Raulin, Sun Prairie, WI

The free market is stifled due to ISPs having strict control over regional areas, usually with a monopoly. Competition in telephone communcations in the past thrived when the FCC classified those companies as common carriers, so why not ISPs? We depend on fair and neutral access to the Internet for future progress. Passing rules for Internet fast lanes would be highly unadvisable to many companies, big and small. It limits content creators from distributing their services via competitive markets (e.g., Level 3, Akamai) to the ones that control the networks, the ISPs, and further solidifies their roles as monopolies in an increasingly unfavorable, homogenized Internet.
—Bryant Lam, Gainesville, FL

All are equal. Some are more equal if they have the money. Is this any way to run the internet?
—Martin Konrad, Bridgewater, NJ

I am SCREAMING MAD! What the heck are you people doing at the FCC? The internet is not yours to decide what to do with it. The internet is the domain of the people, it is a public resource. Restore Net Neutrality at once. This is absolutely a disaster for our society, for our democracy. Screw your heads on right!
—Stephen Dvorak, Mountain View, CA

Maintain Net Neutrality to enhance competitions. Let the innovators innovate without being stopped by the larger companies.
—Gregory Dellner, Columbus, OH

The internet needs to be in the same category of utilities, a regulated entity for the public good. Net neutrality would be than the net which was created with TAXES would not be handed over to the Big corporations for their profit at the taxpayers expense. Our service would be not only curtailed but the incentive for these service providers to improve their plant would be negated. Net Neutrality would continue to help the fundamental principles embodied in the Constitution to be maintained.
—Derek Ruell, Fresno, CA

The FCC’s proposed Internet rules are out — and they’re terrible. As we feared, FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler is pushing a plan that would allow rampant discrimination online. If approved, these rules would mean the end of Net Neutrality. Wheeler’s plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. These companies would have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. And no one would be able to do anything about it.
—Bubba Jones, Marietta, GA

I depend on the internet, as I am disabled and it is my connection to the world. I am also low income and can't afford the price increases these companies will eventually put on their services. My ISP: CenturyLink DSL, has no plans on improving their service in my area, and they are the only choice that we have where we live.
—EJ Todd, Floral City, FL

Differentiated Internet service is nothing other than an attempt to end competition and freedom of speech in America. Anyone who thinks that is acceptable should go live in Russia or China if that is the way they hate the freedom our forefathers fought and died for.
—G Wilcken, Lawrence, KS with corporations already having enormous influence in our everyday lives, we the people need a platform that is truly universal, democratic and objective.

—Fabian Palencia, Brooklyn, NY

As a student I rely on the internet to access vital information for research papers, and other uses. I ask for your help to keep Net Neurality so I can continue my hard work at getting a quality education. Please consider all those people who rely on Net Neutrality everyday for their jobs, school, and to bring close loved ones who are separated by distance. I have family members who are deaf. They depend on services like Skype and FaceTime to communicate. Think of all of those idividuals and families who have disabilities that will suffer if Net Neutrality ends. I am trusting you to make the best decision.
—Richard Willoughby Jr, Jacksonville, FL

If you even remotely care about Net Neutrality ensure you make rules which will keep it alive and functioning for the internet to grow and prosper and Americans to prosper
—Alan Broiges, Staten Island, NY

Due to the lack of competition in internet providers for consumers, net neutrality is paramount. I have only one quality option for high speed internet in my area (DSL is not a real competitor to cable or fiber), so the forces of competition will not pressure them to provide quality service at a commercially reasonable rate. Please ensure they are not charging providers to deliver the content I am already paying them to deliver to me.
—Max Gabreski, Pensacola, FL

Why is this even an issue? Don't fucking do this for fuck's sake. Fix this, now.
—Ashley Robillard, Norton, MA

Tom, the internet needs to be protected as a utility, it is used by all, just like electricity and water. Do not create a two-tiered internet, leave it the way it is. Do you want to go down in history as the person that killed the internet?
—Ed Hendrickson Jr, Ames, IA

Far from allowing "pay to play", ISPs should be governed under Title II Common Carrier regulation, as they should have been from the very beginning. Nothing else is sufficient. Period. End of story.
—Lonny Eachus, Spokane, WA

The principles and strengths of capitalism apply best to competitive markets, and this market will be a monopoly or oligopoly. To date, we have only seen collaboration, price gauging, and poor service by ISPs, it cannot be assumed these problems will be addressed. Giving such companies the right to censor and extort content creators is catastrophically stupid. It seems to me as an outsider that the only reason it is happening is the lobbying efforts of interested parties.
—Daniel Dranove, Highland Park, IL

The internet is an integral part of people's lives. It is not a niche service, it is not a fad that is going away. Users run the spectrum: From hobbyists and fans to business professionals and the news media, it is used everywhere, every day, and the new rules proposed and the "fast lane" tactics are nothing short of absolutely disgusting. You are not representing the interests of the American people or aiding our country's economy by putting rules like this in place, only lining the pockets of an oligopoly that has done little to further innovation in communications and broadband penetration and infrastructure across our country.
—Jordan Renz, Gilboa, NY

I certainly understand why you are open to censoring the Internet. But, we have to draw the line somewhere.
—Tyson Gustus, San Diego, CA

I use the Internet for a living...as do all of my clients. Keep the Internet free for all of us...not just big companies!
—Alton Duderstadt, Dundee, IL

FCC, Chairman Wheeler’s plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. These companies would have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. And no one would be able to do anything about it. I implore you, throw out Tom Wheeler's plan and rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Thank you, Neil R
—Neil R, Jamestown, TN

A truly free market can't be segmented into the 'haves' and 'have nots'. And that is exactly why a fair and level playing field is essential. That means that the small business shouldn't be getting less bandwidth or speed just because they are a small business. Your proposed changes will destroy the Internet. Please leave it as it currently is!
—Stepheni Wilson, Louisville, KY

The internet is a public domain that should be regulated by the FCC as a common carrier, as all telecommunications should be. The idea that a government agency such as the FCC, that is supposed to be acting in the interests of the public, and not the corporations, would consider having two types of internets, one for people who have money, and one for people who do not is outrageous. ISP's are common carriers that should be regulated as such!
—Robert Rizzuto, Bronx, NY

Throw out these proposed rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Vincent Giuliano, Schaumburg, IL

Hello, I'm a simple home owner, retired Senior Citizen, who has enjoyed the many benefits of having full access to the Internet, without limitations. I have also lived long enough to see what "Big Business" has done to this country, and from where I sit, they have not done us, the ordinary citizen, any good at all. And now they want to take control of the Internet, and expecting you to sit back and let them. Please, for me and all those other regular citizens, that use the Internet every day, do not give them free reign to take over the Internet and control it to their advantage, and to our disadvantage. Net Neutrality must be maintained, and if it requires reclissibying ISP's as common carriers, then please do just that. I sincerely beg of you, do NOT turn the Internet over to Corporate America, denying the average citizen of the access we now have. Cordially, Sandra Knapp
—Sandra Knapp, Lake Como, PA

Chairman Wheeler's plan would make the current digital divide even worse. Please reclassify ISP's as common carriers.to preserve fair access to the Internet..
—Scott Russell, Minneapolis, MN

I have a small online business, which depends on customers having free and equal access to the internet to find my shop and use it. The end of Net Neutrality will mean the end of my business!!!
—Cynthia Fix, Jasper, GA

I was raised on an open and neutral Internet, and it benefitted me beyond measurement. That's the Internet I want young Americans now to grow up with.
—Paul Oliver, San Marcos, CA

Without net neutrality we will be allowing giant corporations to push out small businesses from the internet arena. This is not how the internet was meant to be. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Judd Iversen, Belmont, CA

We already have a lot of things being monopolized to begin with. The internet should not be among them.
—Abram Lenten, Westerville, OH

Corporations work for the service of and at the pleasure of people, not the other way around you fucking greedy fascist pigs!!! You think you're so smart taking advantage of every situation!!! Here's hoping your death grip on the world's throat loosens a little!!!!!
—Evan smith, Olympic valley, CA

The beauty of the internet is that it equalizes everyone, rich and poor - we all have access to everything. Please maintain this system by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Ruth Horowitz, ,

The FCC has NO BUSINESS. In MY business via Internet ... Or anywhere/place/time.
—Dale Alan Zurbrick, Brooklyn, NY

As I've said before, the mass of the population cannot afford to pay once again for what used to be free. Remember free TV? Remember free carry-on luggage and before that 1 free suitcase plus a free carry on for airlines? When is it ENOUGH??? When do we say the king is wearing no clothes? THIS IS ENOUGH! Keep the internet neutral. It's right and it's fair.
—Barbara Haener, Chesterfield, VA

I depend on an Open Internet for facts and information. Please don't destroy our Internet, but reclassify ISPs as COMMON carriers. Thank you.
—Sallie Teutsch, Langley, WA

We can't let the greed of AT&T, Comcast and Verizon affect the lively hood and prosperity of the american people. May people's income depends on the internet remaining neutral and equal. Opening the internet to the highest bidder is a road that will hurt the economy of America and the lives of a great many people.
—Terrence A Staton, Nashville, NC

Dear Sir, Please do not let the Internet become a two- tiered system, discriminating between the wealthy and those of us who do not have the funds for the extra fees. Please throw out the FCC rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Thank you. Sincerely,(Mrs.) Angeline Miller
—Angeline Miller, Graceville, FL

The internet has become our virtual Main street. For our free market economy to continue to bounce back, we need to ensure that access and visibility are fairly accessible to all. The proposed rules seem more designed to create profit centers for ISPs (proposed by lobbyists, I'm sure) than to serve the American people well and fairly.
—Sean St. Louis-Farrelly, Saco, ME

Because I don't have any choice in my broadband providers.
—Christopher Decker, Morristown, NJ

We have enough corporate dictatorship
—Michael Tesney, Denver, CO

I am grateful that inventors and entrepreneurs have created the means by which the vast information now available can be shared openly, and I do not begrudge them their profits. It is time now, as it has been during other phases of our democratic history, for this powerful resource to be defined as a public utility, and regulated principally for the welfare of all people without any discrimination.
—Robert Werme, Woodbury, CT

I breathe this air everyday and it gives me fuel that enables me to think, work, live and love. This same air also carries airwaves filled with fuel that enables me to think, work, live and love. Why would I want to compromise that in any way? No one ever has the "right" to destroy, intercept, pollute or commodify that precious life affirming essence.
—Kathleen M Randall, SEATTLE, WA

I am a web developer and I believe in the ability of small developers to create new ideas that can flourish. Without net neutrality so many good ideas will be lost.
—Mr. Eric Anderson, Madison, WI

1. In this unfortunate period of our history, when mainstream news media are of no help, the internet is our only refuge for the reliable news we need to make informed choices. 2. Do you really want to face accusations of right-wing favoritism? 3. You people were appointed to defend the interests of American citizens, not corporations. It would behoove you to do your jobs, not thinking about the "revolving door." 4. A neutral internet is becoming more and more essential to the national economy and national security. ISP's should be classified as public utilities, like electricity, and regulated accordingly.
—William Handley, Edgewater, CO, CO

Net neutrality is important to me because I don't trust corporations to control something like the internet. Without net neutrality, there's nothing stopping companies from utterly throttling sites owned by people who haven't paid them this month's mafia-esque protection money, or owned by people who just hold different or unpopular opinions that the companies don't like. No companies should have the ability to hold domain over the vast communication of the internet without much regulating to keep them from doing with it what they do in every other instance, profiting for themselves at the cost of every consumer. Companies like Comcast are already very nearly a monopoly in this country where such a thing is supposedly not allowed, and I cannot stomach them having even more control and power over the market.
—Eric Thomas, Wilkes-Barre, PA

throw out the rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Justin Smith, Rowlett, TX

Stop dividing this nation by money. Don't support elitism.
—Wilma Nakamura, Kula, HI

Please do not lock out small businesses by catering to Corporate America in their wish to gain unfair advantage. Innovation comes from small businesses and they are crucial to America.
—Nancy Smith, Akron, OH

The internet, is the internet. I should get speeds that I pay for that are based upon a fair market rate such as I do with power. With these special lane's you will segrate the flow of the internet, harm it's infrastructure and break the foundation of information flowing freely across the planet for the mode of profit which no other county takes part of. We the people have no problem for paying for what were getting, just as we do with our electric sewer or water. Why should my internet be recassifed and content carriers be held hostage for the right to participate in an infrastructure and users, who buy into the global internet, punished for wanting to access anything, and everything?
—Chris Curtis, Redmond, WA

A multi-tier internet would give ISPs no reason to upgrade technologies and improve internet in the USA.
—Thomas, Saint Charles, IA

I am a supposedly free american who feels the industry makes enough money off me and others like me. Keep the internet free.
—James Short, Ames, IA

I rely on getting information that isn't always sponsored by the "big boys". I need the net to be neutral. ISP's need to be classified as common carriers. Thank you.
—Ms. Marjorie Van Name, Pahrump, NV

Stop sucking the people dry!
—Lissa Wolsak, vancouver, BC,

My faith in our government to act for the common good is near zero. This is the nail in the coffin!
—Thomas R Blakeslee, WESTLAKE VILLAGE, CA

In the past AT&T has provided me lousy service. Poor response and constant calls to have them come out and fix their mess. Now you want to give them even more leeway to drag us in to a 4th world status. You are enabling poor service by your rules.
—David W. Tuthill, Dallas, TX

I'm already paying for cancer treatment, I don't need to be paying extra fees to do something that I should have rights to do FOR FREE!
—Karen Seery, ,

I believe that the Internet is one of the few remaining level playing fields in our society. So many other systems in our society are set up to benefit those with means, particularly corporations. If one has access to the Internet, however, that access is the same regardless of social status, and allows anyone to use it as they see fit, so that start-ups can flourish and information can flow freely. Removing this neutrality will put up yet another barrier to success for those without means, and allow those already in power to keep that power and gouge consumers. I ask that you do not implement the current proposal as it stands, with "fast lanes," and instead reclassify the ISPs as common carriers. The Internet really is a utility, as vital as a standard telephone line, and should be treated as such.
—Leor Bleier, Columbia, MD

I am a small business owner; my core business is online. (I'm an online dating coach, I help clients have better experiences with online dating sites, and I use online tools such as Skype and cloud-based document sharing to connect with people.) Net neutrality is vital to my success as an entrepreneur. If the FCC doesn't take action to ensure that the Internet remains open and free, it is likely that I will have to shut down my business and try to find a regular job despite this difficult economy. Does the FCC really want to crush small businesses so that a few massive cable conglomerates can make even more money, and have even more of a monopoly over a vital utility that in 2014 is as important as electricity or water or garbage collection? I'm astounded at how backwards recent discussions on this issue have been. Striking net neutrality down is on par with the types of action we see from third-world governments. It's shameful, corrupt, embarrassing, and utterly devastating to small business owners like myself who have made our name and built our businesses with the aid of an open Internet. I look forward to seeing action from our government to protect this basic liberty. Sincerely, Virginia Roberts
—Virginia Roberts, Seattle, WA

Good internet service should not only be available for those who have money to pay for the fast lane! Giving priority to certain companies and clients who can pay more money, just widens the equality gap of US citizens that already exists, don't punish everyone just to put more money in to the pockets of a few. This is NOT what our economy needs!
—Melissa, Idaho Falls, ID

Net neutrality matters to me because I do not want to be treated as a 2nd or perhaps 3rd class citizen when I am surfing the web. By restricting my access to "slow lanes" my need for the internet would be non-existent. Also, I do not want to be charged for the use of the "fast lanes" either. I know the FCC and specifically Tom Wheeler is telling us that these costs will be born by the ISP's however, we all know this isn't true. Once these "fast lanes" are created, the FCC will just pass the costs on to the consumer. The only way to have true net neutrality is for the FCC to protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. Thank you for your consideration.
—Rodney S. Niemier, Des Moines, IA

Net neutrality allows freedom of speech and free communication between the entire world. If you move forward on restricting the Internet, it will legitimize countries like China and North Korea, who pick and choose the Internet content that their citizens can see.
—Justice Bradley, Reno, NV

I constantly use the internet in my current job position. Not just in terms of email, basic web browsing etc, but also as a means to provide services. I say this as a programmer, one who creates web services and web applications for clients. You not only will extremely hamper my ability to create new content, but to also PROVIDE that content to the public at large. You are essentially forcing me to pay exorbitant fees just to provide the same level of service that I provide now.
—Timothy Owens, Boynton Beach, FL

As an early internet user I sat through years of dial up and I have no intention of losing speed so the big corporations can make more money. Stand up for US for once and save the internet as we know it! You let them rule cable and they rip us to shreds.
—Diane Hendricks, Olney, TX

Public utility!
—Terri L Betz, Sutherlin, OR

Keep the internet open to all. It is our greatest tool and resource in the modern age and no singular entity should control it. No speed limits, no middlemen - maintain and protect Net Neutrality.
—Peter Sabol, Oakdale, PA

Allowing large companies this type of power is just another form of discrimination. It's discrimination against people who can't afford their prices. It's discrimination against people in rural areas who don't have large companies interested in their area. It's discrimination period. The internet is the last place that government needs to start mishandling. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers and throw out the FCC rules. This is the ONLY way to protect real Net Neutrality.
—Stacey Young, West Frankfort, IL

This is a generaly bad idea, unless it means the slow road is free then scrap that idea.
—Gabriel, Exeter, RI

Every voice counts and no met neutrality means than the rich voices get heard and the poor ones get silenced. No!
—Anna Tchoudovskaia, New York, NY

I want to receive information on an equal basis, at the same speed as every other piece of information. That is why I support net neutrality.
—Faith Harmony, Albuquerque, NM

Please preserve net neutrality. The internet should be in the hands of the people not ruled by a few corporations.
—Var Thelin, Gainesville, FL

ISPs are common carriers. This is a blatant violation of Net Neutrality and a corporate power grab.
—Brad Kinder, Fayetteville, WV

Without Net Neutrality the average person will not be able to afford to use the internet.
—Alexandra Graziano, Thousand Oaks, CA

The damn 1%ers have enough...they don't need a fast lane we cannot use.
—David Martin Ph.D., Norwich, CT

When a system is broken, fix it. Make Net Neutrality happen for citizens, followed by corporations.
—Yvonne Hansen, Austin, TX

Net neutrality is very important to me. Most of my social life is on the internet, as well as almost all of my creative expression. I take online classes and submit homework via email or classroom sites. By making the internet a two-tiered system that benefits the rich more than being the same for everyone, you would put most of America at a disadvantage. College goers and students of all ages would have a difficult time researching projects and doing homework with slow internet. Families already struggling to pay bills wouldn't be able to keep up in the highly competative, internet-driven business world of today. I urge you, I plead you, do not do this. Do not put America even further behind the rest of the world by catering to the rich in this aspect. Keep the internet for everyone. Please.
—Britt Jorns, Bellevue, NE

Gentlemen: I had read somewhere back that there is an Internet 2 and because of its limited use, at the time was lightning fast. I move that these fastlaners build another internet channel for their lickety split traffic and leave this one as it is. Thank you, Gordon.
—Gordon Heavern, Boulder, CO

While local municipalities have allowed Comcast & Verizon (et al.) to have monopolies on the physical network infrastructure for good reasons of efficiency--just like our electrical, water, and telephone companies have--the FCC needs to take the next step and reclassify network providers as common carriers, subjecting them to the same regulation that makes our electricity, water, and phone service cheap and reliable. Reclassify them under Title II. If the FCC does not do this, there will be catastrophic damage done to the internet and the future of the U.S. economy, no doubt to Tom Wheeler's financial benefit once he leaves the FCC and gets a highly paid job from Comcast or Verizon (et al.). Stop screwing around.
—Spencer Torene, Boston, MA

Net neutrality is very important for innovating great ideas. If FCC continues to push for their demands. we will lose great ideas and content that people have for ever been widely sharing for free. Not everyone has money to share great ideas and we need places like the internet to keep that momentum of knowledge going,Let's not stop now. We should not allow for this to be taken from American citizens! Please reclassify the internet as common carriers. We, the American people should not be discriminated on the internet.
—Salvador, Norwalk, CA

Because it's not up to you to decide the priorities of the many just so you can benefit the 1%
—Martin Bodger, ,

I would humbly like to ask the FCC not to end Net Neutrality. Small businesses, which are still the heart and soul of this country, will suffer if large corporations have the right to charge exorbitant fees for a tiered internet. Please consider reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. Please stand-up for the individual and for small and medium sized businesses.
—Jennifer Gardner, Columbus, OH

I believe all should have the same access not just if you can afford it.
—James T Whitted Jr, Homosassa, FL

The U.S. invented the internet, now we are falling behind the rest of the world in this area. Don't take us further behind. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—augustine Gaona, Houston, TX

Please reclassify Internet Service Providers as Common Carriers and preserve true Net Neutrality
—David McVicar, Miami Beach, FL

I don't understand why anyone—except the ISPs themselves—would think this is a good idea. The internet is our one remaining open marketplace, where the little guy has as good a shot at making it big as anyone else. A tiered internet ruins this completely. Please have some common sense with your decision and get rid of this plan. Regards, Ben Ahlquist
—Ben Ahlquist, Worthington, MN

Net Neutrality encourages innovation and entrepreneurial activity. It also helps the growth of start-ups and small businesses.
—Gloria E Donohue, San Francisco, CA

We've already seen how the people running the major ISPs in the US would sell their own mothers if it meant an increase in profit. I, like many other people, have no doubt that without strict net neutrality rules with no loopholes there will be rampant anti-competative practices, discrimination and shady practices and dealings to whatever extend the company's lawyers believe they can get away with. Whatever it takes to make those precious dollars at the expense of the public and the internet in general. The only way to ensure a fair, reasonable, competative and innovative internet environment for everyone, including the people of the US and the world, is to do what the people are requesting and put in place the regulations necessary to ensure REAL net neutrality going forward. No more pandering or watered down garbage.
—Alex Finney, Monroe, GA

For the sake of god stop this mess already —Igor Medzinov, ,

Net neutrality is absolutely necessary. Big corporations have been allowed to buy out literally everything on the face of the earth, including natural medicines, our food industry and many other basic human needs. They do this for profit and gain, but the average consumer gains NOTHING from corporations. Time and time again the general public has been screwed over by people in power wanting a bigger paycheck. It's time to fight back! The internet is used by billions of people, and to make it discriminatory towards those who don't have a big wallet is absolutely unacceptable. Online content needs to be fair. Be a champion for the common man and think about everyone and everything that this would affect. Protect Net Neutrality!
—Cara Kildall, Tualatin, OR

If it wasn't for net neutrality, I most likely wouldn't have a job, my family wouldn't be insured and my future business plans would be a pipe dream as opposed to a possibility. Please do the right thing. Innovation is the last area we have as far as growth is concerned. Don't stifle it.
—Marc Petricciani, Seattle, WA

Tom Wheeler, former lobbyist for cable companies, thinks they should be able to charge whatever they want. the American people need the internet just like we do other utilities and it should be regulated as such. the old at&t monopoly is on its way back, looks like. i guess because congressmen millionaires have so much invested in this giant corporation. our government is looking more corrupt every day.
—Patrick Knight, Garland, TX

Phone companies are Common Carriers. ISPs have supplanted traditional phone companies and now supply phone services. Why are they not Common Carriers, too? It's all Data and should all be treated equally.
—Harold Blumberg, Encinitas, CA

Your plan to censor/control and ultimately destroy free speech online and be able to further collect private data on law abiding peoples will not be tolerated. To police the internet and create a controlled monopoly over it is unacceptable. I don't care what your bill states. Its whats hidden in it and what it will lead to that is truly frightening to people.
—Liam, ,

Common carrier status is essential to ensure fair treatment of internet content and accessibility of small businesses and voices to online markets. Further, it would facilitate healthy competition for internet services to end-users, which exists in other markets such as the EU. There is already too much monopoly power in media, the internet must remain open and fair for all content providers in order to protect free speech.
—Bruce Harley, Stamford, VT

Tired of the 1% grabbing as much influence as it can, wherever it can, including the most democratic medium in the world, the Internet.
—Riff Millar, Seattle, WA

All information should be free and unrestricted in any form.
—Cordelia Wheatley, Kent, OH

You guys need to throw out your proposal and make ISP's a common carrier. Please rethink what you've decided! -Asher
—Asher Wenrich, Newhall, CA

The future of the Internet as an innovative and creative platform equal in access to all who use it will not happen without Net Neutrality. 20 years from now, no one will really know what the Net will look like. But we'll have a clearer idea of what it will become if we don't act responsibly for the best interests of all, instead of for the interests of a few people's wallets.
—Joel Cusimano, La Verne, CA

Beacuse it represents my future in computer science
—Steven Fraser, Grand Rapids, MI

No corporate takeover of the internet!
—David Will, Plant City, FL

Because no one, regardless of money shall have the advantage over others.
—Fredrik Pettersson, ,

We need to use the internet.
—Adam Garfinkel, Canyon Country, CA

I need to stay in touch with my family
—Joanne Hageman, Fort Myers, FL

Net Neutrality is important to me because without it, I could not create content online and continue to use the Internet in the way that it was meant to be used. Getting rid of Net Neutrality is discrimination, and that is against the American ideals that founded this country
—Carina Aldrich, Laie, HI

I work for a small nonprofit. We can't afford a fast lane.
—Savannah, Saint Louis, MO

I demand you save net neutrality & stop protecting corporations, now
—L Yaco, San Francisco, CA

Dear FCC: The people want net neutrality. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers -- it's the democratic thing to do. Thank you for listening. -Juliana DeVries, New Hampshire resident —Juliana DeVries, North Hampton, NH

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—James Kiernan, Pittsburgh, PA

You lied Tom Wheeler.You said you were for Net Neutrality and you aren't. You truly are a LIAR and a BUM. I can not afford the extra fees. I am not one of the 1% who this Country caters to. I am retired on a small fixed income. How do you live with yourself? So because I have worked hard and did not steal from anyone else to get rich, I will get rotten service. You are an immoral creature!!!
—Cynthia Learned, Petaluma, CA

Access to information should not depend on how much money you have!
—D Findley, Shelton, WA

Don't let the internet become like television where only money talks. Protect Net neutrality. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Warner Iversen, Belmont, CA

Its supposed to be America the Free ... not America for a Fee!
—Kurt Cruger, Long Beach, CA

Corporations are not people (SCOTUS be damned)! PEOPLE are the creators of economy, the net must serve the people in order to serve the economy. To do otherwise is to court further American decline.
—Glen Ihrig, Burbank, CA

This just another money grab from these big corporations! It's ridiculous! This is just another way to control the media! What about students who can't afford this? Did you even think about that? Probably not, because they could care less, except for their money!
—Debra L Watson, Gering, NE

All Internet data should be subject to the same rules. If ISPs are not capable of delivering the requested 'bits' in a timely fashion, then they need to invest in infrastructure.
—Thomas Southerland, Longmont, CO

Like it or not, the Internet has become a public utility, much like our telephone system. We ALL use it to communicate with each other as a PRIMARY use.
—Kelly McConnell, Tigard, OR

Prove to the people of this country of which you swore to protect that you don't have your hands in the pockets of big business.
—Brian Tomazic, East Meadow, NY

Once again, the fat cats buy their way into office, reshaping the entire country to suit their needs (read: wallets). God bless America.
—H N., Marblehead, MA

I work for a frozen food comapny who does a large amount of business through online orders. If this goes into affect, either our customers are going to have an unpleasant experience or higher prices... Both will hurt our bottom line. Also, I spend much of my free time surfing the internet. Always coming across new interesting sites. Don't take away from me something I like to do so you and your friends can grow your own business. New businesses rely on the internet to spread the word and the internet is a big reason we have seen so many new companies and new products. Your purposed laws will hurt our economy and our growth.
—Eric VanDerBosch, Marshall, MN

Please do not allow ISPs to have even more power over the transmission of the internet. These companies are already semi monopolistic, and allowing them to create separate speed lanes would only stifle competition among the major internet companies because a Google or a Netflix could afford these fees, but a smaller startup wouldn't. There are already several examples of this happening all over the country. America already has comparatively slow internet compared to the rest of the world, and the power to create fast and slow lanes will make it even worse. Please reclassify ISPs to common carriers, because internet is an absolutely essential part of the modern world, arguably more than the things that actually are protected from things like this.
—Andrew O'Malley, Cresco, PA

I am so tired of gifting to the large corporations of what belongs to the public at large. Please, find some integrity. Just about everyone relies on the internet. It is not right to give the corporations another opportunity to gouge the public.
—Alecto Caldwell, Oakland, CA

because I work in startups and it's hard enough to compete with big companies without an unfair advantage like net neutrality...
—Dan Tan, Chicago, IL

Access to information and resources via the internet is fundamental to education and upward mobility. This plan would effectively isolate millions of Americans from pursuing their academic, professional, and personal goals. The rich will get richer while the climb grow steeper for everyone else; not because of an unwillingness to work hard, but because the playing field won't be level.
—William Scales, Jamaica Plain, MA

Net Neutrality is essential for my small business! Please don't privilege megacorps over the rest of us online. Thanks!
—Catherine Laughlin, Los Alamos, NM

So we can have freedom of the press online.
—Samantha-Ann Roth, Oakland, CA

Net nuetrality has been central to many companiess succeeding and flourishing, YouTube comes to mind. Changing that formula for success for the chance that some big corporations may profit from intentionally slowing down others connections in order to provide bandwidth to a few heavy data users is a poor substitute to speeding up everyone's connections. Why does the US rate at such a poor country when it comes to broadband vs price? We need an open internet regardless of your perceived need. This is the only country seeking to kill net nuetrality, why? I have been explained the 'advantage' of doing so and it just does not make sense in regards to cost, efficiency, and opportunity for small businesses and entrepreneurs.
—Al Espenschied, cambridge, OH

The internet was created as a telephony-based common carrier and should continue to be treated as such. It is anticompetitive for ISPs to impose "invisible" service tiers based on packet contents. I strongly suggest that the FCC reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Oliver Masciarotte, Minneapolis, MN

I see the shades of fascism clouding our future more & more. Soon we will be in nazi USA & totally controlled by the wealthy/corporations. Next they will go after phone texting like they have monitored phone conversations over the past 30+years. I AM ALSO A VERY SMALL BUSINESS SO I RELY ON MY WEBSITE FOR ADVERTISING & INCOME!!!!!!
—Geri benner, Santa Barbara, CA

I guess Chairman Wheeler realized the ultimate lobbyist dream. To get in on the inside and change policy for the sole benefit of those special interests you represented as an outsider. Wheeler is nothing but dirtbag serving corporate cronies and the associated oligarchy. He is a disgrace and the farthest thing from an actual public servant. Throw out the previous rulings and rule ISPs as common carriers, in accordance with the vast majority of Americans, and the millions who have voiced this concern directly to you.
—Phil Frank, Houston, TX

Net Neutrality, to me, is the freedom of unencumbered thought and choice. A two-tiered Internet does nothing but create a wall between consumers and companies, with ISPs being not only the gatekeepers between the two, but those decides where/how/what the gates are. It's something atypical of a protection racket, and it benefits no one but the ISPs and the companies with enough money to pay to be first in line. If I, like most Americans, had more choices of viable, cost-efficient Internet access I might have a different opinion. Unfortunately, I'm stuck with my one provider.
—Justin Todd Hamsley, Springfield, TN

If big business takes over the internet so many entrepreneurs and artists will suffer greatly.
—Krista Amigone, Los Angeles, CA

I feel as if we are moving backwards in technology. For a country that's supposed to lead innovation, our politicians are really pushing to make sure our country is ran by large corporations and a select few people. Net neutrality is as important as anything in keeping this country in the present and following our own constitution. It should be protected.
—Anthony fleck, Bonners Ferry, ID

The Internet is a utility, not a service like cable TV.
—Jonathan Fast, Bozeman, MT

The internet is for everyone to use equally. If it becomes lawful for some to have special access we might as well save clean water and air for the corporate world as well. These laws would create another space for the elite to have it better than the general population. Isn't equality supposed to be the backbone of American ethics?
—Savannah edwards, Bellingham, WA

Providing ters is a bad idea I don't want that and it would only benefit rich companies, not the citizens who the FCC is responsible to serve!
—Jonathan Mann, New York, NY

Stop letting businesses profit from the internet! The tax payers already paid for the internet!
—Tom Schneider, Omaha, NE

America suffers from some of the slowest and most expensive internet access on the planet. Net neutrality means that Americans might actually catch up with more advanced countries, at least on something as simple as access to the internet.
—Cristine Carson, Great Mills, MD

In a way nearly identical to Gutenberg, the Web has the ability to advance Western culture far beyond what it has known over the past 500 years. Back then, it was the Roman Catholic Church that dominated Western culture. Today, it's the 1% of which we've heard so much lately. A free and unbiased network is, unlike Gutenberg, a 3-way communications medium, and that's what's so culturally disruptive about it. If you choose to turn it over to those with the money - and I've no doubt this is what will happen - you will bring innovation to a halt and give the entire culture back to the status quo for, oh, another 500 years. I realize that's an oversimplified explanation, but it's why this decision of yours is SO anti-people and anti-freedom. Your decisions here will impact a hundred generations, and the weight of that MUST be considered before you force rules based on political expediency. The irony is that the money that is behind this effort of yours isn't going away; it might get redistributed, but it's also likely to simply remain in the hands that hold it now. What we're dealing with is fear of the unknown. Rather than work within an open Internet, the status quo wants you to align this marvelous creation with the historical, hierarchical control of culture, because it will be easier for them. Hell, we'd all like things to be easier for us. Innovation demands a level playing field, and you owe it to our progeny to make sure it stays that way. Thank you very much for reading this.
—Terry Heaton, Frisco, TX

I live in an area where there is no competition, and service is expensive and of poor quality. This combined with the Comcast/TWC merger will ensure that my family will not have easy access to the tools we need to do business and continue forward with our careers.
—Katherine Passen, New Berlin, WI

Chairman Wheeler, I'm sure I cannot be the only rational, highly intelligent voice that has commented on your rather callow viewpoints regarding the Internet, but as you seem to have not gotten the message thusfar, it behooves me to explain further: 1) It is not speed that must be altered to ensure a level playing field for all competitive, commercial ventures on the Internet, and let's not fool ourselves into thinking this whole debacle has to do with anything other than profit margins of ISPs and companies that do business on their networks. The real issue is bandwidth consumption. Some agencies and individuals consume large amounts of bandwidth, and expect that their monthly fee entitles them to unlimited use of the maximum rated speeds they are paying for. This is, of course, unrealistic and punitive to the ISPs. It is equally punitive to allow ISPs to throttle speeds to act as a countermeasure to this. The reason is as simple as your aging reflection in the mirror: time. Time is the only commodity that we have a finite amount of, and will at some point run out. In the long term, humans will have to worry about commodities other than time if we don't get a little bit smarter as a collective whole, but that's a discussion for another time. Getting ahead of our problems requires people to become smarter, to grasp more issues, and act in a way that reflects not just a local consciousness, but a global one. The Internet is our best means of accomplishing this goal. So, to artificially limit speed is to intentionally keep people less intelligent, to wall off certain types of information for reasons that seem arbitrarily skewed in favor of ISPs and the wealthy, people often least in need of access to more information because their prosperity is assured. Meanwhile, these artificial slowing techniques stifle progress by permitting ISPs to reduce speeds even as demand for speed increases. We should be able to access information instantaneously in an ideal world, and you have singlehandedly decided to point us in the opposite direction. I think the public has a right to know why. 2) Tiers for bandwidth could be a viable solution, with FCC regulation, of course. The goal would be to ensure these bandwidth costs were reasonable, and that these excess charges would go not only to cover excessive traffic, but to increase the "width of the pipe" as it were, to allow even greater numbers of bits to be transmitted simultaneously. The ultimate goal of this will be to live in a world where those who attempt to deceive us have nowhere to hide and we can once again return to living lives devoted to honest, fair dealings with others. Yes, the Internet is that important. 3) The ultimate goal must be fairness to all parties concerned, and let's face it, your solution is not fair. We are well behind other countries in our development of a fast, reliable Internet infrastructure. Our whole nation should be blanketed in fiber-optic cable by now instead of Google piecemealing the upgrade in random cities around the country. My Internet service certainly isn't anything close to cheap, and it still costs many times more than leasing bandwidth from overseas. As it stands, other countries are profiting from our ISPs lacadaisical approach to upgrading our infrastructure. Your proposal does absolutely NOTHING to address this disparity, and thus essentially condones these practices. Now, I'd like you to go back to the drawing board and lay out a real solution, one that shows how any changes to our existing services will result in improvements over time and will ensure a fair playing field for all commercial endeavors.
—Marc DeLateur, Spokane, WA

must you government flacks all ways cave to the big money? be a man & do the democratic thing.
—Robert Reed, Lake Elsinore, CA

Net neutrality is literally the foundation of the internet and creation within. Google, amazon, twitter, Facebook and Netflix would NOT exist today if not for net neutrality!
—Sean Corkum, Menomonee falls, WI

Anything I could write would sound offensive since I really do not think the nation's public resources should be given to large campaign donors for the asking. We call it corruption, and it stinks to high heaven. The Internet is obviously a public utility. Give away your own wealth, but keep your hands off the nation's patrimony. It is not yours either to steal nor to give away.
—Samuel Pearson, Saint Louis, MO

I believe in an open and free internet, where humankind can learn, debate and play. A place where people and ideas come first, a place we together protect, this most powerful tool we have ever had. This is not a place for singularity and corporate control; this is a place where every person needs to, when it comes down to it, put the benefit for the whole first, and the personal gain second. I hope we can do this together, and that the powerful can lead the way, not divert this massive effort.
—Wouter Walmink, ,

Equality for all. Everyone should have the right to equal access without it being dependent upon cost. If libraries charged to full access the working people could not afford to use them.
—Arlle Warren, Palm Springs, CA

Hello, I am a web developer out of Portland, Oregon. We are a small business and the idea of creating two tiers of the internet net(fast lane,) will essentially destroy our ability to compete, by launching effective start-ups for out clients. It's odd that we would blow-up a flourishing industry and the way I earn a living for corporate interests. It seems very unAmerican and everyone, I have talked to in my field (developers, computer scientists,)is very concerned with this. The very creator of the World Wide Web, Sir Tim Berners-lee has been vocal about the dire ramifications of this proposal. Regards, Don Chambers
—Don James Chambers, Beaverton, OR

This is nothing short of extortion. Enough!
—Donald Sutton, Rensselaer, IN

Access to information should be available to everyone!
—Bonnie Margay Burke, San Diego, CA

i have a small internet business and if only the amazon's can afford the fast lane, millions of small businesses will suffer leading to only a handful of mega providers - think of the dismal consumer ratings for the handful of cable companies and we will get to the same place with internet retailers.
—Marty Bullock, West Palm Beach, FL

Everyone in America should have the fastest internet connections possible. Reclassifying ISPs as Common Carriers will do that. Keep it simple.
—John Gierich, Crest Hill, IL

The internet is meant to connect us, allow us to build new businesses, and share ideas. By taking away that openness you are removing America's ability to grow new businesses that are internet based. Startups are already struggling and adding the additional constraints of forced payment for faster connections, you have just made their ability to grow which in turn takes away much needed jobs.
—Gary L Cox Jr, Austin, TX

The internet should be the same speed for everybody. Ending net neutrality hurts small business start-ups and entrepreneurs.
—Ryan White, Fullerton, CA

The internet is a place where people share ideas and information. Lately it has become the pinnacle of entertainment. However restricting it will only stifle all of the good that comes from having the near instantaneous transfer of information. I think more people with more internet accessibility will knock down barriers and allow it to become an even better place for all to enjoy. Whether you are there to learn or there to be entertained. There are so many countries that are completely dominating the US in regards to internet speeds and availability. Pushing us into a technological dark age compared to the rest of the world powers is a foolish endeavor and one that would only serve to line the pockets of large cable corporations who, in my honest opinion, will be phased out entirely upon better implementation of fiber-optic networks across the country. There is no reason to end net neutrality.
—Kevin Kastner, Sylvania, OH

Real net neutrality lets me, a small business owner, have a presence online without worrying if my website will load quickly if I cannot afford to pay additional fees to have my website in the so-called "fast lane".
—Mr. Justin Allard, Bakersfield, CA

We need real net neutrality. There can be no pay for prioritization of bandwidth of any type. Anything else is corrupt.
—Mark McCallon, louisville, KY

Net neutrality is the only way to ensure free speech as guaranteed by the first amendment. We do not need the corporate masters to have another tool in their arsenal for the deception of mankind.
—Pedro Cibavicius, union city, CA

Net Neutrality is important because I want to keep the freedom of expression it allows —Cayra DeGiuliuo, Platte City, MO

Innovation and small business depend on Net Neutrality!
—Andrew Billeb, Dorchester, MA

Freedom!
—Florence Leppert, Las Vegas, NV

Don't be corporate whore.
—Pete Hopkinson, Patterson, NY

Because the future of the internet is to be a common carrier for all things (voice, video, and data). Allowing companies to extort money for this is unacceptable!
—John Dennis, Lennon, MI

I vote and I remember.
—Harold Waters, Houston, TX

I wouldn't want to go down in history as the man who killed the Internet.
—Robert Edwards, Kirkland, WA

As a small business owner and telecommuter, I am very dependent on an open and reasonably priced Internet. ISP's should be classified as common carriers.
—Kristine Rees, Tucson, AZ

As a student the internet is vital to my studies!
—Kendra Hunter, Haiku, HI

To me, treating ISPs as common carriers isn't just about net neutrality, which people quickly forget came about because ISPs were not treating traffic equally (Comcast was caught by tech-savvy customers), but also about the fact that America's broadband speeds are far inferior to most technologically advanced companies. As common carriers, competition might have a chance and we might start to see regular decent bandwidth upgrades, reducing congestion and negating the current monopoly-inflicted need for net neutrality.
—Dustin Henning, Bloomington, IN

Free exchange of ideas, views and technology lead to robust advances for the good of all, more jobs, more on-line commerce, more diversity, more fun.
—Michael Lastufka, Cedar Hill, TX

Small businesses and independent software contractors that work from home can kiss their internet speed goodby unless they shell out more money to the big players. Do you really think a large company that sees an opportunity to makes a lot more money will help the "little guy"? Hasn't happened before, don't expect to see it happen in the future. The Internet is one of the few things that are the same for all levels of society. By allowing those with money to change that, the gap between rich and poor will increase. Those with enough money will be able to have the fast lanes. Those without will be reduced to the slow lanes. Similar to having two social classes, the Haves (fast lane) and the Have Notes (slow lane). Given the way this country is going and the gap that's already large, we don't need something else making the gap bigger. This would also help eliminate the middle class faster than what's currently happening. More money will be needed just to keep what we have (as I'm sure the "slow lanes" will not be as fast as what we all have today). This drains more money from the middle class as they continue to struggle (I know I am).
—Adam Stein, Rochester, NY

Mine is a small business -- I'm a sole practitioner who runs a one-man architectural practice. Over the years I've moved much of my business activity, as well as many of my personal interests, to the internet. Net neutrality matters to me in a big way, and the thought of a tiered system, with its choice between paying for a "fast lane" or having to live with a far lower level of service is like a staggering punch to the solar plexus. Please -- take into account the interests of all the users, and don't cave in to the high-stakes players.
—John Melcher, Rancho Cucamonga, CA

At this point I really can’t believe the level of corruption and sheer ignorance within political institutions just because a company can give you a money and power does this really make it that simple to look past you duty the very duty to stop this from happening they are literally giving up on the future and bending over just so they may get some cheap capitalist power.
—Carleton Gruger, ,

Neutrality of the www is necessary for a free world (but also only NSA etc). Your plan is only got for google, apple etc. --STOP IT !!!--
—Jürgen Borgmann, ,

I love my friends and I'm not losing them to some stupid law that will force them and I to pay extra just to stay in contact with each other!
—Harry Tucker, Carshalton,

I feel that unfettered access to data and knowledge will be a boon to the nation in the future. To restrict it to only those who pay a premium would only hurt the nation at a time when we have the possibility of great intellectual growth. Thank you.
—Gary Potts, Ellensburg, WA

I would not like to see the Internet being changed into fast/slow lanes.
—Terry Brown, Acton, CA

The internet is an important resource in our lives and it should stay the way it is, for all time.
—Ervin Frank, ,

I'm completely for net neutrality and again this corporatism that runs rampant in out government agencies serve the people not Verizon.
—Cameron best, Missoula, MT

Prices will rise for Internet content.
—Oliver Gunasekara, San Francisco, CA

These companies did not create the Internet; they are profiting from US government work that was paid for by all taxpayers. Therefore, they should not exercise proprietary control over it.
—Jonathan Michaels, Northampton, MA

No net neutrality will be another nail in the coffin of the 98%
—Jerry Voss, Missoula, MT

I don't want foreign intrest running (also snooping) in what should be our enterprise.
—Ed Durivage, Stevensville, MD

make it a public utility people are tired of being at the mercy of these greedy corporations
—Elizabeth Robinson, Saugatuck, MI

Net Neutrality keeps the internet where it should be. Stop trying to hand control of the internet to the top isp(s) that are funding this potential infringement on our free market.
—Richard Dible, Tallahassee, FL

This is just the first step in a tiered internet, where the playing ground will no longer be level.
—Dan Williamson, minneapolis, MN

Without real Net Neutrality, the level playing field of the internet will be in ruins. These "fast lanes" are extortion at best, and pave the way for all kinds of anti-competitive dealings. The internet is a UTILITY and must be treated as such. Internet providers absolutely need to be classified as common carriers. Anything less unacceptable.
—Valerie Burk, San Jose, CA

Nothing good will come of a non-neutral internet. It would turn ISPs into, essentially, curators of what content people can and can't view in a practical fashion; that's too much power to give to organizations primarily motivated by moneymaking. If that happened, they would almost certainly abuse that power to advance their corporate interests at the cost of the consumers, censoring any material that hurts their incomes.
—Jonathan Riceman, Highland Park, NJ

I use the internet daily to read articles and forums. It is how I keep up with the world and how I find the answers to all sorts of questions. The internet is like a library. It should be open to the public equally. Please don't create a good and a slow internet.
—Amanda Brush, Colorado Springs, CO

You must really don't like competition and the net yourself do you Mr. Wheeler. If you were one of us. The regular people and this was happening to you. You wouldn't like it. So how about doing the right thing and not follow the money. If you follow the money. You won't be respected.
—Jawara D Pittman, Atlanta, GA

Net neutrality is the only way to make sure the next generation has the freedom to communicate and innovate in the world's most dynamic medium.
—Mr. John Fallon, Fairfield, CT

My wife and I rely on the open internet for free commerce and if it where changed to allow fast lanes we would not be able to insure our business would be seen by customers.
—Chris kemperman, Grand Haven, MI

Open Access is what makes the internet the versatile, unparalleled tool that it is today. ISP's have no right whatsoever to limit, restrict, inhibit, or otherwise adversely affect the free-flowing nature of the World Wide Web, and it is the FCC's specific duty to ensure that Net Neutrality does not perish under crushing pressure from corporate agendas. There is NO 'promise' or 'good faith gesture' that a corporation can make in favor of maintaining a Free Internet that will ever be as effective, reliable, or decisive as a mandate by the government agency RESPONSIBLE for safeguarding communicative liberties in this country.
—John Goggins Nalls Jr, Bethesda, MD

Net Neutrality is essential to ensuring that individuals have the access to information and resources that are required in today's society, as well as in the job market. Valuing ISPs and their drive for profits over individual citizens and their ability to access information is backwards and will only ensure a stagnation in progress. Please maintain an open internet and reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—A Raccanello, San Francisco, CA

Common Carrier is the solution. I do not believe Wheeler or Baby Duc Powell who came before him. Wheeler should be fired.
—Bryce Hutchinson, Rogue River, OR

Internet Neutrality is essential for the free dissemination of information to EVERYONE. It's fine that the ISPs are wanting to be compensated for their investment in the infrastructure, as they should, but not at the expense of the internet user (the consumer, the ones paying the bills for the ISP). The internet is too important to too many users to let a few companies decide how to run the internet. The United States pays the highest prices in the world for some of the slowest speeds on the internet today. The internet needs to be a treated as a PUBLIC UTILITY and regulated as such. Only then can we be sure that all Americans are being treated equally with respect to the internet speeds that we are paying for. There should be no fast lanes or slow lanes; just one lane that all of us can use equally for any purpose we see fit.
—Mr. David Parrott, Salt Lake City, UT

Because the future of my industry relies on public access to high speed internet without it being a premium luxury. And because I don't want the ISPs deciding what services I should have faster/better access to.
—Thomas Meek, Houston, TX

At the very least, the plan should be very very specific about these "fast lanes", and how they compare and contrast to normal content delivery. The plan is full of loopholes and opportunities for ISPs to extort businesses of all sizes, not to mention end consumers. Ideally, the idea of companies paying for preferential treatment should be completely eliminated. It should not even be a possibility. Netflix is already paying Comcast millions of dollars for it's customers to receive services that they've already paid for. It's ridiculous. Furthermore, this merger of TWC/Comcast is abhorrent, and the merger of AT&T/Dish is right on its heels. The DoJ has gone after easy targets for being monopolies in their industry, but somehow Comcast/TWC are not under that umbrella. It's disgusting as a consumer that this is possible.
—Eric Scott, Austin, TX

As a Senior Citizen. it is imperative for me to receive unbiased information, at a affordable price
—Jim Dingus, Cleveland, OH

Most of this country is locked into a duopoly for a ISP's which gives them a ridiculous amount of power over what we see and hear, as such, their power to edit what data we are given and at what rates must be limited, or efforts must be made to make more ISP choice available to every one. An internet "fast lane" inherently creates a situation where isp's could limit speeds that competitor's data could reach customers without paying extra. Both parties already paid for the data to be transfered. Now we are supposed to pay more so that data get's delivered at the same rate as the isp's own data. These videos explain it better than I can. https://www.youtube.com/watch? v=NAxMyTwmu_M&feature=share https://www.youtube.com/watch? v=Pp1MAMkIa6A
—Shawn Pickett, Indianapolis, IN

The internet should be free and open to everyone. A 2 tiered system would be unamerican...
—Helen Bouchard, Marcellus, NY

The internet is a basic service in the lives of most Americans, from consumers to start-up companies, to small businesses, to large companies. In a free-market, open internet, all users are equal. The FCCs proposed new rules will profit none but the large corporate Internet service providers control the Internet to the detriment of most others.. except those who can pay and fill the coffers of those large ISPs. DO NOT enact these proposed rules and allow a CORPORATE takeover of the internet. The FFC's job is to act for and protect the interests of all American... not to serve the interests of the corporations that it is supposed to regulate.
—Gladys Mynatt, Cloudland, GA

The internet is a bastion of freedom and should not be tampered with. Tom Wheeler, former chief lobbyist for the cable providers, if the government weren't so corrupt you never would have been appointed as chair of the FCC. Don't kill the internet
—Brendan Kent, Montclair, NJ

without the ability to have diversity there is no free speech. "control" of the internet esp by any big named corporations who can at anytime be bought litreraly or controlled by government republican or democrate will take away our right. we need to stop the ability of anyone to rewrite history to slant it one way or another other than the truth is wrong. If government held schools are able to use books to teach our kids information slanted towards their point of view or lacking in emphasis on the truth the internet will be the same.
—Kathy Beck, jacksonville, FL

Searching the internet for neutral information is very important to my day job in city governement, and equally critical to my night job as a college professor. Pay to place-higher is a terrible way to organize on-line information. If the USA adopts this policy, our citizens will become global idiots - only knowing consumer-priorities and not human-opportunities!
—Joe Smoke, Los Angeles, CA

The internet needs to remain free and equitable for all - not a rich man's paradise. We have all become accustomed to depending heavily on the internet, and it needs to be accessible to all.
—Carol L Hauschild, Garden City, KS

I'd like the internet to stick around.
—Arpan Sharma, Arlington, VA

I use the Internet for my job. I need an unbiased delivery of information, not a delivery based on deep pockets. Please abandon your rules for the latter and reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Mark Ahlstrom, Jackson, NH

Net Neutrality is the only reason why the Internet is the last line of defense against corruption, discrimination and other prejudices that have undermined the country within the last decade.
—Kevin Krywko, San Marcos, CA

The internet is an open and public environment and, much like public roads, should have a separate fast lane which is reserved for the people with extra money.
—Matthew Henley, Spring, TX

The internet has proven to be a way to get news fast & reliable, when other means are negligent in reporting the news in a truthful manner. You can get news on the internet without a right or left slant or any agenda in mind. Please keep the internet free, so that we (the people) can get free press, when the press lets us down. Thank you.
—Philip Bundy, Sapulpa, OK

As a retiree, providing services via the net is how I plan to fund my shrinking benefits from other sources. Don't abandon the people who have paid taxes and built this country so that a few rich guys/gals can become richer. Leave us some modicum of dignity and hope, please. We don't want a hand out, Just fight for us and not the corporations that have no agenda but unregulated growth and market domination.
—Bruce Monnier, Durham, NC

ISPs ARE NOT THE CREATORS AND INNOVATORS. The people who build and publish websites and apps are. ISPs must not be allowed to decide or dictate what companies/products get to reach their customers unhindered. Broadband (wireline and wireless) must be designated and regulated as a public utility. Not some luxury or discretionary accessory. ISPs must be made fully transparent and absolutely accountable to the public. Not their shareholders.
—Jeff Rueckgauer, Washington, DC

As a small business owner and startup regular, these rules make me seriously fear for the future of the internet. Reclassify!
—Aubron Wood, Dunn, NC

Net Neutrality creates competition, not only among ISPs but among websites, businesses, social media; the internet has infected itself into our way of life, and without it, we would be distraught. Here are some comments from U.S. Senator Ron Wyden: "The only way to address threats to net neutrality now is with enforceable rules, but in the long run, what would be best for the Internet and best for consumers is more competition. That's why the currently proposed mergers are so concerning, and why developments like Google Fiber and other build-overs are very important. There is a correlation between the lack of competition and the need for the government to intervene in markets to protect competition." "Ideally, the government should be involved in the Internet as little as possible. With net neutrality, the government is being drawn in by the effect that the monopoly ISPs are having on innovation and competition on the net. I have called the Internet the shipping lane of the 21st century, in this case, the government is fulfilling its traditional role of keeping those lanes open and toll free. The Internet can be a powerful tool to enhance democracy - we've seen those effects in the Arab Spring. It has also revolutionized the way citizens communicate with their representatives. At the same time we must be vigilant about the ways Internet surveillance can undermine democracy." "[net neutrality]'s the freedom for products, services and ideas to compete online. It's making certain that consumers can't be charged twice for the Internet service they pay for, and that you have the same opportunity to reach all Internet content. Along with limiting liability so that you can't be sued for what's posted on your site or blog, these are the principles that have allowed the net to flourish."
—Grant Harvey, Orange, CA

Genuine network neutrality is essential to guarantee both the function and fairness of the Internet. As an academic, the Internet is essential to progress in my field, and any loss of either function or fairness would have a direct and negative impact.
—Vincent Needham, Manhattan, KS

IT IS CALLED FAIRNESS!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
—M Smith, HOUSTON, TX

The web services I use everyday would be destroyed by this proposal. Not only would websites be limited only to big corporations, user content creation and expression would be severely limited, cutting out a large portion of what makes the Interent such a valuable tool for expression and creativity.
—Dalton Mulkey, Austin, TX

Net neutrality is important to me because as a small business owner, I rely on the Internet to help market my business and have clients reach me. There are many small businesses that do not have the budgets of large size companies. America is considered the land of opportunity, where a person can build a life no matter their station in life. Net neutrality enables the 'little guy' to be able to have equal access. Thank you, Takiya —Takiya Paicely, Indianapolis, IN

I run a small business dependent upon a free internet. This is the type of business that is helping make America recover. It is unconscionable you are setting up this two tier system. There is no need for this. This should be treated like a public utility. You are undermining the great efforts of the internet enterprise with this layer of discrimination.
—Marti Johnson, Edina, MN

Net neutrality is what makes it possible for someone like me to network with friends, run private game servers, make skype calls, and test out cool and interesting web-based software on my computer. Without net neutrality, I would be unable to host a Minecraft server, as it I would be throttled down to dialup speeds by my friends internet providers as I didn't pay them money for a "fast" lane. I would be unable to play indie games from new and emerging developers, as they couldn't afford the extravagant fees for fast enough access. We pay our internet providers to provide us with internet as close to the specified speed as possible. Already, big companies like netflix have been forced to pay comcast ransom in order to be able to provide service to their subscribers. Please, don't ruin the internet. Remember, the websites you use everyday were all once small, under-funded, and run by college students. These websites, like facebook, would never have taken off if it were not for net neutrality, and therefore, lack of net neutrality hurts the economy, and it hurts the consumer. Please, make the choice you know is right, not the one the cable companies want you to. Represent the masses, not the few big dogs who would gain from lack of regulation.
—Miles Aikens, Ann Arbor, MI

The Internet must remain free. I support true net neutrality.
—Chris Plummer, Moreno Valley, CA

Throw out the current rules and reclassify ISPs as common carriers!!
—Carla Cain, Los Angeles, CA

Dear Federal Communications Commission: FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Sarah Koosis, Brooklyn, NY

Full net neutrality is truly the only RIGHT thing to do!
—Jane Perry, Santa Fe, NM

I'm not going to bother you with my opinion of why net neutrality matters because you already should know the reasons why and you're probably not going to read this anyways. But a vast majority of my generation, which is the representative population of the future, finds this disgusting. If you make the wrong decision, you and your genetic line will be remembered for all the wrong reasons. The fact that this is even up for debate is vomit-worthy. Maybe you can leak how much money you've been given by lobbying interest groups so that us non-rich folks can pool our money together to match whatever your number is. - from a future scientist
—Michael Artinian, Winnetka, CA

The carriers, wireless and landline, are forcing users to pay a measured rate for services. The cable companies who don't currently measure service soon will be. Forget about unlimited "free" bandwidth to the home or mobile device. The carriers increasing the costs to content providers will increase the cost to the end users. Pay for priority is just bad, bad, bad.
—David Porter, Kingston, RI

If carriers are allowed to discriminate traffic, this will greatly interfere with free speech, getting the news from multiple sources and make it more difficult for small businesses to compete with larger businesses. This just cannot happen and have our country continue to grow and prosper. All traffic should be treated equal. Is this the first step in creating a society where money is the deciding factor? What If I am willing to pay more to drive in a lane on the highway where less cars travel? Am I not paying for a set speed on the consumer end? If I pay for a given speed, then the carrier is not living up to their end of the bargain if I cannot get what I want delivered at the speed they are selling me. What about all the commercials I have to pay to view when I have a data plan? Again something wrong already. Why am I paying to have someone advertise to me?
—James Baker, Royal, AR

The only reason the internet has become this wonderful, beautiful, powerful tool is because of openness. Doing anything but fostering this openness will decimate what this marvel of technology has become.
—Bryan Glasel, Everett, WA

As the owner of a small business, I know how important it is for internet service to be equal and reliable for all. Giving anyone the ability to pay for faster internet speeds will hurt small business, will hurt the average citizen, and in the long run will hurt big business as well because even though they will be the only ones able to pay for the "fast lane", this policy will badly cripple the vibrant, open community that the internet has become. We need everyone's contribution to be on an even footing!
—James Morrison, San Francisco, CA

It's a utility, not a commodity.
—Brett M Charles, GILBERT, AZ

CORPORATIONS are NOT PEOPLE. Pres. Obama LIED when he stated that WE MATTERED . United Corporations of America. That is where I was born.
—Teresa M Robinson, Smithfield, VA

the airwaves are public.....don't destroy that !!!! Do not make the internet only for big money!
—B Darsey, Roswell, GA

We want the net to remain as it is - open to all - without special access and higher speed others. Please take action accordingly.
—Regina rubin, Cleveland, OH

Comcast and ATT have a duopoly. This is not true competition. Unless google or verizon wants to lay fiber to every house in America, (especially mine), they need to be regulated like the monopolies they are. I would prefer the FCC classify the internet and internet service providers as type 2 telecommunications service. In absence of that, net neutrality is very important to the future of this country.
—David Sabbagh, Roanoke, VA

It's the sustenance of democracy.
—Hari S. Khalsa, Santa Cruz, NM

The internet needs to be maintained as a level playing field. When larger business or individuals can effectively squash competition in terms of bandwidth and speed, it only hurts productivity and development.
—Kevin VanHook, Canyon Country, CA

Net neutrality = more of a chance at any real democracy!
—Tom Rutherford, Middlebury, VT

Re=classify ISPs as common carriers--say NO to a 2-tiered internet--Say NO to allowing ISPs to discriminate against content they don't like, but the public does. Issue Rules fair to the public, not special interests.
—Carole B, Las Vegas, NV

The internet is one of our greatest accomplishments. The idea that all have equal access and ability has been truly revolutionary. Why are you now proposing changes? The only reason I see is that you are giving in to corporate greed. Shame on you. Do the right thing and leave OUR internet alone!
—Tom Violett, Howell, NJ

I value having an internet where everyone has an equal voice and doesn't need to pay a premium in order to be heard. Please don't take that away from us.
—Aaron Light, Sterling, VA

I wrote to Tom Wheeler asking him to support Net Neutrality. I got a response from his office declaring him to be for an open internet. He clearly lied. Fast and slow lanes on the internet WE paid to create with our tax dollars is going to be so bad for people for so many reasons. I know it, you know it, but I don't have the power to stop it; you do. Please do.
—Marlena Machol, Glendale, AZ

Because I believe that internet is for everyone regardless of class and wealth.
—George MacWayne Hite II, Springfield, VA

Net Neutrality is critical to keep the internet a force for innovation - the reason why the net is such a huge success is because the broad marketplace got to pick the winners and losers, not a small number of service providers, who are motivated to extract ever higher fees for their services, not to provide the best service to their customers. Why does the US have below average internet speeds as compared to the rest of the developed world? Because the service providers can get away with it, their profits go up as their customers suffer. Remember the internet really blossomed when it was largely carried by common carriers - modems on the telephone infrastructure. Internet service should once again be classified under the common carrier rules , the FCC made a big error years ago by not doing this from the outset as service moved to TV cable and then fiber. You need to serve the public, and right this error now. Classify internet service as a common carrier, insure net neutrality, and insure the internet is a thriving platform for continued innovation.
—Kenneth H. Slater, Chester, VT

My job depends on non biased access to the internet. I work with many start-up companies, and having equal access ensures that these companies have a chance on the internet.
—Mikel Nelson, Escondido, CA

The terms Open Internet and Net Neutrality mean nothing to me. Slower downloads mean everything. Why should the uber-wealthy get everything?
—Glenn Krakower, Greenfield, WI

Because the net was built by us, not the corporations profiting from it.
—William Rogers, Rock Hill, SC

As a community organization we rely on the internet to provide service to our students however, our budget does not permit us to afford the higher tier that this plan will develop.
—Harriet Williams, Frederiksted,

In a political climate increasingly dominated by big money (even more as a result of recent Supreme Court decision), the Internet is one of the few remaining means of ordinary citizens' ability to have a voice of influence. PLEASE DO NOT turn this public utility over to the influence of moneyed interests! Keep the Internet free of such dominance!
—Douglas W. Sterner, Cranford, NJ

We already pay too much for internet access. These proposals could mean we pay even more! Other first world advanced nations have faster and cheaper internet service than the US. Keep our internet open and let's make it more accessible not less. Cheaper would be better too!
—Tom Kunhardt, Oakland, CA

Net neutrality is vitally important because it levels the playing field and is accessible to anyone who has access to a computer. The FCC has no business dividing it up to be accessible to only certain individuals with money or have a certain point of view. The Internet must be kept neutral, accessible to all, and a source of unfiltered content and application!
—Paul Kaneko, Santa Cruz, CA

The internet is the last vestige of a free press and real journalism. Without net neutrality, there is no 5th estate.
—Eric Rothe, ,

These proposed rules are not fair. Big companies should not have more power than small businesses and ordinary citizens.
—Susan Vollmer, Rice Lake, WI

I support an open internet where all content and ideas have equal opportunity, and where no one will face roadblocks to access the information they need.
—Alexander Vallejo, Washington, DC

I am so tired of Koch money Interfering with everything. There should be no other consideration than to make the internet a public utility.
—Judy Pigg Behrendt, Kalamazoo, MI

No net neutral = the death of the possibility America. You are founding the new fascist state.
—Mr. Garry lester, San Juan Bautista, CA

We are senior citizens with limited income and cannot afford to pay extra money for the internet. To cease "Net Neutrality" will take us off the internet permnently1 Please stop this madness!
—Deanna & Harold Holloway, Meridian, ID

Creating a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees — and a slow dirt road for the rest of us is wrong & discriminatory! Companies should NOT have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. This is wrong & shows how America is not serving the interest of the average american.
—Mark Lundberg, Stamford, CT

Simple: I will make my own decisions about my life (& access to information). I do not acknowledge someone else's "right" - especially, simply because they have money - over these aspects of my life. Period.
—John Terlazzo, York, PA

I use the internet daily. I consider it an important part of my everyday life. However, I don't make enough money to be able to afford the possible fees that come with these fast lanes ISPs are pushing to create. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Matthew Fernandez, Brooklyn, NY

The Internet was meant to be free to give an even playing field to everyone, regardless of their financial capability, and this proposal just lines the pockets of the monopolistic providers at the expense of the already economically strapped common citizen.
—Paul Wolotsky, Laguna Niguel, CA

Please throw out the net neutrality rules and reclassify ISP's as common carriers. Please keep the internet free for all of us. Thank you
—Cindy McKenzie, Whiteside, TN

I own a small business and will not be able to compete with the likes of Comcast for high speed Internet unless we have net neutrality. Please keep the Internet open and equal for all. Thank you.
—Marx Broszio, MYAKKA CITY, FL

In the USA we already have some of the slowest and most expensive internet service in the world. That's only going to get worse if you don't reclassify ISPs as common carriers. I, like thousands and thousands of other US citizens rely on the internet for information and staying connected with family, friends and colleagues. You know as well as I do that AT&T, Comcast and Verizon will create a two-tiered or more system which will prevent most citizens from having fast internet access. Please don't let this happen. Listen to the people. It's clear what the public wants on this issue.
—Charles Shriner, Indianapolis, IN

I pay a fee for service, already' and find it unfair to have another fee levied!
—Mary F Lasley, Ashland, OR

Social Security sole source of income.
—Richard Mayer, Brea, CA

As a volunteer developer of websites for non-profit organizations, I need to have my websites have the same speed and reliability of all other websites without burdening the already strained budgets of the non-profits I represent.
—William Thomson, Sonoma, CA

I depend on access to all types of information not just commercial information. Why should the big payers get faster access? The ISPs should be treated like common carriers. I don't want to be s second class user! Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Tom Bailey, Concord, MA

To keep competition alive and within reach.
—Scott Daniels, Longview, TX

Please throw out these proposed Internet rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. The content providers don't want a fast lane on the Internet and this change would only provide the ISPs with an avenue to increase revenue at the consumer's cost. This proposed change is bad for the public and should not be approved. If you want to regulate broadband then do it the right way by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Landon Burns, Garden Grove, CA

Please stop trying to ruin a good thing for the sake of big businesses interested in nothing more than milking the Internet to death.
—J Duncan, San Francisco, CA

It would really be easer to just reclassify ISP. Instead you are just supporting companies not the people.
—Jeshua Campos, Sturgis, MI

The internet should remain NEUTRAL for all users!!!! Internet service providers should be classified as common carriers and users should decide what is delivered across the internet, not suppliers of content. All suppliers of content should be on equal footing. Net neutrality should reign supreme among internet providers and users.
—Estelle Goodell, Phoenix, AZ

I enjoy many types of content on the internet, please don't let ISP's ruin my experience because of senseless greed. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Anthony Edwards, Redwood City, CA

Net Neutrality is the way to preserve innovation and inclusiveness in our way of life. Something that is as important as piped water, electric lines, the roadway system and our public libraries should not be given favoritism to those that have deep pockets but instead should be equally open to everyone.
—Douglas Kister, Hatboro, PA

We are sick of every aspect of our government caving into the wealthy corporations. This is whoredom!
—Ron Russell, Pacific Grove, CA

I have Verizon broadband wireless internet and it is already terrible. Please do not make it worse and unfair to people who can not pay higher internet prices.
—Aaron Verginio, Baldwinsville, NY

It's readily apparent even by Wheeler's own comments in the judiciary hearing that this is a horrible idea that will subject the vast majority of Americans and most small business to abuse.
—Lee Kenney, Victoria, TX

these rules would sell the internet to the highest bidder. smaller web based businesses can not afford to pay a ransom to large isps
—Melissa McKenzie, Port Charlotte, FL

We rely on an open internet for freedom of speech. Do not restrict it!
—Andrew Thompson, Watertown, MA

Please if you could just make the isp's as common carriers. I believe this would just be the simplest thing to do and end this once and for all. That way everyone would be happy. It would end the possibility of the internet having fast lanes and everything. I really have no idea why you don't just make it a common carrier, The internet is a place where it needs to be a open internet. Your rules would jut complicate things and make the internet not as great as it has been in the past. I hope you read this message and consider net neutrality. { common carrier}. It is not a wise idea to give power to isp's to give them power to charge places like netflix or other sites and if the don't it could be slower and so on. I really wish people would leave the internet alone as it has been for a long time and just make it a common carrier, it would end the protests and im sure make your job easier and go on to more important things.
—Sean Keating, Saint Charles, IL

Implementing a pay-to-play internet traffic system would stifle innovation and growth, which are the very things that have allowed the internet to become the economic juggernaut that it is today. Additionally, allowing such economic censorship would set up a situation that could lead to the muffling of criticism of anything the ISPs deem as threatening. This would not be the uninhibited exchange of ideas and goods that the internet has been built upon. So, please treat ISPs as what they are: utilities.
—Matthew Rainville, Brooklyn, NY

If it's not broke, don't fix it.
—Ethan Fein, New York, NY

Firstly, access to information has become a necessity rather than a nonessential in todays world. Secondly, the internet pipeline is only limited by investment in fibre, not by some economic driven scarcity. Thirdly, anyone who purports to be a capitalist supports Net Neutrality as the first and last line of defense against corporatism, technological and economic stagnation and cronyism. In fact, the chairman opens himself up to charges of crony capitalism if he presses forward with the proposed rule changes. There is no reason to allow Comcast, Verizon or AT&T the ability to make money coming and going on the internet. The deal in the late 1990's was these companies would provide for a level playing field and the government would allow them to have limited monopolies in different regions. If they wish to change that deal, I say we remove them from the equation entirely.
—Marcus Sellers, Spruce Creek, PA

This doesn't benefit the people, it hurts them. It only helps a few big corporations and Tom Wheeler make a lot of money. This is our society, these decisions don't benefit the society.
—Chad Meyers, potomac, MD

ISP carriers make plenty of money as it is. Leave them as common carriers so the rest of us don't suffer sluggish internet. I depend on the net to keep in contact with my family.
—Kathy Schuler, Abingdon, MD

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Minturn Post Collins III, Los Angeles, CA

New Neutrality supports democracy.
—Martha Hill, Ann Arbor, MI

I think that it's a slippery slope until everything is censored by big brother.
—Patrick Videau, Durham, NC

The current information economy is founded on the possibility that an idea can spread by its merit. If capital is a required precursor for the exposure of a solution, then the crowd-sourced innovation – which for decades has solved problems uninteresting to conglomerates but vital to individuals – will fade into American lore. Networks in competitive countries will attract talent, extracting that infinite possibility from our shores and planting it where it will flourish – freely shared.
—Mr. Galen Sanford, Boston, MA

I work everyday on line and need high speeds to access remote servers effectively. In creased cost to get the fast lane would affect my bottom line. Also, net neutrality is a moral choice. Do you really want big business to slow down websites that disagree with their policies? The internet was created with public funds and is absolutely a public utility. We cannot give discretionary control to the near monopoly control of the ISP providers. Neither should we sensor the net on the government side. Please drop the current plan and reclassify the net as the utility it already is! Thank you
—Christopher R Devereux, Santa Fe, NM

The FCC should throw out its rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. This would be the fair thing to do.
—Sandra J. Bader, Harshaw, WI

We, in this country from its beginning, have counted on the FREEDOM to achieve our own individual destiny. We have fought to retain this freedom around the world. Why should we now be victimized by commercial tyranny and greed???
—Toni J. Alexander, Madison, OH

We need to keep the internet open like it is now!!!!
—John Carpenter, Shelby, NC

Keep the internet neutral
—Eric fey, Chicago, IL

With this proposed rule, the competition on the net will not be ideas but money. The net feeds that are fast will get the attention over those which are slow. Web users are used to fast interaction and downloads and will turn to them instead of the slower track. Speed is the name of the game with the web user. Therefore offerings that are not on the high speed track will be at a big disadvantage. This rule proposal seems to limit real competition not foster it.
—Dr. Francis E. Cheslik Ph.D., Montvale, NJ

Providing the means to discriminatory use of the internet violates freedom of speech. The internet is a form of communication that is not owned by individuals and cannot be partitioned off to the highest bidders. If we are to preserve the freedoms we have then the ISP's are to be viewed as common carriers and not given any entitlement.
—Kathy Reese, Cotopaxi, CO

A free, unmuddled internet is incredibly important to have.
—Spencer miller, Rockville, MD

The Internet needs to be a level playing field, not one where money confers an advantage. It may be a potential new revenue stream but some things are really more important than money, hard to fathom as that may be. Please do the right thing.
—Randy Graves, CARROLLTON, TX

Net neutrality is important, as it allows equal exposure for all content on the web. This is especially important for smaller sites and organizations. Popularity on the web should depend on quality of a site's content, and not on the paid-for preferential access to end users.
—Andrew Long, Tampa, FL

As a regular Internet user, I am not going to pay extra for something that I am already paying for through my provider. What you are planning is complete discrimination and a perfect example of how the corporations OWN THIS GOVERNMENT AND ALL THOSE WHO HAVE SWORN TO PROTECT THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES. You, Sir, are a corporate shill, and that is unacceptable in a democracy. Your job is to ensure that we, the people, are NOT subject to tirades by corporations and lobbiest. You are supposed to protect us, and you are doing a miserable job if you give in to the money. Do not allow for a two-tier system.
—Julie Cleveland, Bozeman, MT

The internet is without a doubt a resource. A resource that is facilitating a lot of positive and needed innovation. The last thing we need right now is for ISP's to have any control over it. They haven't done anything innovative in years and this is just a money grab to make up for losses the internet has caused them. Please see this and protect Net Neutrality.
—Mike Lamentola, Grass Lake, MI

I operate a few smaller web sites and I can not afford to purchase access to any "fast" lanes on the internet. Allowing such differentiation to be possible by ISPs puts small businesses like mine at a disadvantage. Tom Wheeler only cares about those with deep pockets.
—Dave Lozier, Scandinavia, WI

It's an opportunity for small business to expand to a worldwide level
—Eliseo W. Perez, Homestead, FL

American corporations who enrich themselves overthrowing nations and murdering children from 30,000 feet and invoke the name of a lord to our kids while they bank overseas have no right to breathe much less control an internet they don't own and are tooooooo, much tooooo stupid to fathom it will harm commerce and hurt profits which is why they breathe. The dead Iraqi children do NOT breathe or use the Internet. THEY'RE DEAD BECAUSE AMERICAN PSYCHOPATHS WHO WOULD GUT THEIR MOM FOR A BUFFET COUPON MURDERED THEM TO STEAL OIL AND NOW WANT TO CONTROL THE INTERNET. WHY NOT? DO WHAT YOU WANT. THE AMERICAN PEOPLE HAVE HAD ENOUGH OF YOU CORPORATE PARASITES TO GAG A MAGGOT. YOU HAVE NO IDEA HOW MUCH AMERICANS DETEST THEIR CORPORATE SPYING, TERRORIZING, MASS MURDERING, OIL STEALING GOVERNMENT. YOU SHOULD STRAP IT ON AND RUN AROUND THE VESTIBULE WITH IT BEFORE YOU MAKE ONE MORE DECISION. CHOOSE WISELY!
—Robert Hyer II, Lillian, AL

I shouldn't even have to point out why this is absurd.
—Jennifer Rigby, Plantersville, MS

we can't pretend to be a democracy if information does not flow freely to all
—Nicole Masika, Brooklyn Center, MN

The Internet will be the most important tool of the 21st century and these new rules will stifle that. Do not put the power of the Internet in the hands a few companies. Traffic should NOT be discriminated.
—Philip, San Francisco, CA

Infringement on the American public's ability to communicate freely, without censorship or oppression, create methods and avenues of open trade and commerce, and to freely pursue their rights and freedoms afforded every man, and woman, without abridgment is essential to this great countries continued prosperity. To purposefully gut Net Neutrality, and the incorporated and vital tools that have been build throughout it's structure, for corporate greed and the insinuated oligarchic overburden is simply unacceptable. ISP's, wired and wireless are Title ll common carriers and they must be classified such. The most critical issue of our time must be handled with integrity and foresight. If approached from that grounded place, there is only one choice, and it has absolutely nothing to do with compromise or deception. Make the right play people.
—J Baquie, Tampa, FL

Innovation on the Internet requires a level playing field. New entrepreneurs will not be able to compete otherwise. If extra-cost channels were available before, we would likely not have Google, Facebook, etc. What "next big thing" will be killed by a two-tiered Internet?
—Ira Chayut, Los Gatos, CA

Keep the playing field equal for everyone on the internet. The internet is a public utility.
—Miles Hickok, Hinesburg, VT

I believe that giving individual citizens and small businesses equal access to robust Internet connections will serve our society greatly. The incredible benefit of access to huge swaths of information and knowledge that the internet provides should be viewed as a public reality for everyone in America. As a small business I have already benefited from being able to use fast connections without paying a large premium. This in turn has enabled me to be more productive, and more profitable (and thus more prolific in my business spending).
—Jonathan Lutjens, Saint Louis, MO

I cannot accept the creation of yet one more area where something that is allegedly open to all is in fact prioritized for those who are able and willing to pay more (in the interest of accruing yet further profits).
—Mr. Michaelangelo Allocca, Chicago, IL

Even the smallest voices deserve to be heard along with the biggest. Marginalizing those who can't afford this information toll road is wrong.
—John Box, Oklahoma City, OK

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Debi Garrett, Sturgis, KY

The internet is an important promoter of democracy and freedom of speech. The proposed changes that allows discrimination on traffic is a blow to freedom of speech the internet stands for. Please don't allow it.
—Christian Olsen, Raleigh, NC

Internet / Telecommunications access need to be universally available to all, just as all other utilities.
—Armando Ruggeri, Calgary,

I don't want to be forced to choose between a handful of semi-monopolistic carriers.
—David Tanner, Burbank, CA

There should be no fast lanes and slow lanes. All should have equal access to the internet. It is a communication service.
—JoAnn Witt, Kansas City, MO

Access to information should be same speed for all. Wall of privilege becomes steeper in USA day by day. Please keep net neutrality for all users.
—Mr. David Schein, Burlington, VT

It is important that information be made free for all to share, not just big business. The internet is a successful scientific tool because information can be freely shared among everyone. It is important for the future of our species that information should be freely and readily available. This will lead to advances in science, medicine and art. We have seen what a wasteland television has become, don't let the same thing happen to the internet!
—Stacey Spiegel, Lancaster, CA

I am tired of hearing about all of the threats to our internet access. Enough already! Just do the right thing and put the rights of the people over profits!
—Mende Smith, Los Angeles, CA

Net Neutrality is crucial to upholding the rights of the people. While not explicitly a part of the Constitution, Net Neutrality is key to the 1st Amendment's freedoms of speech and press. The internet has become a tool like the voice and should never be muzzled.
—Amy O'Neal, Houston, TX

Stop the farse. We all know that the net is a publicly paid for communications utility. Stop trying to treat it as a profit center for only the large telecom ISPs. Net neutrality is the only way to avoid special privileges for the rich and powerful with the rest of us relegated to the Internet Slow Lane.
—Robert Christie, Santa Fe, NM

In just a few short years, the Internet has gone from being a curiosity to the lifeblood of our economy. It's urgent that we keep Internet access and bandwidth open to all, and free of corporate agendas that would throttle or block any individual or service. It's high time for the FCC (and Congress) to recognize the Internet for what it has become -- a utility like phone service. I urge you to reclassify Internet Service Providers as common carriers that are required to offer access to all on equal terms. Thank you for your consideration. Andrew Austin adaustin@umich.edu
—Andrew Austin, New York, NY

We don't pay for electricity on a two rate system, I don't want to pay for internet services on one either. We need to regulate internet as a utility--keep the internet NEUTRAL.
—Mary Lou Ritter, Portland, OR

I believe a free internet is one of the most important factors in the survival of our species, considering the challenges we are facing. Please take your responsibility and do what is right.
—Jerker Österlind, Stockholm, IA

In both personal use and research use, equal access for all is essential.
—Edward Coe, Columbia, MO

For decades the FCC has neglected true oversight and been a rubber stamp for unfairness, monopolies, and greed in general and the good of the public be damned. It is long past time that the airwaves and the entire communication system be treated like the public utility that it truly is. The cost of doing business is one thing, but these communications companies are getting very rich on the backs of everyone - especially the people who can least afford it.
—Curtis Eckstein, Green Bay, WI

Mr. Chairman, My question is, what are the benefits of your proposed plan? There has been so much uproar about net nueutrality and how we should rally against your stupid proposal, but i haven't heard you defend it or explain why it makes more sense to have two tiered Internet? Honestly, it sounds like these companies have you in their back pocket, and that working in their favor is your goal. I understand this is politics, and i understand you didn't get into your position by doing right and working for the US citizens, but dammit man please explain your actions. Or don't. If you go on with your ignorant, dumb plan, people will avoid comcast, verizon at the like and look for other ways to obtain internet (GOOGLE). And then you and your lackies will try to handcuff them, and we'll do this all again in about 5 years.
—Greg LaVanture, Neptune, NJ

ISPs ARE common Carriers, and are utilities used BY ALL!!!
—DC Daniel Wright, Hillsboro, OR

Please out the people first and corporate profits second. The current proposal does the opposite and will hurt not help the average citizen. Please prove to the American people that the F.C.C. isn't in the pocket of the cable companies. Remember for the people by the people.
—Joe Kselman, Takoma Park, MD

Dear FCC, the internet should be treated as a utility. This action will do nothing but damage the country by squelching innovation. Small tech businesses having to pay more for priority service will not help. Thank for helping america go backwards. GET IT TOGETHER, and keep this country great.
—Michael, Elyria, OH

We need a neutral network worldwide.
—Richard McGowan, San Jose, CA

All data should be treated equally, we don't tell Highway Patrols that certain cars are allowed to go faster because they paid more for the privilege.
—Brett Cothren, Metairie, LA

This would be like the library "pushing" certain books on readers because of corporate backing! Just ridiculous!!!
—Gary Bettum, Sedona, AZ

As a small business owner, I rely on the internet as an affordable way to reach and communicate with both current and prospective clients. ISPs should be a partner with small businesses, not an obstacle. The growth of the economy relies on new business growth, not on large corporations gaining yet more wealth and power by controlling communication resources and profiting off of small growing companies.
—Shelley Gierman, Chesterland, OH

I am a developer, and it is my business to provide content and services for the web. The web thrives because people are truly equal when it comes to being a part of it. If it becomes a world of haves and have nots, that would greatly stifle innovation. The whole fast lane scheme is just a way for carriers to exert control over content, even though their job is to simply direct it to its destination. If we allow them to do this, they will keep demanding more and more control and will be virtually unstoppable. The argument that we can simply switch to different carriers if we are unhappy doesn't hold up since said carriers already have undisputed holds over most of the US (ie. Comcast and Verizon). So I am completely against the fastlane scheme, and will only accept full net neutrality. Anything less would be an insult.
—Joshua David Ols, Indianapolis, IN

These proposed rules are garbage plain and simple. Classify internet service providers as Common Carriers (anything else is frankly dishonest), and protect an open and fair internet. This should not be difficult, this should be obvious. ISPs are moaning about needing to deliver content across their wires, but guess what, that is what I and millions of other people already pay for! By allowing ISPs to create a fast lane, you will be enable them to double charge for sub-standard service. The result will be increased prices, lower quality, and a huge barrier for start companies. This is before mentioning that our internet speeds and connectivity are some of worst in any industrialized nation (which is shameful). Protect consumers, protect our economy, PROTECT NET NEUTRALITY!
—Nicholas Kerwin, Albuquerque, NM

Please don't tilt the playing field in favor of organizations with deep pockets. The success of the internet depends upon the competition of ideas, not dollars.
—Ray Hatfield, Oklahoma City, OK

It is important that anyone with a good idea can apply their idea online and be on equal grounds. This will keep competition alive and not give major companies an advantage over smaller ones. Please reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers.
—Dustin Zeimet, North Liberty, IA companies should not throttle the web for pay

—Amy van der Hiel, Roslindale, MA

Net Neutrality is what democracy looks like in the 21st century.
—Nancy Aykanian, Newton, MA

Net Neutrality shows true equality. There is no need to fix something that isn't ruined. Infringing upon a basic right is ridiculous, and just because I'm not a corporation does not mean I don't deserve equal Internet. DO NOT RUIN THE INTERNET.
—Randy Tadros, Crown Point, IN

This Internet was built for the people, to be used by the people, and our work is not to be sold off to the highest bidder.
—Brenden rajah, Highland Mills, NY

No Internet fast lanes for the rich/incumbent/willing-or-able -to-pay. ISPs do not constitute a free market. Reclassify and regulate them as a utility. Support people, not corporations.
—Eric Chen, San Francisco, CA

More broadband Internet, less weapons and manipulation from US towards Europe!
—Stefano Menolascina, ,

I am a micro-business owner who depends on the Internet for my livelihood. My storefront is on-line and international. I wouldn't be able to afford higher fees for a faster website, putting my business and my entrepreneurship at a disadvantage. An ISP should be classified as a common carrier like other telecommunications. Telephone service is available via the Internet and Internet service is available via telephone. This is the 21st century, everyone should have equal access to the Internet and the applications they choose to use.
—Terri Fisher, Narrows, VA

As an artist trying to get my name out (and hopefully sell artwork), I depend on Net Neutrality.
—Heather Vidal, Budd Lake, NJ

I thought we, as a nation, discouraged discrimination in all cases...?!?
—Brent Spencer, Long Beach, CA

I can not believe that you are caving in to the big money interests. I expect my government to do a better job than this. The internet should be, legally speaking, a utility. A two-tiered internet will be a disaster, as everyone but you understands. Protect the open internet. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Nancy Kaye Holcomb, Seattle, WA

A non-neutral internet is NOT internet
—Dominique Jacques-Brissette, Montréal,

Comcast and other big companies already take advantage of consumers. I don't have cable TV, and I am stuck with AT&T wireless phone. We can't have the gap widened between the rich, who can pay as much as they need to, and the poor who can't afford the money it costs for faster internet. This reminds me of time I spent in a Communist country - where the internet was controlled by the people in power.
—Pam C, Minneapolis, MN

The corporations and the 1%ers have enough special privileges, in the way of tax breaks and subsidies. Please let the rest of us at least have our internet services. We already pay more than the rest of the developed world for these services. Please don't price it completely out of our range.
—Jo A Howell, Gilroy, CA

The internet is the best chance of coming together globally to respond to climate change in the best way for the human race; permitting certain corporations to occupy the foreground for their parochial profit reduces the receding opportunity for the rest of us to use this precious tool for the good of all.
—Lin Griffith, Altadena, CA

Allowing ISPs to throttle Internet traffic will harm start ups and competition to established companies. Only existing, wealthy companies will be able to afford Internet "fast lanes" that transmit data at speeds customers expect while new businesses with limited financial resources will be unable to compete. The FCC needs to establish rules that preserve network neutrality and reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—John Zaharick, Ashland, PA

Please, fight for the little guy who can't defend himself.
—Rodrigo de Souza, ,

l make my living developing websites. this would destroy my business
—Jeffrey A Zamrzla, Topeka, KS

The rich get richer and … What a democracy we have.
—Allen Kanner, Albany, CA

Net Neutrality is incredibly important to me. I'm an aspiring artist and videogame designer. I upload my work on free sites, for people to enjoy them for free. I know, I SO know, that I would not be able to pay for "fast lanes" nor my intended audience (people interested in free art and games from an unknown indie) would. It's very important that we can share freely. If only big time companies have the good connections, then projects like mine will just die. Don't kill my project. Don't force me offline. Please, keep Net Neutrality. I depend on it.
—Ludmila Manicchio, Topeka, KS

Because we want to be able to keep our individual voice.
—Linda Bescript, Tucson, AZ

Net neutrality keeps the internet free for the people of this country. We shouldn't be told what we can and cannot see on the internet by a government that was based around freedom. Keeping net neutrality will uphold those values and keep the internet a free place like it should be. I, for one, will continue to fight for net neutrality for as long as I have to.
—Nicolette, West Mifflin, PA

I do not want to support legislation that will allow big corporations to set rules and regulations to an Internet that should remain neutral in terms of its user's access.
—Jesse Campbell, Somerville, MA

Don't destroy net neutrality. It is extremely important.
—Mr. Geo Svinos, Yuma, AZ

FCC: As an avid internet user and an avid American citizen who values the principles of democracy, I condemn a two-tiered class system of internet function. ONLY by declaring by law that the internet is a PUBLIC UTILITY will net neutrality and democracy be protected for all.
—Alice Dugar, Independence, OH

An open internet is best for everyone. Please keep it that way!
—Rodney Gonzalez, Paterson, NJ

It is important to me that we have an accessible internet for everyone, not just those able to pay more. It is important because I do not want to see an internet under the control of the big corporations and rich.
—Renee Bisel, San Diego, CA

This is the most important issue of our time. Please listen to THE PEOPLE, not the corporations.
—Ruth Waytz, LOS ANGELES, CA

I'm a self employed professional photographer and I have been in business for 30 years. I have finally reached a point with my on-line presence through 3 web sites where people can find me easily and fast. When you are self employed, the speed at which your web site loads is paramount in helping you compete with your competition. Money is always a huge factor when you are self employed and in my case is a week to week issue. If I have to start paying for fast download speed for 3 separate web sites it might be the last nail in the coffin for me. I can assure you it is the same for many of my colleagues. There are thousands of self employed photographers in the US and every single one of them will be affected in a negative way and could possibly put thousands of these people out of business if these new rules are allowed to go through. Please Chairman Wheeler, do not approve these new rules. Net Neutrality is vital for the survival for us as business owners. Please protect the open internet as we now know it. Sincerely, Greg Nikas Greg Nikas Photography greg@gregnikas.com www.gregnikas.com
—Greg Nikas, Newburyport, MA

Internet neurality is important to the freedom of speech and expression.It is the pillar of this generation,for the better or the worse it us who will guide it.Don't try to manipulate the internet because you are already walking on a very thin line.Aren't you done with fucking up the human race?Aren't you done with fucking up the planet?
—Iliescu Cosmin-Adrian, ,

Innovation and choice. Removing New Neutrality limits our choices to the biggest companies who are well entrenched and unlikely to drive innovation that improves the net and increases choices for consumers.
—Craig Horgan, Arlington, MA

Big corporations are already squeezing out everybody else. Why help them do it better?
—Arthur Thomas, Harrisville, MI

I want entrepreneurship to flourish.
—Ian Asaff, Medford, MA

It is completely absurd to treat internet access as a luxury item. The internet has become an integral part in our society as a whole, but also individually, for the greater part of the U.S. population. It is a way to communicate – now, the most used form I suspect. It is utterly imperative to effectively compete in business. It is how people receive and convey news and other information. The internet is a priceless resource for students, professionals, parents, researchers, virtually every one of us. This plan is one, giant step in the wrong direction. I bet it makes investors just salivate at the thought of pay-for-access. And, next? How about we establish a system to answer 911 calls in descending order from wealthiest neighborhood and down? But, that's crazy. Yea. It is.
—Hallie Widner, Alliance, NE

If this bill passes we won't know internet as it is today. The only way of being free will dissapear.
—Dany Alejandro Arevalo Pinzon, ,

The whole concept of the internet is built upon Net Neutrality and fairness for packet routing. Trying to regulate the new rules involving a "fast lane" internet would require too much oversight and be slow for innovation and technology. Any traffic that the ISP deemed to be unnecessary, they can slow it down to be useless unless they pay what is basically an extortion fee. A fast lane would give ISPs the ability to control the internet to be highly anti-competitive. The concept of a fast lane would also violate privacy concerns since they would need to track and label traffic to determine if they are priority traffic. Having Net Neutrality would ensure innovative technology be able to grow and not worry if they will be restricted by ISP. Net Neutrality would guarantee customers and companies good service and fairness. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers and get rid of the fast lane rules.
—Alex Chee, San Jose, CA

I utterly demand that internet service providers be classified as common carriers to avoid a classist system of internet access.
—Heron Greenesmith, Somerville, MA

The intenet has become a utility, like electricity, Gas and telephones... Treat ti the same way!!!!
—James Long, Hummelstown, PA

Having access to the information, opinions, ideas, etc. that is offered by the internet in its current unrestricted form is something that every citizen should be able to experience and utilize fully. I do not want to see this great resource hindered or outright denied to anyone in my lifetime or for future generations of our country.
—Anthony Feiner, Woodbridge, VA

As a Computer Science student looking to go into Web Application Development, I am deeply concerned with any plan that puts the internet at risk. I believe the only way to ensure a level playing field for all is to reclassify the internet as a common carriers. They should be treated similarly to any other utility. We would not stand for good water pressure for citizen who can afford to pay more, and low water pressure for everyone else, why should we stand for a fast internet for only those who can pay more. Please reject the actions of big business and ensure a free and open internet for everyone!
—Frank Dye, San Francisco, CA

Information should flow freely without any filters, restrictions, or someone deciding for us.
—Herb Sayas, New Orleans, LA

We are falling behind many European countries in terms of internet speed and access, all for the name of money. I am not naive to that fact that money makes the world turn, but just as it is immoral to price gouge people for the price of water and electricity, it is also immoral to squeeze the internet for all the money possible. Internet needs to be realized as a Human Right. Every living person has the right to internet, and shouldn't be charged exuberant prices so that corporate fat cats can sit on this money without upgrading the infrastructure of their networks. We, the people, want change. We, the people, DEMAND change. Tom Wheeler's plan is not the change we want.
—Lee Mann, Vancouver, WA

The FCC proposed Internet rules are very discriminating. We middle class/poor people can not afford the fast access charge simply to do online banking. This is not acceptable nor fair. The two tier program simply is not fair!
—Bonnie Webb, Leesburg, IN

The internet has already been revealed to be an arena for intrusive government spying on all of us; if it is additionally allowed to be set up as a feudal-style structure with the wealthy few getting what is best and the rest of us accepting crumbs, it won't be worth bothering with at all. Is this really what you want--and can't you see how this would impact all the businesses and related activities that rely on our continued participation in the net? Think it over--then give us the only thing a democratic society should ever produce: a level playing field for all.
—Daniel Raphael, University Place, WA

Our internet speed is already slower than much of the connected world and we're the beacon of free speech and press. We fight to spread these freedoms. Pretty ironic to take them away or diminish them in the USA.
—S Israil, skokie, IL

Net neutrality is key for innovation. Startups count on an even playing field on the internet to help them compete against the big boys. Killing net neutrality means stifling innovation. Keep the internet free and open to help this country move forward.
—Joren Winge, San francisco, CA

Hello - in response to your request for feedback. I oppose the upcoming proposal to allow ISPs to create fast and slow lanes, for 3rd party content providers. This is contrary to the concept of Net Neutrality, which has allowed the Internet to flourish. I encourage you, instead, to re-impose common carrier rules on Internet Service Providers, thereby ensuring that we will have a free an open internet for years to come. This is an important issue for me and my business - one which I will be following closely and involving my representatives in. Thank you for your time and best regards.
—Chris Plough, Box Elder, SD

We, as citizens, provided the tax money that developed the Internet, and now we are expected to stand by while corporate interests manipulate it for their profit -- and our LOSS ! This is totally unfair. I received a response from Tom Wheeler to an EMail stating that he is on the side of the public, yet is obviously ready to hand over controls to those same corporate interests. I cry, "FOUL" ! If he is willing to obfuscate his real intentions with statements like that, I really don't trust him.
—Robert Kraft, Orrtanna, PA

Use the internet almost every day depending on the weather and electricity. Would be lost without it.
—Sherryll Sprunger, Berne, IN

Net neutrality helps people to investigate the news when newscasters and politicians lie to them.
—Bruce Krawisz, Marshfield, WI with the public being spyed on at every occasion.the net as it is still giving a sense of freedom.take this away and the public have nothing.

—Watson Watson, ,

Bandwidth should be a public utility. Until you stand up and do the right thing our industries and our research facilities are being outpaced by countries with decent infrastructure. The market is not enough to motivate the infrastructure upgrades we need. Our system is broken and needlessly slow as it is. These new rules just make it worse.
—Lori Kelly, Miami, FL

Don't make the U.S the next Egypt.
—Logan ragsdale, memphis, TN

I seriously hope you consider the very negative consequences of these rulings. Once again, this is yet another point at which the government can choose the good of the people over these massive, greedy, companies. The Internet needs to be a free forum for all of us to exchange ideas, information, services, at a fair, completely even rate. This is the only way that this should be ruled . Internet neutrality is the most important thing for innovating new and crucial ideas for everyone. Please, for the good of humanity, ensure Internet neutrality.
—Christina Lis, North Tonawanda, NY

Net neutrality allows everyone equal access to information and the knowledge should be free not based on wealth!
—James Seiling, Los Angeles, CA

Internet is NOT the place where few can dictate their rules to everyone else. I urge you to reevaluate the rules you propose and let us, people of the Internet, take part in making this decision. Thank you.
—Konstantin Minevskiy, Las Vegas, NV

Quoting John Bergmayer,"To expect that you can come in and use public infrastructure and funds to build a network and then be free of any regulation is absurd." "'When Verizon itself is describing these activities as a Title II common carrier, how can the FCC look at broadband internet and continue acting as though it's not a telecommunication network?" I do not like being played, and I don't big corporations being allowed to game the system this way. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Not only is it common sense, it's the truth.
—Mary Suda, Clifton Park, NY

If we don't have Net Neutrality, the ability to be creative and innovative in the future will be suppressed. Only the big and the rich voices will be heard. The others will be drowned out. What a loss for our future!
—Gillian Langdon, new york, NY

Normally people hate Comcast only after they sign up for service with them, but I hate Comcast because I can't get service with them, nor will they provide service to me or my neighborhood pretty much ever. I bought a house in 2009 because Comcast said via their website, online chat, and phone sales that they provided service at that address. Only once I'd bought the house and tried to actually get the service installed did they say, oh sorry actually we don't provide service there. Instead of the 25+ megabit I expected to have at my house, which I rely on as a work-from-home web developer, I could only get 3 megabit DSL from at&t (and I had to BATTLE them to get that!). Literally YEARS later, at&t doubles my speed... to 6 megabit. I have no hope of getting good internet. Comcast has cost me hundreds of thousands of dollars from lost property value, lost time, lost opportunities. All because they'd rather buy out their 2nd largest (non) competitor instead of building out their own infrastructure to provide the service they promised their customers. Now they want to double dip everyone on top of that. No. Just, no.
—Ian Cook, Nevada City, CA

I do not approve of the proposal and believe this would lead in time, to further distinctions, tiers, pricing plans and restrictions in regards to internet service. I am very certain that these companies will discriminate against certain streaming applications if given the opportunity. Please stand up against this.
—Germain Zepeda, Phoenix, AZ

Without a free and open internet, the over-commercialization and greed inherent in today's megacorporations will absolutely ruin the 'net as we know it today. As it is, the incessant ads and attendant malware is making the internet a cesspool.
—Keith McMaugh, Cranston, RI

Keep "the internet" as ONE THING. KEEP IT EQUAL!!!!
—Patrick Donnelly, Guerneville, CA

We need to prevent the rich and well off from having too much power over the internet. If we have a two-tiered system, those with more money will over power those without, and access to information for poor and middle-class people will be limited. This is just wrong!
—David Bly, Ithaca, NY

A free and honest press is key to a viable democracy. A neutral internet, that favors no one based on their wealth, has to be part of that free press.
—John Schwartz, Richford, NY

A big part of my business identity depends on the freedom of the Internet. Don't close this last avenue to free speech unfettered by big Corporate interests and dictatorship! Please reclassify our ISPs as common carriers! Meaning, they should carry ALL of us as EQUALS! It's not just Net Neutrality at stake here, it's Net EQUALITY!!
—Mark Kausler, Glendale, CA

The internet is currently the last bastion of true equality and freedom of speech. If this proposal passes, that last bastion is doomed to extinction. Please do not allow the internet to be perverted by the high dollar lobbyist/special interest group model that has so crippled our government.
—Cassidy Rockhill, Bloomington, IN

Major ISPs already have a monopoly on the market, we don't need to provide them with the opportunity to regulate the internet as well, their responsibilities should be solely based in providing service, not specifying which service they feel is more important.
—George Eichman IV, Roxbury Crossing, MA

Internet access is a necessity in today's world, and it should be treated as such. On the internet, people can gather the information they need, and can make their voices heard. If this proposal is implemented, the ISPs will be able to grant preferential treatment to those who are able to pay, and everyone else will be effectively silenced or unable to find much of what they're looking for. Please regulate the internet as you would any other necessity, and insist on equal access for everyone.
—Erik Rieselbach, Bronx, NY

Mr. Chairman this is unacceptable, not everyone has the funds to pay for these needless increase in fees to maintain the same speeds that we have access to currently. And even if we did, the internet isn't "owned" by anyone and we should not be discriminate against who gets higher quality service based on how much they pay. Have a heart and look at all the petitions you're getting, you know deep down inside that this isn't the right thing. It might look like the right thing from a financial standpoint, but come on, not everyone in the country looks at things that way. Mr. Chairman, I challenge you to look at this from our perspective. I leave you with that sir. Stay true to your heart, and have a great day :)
—Darry Oliver, Durham, NC

Net Neutrality matters because without it business never would have been able to get started in the early internet, and now with these two tiers, there will be plenty of businesses delegated to the slow tier that will never be able to get off the ground because they're so slow that people just click off the page. Having two tiers instead of Net Neutrality kills the free market, as well as an open and free flow of information. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Niko Thompson, Cincinnati, OH

True Net Neutrality is important to people like me who freely share ideas and innovation from my home server and internet connection. I know no one likes more regulation, but I truly feel the internet can be directly compared to the interstate infrastructure allowing Americans to to travel freely sharing goods and ideas efficiently. Thank you for considering my concerns.
—Elliott Long, Hamilton, OH

The internet is a large part of my life. I'm a bed bound quadriplegic and spend most of my days on the internet. If it was restricted the way they are trying to do then my life would be rather dull.
—Jessica McCoy, Iowa Park, TX

The internet MUST remain equally available to ALL.
—Leonard B Chandler, San Jose, CA

Net neutrality is important to me as a consumer. I do not trust the cable companies to have any interest at all in my well being or access to quality services. I think they already make enough money and have no pressing need for "for profit" prioritization of internet access.
—Steven Gutman, Rockville, MD

Your elitist plan makes a sick joke of the word "neutrality."
—Susan Hathaway, Pico Rivera, CA

Are you INSANE? This will kill the internet in the US, and put it at a huge disadvantage with the rest of the world. Giving companies this much control? HOW much money are FCC members being paid as back handers?
—Michell Topham, Wilmington, NC

As an engineer and computer scientist, the internet is a critical component of my professional and academic life. As an average american, it is also my biggest form of entertainment. I and my fellow Americans have enjoyed the fruits of the internet because it is a new frontier; unbridled and allowed to grow and evolve. If you dismantle net neutrality and give control over to the ISPs, you will be allowing less than a dozen major corporations to dictate how the internet is used. It will cripple competition and innovation. The media companies pushing for the destruction of net neutrality have a vested interest in doing so. They want to cling to antiquated business models instead of changing with the rapid advances of technology. I urge you not to give into them. In fact, I ask that you stand up for the best interests of American businesses and citizens and reclassify ISPs as Title II, ensuring a free and open internet for everybody.
—John Fetrow, Saint Louis, MO

In America everyone is to be equal.
—K Berge, Long Lake, MN

I am sick of getting squeezed by the microcosm monopoly that seems to be squeezing every aspect of our telecommunications liberty, rolling in the dough, giving NOTHING back to society, and playing the FCC like a violin.
—Paul P. Soucek, Venice, CA

you corrupt BASTARDS have destroyed all of TV---PRIVATIZING whats the public owns ...and now you want to fuck w/ privatizing the internet FUCK YOU CORRUPT BASTARDS!!!!!!!!!
—j lewis, phx, AZ

ISP's in the USA are already horrible in service and speed compared to the rest of the world. Please don't allow them to make even more money and provide worse service.
—Chris Donoghue, Palatine, IL

Being a handicapped senior citizen on a fixed income, the removal of the free Internet and replacing it with a tiered fee structure is unconscionable and would impact greatly my daily activities.
—Mel Solomon, Roseville, CA

This is a very important issue for a country is supposed to be a democracy. ISPs need to be classified a common carriers.
—Wendy Fast, Dansville, NY

Don't be nuts!
—Henry Neal Camp, Tempe, AZ

I keep trying to start up little businesses on the internet. I haven't had one genuinely succeed yet, but please do not take away the chance that it will! My bits are just as important as Google's, Amazon's, AT&T's, etc. The different parts of the big conglomerates will game the system, meaning that any big company that wants to do the same as my little companies will get a huge bandwidth boost over anything I might create. Please, do what's right for everyone instead of what's right for a few large corporations! Thank you.
—Ken Corey, Mountain View, CA

Keep it fair and honest just like our country is supposed to be not the land of the rich and the dishonest
—Daniel Schlegel Jr, Snyder, TX

I consider free, open and equal access to the internet as a basic human right. I also think that the internet should be thought of as belonging to the public. Everyone, worldwide should be able to gain access to the highest speeds possible. Gigantic corporations should not have the right to limit access speeds.
—Gary Fox, Middletown, CT

Large cable and internet service providers already have enough of a share in these markets and consumers and online businesses deserve to be protected from their monopolies. Comcast has treated me and many people I know unfairly in the past and raised prices with no warning and there is no reason to believe they will act in a commercially reasonable way. Keep the internet open and free because it's what America deserves. Don't allow pay-for-fast-lane pricing!
—Jordan Carlson, Indianapolis, IN

Net Neutrality protects the people.
—Tara Kerksick, Festus, MO

Please, do the right thing. Uphold Net Neutrality!
—Karl Heitzenroeder, Florissant, MO

In a Country filled with financial inequality, this ridiculous plan furthers what is already wrong.
—Sharon S Dymowski, Alexandria, VA

This is a violation of our first ammendment which allows freedom of speech, the press, and the media.
—Loa Mackay, ,

Reclassify ISPs as common carriers immediately. Anything else is just another handout to corporate greed and corporate lack of accountability. Privatization means pay to play.
—Michael J Fowler, Glendale, AZ

We need to keep the playing field level on the Internet in order to keep up our global competitveness and increase jobs/boost economy domestically.
—Mr. Willis Gravelle, Carbondale, CO

I work professionally with small businesses, and am the owner of a small business which requires an internet presence myself. I also worry about access to impartial media being impeded. It's all well and good for Tom Wheeler to say he wouldn't allow it, but what about his successor? Or their successor? You're creating the groundwork for a severely skewed perception of the world through our last equal representative.
—Ariel Hassman, Venice, CA

I think ISPs should be reclassified as common carriers so we can start maintaining existing infrastructure and start getting higher speeds in more and more places. Now is the time in technologies fast growth that will be snuffed out if net neutrality is killed off. It is bad for everyone.
—Mike, Minneapolis, MN

We're falling behind in bandwidth as a nation. This will only set us back farther. The average citizen needs to have unrestricted access to the internet, not just corporations with deep pockets. Great minds and ideas are not likely to spawn from corporate profits, but from American Sprit, and the future will definitely be dependent on bandwidth.
—Andrew Glaser, Milwaukee, WI

The internet has become essential for research, information, communication. Daily It is utilized for work, my children's education and to communicate with people across the globe. It opens the world to those who cannot afford do otherwise. Access to it should be unfettered and certainly not tiered.
—Lynn and Roger stapes, Dexter, OR

Already you have big corporations running the cable and charging us taxpayers ridiculous fees to watch cable! I remember a time where you didn't need boxes to watch TV just the cable line! Now you want to do the same to the internet? ?? It should be free! ! It's a space satellite for Pete's sake! !! It belongs to us the tax payers not corprations! ! Quit regulating our amenities! ! Enough is enough!
—Leticia Trevino, Lansing, MI

Corporations controlling a system that the taxpayers paid for is ludicrous. The price of admission is already too high to access the internet, let it be free!
—Mr. Russ Hills, San Jose, CA

We the people of this country and planet want an open internet with no government interference. So now is the time to begin following your conscience (if you still have one) not your wallet and do what is right.
—James McConnell, Glendale, AZ

Since the media is no longer "free," the Internet is the sole source of unadulterated information as long as people exercise discernment. If the FCC eradicates Net Neutrality, I will boycott using it any longer and search out other alternatives instead.
—Nancy Baer, Sedona, AZ

No discrimination on line,please.
—Spiro Aretoulis, ,

The free flow of information is the greatest thing about the 21st century.
—Anna Platis, Baltiimore, MD

ISPs should be reclassified as common carriers. Effective regulation is vital. I already can't afford cable television and cable broadband. I pay for much less expensive fixed wireless which is also much slower. Inevitably. with Chairman Wheeler's proposal, prices to the consumer for sufficiently fast and secure internet connections will increase. I rely on the internet for too many things to manage without it (just like other utilities) and my cost should be regulated just like my other necessary utilities.
—Naomi Harrison, Santa Fe, NM

Net neutrality empowers individuals without the monetary means to a formal education to better themselves through learning online. The end of net neutrality will mean the end of a valuable learning resource for the poor.
—Christopher Ummen, Springfield, VA

Suppressing information is never a good idea. You want the population to be informed, by removing net neutrality you allow company's to decide what information is important, this suppresses freedom of speech and allows corporations far too much power. Let people decide for themselves what is important, it fosters critical thinking, which is much needed in society today to solve problems. Do not let corporations buy another part of society.
—Bellinda Kallimanis, Tampa, FL

Free flow of information is essential to democracy; two-tiers is all about oligarchy.
—Martin Iseri, Fair Oaks, CA

Anti-net neutrality is the result of the conflict of interest created when cable TV companies also provide access to net content that directly competes with its TV services. This setup is an unmitigated disaster which will only get worse with time.
—David Taubner, ,

Net neutrality is important because average American citizens can afford extra cost.
—Alejandro Ruiz, Williams, CA

I met the love of my life on the internet. I don't want it to change in this way. Stop this madness. Please.
—David Toboz, Burnsville, MN

First Amendment, need I say more?
—Marc Pendergast, Chapel Hill, NC

Over the years I have seen choice and service decrease while cost continues to rise meanwhile the FCC has done nothing for the benefit of consumers. Take a stand for us, the citizens of the United States, the consumers, the innovators, the content providers, and do one easy thing - reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Listen to the voices of the people, not the dollars and paid lobbyists there for the benefit of a handful of corporations.
—Ramon R Medina, Houston, TX

Please consider the people in your deliberations. The majority of us can not afford higher fees in order to conduct our businesses. The large corporations can.
—Anna C Kaohelaulii, Honolulu, HI

Net Neutrality is the AMERICAN way. I value the openness of the internet. Please rethink the rules. Keep the internet open to all —Helen Edwards, White Hall, IL

Net Neutrality is important. If you imposed these rules you will be destroying it. Net Neutrality is what's keeping the internet a "laissez faire" economy. If you eliminate that, all you'll be doing is putting the powers into service providers to do as they please, essentially destroying the free open market of the internet. That's terrible. Please don't do this.
—Duc Nguyen, San Jose, CA

As an 80-year-old veteran, retired and on limited income, I cannot afford additional costs for Internet service, or deal with discriminatory degradation of its quality.
—James J. Boone Jr., Malden, MA

ISPs should be classified as common carriers. The reasons to do so are numerous and are in the best interests of our entire nation. Not to do so only benefits a small number of corporations. Our government should not be driven by greed but by the voice of its citizens, or so I have been told. I have yet to see that work in practice, please let this be the exception. Sincerely, Justin M. Spotts
—Justin M Spotts, Ulster Park, NY

Throw out proposed new rules and reclasify interntet service providers as common carriers. Preserve net neutrality !!
—Esteban Lladó, Bayamon, PR

If I have to deal with slower internet because large conglomerate Cable/Telecom ISP's are hogging the bandwidth I will stop using the internet as much. It will hurt my small ISP provider from providing the access it now does. WHY allow large providers to become LARGER. Why not keep the competition playing field equal. KEEP Net neutrality as it is.
—John Toscano, Bennington, VT

I buy clothing only from online businesses with products made in the USA. These business operate on a shoestring budget and do have the money for a "fast lane". Please reclassify the internet as a telecommunications service to maintain net neutrality so these businesses can survive, and I can buy as my conscience dictates.
—Carol Pinson, Martinez, CA

The internet is a universal tool for democracy and should be regulated as a common carrier. My husband and I use the internet daily to research, write letters to the editor and share opinions with friends and acquaintances. This ability should not be compromised in order to award Comcast and others with larger profits. We were Comcast customers before we had a choice of one other carrier and we found them to be sorely lacking in any concern for customer service. When they were a monopoly in our neighborhood they had no incentive to improve service or prices.
—Ms. Jenise Porter, Tucson, AZ

Living in a rural area and being paralyzed, the internet is the only way I can keep up with the world.
—Victoria Folker, Bandon, OR

I'm incredibly skeptical that you will do the right thing. There has been a steady stream of decisions in the past couple decades that choose corporate profits over what is in the best interests of the citizenry. Please be the first decision makers that, at least in this instance, stem the tide of callous and indifferent rulings that make things more difficult for the average citizen. Please remember that we are citizens who happen to be consumers not consumers who happen to be citizens.
—Robert Barnard, Pittsburgh, PA

Please do not ruin the Internet for the entire country. You should be protecting the public, not siding with corporations for money.
—Steven Milner, Addison, TX

Please please keep the Internet open for all traffic. Fast lane is not an option and worse for us in rural areas. I owned an ISP for 12 years and had to close my doors due to a giant telcomm protected by the oklahoma corp commission and the FCC forcing me out of business. Open internet and making them be a common carrier is the only way to protect the consumer. The consumer is important here not the Telcomm provider. I want to be able to get the data and information that I want without restriction and without the Mega ISP deciding for me. If the FCC would make sure that all consumers had Giabit Internet throughout the US this would be a non issue. The average speed is rural areas is 1Meg or less. Please think about the consumer not the greedy corporations.
—Anthony Morgan, Poteau, OK

Net Neutrality matters because of the monopolies that are popping up throughout the US. It is time for some competition for AT&T, Verizion and Comcast!
—Calvin Tuttle, Ypsilanti, MI

It's not fair for the Internet to be two different speeds, faster for those who can afford it. The Internet should be a utility, same price for everyone.
—Joshua Pfeffer, Berkeley, CA

I actually believe in our Constitution, and its Bill of Rights! Blocking internet - in other words information access and communication - is denying those Constitutional Rights. Including "whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it."
—Elizabeth Zenker, Arcata, CA

I don't want to have basic services. I want the the full internet independant of my purse. I still remember these analogue modem days. Don't want them back.
—Bruno Zacke, Berlin,

I've stated this time & time again. This will create "information brokers". Imagine paying higher costs for faster & faster speeds to get the information you need/want. We are doing this now but on a much grander scale.
—Jeremy, Tustin, CA

It seems like we complain about this every 6 months like clockwork and then 6 months later, you try and pass the same crummy rules again. A two tiered Internet is a horrible idea. If Comcast was having such terrible difficulty managing network traffic then they should get out of the business and let someone else make money off of it. Because, let's be honest, this is really all about companies like Comcast padding their profit margins at the expense of the American consumer. Nothing more, nothing less.
—John Clark, Jonesboro, GA

Open access to all is vital to our nation.
—Terry Eby, Arlington, VA

Because giving big businesses the power to pick and choose what services people get the best access to is tantamount to censorship. No-one should have that kind of power
—Chris Farris, ,

I believe in the american dream. All people, rich and poor should be given equal ground to stand on with the internet.
—Andrew Dickinson, Grand Haven, MI

it seems to be one of the last democratic areas in public life - it would be best to maintain it as a space where all can use it equally w/out having to worry about getting slowed down by those w/ extra $$. that happens enough as it is...
—Miguel Ramos, Bellingham, WA

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Ben Corbin, Kansas City, MO

Some things should not be for sale. One of them is our right to unrestricted use of the Internet.
—Vernon and Mary Joyce Dixon, Hiawassee, GA

I believe in transparency and simplicity. If I pay for an Internet speed I should get it, not some convoluted package of some select sites or throttling to certain sites.
—Jereme E Guenther, Lebanon, OR

Net Neutrality is important to me because it allows my friends, family and I to use the Internet with the same access as the millionaires and billionaires. If it is allowed that provides can speed up Internet for those able or willing to pay more it would end the everyday persons ability to connect to the public. Basicly those with power and money would become absolute with no competition. NO FCC RULES!!
—Charles Bramhall, Hanover Park, IL

I try to stay informed through different sources, support local businesses, and check local events. All of that is at risk if we lose net neutrality.
—Sarah Steel, De Pere, WI

Internet access is a public utility, and there should be open & equal access to everyone, not just the people wealthy enough to afford it. We don't reserve water or electricity for the wealthy -- why would we with internet?
—Michele Crissinger, Cleveland, OH

I use small, independent websites all the time. If they were forced to (or couldn't) pay premiums to maintain browsing speed on their website I'd be extremely disappointed. Please don't do this and further kill innovation and entrepreneurship in America.
—Justin Torraco, Kearny, NJ

Keep the internet democratic.
—Sister Honora Kinney, Albany, NY

If there was no net neutrality, the business the large businesses want to protect would not be there. There are many more good things to come that will not happen if there is not net neutrality.
—Mr. George Harvey, Stockton, CA

Everyone needs the same level playing field in our country, and this is just another step against that.
—Ronald Hadley, Rancho Mirage, CA

De facto corporate governance is NOT de jure! Back off the People's freedom.
—TimothyMainka WithoutPrejudice, Grand Rapids, MI

When I first got access to the internet, I had local dial-up. It was slow, inefficient, and required regular start-ups, usually when I was in the middle of doing something, reading or working on a project. I switched to high-speed broadband after several years, and now have DSL, from ATT. Allowing ATT and others to create a higher priced level for others and allowing them to potentially reduce the speed I'm already paying for too much for would make it feel like I was back on dial-up with the clumsy and ineffective processes foisted on me, and others like me. Please put the classification for all ISPs back to common carriers. With that classification, there will be incentive to increase the speed for all and, as with ATT currently, they can charge more for premium speeds without causing problems for the rest of us who can't afford higher prices for less service.
—Tom Harlander, Wood River, IL

The proposed new rules would give a huge monopolistic competitive advantage to the high-rollers, Those of us of more modest means still depend on fair and equal access.
—Mr Craig P Markham, Dundee, OR

Internet connections are vital to modern American life, from shopping for things you can't get locally but need, to researching for school papers, to watching TV shows better than crap cable. Internet Protections are vital!!! Carriers cannot be allowed to force slow speeds and high prices. Most of America can no longer afford even what's needed, we certainly cannot afford to lose Net Neutrality!!
—Jennifer Konungrinn, Coventry, CT

I pay for bandwidth. What I use it for my business NOT the provider's! PERIOD!
—Carey Hyson, Fort Worth, TX

The internet is such a basic necessity to many who rely on it for work, school and play that I am surprised and saddened to see corporate influence controlling the decision to make it a common carrier.
—Michael Givan, Murray, KY

We know money talks and little people walk, but for once, just for once, please let the little guy win. Let democracy win in the last place it has a chance. It has certainly lost any real significance in government. Everyone believes that the only reason net neutrality is in danger is because the FCC has been bought off by big money. If net neutrality is gutted by the FCC, I will always believe that it had nothing to do with good policy. I will believe that politicians found one more way to sell our collective birthrights for personal gain.
—Dr. William F Strong, Brownsville, TX

Net Neutrality is the only way that the common person can afford reliable internet. Without it we may as well go back to dial up phone service. We all deserve the right to fast internet without being penalized for our cheaper rates.
—Thomas Mashburn, La Porte, IN

Net neutrality trumps Net inequality everytime.
—Tyler Martin, Byrdstown, TN

I'm still waiting for fast internet and the FCC wants to have a two-tiered system - what are you thinking? Chairman Wheeler - do you use the internet? Have you ever watched a silly cat video? Are you agile with your smart phone? Do you have any idea of what your proposed rules will mean for so many of us still waiting for the really fast lines? Please don't throw us under the bus.
—Suzi J. Schaum, Willow Street, PA

the internet has helped educate people who otherwise would never had the chance to be educated. Internet neutrality means that education and information enjoys a better spread. it keeps people so busy that time is better spent on the internet. if the internet is limited, many people would now have much free time to become involved in many an illicit activity which threatens the safety of society. Internet has saved many an individual who would otherwise have been totally bored and getting up to all sorts of mischief, thus threatening the safety and peace of mind of Society at large, albeit it's bad already. would be extremely worse and most dangerous would life be if internet neutrality is taken away from Society Thank you for reading.
—Rashid Abass, ,

ISPs must be classified as common carriers. It is long overdue.
—Sam Shirley, Oakland, CA

The internet was meant to be free and equal to all...
—Daniel Etapa, Chicago, IL

You people are horrible. You cant rule the world like that. ;D
—Jannik Weiße, ,

Railroads and airlines are common carriers and they operate in a manner that serves the common good. The Internet should be viewed the same way.
—George E. Milkowski, Chicago, IL

Do not ruin one of the greatest creations this world has seen
—Tony Thorbjornsen, Wappingers Falls, NY

Land of the FREE - home of the BRAVE. This is an ethical & moral issue for which you are responsible. Do the right thing.
—Sniedze Rungis, Kalamazoo, MI

The end of net neutrality would have horrible ramifications. It would kill innovation, raise consumer prices and convert the Internet into a pay to play format. It will be the end of the Internet as we know it. Don't allow this to happen.
—Marc Albert, NewYork, NY

If you kill net neutrality, you kill new internet start-ups !
—Havill D'Arcy, Camp Dennison, OH

Open and free forums of real critical discussion are needed if we want to call ourselves a Democracy
—Mireya Coronado, SAN JOSE, CA

The Internet should remain open. No one should have too much control. Net neutrality fosters creativity and encourages innovation via startups.
—Michael Pierce, North Stonington, CT

Keeping the internet open to all people is so important because the internet has become a part of our every day society. I pay $80 a month for my internet service. That's insane! And now you want to let them make internet even more expensive? I don't understand why you think this is okay. This is the age of information. More people have access to knowledge than ever before and society is so much better for it. Why would you take that away from me or from people who are in more dire situations? You must reclassify ISPs as common carriers. It is the simply the right thing to do.
—Melissa Jones, Kaysville, UT

The internet should be absolutely neutral. The new terms of your decision are completely divergent from the meaning of net neutrality and undermine the its basic intent.
—Benjamin Allen, Savannah, GA

Net neutrality is not good for anyone and it would destroy a very large part of the econemy.
—Cory, ,

Good connections for everybody must be the aim - the net really does make it more possible for us all to navigate the changing economy and ecology of human cultures - without even access the future will be badly skewed ...
—Andrew Langford, Rockaway, NJ

Creating internet rules that only allow the biggest players to have the fastest traffic will hurt competition and kill entrepreneurship in the internet sector. We will have no startups trying to compete with the big boys because they won't be able to deliver rich content without the deep pockets that the large content creators can pay. Please, please, please don't create a two tiered system for internet access.
—Bill Gregg, Alpharetta, GA

Access to knowledge much be protected. Allowing corporate greed to slow that access in favor of charging higher rates is not only deplorable, but could damage the future. Inventors, knowledge seekers, small business owners could all be blocked from full access of the internet unless they pay a higher fee, or agree to some other ridiculous term. With only 3 major ISPs in the US at all, there is no reason to think they wouldn't take advantage of these rules and use them to the detriment of society and their gain. There would be no competitor to switch to, and we as a people would have no recourse. This cannot be allowed to happen. The internet needs to be classified under the same statutes as radio.
—Kayla Domeyer, GRAND RAPIDS, MI

I am retired, and no longer live in the area where I spent much of my adult life. The internet is my lifeline, allowing me to keep in touch with my family and old friends while making new ones. I also occasionally do free-lance writing to help make ends meet, the internet is vital to that. We can bare afford the internet services we already have. Extra fees would be a hardship. It's not fair to allow big companies to profit from something like the internet, which was intended to be of benefit to EVERYONE, not just the rich!
—Barbara Rich, Cushing, OK

This not only a license to privately sensor, this can be used as a powerful tool for ISPs to eliminate internet sellers that create competition for big corporations. The last time I checked, we're not China.
—Christopher Sessa, Mesa, AZ

All my life I have been concerned with the media's bias towards big, entrenched interests, and its systemic disregard for the voice of the little guy. If Net Neutrality disappears, the Internet will become the same kind of place. Please protect free speech. Save Net Neutrality.
—Ms. Gillian Andrews, New York, NY

Corporations are not people, money is not speech. Don't make the internet about corporate greed, power and control
—Jerry Oppenheimer, Charlotte, NC

ISPs are common carriers, anyway you look at it. Any other interpretation is just plain wrong.
—Jose Flores, tanzana, CA

The best way I can explain why net neutrality is extremely important revolves around the idea of innovation. When you abandon net neutrality this hinders communication and future technological innovation. Businesses and future start-ups will not have the equal access to grow their organization if the freedom of the internet is gone. No one owns the internet; it is a network of networks spanning the globe. ISPs may give us access to the internet, but they do not own the internet; nor does the government or other. corporations.
—Wendell Wright, Harrisburg, PA

Without Net Neutrality there will be a lot less innovation and a lot more exploitative abuse.
—Tristan Donofrio, San Jose, CA

This is the opposite of net neutrality. Declare broadband a utility and regulate ISPs as common carriers like the FCC should have twenty years ago.
—Ian Pugsley, Charlotte, NC

Net neutrality is the back-bone of a free and open internet. The internet is now a central part of ALL of our personal, professional, and expressive lives and should not be enclosed by private interests for profit. In an era of media concentration, it is net neutrality that allows the minimal diversity of views and ideas within the public sphere. Since the infrastructure ISPs utilize (as well as help maintain and build) represents a public investment, private entities should be bound by a contract with the public that cannot be ignored and then monetized.
—Benedict Stork, Minneapolis, MN

My family and I live on a small fixed income. The Internet has been a great equalizer, allowing us access to important free information, programs, and entertainment. Please put the needs of average Americans above the special interests of big corporations.
—Vicki Stevens, Kearns, UT

I am tired of regulators changing the regulations to benefit corporations at the expense of users. Profitable corporations do not need more assistance to make more money, reduce competition and gain a larger share of the market.
—Thomas P. Homan, Salem, OR

I'm already suffering under data caps and arbitrarily throttled download speeds because nobody regulates my local cable ISP. The last thing I, or anyone else, needs on top of that is the establishment of an openly unfair system designed to double charge the consumer for bandwidth just because we like having our Netflix and watching it, too. This plan is clearly designed to do one thing: make money for the telecomm companies without forcing them to provide one iota of actual, substantive product to the consumers. Just another example of beltway cronyism at its finest.
—Jason Heredia, Springfield, MO

It's time for us to catch up with the other nations who have already successfully implemented the plan proposed above. Nations like South Korea and Japan offer far superior connection speeds at significantly lower prices, yet the ISPs are still thriving and the customer satisfaction levels are astronomically higher than they are in America. It is truly a win-win for both sides. Not classifying ISPs as common carriers is only a win for the ISPs as they will continue to monopolize the industry, getting larger and richer, at the expense of the people because we have no option to choose a competitive service.
—Stephen, Garner, NC

The internet is an equalizer. Young and old, rich and poor can access the internet and have equal opportunity and equal access to all of the information available there. This is how it should be. We already live in a society where equal access to things like quality education and jobs has been cut for the least of us. Please help to ensure that this last, and truly crucial, area of our society remains fair for us all. My ability to go to a website should not be decided for me by AT&T or Verizon; I should be able to make that decision for myself, as should we all.
—Tina Bradley, Hyattsville, MD

A two tiered internet structure is the death knell for a fair and level playing field on the internet. Allowing money to determine who "wins" will crush competition and monetize a system that should be classified as a public utility.
—Stephen Weber, Wentzville, MO

It is bad enough that the giant telecoms want to get bigger and grab more power and charge more. To actually allow them free rein to charge more for the privileged who can afford it is just plain wrong! The net should provide equal access, equal bandwidth equal speed for all!
—Barb S, Woodinville, WA

I will say it again: Dear Federal Communications Commission: FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Phillip Cameron, Belleville, MI

I make my living on the internet. I'm a little guy that depends on equal access as a matter of course — I and millions of other small operators rely on an open and free internet. Bring on Title 2 NOW!!!
—Ron Carlson, Erie, PA

To create a tiered internet is ridiculous! Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers. The internet is like a freeway, it should be open to everyone equally. Just because you own a Mercedes Benz doesn' t mean you should get preferential treatment. Same goes for the internet.
—Bryan Albee, San Francisco, CA

We are counting on you to, please, protect REAL Net Neutrality and help prevent discrimination online.
—Nancy Gurny, Skokie, IL

Allowing big business ISP's to further take advantage of the system is unacceptable. They've been playing the system for years and the new proposed rules are literally endless blackjack for an already dominating monopoly. Things need to be seriously re-evaluated and they need to be on the same playing ground as everyone else, and just as accountable for any shady actions they might take.
—Jonathan Miller of the Free Americas, Clinton Township, MI

Are you serving the citizens of this country, or a few big corporations? We both know what your answer should be, and that means ISPs need to be reclassified as common carriers, with no preferential treatment for any websites or countries. Do NOT allow a two-tiered internet. Show the good people of this country that you will not let corporate interests rule the day.
—James M. Lyles, Holly, MI

Net Neutrality evens the playing field for small business owner and up and coming artists alike. Allowing fast lanes and the big businesses to buy up everything would squash the american dream and eliminate competition.
—Rebekah Renne, San Francisco, CA

The internet is a free community of creatives and problem solvers. Even the thought of truncating The creativity that drives the American spirit makes me sick.
—Cean McCullough, garrison, ND

The internet is the backbone of innovation and provides essential infrastructure to all Americans. We need strong rules to prevent carriers from prioritizing, or manipulating how traffic moves over it's wires.
—Abraham Wallin, San Francisco, CA

At a time when children in the Peruvian forest have access to the internet with no multi tier service, it's amazing that the alleged "greatest nation on earth" is about to handicap all its citizens, their productivity, their entrepreneurial spirit and access to information with slow, medium and fast lanes of service. There is no real reason for this other than to benefit, yet again, corporate entities. In the 21st century, lets equip the people of the usa with net neutrality. Wonder what our world would look like if previous means of communication had not been declared common carriers. The internet is the new telephone. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Imara Hyman, Detroit, MI

Internet access is as important in today's society as TV, telephones, and radio. A free and open exchange of ideas, such as online, is vital to a strong and vibrant democracy.
—Daniel Cottle, Portsmouth, OH

No one in the U.S. today has the option of ignoring the internet in daily life. The need for internet access is imposed upon us by prospective employers, vendors, news outlets, information providers, and our government at all levels. I do not appreciate being made a second-class citizen because I do not have the money to pay premium fees. Such an arrangement is unhealthy and subversive of democracy.
—Cynthia McNamara, Albuquerque, NM

We don't need a slow lane!
—Clifford Johnson, Minneapolis, MN

The FCC erred in classifying broadband internet access as an information service. Telecommunications is the transmission of information from one point to another. Broadband internet access has a clearly identifiable telecommunications component. The FCC should revisit it's previous faulty determination, and classify broadband internet access as a telecommunications service. It should then issue broad forbearance from many regulations that apply to typical telecommunications services.
—Corey Chase, Montpelier, VT

As a college student who studies computer science, it's absurd that you do not see a problem with allowing ISP's to give priority to those with money. This could hinder my future business endevors because it's not just the websites that will be throttled it'll be all of the data needed to run applications as it. It's a telecommunications network and should be classified as one do that right thing.
—Ben C Bourgeois, Latonia, KY

Because I don't want top pay more for what I love.
—Claire Dietz, Naperville, IL

Please! Please! Think about this! If you are uneducated in how the Internet works - ask for knowledgeable assistance! All this is going to do is raise prices!!! Don't do this to the American public! We are already hurting!!!!!
—Jeri Gray, Port Angeles, WA

The FCC's proposed Internet rule change must not be adopted. Any plan that allows for 2 levels of throughput guarantees the end of Net Neutrality.
—Wayne Trout, Pompano Beach, FL

I am a small business that sells products on line & I am also adding a video streaming service to our business plan. I am afraid that if the big providers create a tiered internet my customers will be locked out & my video streaming service will die. Everyone is paying for internet access, they are paying to get to the INTERNET not just to connect to their ISP. I am paying AT&T or Time Warner to get to content that is on the Internet not to just connect to content that is on AT&T or Time Warner's network. ALL traffic MUST be treated the same. NO FILTERING allowed.
—Carl Hearne, North Canton, OH

The FCC exists "[T]o make available, so far as possible, to all the people of the United States, without discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, or sex, a rapid, efficient, Nation-wide, and world-wide wire and radio communication service with adequate facilities at reasonable charges". Allowing ISPs the freedom to throttle service unless one coughs up extra fees would not only stifle the thriving competitive marketplace that has made the Internet what it is today, it would be a dereliction of the fundamental purpose for which the Federal Communications Commission even exists at all. Tiered access schemes are the very antithesis of a "rapid, efficient communication service" for "all people of the United States". Do your job, and keep the Internet open for everyone!
—Tom Kellett, Columbus, OH

do not kill the open internet in the land of the free... how can you do such a thing! and the internet providers want to be the monopoly of service for at least two different utilities - internet access is as much a part of daily life as electric to run your lights, or phone service to your house. you are supposed to be protecting us from predatory monopolies and the rules you have currently proposed will only serve consumers up like lambchops to those wolves at the communcation companies.
—Lorie Long, Saint Louis, MO

This plan would kill the internet as we know it. Do not let this pass.
—Lucas Nguyen, Portland, OR

FREEDOM OF SPEECH FOR ONE THING!
—Sandra Marie Green, Elgin, TX

Tiered speeds for different content is a slippery slope straight to censorship. How fast will my Verizon provided connection be to a website be if that website says something that Verizon disagrees with? ISPs must provide indiscriminate service to all internet connections if we are to live in a society that enjoys free speech. The need to be classified as utilities like electricity, water and gas.
—Dinko Venelinov Tontchev, Long Beach, CA

The current Internet allows equal access for all, regardless of social or economic station. It must remain that way to eliminate another "haves" vs "have nots" scenario.
—Jim Osenberg, Anoka, MN

Total Net Neutrality matters. Equal treatment to all. No fast lane. No slow lane. Equal access at equal speed!
—Steve Housewright, Austin, TX

I do NOT trust mega-corporations such as Comcast and Verizon not to use this as a way of stifling free speech. I am sick to death of seeing one governmental body after another turn whore for these evil empires! STOP IT NOW!!!
—James Winn, Reno, NV

An internet service provider carries information from the internet to its subscribers and back again. Allowing these large companies (most of which have gigantic market shares in localized areas) to selectively deteriorate service is antithetical to the concept of the Internet. The countries that are ahead of the curve are providing internet service to their citizens that puts the US to shame, sometimes as a guaranteed right (see https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/ Right_to_Internet_access#Ensur ing_that_access_is_broadly_ava ilable_and.2For_preventing_unr easonable_restrictions). Meanwhile, the US is falling further and further behind. This will have grave social and economic impacts.
—Jon Canady, Columbus, OH

The internet was a place that was created to foster and empower a community around the idea that we can instantly communicate from anywhere in the world. One of the largest issues that has plagued that communication process is the speed at which we can understand what has been sent to us. As our tools evolve what we can send, we can be more precise about what we mean. What use to be text, has move to images, images turned into small animated GIFs, and now into video. Video has become what was grainy and hard to visualize to high definition and tack sharp. Net Neutrality is vital because what some corporations deem as worthy of the fast lane may not be the best use of those speeds. Please stand for net neutrality and stand for the future generations to reap the efforts of all our advances in technology.
—Waytao Shing, Austin, TX

AGAIN THE FOX GUARDING THE HEN HOUSE! Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Dave Gonzales, Littleton, CO

The FCC is basically setting the stage for ISPs to hold all the cards and all the power over what is accessible on the internet and who can access it. You're allowing companies the power to act as law enforcement, to force both individuals and internet-based companies to pay more and more for a service that is already a necessity in modern life. They'll be able to decide content and users without any limitations to this power. This is far more authority than any type of company should ever be handed. Throw out these rule you've proposed and reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Protect the internet user, the start-up companies, the underprivileged who will no longer be able to afford basic internet access, and don't give one class of company the power to decide who thrives and who doesn't.
—Samantha Mathis, Placentia, CA

ISPs ARE common carriers. If you look at how the internet is used, that is simply what they function as. They should be treated as such by the FCC and regulated as such.
—Henry Cejtin, Chicago, IL

Open internet provides a level playing field for all, businesses and individuals alike!
—Jim freeberg, Ashland, OR

It should be the work of the FCC to make sure that an average internet user and/or website has access as fast as technology will allow. That speed should never be up for sale (to the richest buyer).
—Lloyd Canfil, San Diego, CA

As a business owner, college student, and American citizen, an open internet is important to me, my education, and my livelihood. I oppose any actions that threaten net neutrality and stand with the millions of other people who share the same views! Do the right thing and maintain net neutrality.
—James Allen, San Diego, CA

The internet that some of the ISP's provide is already shoddy at best. I'm looking at you Comcast. The ISP's want more money flowing in than they already have but they aren't doing a good enough job in the first place to warrant it. If this goes through it will cripple an unknown but certainly massive number of people. I understand that everyone needs to make a living, but when people start trying to make a living at the expense of other people that's when it needs to stop.
—Matt Dobe, Epsom, NH

Please realize that Net Neutrality matters. Not just for me, but for everyone. I URGE you to take a second an heed the multitude of voices convincing you of this fact.
—Mr. Daniel Overton, Vail, AZ

Why do we have to pay for something the government created (with our money) so private companies can make even MORE money??? ENOUGH already, seriously
—Ana P, Miami, FL

ISPs ARE common carriers. They should be reclassified as such, —Joseph M. Glombiak, Haymarket, VA

I need the internet for my work, and as I stand right now, I would not be able to afford the fees for a faster connection. My job depends on my ability to upload and download fast and painlessly, and just one failed upload could lose me my only source of income. Please don't let this happen.
—Erin Reed, Pittsboro, NC

Will Tom Wheeler go down in history as the The Man Who Killed Net Neutrality, And Thereby Free World Speech?
—Don Saito, San Jose, CA

A democratized Internet is the agent of change and development we need!
—Laura Stevens, Charlotte, NC

My water utility doesn't care whether my water is used for my shower or my washing machine. My ISP shouldn't care the nature of my data either.
—E J, Parker, CO

These rules are ridiculous and discriminatory. The internet is an intricate part of our livelihood if extra fees are imposed by companies you are removing the entire wonder of the internet. I need fast internet for jobs and schooling. If my internet is slowed during a timed test it would severely impact me and the rest of my life. Keep the internet free as it should be.
—Miranda Morrison, Phoenix, AZ

I am an unwilling "customer" of AT&T, Comcast and Verizon. The right thing to do for the American People is always the opposite of what the telecoms want!
—John A. Wiles III, Olive Branch, MS

We need Net Neutrality in order to maintain a free press. If this is not allowed, we will no longer have access to true information, just what the large corporation want us to know.
—Marlyn Haber, Altadena, CA

I cannot make my livelihood without affordable access to infornation. I will not be able to pay my bills if i cannot afford to do the research i need to survive
—Kate, Fairfield, CA

The dissolution of the core tenants of the internet cannot be allowed. Putting net neutrality on the butchers block is destroying the most powerful man made information since the invention of the printing press. Please, please reclassify ISP's as common carriers. As it currently stands one mans creation can flow unrestricted through the internet and set minds afire with a spark of creativity. But that spark will never be seen by anyone if their ISP deem them not worthy. Don't let a corporation strangle entrepreneurship and creativity through fees and bandwidth throttling. Protect Net Neutrality.
—Patrick Devine, Somerville, MA

My financial situation should not limit my access to information.
—Tonya Palmer, Grand Forks, ND

As a co-founder and co-owner of a growing small business that provides software solutions, including web development, the recent FCC ruling allowing paid-for-priority access concerns me greatly. It will make it more difficult for new business to compete with the big, established corporations and encourage ISPs to keep the "minimum levels" (i.e. the tiers available to end-users) low in order to incentivize businesses to pay for priority access. Furthermore, many ISPs are not simply providers of internet access, but also providers of content. This effectively means that they will have free access to the highest speed interconnectivity available from the parent ISP since they are owned by the same entity, giving them a huge advantage over outside competition. The trend of ISPs becoming content providers is continuing with many ISPs expanding these divisions. These are huge concerns to me as part of a new entrant into the business and internet content worlds. Please, reconsider classifying internet access as a utility. I would further push to separate internet access providers from content providers as there is a clear conflict of interest and concerns about equal competition when the in-house content provider, owned by an ISP, can bypass many of the hurdles (and associated payments) that their competition has to overcome just to compete in the same space.
—Allyn Hill, San Diego, CA

Dear Tom, I guess you've heard the saying "If it walks like a duck and it quacks liked a duck, it's probably a duck"? If you agree with the validity of such inductive reasoning, I think you should also agree with this "if a network supports two-way transmission and you can talk to anyone you like over it, it's probably a common carrier" just like the telephone landlines were (and there aren't many of those left are there)? Please try to be rational as well as legal, classify the internet as what it is, and protect the public from gouging and censorship the way you should be!
—Timothy F. Havel, Boston, MA

The whole world is not just there for corporations to make money. The internet is a wonderful communication tool, and making a two tier system with high speed for the rich and dog slow for everyone else is not the way forward. You stand to stifle the human race in its most creative phase - don't do it.
—Chas Maguire, ,

FCC is not in the business of limiting internet access. To do so would violate the First Amendment right of internet users to express ideas. These regs. is another attempt at censorship.
—Joseph Weiss, Brooklyn, NY

Destroying Net Neutrality is all part of the Communist/Fascist destruction of America.History shows that only evil,totalitarian rulerships attempt to restrict their subjects' access to information and free speech-and everyone knows it.You're not fooling anyone-you are working to harm the American people.
—Paul R Albrecht, Phila., PA

Internet service has become as necessary and routine as phone service or electric service, and is frequently available from only one vendor. It is in all ways just like the regulated utilities, except for the regulation. ISPs should be classified as common carriers so the appropriate rules will apply to them. The FCC should serve the public welfare on this issue, not protect the profits of a few large well-represented private companies.
—Peter Levin, Watertown, MA

Don't put small businesses and growing communities at a disadvantage. Reclassify isp as common carriers and help the American people.
—Nicholas Katsikas, Westminster, MD

Net Neutrality is essential to digital activism. When major corporations can pay for a faster lane the voices of the people will be harder to hear.
—Yoni Zeigler, Memphis, TN

The politicians and so-called "regulators" inside the Beltway have shown themselves EAGER to play ball with giant, greed-driven corporations, while not giving a DAMN about everyone else -- the 98% of REAL PEOPLE who are not corporations. So, if you don't SAVE THE INTERNET from corporate greed, you will have given yet another valuable national resource away to the rich. And we know who you are.
—Berkeley Fuller-Lewis, Emeryville, CA

We need to keep the internet free for all of us. I am a computer tech and I would not be able to do my job from home anymore
—Ryan Packa, Willmar, MN

For p2p traffic and future innovations to survive and thrive the service providers must not have the ability to throttle speeds on services that they perceive as a threat to their bottom line.
—Ken Senter, Raleigh, NC

We're at the point where all media and communications are data and delivered over the internet. There is no reasonable argument to be made that internet service is any different from airwaves or phone service in its need for protection from monopoly power and concentration. Does Chairman Wheeler really believe his own story that his view is objective and unbiased by his lobbyist history? We aren't fooled, and we know what's right for consumers.
—Marc Milgrom, Brooklyn, NY

I don't want my service to be subject to the whims of Verizon, ATT & other ISP's selling time to the highest bidders.
—David Goldberg, St. Paul, MN

Eliminating Net Neutrality will enable the ISPs to create non-competitive markets
—Jacob Liu, Gaithersburg, MD

People need to be able to access any site without the intervention of a tier system.
—Donald Foster, Cincnnati, OH

The internet should not be controlled by a few service providers. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers to protect the millions of small businesses that need a level playing field to compete.
—Virginia Miller, Coral Gables, FL

Good internet access should be available to everyone.
—Alexander Jensen, Houston, TX

Killing net neutrality is bad for our economy because it shirts small businesses and startups who rely on it. Anyone who cares about job growth post-recession and the future of the United States as a strong economic power should not support Chairman Wheeler's plan.
—Ms. S Holtz, Somerville, MA

I am 72 and live on Social Security (paid into it for over 55 years). I don't have cable TV, and my only source of 'entertainment' is the Internet. Please don't let AT&T, Verison and Comcast make my Internet connection unaffordable!
—Alice Mechler, Mart, TX

The internet is used as a worldwide forum for free speech and expression, yet the loss of net neutrality is actually a reality in our time. Enforcing the proposed FCC rules would ensure that corporations would become a ruling/controlling body over the speech and expressions of those in the US. Since when did corporations become part of the government? It will be a sad day should these rules come to pass, and a huge loss to the US as a supposed "country of the free".
—Kellyn Wong, San Francisco, CA

Do not let the rich choose how we access information.
—Dk Kerry, Los Angeles, CA

If there are fast lanes for the big telecoms like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon, I along with many others fear that there will be a slow lane for many sites. We the people should have equal access to all content on the web. No big companies should be able to buy faster service while putting many independent sources behind. This would stifle innovation.
—Philip Lipari, Colonia, NJ

The internet and its infrastructure is vital to the dissemination of information in the free world, and it should be nonpartisan. Killing net neutrality would introduce significant impediments to the free flow of information - it would now be dictated by those with the deepest pockets, and would be a significant blow to free speech and the freedom of information. We should not let corporations - whose ultimate goal is only to bilk customers of as much money as possible - to dictate terms on the infrastructure of the communication backbones that contribute to a free world.
—Kartikeya Iyer, Campbell, CA

To abolish Net Neutrality would be a gross statement on the prioritization of big business over small business, non-profits, private organizations and private individuals. Imagine if the phone companies told us that we would only get top-quality service when calling major businesses, and poor quality when calling, say, our family members on personal calls. The abolition of Net Neutrality would be an abolition of the rights of the people in favor of revenue-generating communications goliaths. It would also be another terrible step toward the total removal of the people from this amazingly useful and important communication medium. Please see that this is true and reverse the trend that has been taking away our rights, one by one, by the media and by business giants with powerful Washington lobbies.
—Jeremy Simmons, Cincinnati, OH

The internet has become a public utility. You have to have it to apply for jobs, to e-mail for both personal and business concerns. Media is viewed in schools, referred to by the government itself, and for pleasure. The internet is one of the greatest tools we have today, and if we refuse to harness that power, we will lose it forever. Not just gaming and movies. Transferring large files, for example, movies to theaters, becomes a hand to hand transfer again. Or retrieving the latest distro of my OS. Be it phone or computer. Keep it open for people everywhere.
—Brenden Fitz, Traverse City, MI

The internet is one of the few things in the world that allows freedom of expression, enterprise, and community. I know the FCC members are looking at the money, but can they please think of people?
—Daniel Koss, La Crescenta, CA

my world would be a poorer place if money was the differential that dictated the things that grew and everntually made it to my plate... how many amazing things did not have access to money to begin with - and so would never have grown had they been stuck in the slow lane.... this is super sad. however your crack it - the internet is the last place on earth where there is true democracy or meritocracy - and putting these new ideas place would remove that - it would become a resources based place where those with privilege win. a poor substitute for where the world gets it's information.
—Charlie Dolman, Emeryville, CA

I hate control by the rich and powerful. This move is contrary to American values. Shame on them!
—Jane Burton, St. Louis, MO

I don't want giant corporations controlling how people access the internet. It should be free and open and equal for everyone!
—Chris Allen, Forest Hill, MD

These proposed rules will debilitate the internet in such a way that its morally, economically and otherwise too objectionable to continue. Net neutrality ensures equal opportunities for all. Freedom is, in this case, at stake.
—Rory Ceulen, ,

No toll lanes that should already be paid for.
—Kevin Gracey, Satellite Beach, FL

The freedom of the internet is inextricably tied with the freedom of human beings (and our freedom of speech). Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Please listen to the people, not the money.
—Harry Nethery, Pittsburgh, PA

The idea of net neutrality is a basic constituent of the internet, and these regulations only opens opportunity for corruption.
—George Cheng, San Diego, CA

The Internet has become as vital to people's everyday lives as telephone lines once were. Only be treating them as such can we ensure continued innovation and new businesses embracing the internet's use. Would Facebook be able to become the online juggernaut is is today if it had to languish in the slow lane? Not very likely, as the users would have abandoned it for a site with more speed form a developer who paid his way to the top of the fast lane. If all start from the same position, then the best product wins through free market choices. By giving a turbo boost to those with cash to burn on it, it skews the results. Net Neutrality is KEY to the future of commerce in the US.
—John Smith Jnr, Trumbull, CT

The Internet should be free and open. There should never be a question of preferential treatment.
—Rusty Rideout, Evansville, IN

I am as important as a company. Leave the net neutral. Stop thwarting this good idea.
—Nell Jeter, ,

The People Need and Deserve Net Neutrality, not the dictatorial directions and limitations that are imposed by greedy corporations and dictators of any other country, just because they do not desire certain conversations or the obtaining of information that might be something that others object to. KEEP THE INTERNET FREE AND NEUTRAL for the benefit of the PEOPLE of the FREE WORLD!
—Dr. Rev Ronald L. Sims, Niangua, MO

Net Neutrality is what allows us to be free and allowing certain companies decide what we shouldn't do with our internet is violating our privacy.
—Katie, Winchendon, MA

Net neutrality is essential. It's clear the U.S. has paved the way for class division which benefits the wealthy in many facets of it's society's life. Let's not let the internet and web become another example of how the wealthy become wealthier and are treated better than the normal, everyday folk. Please keep the internet a neutral resource for everyone despite economic class.
—Kenneth Wilson, Burlington, NC

My family have been sole proprietors for over a hundred years, building small businesses and contributing to our local and national economy. I myself am a website designer and know how disastrous this move would be. Today, websites need to work fluidly with mobile applications and be fast--and that's a fact. Slow websites will always cause a user to be dissuaded from accessing it. Even today with the equal treatment of all web portals, speed is king. Can a small business like that of my father, my father's father and the rest of my family possibly hope to compete against those who can afford to be given priority? According to surveys done by Akamai and Gomez.com, nearly half of web users expect a site to load in 2 seconds or less, and they tend to abandon a site that isn't loaded within 3 seconds. With this, can you really expect that smaller businesses will be able to compete should preferential treatment be allowed? This move will not only destroy and cripple small businesses but also cause a radical change in my industry, shifting away from the beautiful, user-centric applications we know and love today to something more like the empty, black and whiteness of a sheet of paper. Please don't do this. Net Neutrality is absolutely necessary for everyone and anyone who wishes to help to internet evolve and grow.
—Jenna Fuller, El cajon, CA

With net neutrality I have a voice equal to others and others have a voice equal to mine. Please, ensure true net neutrality.
—Joshua Ferguson, Klamath Falls, OR

Leave it as common carriers
—Charlie Radl, Sauk City, WI

As a Internet user, I want a free and open Internet. Only Net Neutrality can offer this. Keep the Internet free and open.
—Ron Moffat, Grand Rapids, MI

Reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers. This is the only way to allow new internet businesses to thrive!
—D'Arcy E Havill, Camp Dennison, OH

I lost all tv, most radio and a reliable data connection in 2009 when digital was forced on us. Now with the consolidation of terrestial radio, I lost my last source of progressive news. NO TO MORE MERGERS of corporate take over.
—Jim McAniff, Drake, CO

It's foolish to think that money and access to information should have a direct connection. America was founded on free speech. This new policy is a kick in the teeth to that.
—John Carr, Centerport, NY

This would be the beginning of a very slippery slope with far reaching consequences. Segregating the internet based on which companies have or haven't ponied up is ridiculous and unfair. As consumers, we pay a lot for high-speed internet access, and this would be slapping a giant asterisk on any promised speeds. The only people in favor of this are the very few who stand to profit. There is no upside to this for anyone else. This is not in the public's best interest and would be a huge, greed-fueled mistake.
—Paula, Green Bay, WI

I work with Africans and they are often too poor to be in the proposed "fast lane"...
—Philip Costa, New Hartford, NY

I own and run several websites and blogs. I also have videos and a variety of Flash, Unity, and HTML5 games that are provided through my sites. Without the means to pay for the Fast Lanes of the internet, I would be stuck with the 'Slow Lanes' and this will be damaging to the service I am trying to provide to my customers and partners. It is unacceptable that some content providers can basically purchase favoritism. All content should be treated equally.
—Nathan Moore, Coal City, IL

Time Warner is the company with the most anti-religious sentiment out there. It is about to merge with Comcast to become even larger. Without the protection of Net Neutrality, what is to stop them from giving bottom-priority to any church site they choose? What is to stop a Republican-dominated company from slowing down Planned Parenthood's website? Or a Democratic-dominated company from shoving Fox News and COSMOSontv down the queue? Free expression is the lifeblood of a democracy and scientific progress -- which has never come solely from universities and scholars -- and the Internet is literally the last place that hasn't been commercialized into irrelevancy. You wish to have the wolves (corporations) guard the sheep, without leaving the government any power to STOP THEM should the wolves turn predatory. That is absolutely reckless. If the excesses of the Sun King's court, the 1920s, and even the last days of the Roman empire have taught us nothing, it is that the moneyed aristocracy cannot be entrusted with the well-being of the common man. They will squash all opposition without thought to principle or morality, and drive the middle class into insolvency to make themselves more money. They cannot be trusted, and to take away Net Neutrality is doing exactly that. If you and the FCC would call yourselves gatekeepers, then keep the gate. Protect Net Neutrality for the sake of everyone who would speak freely. If you will not declare the internet a utility, then at least leave it protected from corporate bias.
—JoAnn Davidson, El Cajon, CA

As a young person in college I've been looking at my options for my future and the internet has been something I've been contemplating as well as I'm sure millions of other people have been considering or attempting. The death of internet nuetrality will at worst destroy upcoming websites and endeavors, and at best make it incredibly difficult for upcoming entrepreneurs to create a space where their product and services to become known and given a fighting chance to really be part of the market. Not only does this fly in the face of what the internet is all about, but it also will help to destroy a free market economy and hinder competition in markets making it easier for bigger already well known companies to create a monopoly. This is a bad decision that I suspect is fueled by special interest groups and private constituents (I'm saying your a corrupt money grabbing ass hat who was elected by the people but only works for money). Stop this madness, stop it now.
—Kraig Mougeot, Portland, OR

I own a small business with big competitors. I use the internet to be found. If big competitors can do a payola deals with the major ISP's, to gain more favorable exposure, be found more easily, it will hurt competition and drive up prices for the services I provide. The fast lane is a terrible idea, it really is legalizing payola on the internet. I do not understand how you can honestly say that you will police what is happening when, the major search engines are increasing the kinds of pay to play games they do, & when when you allow major media companies to combine forming ever larger local, and regional monopolies, in violation your rules of competition. Be honest the internet is an important public service and needs to be kept as a level space where all providers of internet content are treated equally. Big money should not trump fair and honest competition. Reclassify ISP services as a public utility because often there is no competition in any local market and most ISP are both awful to deal with and they prefer to sit on their existing technology and earn massive profits for bad service by being necessary no matter how bad they are.
—Daniel Winter, Watertown, MA

I depend on the internet as an equal and open source to distribute and receive content. These rules are nothing short of extortion.
—Jerry McGowan, New Cumberland, PA

Discrimination in all forms is just bad in general, mkay? If I am in a slow lane, I can't get stuff done, let alone enjoy my internet connection. I am a power user and I need all the speed I can get without having to pay extra.
—Brandon Hawkins, Greencastle, IN

In this age Net Neutrality has become a basis for democracy and the functioning of society. Don't favor large corporate users over citizens.
—Leah Conroe-Luzius, Boulder, CO

We don't need .poorer service for a higher price, the research and startup costs were born by the government. The rest of the world out does the US , why? One word GREED.
—Judith Keilholtz, bARRON, WI

The internet is a medium of communication, and degrading Net Neutrality allows those with the most power and money to manipulate that medium in their favor; silencing voices they don't agree with and amplifying those who support their interests. The citizens of the world who don't have power, wealth, and influence NEED net neutrality! Our government is supposed to represent our interests, and NOT solely the interests of the richest among us. The FCC needs to protect the interests of the people. I guarantee you that companies like Verizon and Comcast don't need any help making money or providing services.
—Levi Toback, Philadelphia, PA

My business would be negatively impacted by a two tiered internet as I'm not profitable enough to absorb any new cost. I know many in my field who are in the same boat.
—Jerry Giefer, Windom, MN

These companies were not a part of the creation of the Internet; therefore, they have no business making these sorts of demands.
—Jessica Griffing, Land O Lakes, FL

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Jackie Koontz, Temecula, CA

The internet has, and should continue to allow true freedom of speech and information. By allowing corporations whose primary focus is profits, to charge for faster bandwidth across their infrastructure; will mean that the ISPs will be able to control what services are available on the Internet. This is not net neutrality and should not be allowed.
—Jonathan Witts, ,

Tom Wheeler's plan to implement fast lanes is utterly ridiculous, but what else would you expect from someone who used to lobby for the very same industry he is supposed to be regulating? The proposal is the exact opposite of net neutrality, and the only thing we should be discussing now is when we will reclassify them under common carrier rules. There isn't a single person that agrees with this proposal outside of the ISPs themselves. But let's face it, Tom is working towards securing himself a nice cushy executive position at one of these ISPs after his stint at the FCC is done, and not working in the interests of the American people.
—Chris Talbert, Bradford, MA

We've been told for years that an unregulated internet means better, faster, more reliable service because of the magic of market forces. I'm here to tell you that the market has failed miserably, unless you consider amazing profits at the expense of putting the US well behind other developed countries in the world as far as speed, availability, and reliability of internet service. Where I live, there are NO options for hardwired internet access. Access is via satellite (with limited speed and a 2GB/month cap), or via 3G wireless, which has its own problems. The carriers need to be "encouraged" to do what's right to bring the US into the 21st century.
—Scott Chesney, Fairbanks, AK

Please reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers. There are two main problems with the current regime: 1) our lives are becoming more and more tied to the Internet making it requirement to function similar to electricity and phone and gas; 2) there is basically no competition for large sections of the US (for my apartment, I only have one choice for broadband faster than 5Mbps: TimeWarner) which allows these companies to make access more and more expensive. The proposed rules would encourage ISPs to double dip, and in effect censor what customers could access.
—Vivek Bhaskar, Santa Monica, CA

The net is neutral, keep it that way by classifying it as a carrier and keep it accessible to everyone.
—Tyler Price, Davis, CA

The end of Net Neutrality will be the death of small businesses. It will seriously restrict the free flow of ideas and information. Large companies should not be gatekeepers for the rest of us!
—Miss Megan Prime, Edmonds, WA

The internet should be treated like any other public utility and be accessible to all. It is necessary to do business, pay bills, communicate with schools, etc. It's no longer a niche market, but it's the way the world works.
—Rebecca E McBEE, ANN ARBOR, MI

I am a small business owner and killing the internet as we know it to day will not only hurt my business but greatly slow education and development.
—Ken Tower, Boise, ID

I've already paid for open access to the services; the carriers should be like the Phone Service, in that they are "dumb pipes" to the data I want to receive. They claim that it will stifle their buildout, but in reality, they are already not building out their networks.
—J King, Irvine, CA

Tom Wheeler is clearly under a lot of pressure from his cronies in the telecom lobby, and if the FCC fails to protect net neutrality, there will be no doubt that it is because they lacked the integrity to stand up against wealthy special interests in favor of the public's stentorian outcry. Net Neutrality is essential to a free and competitive market and a healthy economy.
—John, New Haven, CT

Please keep the internet free and open. It's one of the greatest inventions of our time and shouldn't be ruined by corporations.
—Jacques Pham, Huntington Beach, CA

I need net neutrality to share and communicate ideas over the web without a third party mediating when and where those conversations occur on the web!
—Joey Belonger, New Lenox, IL

Classifying the internet as a common carrier is the ONLY democratic thing to do. The internet is not a toy for the wealthy; it is a vital tool for any and every citizen...an important freedom that must not be taken away.
—Nancy Leys 3627 N. 63rd Street Leys, 53216, WI

This is supposed to be a government of the people. To me that means that anything having to do with the "common wealth" of the people should be equally accessible by any citizen, (individual or corporation). The internet is about free access to everyone of information and a platform for expression. The utilities were supposed to provide competition and lower rates and a higher quality if they were turned over to the private sector. Did that happen? Did Iraq have weapons of mass destruction? "The people" know what is at stake here and we will not be fooled into thinking that this is anything but a ploy to supplant the quality and access of the internet to powerful and wealthy players at the expense of us, the citizens, you know, the ones who actually draw breath.
—Aileen Spillman, Herbster, WI

Dear Chairman Wheeler, In a World where we are constantly reminded that we are the lower 98% and struggling to maintain whatever piece of the pie we have, it would be a great loss to have access to a fair-streaming internet. i'm already reminded of inequities when it comes to paying for 3G or 4G access through my provider. If i had to pay my provider more money for due to increased fees for fast lanes; then at some point, i would no longer be able to afford the internet. The disparities are becoming so numerous between the haves and the have-nots. i would hope as a taxpayer (who is a low-paid worker) who pays high taxes due to lack of home ownership and investment opportunities who has fewer options concerning information and entertainment venues that your decision would take into consideration the people who make up the foundation of this Country and not just the powerful who have ACCESS!! Thank you for your time!!!
—Lorraine Perez, Saint Augustine, FL

Creating a tiered system on the internet is awesome for cash flush internet titons like Google, Amazon, etc, but how is it far for the next "google" to be placed in a less functional position based on its ability to play. The prices being charged by internet providers for the services we now recieve is outrages. How do you think it will be if this plan goes through. Net Neutrality is a requirement to keep the commercial balance needed for a healthy economy.
—Robert May, Templeton, MA

It is a matter of great importance. Please protect Net Neutrality!
—Tomasz J. Kotarba, ,

Please, we cannot have all major carriers to have a monopoly. Net Neutrality must survive. I beg you to listen to us, your constituents. Cable companies are strangling our pocket books.
—Sergio Contreras, Santa Ana, CA

Our Democracy is in danger ever since the FCC regulations were trashed. 5 corporations now own the media. Are we going to continue to attack our Democracy. We already have a plutocracy and a cororatocracy. This is whipped cream on CACA.
—Diana nadanyi, Bluffton, SC

It's not okay!
—Daniel Iwao, Los Angeles, CA

Please face the reality and call the internet what it is...a utility and please regulate it as one
—Louis Diliberto, Kahului, HI

Information that is not complimentary or negative of comcast et al. will be slowed, delayed, impeded, etc.while advertisements and propaganda of preferred media giants will flood our inboxes. You may think there are rules, but the FCC is a living example of an organization that has lost its mission and its way.
—Ronald Drahos, Bloomington, IN

As an artist who uses the internet for much of my research, and who doesn't make a lot of money to afford additional fees to do my research, I am against any rules that will not protect an open internet.
—Linda Byrne, New York, NY

This country is supposed to be a place where equal opportunity is available to every citizen. Yet, it seems as though our country is allowing corporations more power everyday, while limiting the rights of the individual. The internet is not only a place for entertainment, but also a place to learn and discover. It is something that should be available to everyone.
—Carmen Johnson, Houston, TX

Paid priority is not neutrality in any way. We shouldn't have to rely on FCC rulings for every new threat to internet freedom and fairness, when it can be dealt with clearly and directly if we start with a more solid plan. The internet should be dealt with in a similar manner as utilities. It is a basic necessity yet in many areas one company holds a monopoly. The public needs protection from price gouging and entrepreneurs need protection from anti-competitive behavior. The internet is the last bastion of hope for democracy and the people. Please don't corrupt it with greed.
—Alan Truly, Golden Valley, AZ

Neutrality permits information; for instance, through the internet we learn that you, Commissioner, should recuse yourself from this issue because of your past lobbying allegiance to the cable and telecom industries, the very ones that will benefit greatly by your ending Net Neutrality.
—Robert Griffin, Reedsville, OH

It's vital for the small business owner to have the internet set up the same way for everyone.
—Mike Sexton, Junction City, KS

The internet is one of the greatest mediums available to a citizenry to communicate, organize, discuss and spread awareness. Imposing a hierarchy that in any way diminishes the ability of the internet to that (which this rule change would most certainly do) is a step towards constriction, consolidation, and diminishment of voices and forces that need all the help they can get.
—Landon Koenig-Muenster, Los Angeles, CA

He knowns why this is importent he doen't care. He just is enjoying all that money the ISP'S paying him. BUT it will back fire on him. We the people will win.
—Joseph Barlow, Indianapolis, IN

I make games, and its the only way to get popular!
—Andreas Nikolaisen, ,

A better approach would be to bite the bullet and admit the internet is a public utility resource.
—Jane Busey, Guernsey, WY

It's really hard to believe that the FCC, which is supposed to protect the public's interests, could take the proposed approach that would create a hierarchy for users of the Internet, our one, true, democratic product, created by us here in the US, that benefits everyone. The proposed stratification will make it harder for individuals, charities, small businesses, students - pretty much everyone but the big corporations - to use the internet. The media companies have been itching for this to get their next big windfall, and our government should be preventing it, not aiding and abetting corporate media! This represents a complete betrayal of the public's interests. DO NOT DO THIS!! RECLASSIFY THESE ISPs AS COMMON CARRIERS!!!
—Maria Schafer, Granite Springs, NY

Net Neutrality is about fairness of something the government built and allowed commercial firms to develop it...for communications. Thus, the Internet as we know it today has become a COMMON CARRIER like any other phone service...and the current state of the Internet service providers seem to be only the common carriers; phone companies, cable companies, and satellite (and phone companies use those to carry the signals as well. Why should these companies us our airwaves for Internet discrimination against those who have money and those who don't, when they are not allowed to do as Phone companies which they are also? These proposals are a step in securing the Oligarchy the wealthy robber barons are counting on...so at some point libraries will be the only place for good speed and Internet usage...unless of course the rules don't allow libraries special concessions. When will that happen?
—Mr. Paul T. Jackson, Enumcalw, WA

"We the People" should be free. The airwaves are supposed to be public. The internet is our great equalizer. By allowing a two-tiered system, you would be creating a two-tiered class of internet users. Do not allow those with more money silence our voices.
—Jeff Wickline, Granada Hills, CA

Net Neutrality provides the only level communication, education and business playing field on the planet. Please, let's protect and preserve it, rather than sell out to the highest bidders, which only moves us more and more into a soul crushing oligarchy.
—Dianne Edleman PhD, Lake Oswego, OR

Net neutrality is a paramount necessity of modern-day global democracy. Tampering with it puts the very future of our free societies at risk. Broadcast corporations already have too much economic power, why give them even more —Alejandro Muñoz Munoz, Miami, FL

Internet access is as essential as electricity and telephone access. ISPs must be reclassified as common carriers to ensure equal internet access for all users.
—Aaron Alfano, Sarasota, FL

The internet is supposed to be open to everyone. Everybody deserves decent internet at decent price! Please buy some brains....
—Jakub Norman Clark, ,

It is an injustice to even consider giving corporations a fast lane while us people have to sit and twiddle our thumbs, waiting for an email to load or to watch our favorite TV show. Reclassify ISPs as Title II Communications.
—Amanda, Mequon, WI

Everyone benefits from an internet where the small guys are NOT disadvantaged. Your rules ensure only the established (with thick wallets) can win. Where's the fairness in that? Go ahead and move forward with this and bully those who can't afford top tier speeds. I'll be betting the startups and online businesses for which our country is known for decide to start elsewhere.
—Shannon Howe, Saint Petersburg, FL

Net neutrality is a vital part of the modern world. Without neutrality, big business will put a choke collar on the net and small idea will never be able to grow: like the granny cloud : http://grannycloud.wordpress.c om/about/
—Ian McCloy, Sharon, MA

Please consider our simple request. The world is watching and we are fallen behind other nations. Please side with us and not the oligarchs.
—Ramon, Brooklyn, NY

The internet functions as a public forum for discourse on politics, world events, philosophy, and much more. This is an incredibly valuable resource that an internet service provider should not be allowed to censor, control, or alter. The Arab Spring would not have been possible without activists' use of the internet as a powerful mode of communication. The same is true around the world.
—Krystle P Morgan, Shippensburg, PA

The internet in America is already slower and more expensive than in much of the world. Huge telecoms do not need more power and money.
—Glory Adams, Eau Claire, WI

ISPs shouldn't get to decide which websites I'm able to access easily anymore than the local bookstore should get to decide which books I'm allowed to read. Protecting Net Neutrality is akin to protecting free speech. Don't let the ISPs control access to content!
—Stacey Lane, Mechanicsburg, PA

Please consider carefully the importance of an Open Internet!
—John Church, Harvard, IL

Living in a country with the highest internet and cellular fees is already bad enough. Having monopolies control the whole country is bad enough. Trust me - in Canada, we already suffer the effects of singular self-interest from major corporations and you don't want to go down a road where premium payment means premium performance when it comes to internet access speeds... what you will end up with is the Canadian system where a few dictate the rules for all to the advantage of only the few.
—Jason Burgess, Beverly Hills, CA

The internet is for ALL of us. Letting a few get rich while the rest of us are stuck in the slow lane is what our country is about.
—Sam Sibley, Evanston, IL

A free and open internet is essential to democracy in the 21st century, just as a free press was essential to democracy in previous times. We NEED you to protect and preserve a free and open internet. Thank you!
—Jay Newhard, Greenville, NC

The free market can not control content sources to the Internet, access to the Internet MUST be equal to all comers, especially now start-ups.
—Roger Bates, Beaverton, OR

As an information worker I need reliable broadband connection at work, home, hotels and anywhere I am conducting business. I pay a kings ransom already to Cox Communications and Verizon Wireless. Both have been shown they cannot self regulate without screwing the consumer. Example, FCC had to step up and stop the practice of slamming in late 90's after years of cheating customers on purpose. Also, I pay high government and local fees and toll taxes yet my government will not protect me/us from the predatory practices that these companies symbolize and engage in? These companies cannot self regulate in a beneficial fashion for consumers and all their subscribers have taxes and fees to FCC, local governments for protection and to help others gain access who cannot afford it and how is this going to impact those folks? These companies want a green light to price gouge their own users and have shown over and over they could care less about their subscribers as they are usually the only game in town with a take or leave it attitude. I will say if this goes through I can imagine innovation burying these companies like a cable line!
—Charles T. Chappell, Chesapeake, VA

Because it will destroy all the smaller sites that cannot buy spped like the big guys. Why does everything always have to be decided in favor of the big and powerful .Why not be fair and keep a level playing field. I'm really sick and tired of always ,as an american citizen, ,getting the short end of the stick,in favor of the rich and powerful.,
—Brooke Pekkala, duluth, MN

Equal access to information is a basic human right.
—Sara Mahoney, Portland, OR

Because I am disabled, I depend on the Internet for many things, including banking, shopping, chatting with friends, weather, and many other things, and because I live on a very limited income because of my disability, I could never afford to pay more for my Internet. Plus, everyone knows it's not fair that the rich corporations can get faster Internet than the poor people.
—Julie M. Turner, Mobridge, SD

The Internet needs to remain open for everyone, so the FCC must reclassify ISPs as common carriers or risk changing the most amazing forum of information this world has ever seen for the worse. Don't kill the open Internet!
—Amy Kaufman, Medford, MA

The internet is the great equalizer to so many things - access to educational materials, the ability to create content and applications, a way for people to really put their own stamp on the world - commodifying it in the way these new rules will allow the big companies to do will be just one more blow to the erosion of true democracy and equal playing fields for all in this country, and once again serving it all up to the big corporations. Please, do not allow this to happen.
—Trevor Walsh, Chicago, IL

To limit the effective flow of thoughts and information to those with the greatest purchasing power is to limit decision making for the nation to the weathy and powerful.
—Steven Gregory, East Wenatchee, WA

I am a university research scientist and our work requires the ability to share and analyze large data sets over the internet. We are non profit and depend on a neutral and unbiased internet to perform experiments efficiently and take advantage of the research of scientists at other institutions. Please do not slow our progress on therapies for patients with paraplegia by allowing telecommunications companies to decide which data is most important. Reclassify ISPs with common carrier status.
—Emily Ozdowski, Durham, NC

The internet is not a cash register for your greedy friends in the Telecom industry, it belongs to the people. Do not mistake it.
—Robert Carroll, Austin, TX

Freedom of information is vital. No one is allowed to control it. The FCC must protect our rights to free communication, not use it to make money. This is rampant greed and also abuse of power. It is completely unconstitutional and this will cause terrible problems in society. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers now!
—Benjamin Maxson, Dunkirk, MD

The economy depends on an open internet. To close it would stifle the growth and innovation that has taken place economically and socially through the open internet. Every aspect of our modern lives depends on it.
—Jason Goldston, Nashville, TN

Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Craig Weyler, New Haven, CT

All the cronies at the FCC should be fired immediately!
—Pierre Asmar, sacramento, CA

The telecommunications companies have proven they can't be trusted to serve consumers' interests--only their own! Net Neutrality and reclassification are important tools to keep the telecoms from amassing too much power, putting the rest of us at a disadvantage.
—Christopher Dingman, Cary, NC

The internet is one of the few places left with a free playing field where small businesses can still compete with the larger corporations. This needs to be protected for the good of the people and the economy. This country is based on open market competition not corporate dominance.
—Jason Laberge, Malibu, CA

Please reclassify internet service providers as common carriers. This is essential for all internet users.
—Kathy Orlinsky, Irvine, CA

I am a small business owner who depends entirely on the Internet to carry out my business functions. Killing Net Neutrality would increase my operating costs and endanger the viability of my business.
—Randy Cremean, Austin, TX

We already pay for access. We don't need to pay twice!
—Brad Houser, San Lorenzo, CA

I don't want the internet ran like a cable company! Listen to the public and the people that will be paying for the services. The USA is not a leader in worldwide internet bandwidth and by not classifying them as common carriers will not help that situation.
—Andy Plymate, Beaverton, OR

Creating a two-tiered Internet is essentially the same as a non-neutral net. ISPs would exploit the system and wouldn't have incentive for supporting/updating the non-payed for tier. I'm entirely for net neutrality!
—Paul Kankiewicz, Redmond, WA

I am on the internet 10 hrs a day, commenting on political causes. These web sites will be drowned out with out net neutrality. That means reclassifying the internet to a common carrier, as it originally was. This will keep this great commerce platform and job creating machine intact.
—Lance J Konover, Chelsea, MA

It matters to me how your decisions affect the struggling families of this country!
—Mag Wong, San Leandro, CA

Don't understand how the FCC can allow this. The companies begging to kill net neutrality were created based on a neutral internet. Your giving an unfair advantage to these companies. Think of the mom and pop businesses in America instead of your own personal interests.
—Stephen Quarles, Atlanta, GA

We need net neutrality, ISPs should be classified as common carriers when everyone thought they already are since the internet is required in every job now.
—Chris Gonzales, San Antonio, TX

Reclassify ISPs as common carriers, if you go forward with your plan you'll kill future developments coming from independent sources that don't have the money to pay for premium services.
—Matias Porcellatti, Bahia Blanca,

Giving away our common infrastructure to a FEW corporations is wrong and will backfire. THOSE COMPANIES DID NOT BUILD NOR MAINTAIN THE INTERNET -- This technology was built by decades of government, academic, and private efforts and belongs to all of us, not just your friends / financial supporters in ATT, Comcast, and Verizon.
—Doug Sheresh, Skamokawa, WA

Because the internet should be affordable for everyone like phone and power, not another source of overblown revenue for ISPs.
—Derek Smith, Pasadena, MD

Please reclassify isps as common carriers
—Michael Phillips, Middleton, WI

Fat greedy bastards don't give a shit about the people
—Josh, Ann Arbor, MI

Inequality is a growing social problem and has far-reaching implications. A two-tiered Internet would exacerbate the problem particularly because what it will effect is equality of opportunity. If some of us are relegated to an Internet slow lane, there can be no equality of opportunity.
—Edith Kusnic, Seattle, WA

Why Mr. Wheeler. Are you for the company or the people?
—James Lanter, Blacksburg, VA

There is no greater public good than a fair marketplace of ideas. When some ideas and proponents are favored or disadvantaged, we all suffer. Public funding produced the Internet, and the public's interests must outweigh the profit strategies of commercial companies. More importantly, your obligation is to protect the public interest, not apologize for it, belittle it, or sell it off. Just do your job--protect the public interest and reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Keep the Internet a fair marketplace of ideas.
—Trevor Self, Arlington, VA

In order to keep progressing as a nation, we need innovation. In order to have innovation we need an open environment to work with. The internet can and should be that environment, but it can't be if net neutrality is not maintained.
—Nathan Little, La Vista, NE

Hello FCC, My name is William Wong and I believe the internet should remain free and open. I do not support Tom Wheeler's plan and urge you to please stop trying to destroy the internet for your profits. Thank you for your time and I hope to hear from the FCC in response to my letter. Regards, Will Wong
—William Wong, Las Vegas, NV

True net neutrality does not have fast lanes. Discrimination can be seen in most worldly institutions. The internet is one of the LAST remaining free of it. This is a bigger issue than it appears on the surface. If the FFC's proposed Internet rules are accepted, there will be negative global ramifications. Corporations will have more power, people will have less. This change will be one of the largest mistakes in human history. Please dig deeper, open your eyes, and open your hearts to people, instead of corporations.
—Evan Sidwell, ,

Equality for all is the basic principal that our nation was founded on. There is no better symbol of that equality in the modern age than the neutral internet.
—Liam Higgins, Perth Amboy, NJ

Small businesses like mine can't afford to be gouged by huge telecomms that are already rolling in dough while serving up a product that isn't as good as other industrial countries. Once again corp. mediocrity is rewarded.
—Juan Calvillo, Oak Grove, OR

The Internet, as it exists now, works, so why are you tinkering with that? Because you're corrupt and corporations are greedy? Net Neutrality is important to me because politicians and corporations want to get rid of it, which means it must actually be good for normal Americans.
—Daniel Donatelli, Cleveland, OH

Leave the Internet alone! It is not meant to be controlled! Keep open the Internet and the free exchange of ideas and businesses alive!
—Caitlinn Stoltz, Landenberg, PA

It has become very obvious by now that the best ideas in general come from the small startups, not from the giant corporations (who buy up the startups after they become successful). If the startups do not get a chance anymore it will stifle innovation in a big way.
—Jonck van der Kogel, ,

This will mean the end of the internet and complete takeover by corporations. End Net Neutrality and it will make the internet a corporate store front that everyone will abandon. I can barely afford the access now but if it gets more expensive and corporate I will stop using it altogether
—CJ Taylor, Austin, TX

As a computer multimedia instructor, I have very creative students involved in web development, and I would like all of them to exercise their right to free speech and innovation on the internet. Furthermore, Net Neutrality will assure a platform where all my students will have an opportunity to promote innovation.
—Louis Romao, Waterbury, CT

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Jake Sjoberg, Sartell, MN

I own and operate a rural business that depends on fast and reliable Internet connectivity. Giving Comcast and AT&T free reign will not help my connectivity or my business. China is investing billions in infrastructure to support small businesses as are most other industrialized nations. Please don't leave us in the dark ages with cable companies left to harvest profits and abandon innovation.
—Chas Nol, San Francisco, CA

If the FCC allowed ISP's to create a two tiered internet it would fail in it's job to protect citizens. It would hurt the ability of startups and innovative online projects and entrepreneurs to build their concepts quickly and without funding to help create jobs and move technology forward. Small businesses are the future of the American Economy, and allowing the corporations the have a leg up on the economic sector which is creating all of the new jobs in the U.S. would be extremely counterproductive. Please represent the voice of the people, not the lobbyist and the big businesses. Thank you for your time,
—Kyle Ivins, Pleasant Grove, UT

Internet access is no longer a luxury in our society—it is a necessity. As a nation, we can't afford yet another system that privileges the wealthy at the expense of the other 99%. Please make sure that our rights as citizens are protected against entities such as Comcast that are profiting on the marginalization of our nation's citizens!
—Jonathon Risser, Seattle, WA

Access to the internet should be a right, not a privilege determined by the amount of money you can pay the ISP. Please reclassify ISP's as common carriers!
—Joel Van Auken, Kokomo, IN

I like the way things are now. Do not change them.
—Kathy Porter, Henderson, TX

Mr. Wheeler's assertion that he supports net neutrality is ringing pretty hollow. Where does the money trail lead?
—A Bonvouloir, Sunnyvale, CA

The Internet belongs to ALL of us! Oh and Google fiber will take over so I hope You all had fun!
—Arthur W. W.Simmons III, Absecon, NJ

I am retired now. But in the nineties I was self-employed with my own kitchen design firm. The Internet was my main marketing strategy, providing a full 70% of my leads to new business. Entrepreneurs like I was cannot, and should not be forced to, accept anything less than a free and neutral Internet. Otherwise those businesses with the most money will win every new customer and those of us who have to rely on our wits will get nothing but the dregs.
—Peggy Deras, South San Francisco, CA

My family and I use the internet daily to obtain information and a variety of other uses, including uses integral to performing work as a doctor and teacher. As a US citizen, mother, doctor, and a variety of other roles, I depend on Net Neutrality and emphatically demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Lara Wright MD, Albany, CA

Freedom of internet is necessary to all walks to life in the modern world.
—Mira Gutoff, San Francisco, CA

the internet is it broken, therefore we should leave it alone. It is doing exactly what it was meant to do. If the internet developers in silicon valley are thinking this is a bad idea, big business should listen up.
—Tamara Meyers, Knoxville, TN

Internet access should be made available to all at reasonable cost. It should NOT be a big profit maker for huge corporations.
—Jay Lambert, Wilmot, NH

The rights of the many are slowly disappearing in our so-called free country, while the power of the few are expanding. The super rich get richer and the rest of us do not. Now you are making something as democratic as the internet unavailable to the many people out here working hard to pay bills and send our kids to college. Just because we aren't all CEOs and trust fund babies doesn't mean we shouldn't have access to fast, inexpensive internet. You have the power to make a difference for millions of Americans. Please do it.
—Michelle Seymour, Saint Louis, MO

We are paying the providers on one end and the content providers are paying them on the other, and they still want to prioritize traffic. Just charge us for how much we use like any other utility. Information is essential to the health of our democracy and corporations who would restrict access to information are obstacles to democracy.
—Lewis Edwards, Huntsville, AL

The internet belongs to ALL users, not just those with money. Stop favoring the likes of Verizon and AT&T.
—Mark Hillenbrand, Oak Lawn, IL

As someone who makes their living online, net neutrality is an issue that is very dear to me. The Internet is comparable to the United States itself, in that everyone with enough determination can rise to the top. Allowing providers like AT&T and Comcast to create a two-tiered system will likely destroy innovation and turn the Internet into a place where only those sanctioned by Internet service providers can thrive. Allowing this to occur would eliminate many of the customers that depend on content such as mine to help them stand out. In a two-tiered world it wouldn't matter if a website was the best source of information or entertainment, it would only matter if they had paid the ISP or had been labeled "worthy" of receiving the faster speeds. Innovation is something the United States is in desperate need of at this time, and creating an Internet that is open and allows everyone the chance to succeed is the best way to inspire this in everyone. That is why I ask that Internet service providers be classified as common carriers. In doing this we will keep the inspiration of millions alive and tell them the Internet is still a place where their hard work and innovative ideas are more important than the cash in their pockets or who they know. Thank you.
—Michael, Farley, MO

Broadband carriers need to be reclassified under Title II! If we don't do this, it will allow companies like Comcast to double dip. I currently pay them to deliver the internet (and all related services), they shouldn't be allowed to turn around and charge Netflix for doing what I'm already paying them for. Secondly, consumers in the US already lack choice on who provides them with broadband. In Quincy, MA, I can choose between Comcast and Verizon DSL. Both are incredibly sub-standard products, and are very over priced. They are priced this way and can get away with pricing this way because there is no competition in marketplace. The internet is an essential service to our country - for innovation, for jobs, for education, for access to information, etc. It must be governed under the same strict rules as electricity or water. Please reclassify the internet through Title II.
—Christian Wright, Plymouth, MA

Net Neutrality is important to me because I do not want Internet service providers deciding for me what content will reach me faster and what will reach me slower. I want my ISP to provide me with a fast and reliable connection and that's it. Creating a two-tiered Internet will set a precedent for further taking away the Internet as we know it.
—Apollo Victoria, Los Angeles, CA

Please FCC net neutrality is paramount, get rid of your rules and reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Susanna Kaljur, Courtenay,

I would get worst service, indirectly pay more and denied benefit of opportunities of new small innovative companies
—Dennis J Sabourin, chicopee, MA

Net neutrality is one of the most important things in allowing the internet to be a free and equal place for all who wish to use it. Removing it would be taking a step back in virtual rights and making it harder for many people who use the web to continue to do so.
—Gabriel Feijo, Minneapolis, MN

Access to information is a human right that should be guaranteed.
—Elizabeth Gilarowski, ,

The FCC should be working on behalf of the citizens/people NOT on behalf of or the preferred benefit of corporations and their lobbyists. Make decisions that are best for consumers not providers.
—Jeffrey Pickett, Houston, TX

Net Neutrality protects consumers and small businesses from being bullied by the larger corporations that control most of the Internet's infrastructure. ISPs must be reclassified as common carriers to prevent further abuse of power.
—Nicholas Chase Montgomery, Gwynn Oak, MD

I am a public services librarian and I see the widening digital divide every day that I come to work. Many of our customers are people who cannot afford to have internet service or computers at home. This is because there are only two choices for high-speed internet in our area, and both are difficult for families from middle to lower economic backgrounds to afford. If corporations are allowed to control the traffic of the internet in the United States, this will only serve to deepen the digital divide into an even larger chasm between the “haves” and the “have-nots”. Also, all of our rights to free speech and access to information (which is by and large found by using the internet) may be controlled by those who hold financial gain and continued wealth extraction as their chief values. America prides itself on the freedom of its citizens, yet our government is allowing this to be taken away from us in the name of avarice. PLEASE do not allow conglomerates to control our access to the internet. Reclassify the ISPs as common carriers and protect Net Neutrality. Do the right thing.
—Barbara Thorp, Port Republic, MD

Get rid of these terrible rules, pl0x. kthxbai
—Sebastian Mackin, , how is a "fast lane" even physically possible? at least call it what it really is: throttling all other traffic and creating a toll road, which is the antithesis of an open, equal internet.

—Matthew Thompson, Oakland, CA

I support and democratic and OPEN internet, a free exchange of ideas, without "siloed" content. Corporations cannot be expected to police themselves when the bottom line is their only goal.
—William Yoelin, LOS ANGELES, CA

Internet fast lane costs will be passed on to consumers, making the consumer pay for a service that is already among the highest cost in the world for one of the lowest levels of service. Take action to force consumer price down and expand capability.
—Ben Hudson, Tempe, AZ

Preserve net neutrality. You have no right to hand it over to the wealthy. It is not theirs or yours.
—Terry Chamberlain, Knoxville, TN

Net Neutrality is important to me because I use the internet, constantly. New innovations, dissemination of news and information, and the internet community are here to stay... and stifling them with a plan that allows a 'fast lane' to be created for businesses with deeper pockets will only stifle that. The United States of America already lags behind other countries in availability of high speed internet and wide-spread adoption of the technologies that go hand-in-hand with that capability. Please, do not hurt the country. Do not allow corporate giants to control the internet as their private cash cow. Keep it for everyone, large and small.
—Robert W Archer, Toledo, OH

The Internet should be equal for all to utilize. Don't let those with the most cash run it. All individuals deserve the right to research openly, represent their business, or present their point of view. Your decision will negatively affect students, artists, small businesses, non profits, and charities. Don't let big business interests run the internet!!! Wendy Keeling
—Wendy Kusmaul-Keeling, Goodlettsville, TN

I get most of my news and all of my entertainment from the internet. And not from the big guns, but the smaller groups, blogs, newsletters. Rather than rely on corporate-controlled main stream media, I read about ALL sides of the news. Please don't take that away. I can't afford to pay more, and neither can the smaller guys.
—Joan Summer, Poteet, TX

This is too important to ignore.
—Peggy Malnati, Farmington Hills, MI

Everyone is equal!!!!
—Mark White, Pittsburgh, PA

If you care about the people and not the companies' pockets then you know what's right.
—Chris Hutchinson, Chicago, IL

Net Neurality is important to everyone because a level playing field is how businesses like Google, Netflix and Facebook were able to succeed. It's the American dream of the internet for everyone.
—David K Rodriguez, Middletown, MD

DON'T LET THESE COMPANIES HAVE ANY MORE POWER!
—Caleb Munson, Schoolcraft, MI

Money cannot always trump freedom of information in this world. It happens often enough... Please try to make sure that the Internet retains equality of information. Thank you!!
—John Tenney, Lafayette, CA

I wrote to Tom Wheeler, I signed petitions, I called his office. I was led to believe he would protect Net Neutrality. First, why would Chairman Wheeler misrepresent his intentions? I am very angry about this as the appropriate channels I used to contact him did not work!!! Please stop protecting corporate interests and please use MY tax dollars and all of our tax dollars to do your job which is to protect the American people. When did our country become this? Wait, I know, don't answer. But please do what is in the power vested in you to make our country right again. PLEASE! Please throw out the recently proposed rules and reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Thank you, Katherine Glatter
—Katherine Glatter, Amherst, MA

By abandoning net neutrality and your continued support of the oligarchy that has cropped up in America's internet industry (the blatant avoidance of competition) You are continuing to hold back the strength and quality of America's internet technology. (http://stopthecap.com/2014/04/ 15/97-of-romania-served-by-fib er-broadband-speeds-outclass-u nited-states/) When country's like Romania are curb stomping us in this industry its an embarrassment to our entire country. We INVENTED the internet, so why is it that we've been allowed to fall behind? The blame falls entirely on the FCC for allowing our cable companies to stagnant with their anti-competition stance. Lack of competition means lack of innovation. Lack of competition means lack of improvement. Lack of competition means no progress. Most importantly, lack of competition means monopoly. It means shitty deals for the consumer while the corporate head charges a excess amounts of cash for a shit tier product, all because they had no need for competitive pricing. It most areas in the United States (anywhere that's not considered a major metropolitan city) cable companies have no direct competition to price against. They've been allowed to either buy out the competition or make back room deals over "turf." It's been the FCC who's allowed them to do this.
—Cody Owens, Elmira, NY

You people really are modern fascists. Didn't Hitler constrict informational sources and outlets in another political era?
—Bill Lizewski, Hollywood, FL

Equality is important.
—Anita Alcantara, Chicago, IL

The Internet is the only true forum for free speech, and the very idea of allowing corporations to determine what speech is free based on how much we pay is sickening. Do not allow Wheeler's cronies to profit from a common good.
—Raymond Duval, Galena, OH

Why should big corporations be able to buy a faster speed than anyone else? How are new ventures supposed to compete with this? We all want to be able to access the Internet at top speed. Don't let power and wealth buy even more power and wealth, FCC!
—Henrietta Jenrette, Raleigh, NC

President Obama and Chairman Wheeler are betraying the American people by not classifying ISPs as commong carriers, in order to protect net neutrality. The future of the Internet and the future of the country is at stake. The proposed rules are an obscenity.
—Robert John Bennett, Honolulu (Absentee Voter in Germany), HI

Allowing ISPs to decide (or sell their decision) which content providers should get faster data transmission of their content and which should not is like allowing telephone companies to decide who gets priority to make phone calls and who get the fastest and clearest connections. I am paying for a service. I do not think that ANYONE other than me has the right to decide how I will use that service other than not allowing me to infringe on someone else's rights. This is like allowing cable providers to decide which channels get the clearest and fastest transmission of their signal and which ones get slow, spotty transmission of their signal. I beg you to stand up for democracy and NOT allow these rules to go froward as written.
—Megan Vicino-Collins, Halethorpe, MD

Net Neutrality helped my husband's small company. It helps a lot of small companies stay in business as well. I do not want my internet to look like cable TV. Extra fees will be bad for small business and not only that some of them will not be able to afford them. Internet is the only place right now where people can find their voices (for better and for worse); Internet service provides will divide up the market, there will be no competition whatever, and we will have to pay for websites that we can get for free right now (just like cable TV). Please reclassify ISP's as common carriers.
—Silvia Hall, Boca Raton, FL

I already pay an arm and a leg for internet use, at my office through AT&T and at home through Verizon, plus to AOL for my email. I am already not getting the speed I am promised and have been paying for for years, yet when I complain I get only "sorry...the copper wires are old, and we aren't putting fiber optics in your neighborhood." Paying for 6M, lucky if I get 2M, and even then if my husband and I are on at the same time we are lucky to get even that. So if your Net Neutrality goes away it will be even slower. I am not getting what I am paying for now. Why should those companies be allowed to slow me down more or take more of my money? They should be made to reimburse me for the service I have already paid for but not received. AS for going to Time-Warner, we would be at the end of the chain in our neighborhood and not getting any more speed out of them. Our neighbors have been complaining about the poor quality of both service and speed from them for years. WE WANT NET NEUTRALITY!
—Susan Mayer, Sylmar, CA

Providers have been dragging their feet about providing faster service. Don't legalize their tardiness in bringing us up to speed with the rest of the world by this two speed farce to allow them to charge higher rates for what they should already be providing.
—Anthony Albert, Corvallis, OR

This is quite simply another corporate trick to make more money. Eventually everyone will want the fast lane and will have to pay for it. Just like cable tv. Used to be free over the airwaves. No we have to pay for it via cable. The internet was developed by people who were dedicated to free and open access. So it should remain!
—Frank Ferro, Guilford, CT

Net neutrality is ESSENTIAL to protecting democracy!!
—William Weiswasser, Huntington Woods, MI

It's not the government's job to regulate speech, business practices, or anything involving business and connection across the Internet for that matter. The Internet is the bridge towards progress so if we want to turn into North Korea where everything is regulated then we're on the right track with these rules.
—Kevin Ryan, Eden, NY

I will never be able to afford "the fast lane" of the internet and I am terrified of this. I want the same access to every site regardless of how much money the site owners pay to be accessed. No company should be able to dictate what I'm allowed to do on the internet. Protect me. Protect information freedom. Don't cause more rifts in the system than there already are. I depend on you to protect net neutrality.
—Sommer Wiegert, Omaha, NE

ISPs should be classified as common carriers of THE PUBLIC's broadband spectrum. Please reclassify their status as such and uphold the practice of Net Neutrality.
—Robert Agee, Alexandria, VA

CORRUPT SHILL WHEELER: THE PEOPLE OF THIS COUNTRY WHO EMPLOY YOU DO NOT WANT YOUR DESTRUCTIVE CORPORATIZING OF THE INTERNET! WHAT NEXT, PG&E GETS TO CHARGE MORE FOR THE ELECTRICITY YOU USE FOR LIGHTS THAN FOR THAT WHICH YOU USE TO RUN YOUR REFRIGERATOR? THIS IS ABOUT NOTHING BUT BIG BUSINESS ROBBING THE PEOPLE YET AGAIN!!! STOP THE LIES & RECLASSIFY THE INTERNET AS A COMMON CARRIER OR RESIGN NOW!!!!
—David Ponta, Bothell, WA

As a means of unparalleled connection around the world, the net must be treated as the indiscriminate network that it is. Tunneling individuals into two lanes-- fast for those who can afford it and slow for those who can't-- will destroy the integrity of the equality that the net, as it stands, provides.
—Nicole Post, Lakeland, FL

If the telephone is a common carrier, then the internet is a common carrier. I do not want to be relegated to a slow lane for the financial benefit of billionaires. I want all views to be heard, not just the views of plutocrats. This is becoming a very sick democracy. Do not kill it.
—Fred Gosling, Beaumont, TX

I am in a long-distance relationship. My girlfriend and I depend on skype to be able to spend time together and have date nights. Neither of us makes enough to be able to afford premium internet service. Our relationship would suffer enormously if we weren't able to skype easily and clearly with each other. Please do not make it harder for me and my sweetheart to love each other.
—Max Kreisky, Lexington, MA

I am a blogger and many of my opinions are hated by certain political factions. I am sure that access to my blog would be slowed down to a slow walk if the rules proposed by Tom Wheeler are applied. Wheeler definitely has his fingers in his ears regarding public opinion. Which fact merely proves beyond a doubt that we are now ruled by a plutocracy. And that does not come as news to anybody who has been watching for a while now. We need to retire Tom Wheeler who is obviously nothing more than a corrupt puppet for the corporations anyway, just as Powell was.
—Bill Dugan, Salem, OR

Not cool guys. Not cool. You think this is a good idea? HA!
—Larry G, Midlothian, VA

Net Neutrality is important to me because it will keep internet service providers from taking advantage of its customers and the businesses that use the Internet to reach the masses. The internet should not be taken advantage of or interfered with by large corporations. It is unfair and unethical for Internet Service Providers to discriminate between websites based on how large they are, how used they are or how much a person is willing to pay to have fast access to them. Please take action to ensure the internet remains Neutral and not taken advantage of as a money pit.
—Danielle Flowers, Doylestown, PA

Net neutrality helps me to be equal to you people.
—Dennis Pokorny, Richfield, WI

Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers so we ALL have free and equal access. Keep Net Neutrality safe.
—Jeri Khajeh-Noori, Clearwater, FL

Net neutrality is the last bastion in democracy of information. Please keep the internet free, open, and accessible to all. This is a matter that affects the whole world, not just the US. Freedom to acquire knowledge should be a universal right and this is as close as we've come to it in history. Please don't stop the progress now.
—Joanna Bonnheim, Berkeley, CA

The most valuable source of knowledge and self expression in our world is the internet, and without Net Neutrality it faces destruction. There is no reason on Earth that giant corporations need to control the internet. Hand them that, and they control the world. This would send us backwards two decades, and the only way we should be moving is forward. Stop this atrocity, this will affect billions of people negatively, and for what? Something as pathetic as money.
—Kylie McBurney, Tucson, AZ

Dear FCC, I'm glad you're soooo RUBBISH in representing our wish. Because of your rubbishness, now, we are coming beautifully together to show the world how powerful the 98% are. Personally, you really annoyed me! I'm definitely coming after you. Attacking Internet's Neutrality was a BIG MISTAKE! Hands off OUR INTERNET and RUN! WE HAVE ARRIVED.
—Sorin Moroianu, Deal,

Net neutrality is freedom for the internet, and it would be unfair if you took that away from us.
—Cory Scott, Geneva, OH

Internet companies should not be able to charge, limit, or prevent access to any legal content provider. The costs associated with supporting increased bandwidth and data usage should be passed on to the internet customers in a model similar to mobile device internet industry. By placing data usage caps, slowing data speeds after the caps are reached, and offering higher tiered data plans would help these companies gain some breathing room and an infusion of capital to start covering the cost of infrastructure upgrades.
—Jeff Crawford, Chandler, AZ

The internet ISP's are common carriers. Available to everyone, not just a select few. I pay first class prices, I deserve first class access.
—Jim Harley, Stuart, FL

My fear is the creation of a tiered system of access and rising costs. There's no reason to mess with what has worked since the inception of the internet, except to pander to large corporate interests.
—Kelly Boerder, Denver, CO

Putting this plan in action is unfair to the consumer and stifles innovation and the small business owner who can not afford to compete. ISP's are already throttling bandwidth and holding content creators responsible for performance. We need real local competition and, while I do not favor government intervention, I think that reclassifying ISPs as common carriers is a step in the right direction.
—Robert DeSanno, Millburn, NJ

These plans will cause fragmentation of the internet.
—Andy Walling, Marina, CA

the internet is the last sanctuary of international free speech and represents not only a cultural and political importance, but a historical significance that cannot be violated by petty copyright laws
—Brenna Maillet, Pleasant Hill, CA

DEMOCRACY DEPENDS on Net Neutrality. The Internet MUST be treated as a UTILITY- NOT as a CORPORATE CASH COW!
—Patricia McHUGH, SAINT LOUIS, MO

Protecting true net neutrality is essential for entrepreneurial ventures to help shape the Internet and life in a digital age. The next Facebook or Twitter might not be able to compete fairly online because their established competitors might have a speed advantage they can afford and take advantage of.
—Conor Boehm, Hinesburg, VT

Quit catering to big business and protect your constituency. Quit being finger puppets for the rich and the elite. Have you forgotten the phrase "For the people, by the people and of the people" in the Constitution? Maybe you should reread it so you understand WHY you were placed in office! If you are not for the people then YOU are the problem.
—Paul Groh, Gulf Breeze, FL

The new rules proposed for a two tiered Internet is flatly the wrong direction. It is wrong for the future of innovation, it is wrong for favoring concentration of power, it is wrong for the vast majority of users, wrong for Internet content creators and wrong for applications makers. But it is a lovely gift to AT&T, Comcast and Verizon. Why is a Democratic FCC vote doing this?
—Milda K. Hedblom, St. Paul, MN

The internet should be a utility and regulated as such, not another tool for corporate leverage.
—Greg Shaffmaster, San Jose, CA

Por que sin internet no puedo apprender de la vida.
—Josephtapia Tapia, Albuquerque, NM

Net Netruality is important so big companies such as Comcast and Time Warner Cable do not dictate what Americans can and cannot access on the web.
—Lenny Angelucci, Spring City, PA

I've got far too many friends, all over the globe, to lose. They mean so much to me, and if I can't see them (my parents may not be too keen on paying an extreme load of money to keep me having tumblr), then... I don't know what I'd do.
—Madelyn, Levittown, PA

I am a handicapped person living on a fixed income. Affordable reliable and high-speed internet service is an absolute necessity for people in such circumstances.
—Paul Impola, Albany, NY

Common carrier
—Wendell Appe Hall, hulen, KY

These rules stand to create a preferred class of internet users: Those who can afford to pay. Allowing one piece of data to be served over another essentially means eliminating the democratic underpinnings of the web as a tool of dissent, change, innovation, and ideas that challenge the status quo. The internet didnt begin with the status quo, and it shouldn't be allowed to become controlled by it. The internet should remain organic, free and an equal to all regardless of economic power.
—Tim Johnston, Chicago, IL

Please classify internet providers as common carriers and give the public an even playing field. The public well being should always trump private profit for large corporations.
—Lisa Nash, Seattle, WA

The internet need to stay open the way it is without favoring the more moneyed (as our politics increasingly do). The internet only makes sense if everyone is on the same level, so that it truly is an information super highway. In a world where the term democracy is loosing more and more of its meaning, let the internet be democracy's success story where anyone regardless of background can have full access to its wealth of knowledge.
—Christine Ponelle, San Francisco, CA

The internet shouldn't have classes for haves & have-nots - it should be a public utility like any other! Protect net neutrality and reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Jennifer Russell, Loveland, OH

I am a small business owner. My company provides high-end web and mobile design and consulting services to fortune 500 clients. I'm also involved in several Internet Start-Ups. I've been following the Net Neutrality issue for the last few years and I'm very, very concerned that we keep an even playing field and protect Net Neutrality. It allows small companies like mine the ability to compete with large companies. I've heard the arguments from AT&T, Comcast and Verizon and I know their motives. I hear them say "don't worry" and "this is good for consumers." In the short run, perhaps. In the long run, we will surely regret giving over this power and control. I'm all for competition and free market, that's why I favor competition between hundreds of thousands of content providers and start-ups. Real competition requires an even playing field. The only sensible way to achieve this is to reclassify the ISPs as utilities -- as common carriers. Otherwise they will be back again and again, chipping away until they get the control they want. Before it's too late, I urge you to take a strong, sensible stand, and fight for the 99% who don't have the time or resources to lobby you. Just our urgent voice. Thank you. --Bill Purdy COO, Spinapse, Inc.
—William Purdy, Bainbridge Island, WA

Not only are the ISPs charging the consumers, but they're also charging the providers and we, as consumers, have to pay more (to the providers) to receive the same service we have now. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Scott Gisler, Barre, VT

The indiscriminant availability of high speed internet to everyone will quickly be as important as the telephone. Segregating internet speeds as proposed will focus programming from an oligarchy of a few companies, will inhibit competition, leading to overall higher consumer prices, and slower U.S. service compared to other countries. Net neutrality will help us regain our competitive edge in internet, and should be maintained.
—Paul Henry Dawson, Greensburg, PA

Many head of households depend on the internet to feed their families. They depend on fast internet and Net Neutrality, taking away the open internet will lead to more people unemployed. Please do not take away open internet that we all need and many depend on.
—Rhina Slobodny, Canyon country, ca, CA

Net Neutrality has formed the very basic foundation of how the internet functions. Removing it will crippled the internet and users there within. Do NOT impose these ridiculous discriminatory regulations, Net Neutrality NEEDS to exist.
—Brandon Coleman, Cleveland, OH

The ISPs are already getting paid by their customers for connectivity, so charging the major server companies for carrying their traffic is greed. ISPs should be common carriers.
—Kenneth Ingham, Albuquerque, NM

IT'S FASCIST NAZI BULLSHIT. MAJOR CORPORATIONS TAKING CONTROL OF EVERYTHING. THEY NEVER LIKED THE FREEDOM OF THE INTERNET....AND NOW YOU SCUMBAGS AT THE FCC LET THEM DESTROY THAT TOO. THANKS YOU BASTARDS. - THE AMERICAN PEOPLE. FUCK YOU!!!
—James Juron, Troy, NY

No megamergers should control access to information provided by small servers on the Internet...
—Christopher Flynn, San Jose, CA

the internet is for everyone there is no discrimination it is a neutral playing field for opinions and content DONT CHANGE THAT!!
—Connor Paull, Redruth,

In the same way all persons should be treated equally, so should all bits, bytes and packets.
—Avery Buffington, Leander, TX

Why in the hell in the hell do you people keep doing things to empower the rich and powerful in this country at the expense of the ordinary American! It must be because of the greed for money!
—Pat Chefalo, Rochester, NY

Net neutrality protects free speech, innovation, democracy, and equity. I understand that the U.S. is an oligarchy, not a democracy, but this does not have to be the case. Take a stand for democracy, regardless how much the ISPs are padding your income. What's best for them is NOT what's best for the public. I am a student, and I need to be able to access my public university's website, but they will not be able to afford the second tier of internet preference. Neither will my public library, which I also use regularly. This is an absolute violation of the first amendment, and if these rules go through, I am certain the Supreme Court will rule them unconstitutional.
—Shelby Shively, Colorado Springs, CO

It would be irresponsible to give control of the internet to a handful of companies, it should be free and open to everyone and not controlled in any way.
—Scott Woodruff, wellington, OH

Your proposals are tantamount to allowing discrimination against us, ordinary users of the Internet, based on how much we pay to the handful of corporations who are on a delusional power-trip, who think they own all contents on the Internet, when they are actually only carriers of the content, and whose real mission should be merely to maintain and update the infrastructure to keep it running. Internet service providers must not be allowed to discriminate against their users by restricting its speed and content, because contrary to the arguments being made in favor of the proposals, it is such restrictions that stifle "growth". If economic, educational, and cultural growth via the Internet are indeed in humankind's best interests, ISPs should focus instead on providing the fastest and most stable network for all people in the United States, just like they do in all other advanced countries in the world.
—Jyun Takagi, Los Angeles, CA

Please leave the internet as it is. There's no need for additional costs added to our already mounting bills. And also to keep information, and global social activities freely available to all
—Oscar Simoes, ,

Make ISPs common carriers. We pay them for those packets. We pay them to deliver them. The brain dead system of doling out broadband in this country has put the incumbent carriers in a monopolistic position. Allowing them to exploit not only their customers, but now they are attempting and succeeding in blackmailing website operators in order to get paid twice. It's a protection racket. The internet is a method of communication. One much richer and varied than any before it. ISPs are common carriers. Now recognize it.
—Micah Nordland, Columbus, PA

Corporations by nature seek to make profit. They do this with little or no regard for any externalizations, ramifications or the harm their decisions may do. If you give them any leeway to seize control of the internet, they will eventually do it. The internet is a communications tool like a telephone or the us mail. It is not a commodity to be given over to the highest bidder, as in the benefits of the political-corporate revolving door. Classify the internet as a public utility and access providers as common carriers as democratic common sense would advise.
—James "Rolin" Stone, Santa Rosa Beach, FL

Like many people, I'm on a fixed income and depend on one flat rate.
—Kirstin Mount, ,

The internet has been a great equalizer for everyone. People can share their thoughts, start new businesses online, shop for best prices, etc. We all have equal access. It should remain that way.
—Lana Wilson, Tucson, AZ

I'm tired of big corporations, who already are making huge profits, getting extra advantages to help them increase their already enormous profits. WE NEED A LEVEL PLAYING FIELD, otherwise, the American dream is really dead. Keeping fast internet access affordable (already the U.S. lags far behind countries like Korea and Japan) allows for the creation of new companies, new cultural and business developments which help enrich the U.S. in innumerable ways.
—Michael McCarthy, Ithaca, NY

Decent internet service is already expensive. I depend on it for work I do. In fact, the people I work for require their contractors to have high-speed internet. I cannot afford to pay any more than I do.
—Katherine Coonley, Vallejo, CA

I could try to list all the reasons why Chairman Wheeler's proposal is a bad idea, but I guarantee you have already heard them in far better form than I can here manage. I will simply say that the FCC is acting against the wishes and best interests of the public, is widely opposed on the issue by both sides of the political spectrum, and is lining itself up for yet another series of protracted court battles from smaller companies and individuals this proposal will harm. At this point, if the FCC votes in favor of the proposal, and therefore against Net Neutrality, it will lose all credibility with the public. Standing up for Net Neutrality is simply the right thing to do.
—Matthias Timmerman, Grass Valley, CA

There are already entirely too many ways in which news and other content available to the public can be controlled by a few powerful corporations and wealthy individuals. The internet is a public utility by its very nature; there should be no "fast lanes" for the rich.
—Gail Gillispie, Glenwood, IL

Equality on the internet matters
—Tammy Lettieri, Deerfield, FL

Ending net neutrality is short-sighted and self-destructive for the global economy and for global communication
—Drew Wesley Peardon, Canmore,

Net Neutrality is important to me as someone working towards a startup online art buisness, it's important to me as a student for research projects and online classes and as an Alaskan American for connection to the rest of America for news and culture. I think allowing discriminatory practices for the sake of corporate greed is disgusting. We already pay for access we shouldn't be forced to pay more so someone can pad their profit margins. Netflix already paid a huge tithe thanks to this to comcast. We know that the companies will discriminate. It's as plain as the nose on your face.
—Chris watts, Anchorage, AK

As a small business owner of a web development company, I rely on access to the internet to be neutral. The time spent modifying a website that can reach people without the need to spend exorbitant amounts of money to compete with companies that have bottomless coffers is a real skill - one that has defined the very strategy of online marketing. The Internet, like telephone service, is not just a commodity anymore. The United States has a whole new business model that is directly the result of a neutral Internet, and it could be destroyed by allowing ISPs discriminatory bandwidth practices. It has become a basic human right to have access to the Internet. We're already seeing price-gouging and a decaying quality of services. It's time to set in motion protections against discriminatory traffic and bandwidth practices now.
—Jonathan David Mitten, Seattle, WA

Net Neutrality means an equal-opportunity Internet for all, even internationally. Don't sell the Internet to the highest bidders.
—Jonathan Lyons, Lewisburg, PA

Many people already have few choices in terms of their ISPs, so there's no reason to give those providers more power. I already pay a significant amount for mediocre service and I don't understand why we would need to offer them greater advantages over consumers and companies like Netflix that rely on content speed. We don't need to be at the mercy of ISPs any more than we already are.
—Conner McNabb, Helotes, TX

Net neutrality Is fundamental to a democratic society.
—David Eastman, Newton, MA

The people want a free and open internet, not one where money can buy a louder voice. the open access of the internet is one of the things that has made our nation competitive this decade, and where so much innovation comes from. We are now going to sell this out to big companies who will pay for a louder voice? it will crush competition. I don't care what the politicians and big communication companies think they know whats best, we know whats in our best interest and we want Net Neutrality.
—David Shaye, Minneapolis, MN

It is already hard enough for start ups to contend with major corporations. Without net neutrality, it will be an even more unleveled playing field than it already is and you will be crushing the opportunities available for small companies to innovate. These are the starting stages to a monopoly on data access and it has to change!
—Chinh Duong, Lincoln, NE

The internet has the capacity to be or provide a virtual town hall meeting where democracy can function. By enabling the well-heeled to dominate expression in this medium, you subvert democracy more radically than it has been subverted by other means already.
—Dr. Jan Edward Garrett, Bowling Green, KY

Good internet service should not be for people who can pay above and beyond the normal charges. Doing this will allow internet providers to gouge more money out of subscribers who depend on the internet to be connected to the world. They will be able to prioritize what content goes to whom and if you don't think this will lead to censorship, perhaps you should sit and ruminate on it for a while.
—A Meyers, Poneto, IN America is FALLING BEHIND the world in internet speed and THESE SAME COMPANIES ARE NOT PUTTING ANY PROFITS TOWORDS INFRASTRUCTURE IMPROVEMENT YET. They will continue to maximize profits and only improve what they can get the rich to pay for, LEAVING THE REST OF US TO ROT.

—Richard Schwager, Santa Barbara, CA

As an illustrator, I rely on the internet to reach potential buyers and employers. If big outsourcing firms end up with fast tracks, not only is my job endangered, my entire industry is. We need real net neutrality.
—Jess Świtalska, Dewitt, NY

Rural access is important to me and I am afraid your actions will affect me even more than I am now. Please classify internet access as common carriers.
—Joey Mayer, Northfield, MN

Do not fix that which is not broken. Improve yes—is this an improvement? No!
—Dennis Monson, Cedar Hill, TX

So now free speech is to only the ones who can afford it? This new proposal is a direct attack on Democracy and open speech
—Barry Danielson, New Westminster, AZ

Net Neutrality matters. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers. I demand an open internet. We are already behind most of the rest of the civilized world. FInd another way to pay for your golf vacations and vote for the right thing instead of your wallet.
—Connie Corbaley, Daytona Beach Shores, FL

A free and open internet has provided me with a career. It's what America needs to grow our intellectual capital and stay strong. The rest of the world will overtake us if we let companies determine our public policies.
—Michael Estok, Glenside, PA

The internet is the Guttenberg Press of this time. We need unfettered access or we might as well accept the shackles now.
—Anthony Lauderdale, Bristow, OK

It false in the area of basic freedom, which is currently being sold to the highest bidders by Congress. It is time you actually represented us. Do your job!
—Michael G Holler, Key Largo, FL

This is absurd and you are not acting for the people that you represent, but the corporations. Thank god the EU has made the opposite position and enshrined net neutrality in law. You have taken a step to ensure america is held back in the world. Shame on you, shame
—Richard Bown, ,

Net Neutrality matters to college students such as myself across the nation who pay tuition fees and internet bills. Internet is a communication service and should be treated as such because not all people can afford all the changes that is being suggested. Americans such as myself are tired of continuosly being screwed over by rich corporations motives to make more money.
—Brian Trotter, Fredericksburg, VA

Hey. Act right and do the right thing here with the internet...Do not make the corporate evil companies, screw the little guy, again... Disgusts me that you would put this thru, or even consider it. Stand up and be aman about the whole thing. You're gonna screw us anyways in the end.
—Steve Davis, Phoenix, AZ

The internet is a place where information and ideas are exchanged, and it should be a place of equal access.
—Angela Anderson, Snohomish, WA

Net Neutrality is important to me and most anyother student, because on a student budget I could not afford a higher priced bill for faster service and the internet is a key research and learning tool for all of my classes.
—Michael Tauriainen, Bend, OR

Net neutrality is important to maintain the internet as accessible to everyone on an equal basis. Why should the big corporations get preferential treatment/?
—James DeLay, Bellaire, TX

I received this reply from Tom Wheeler on May 14th: Thank you very much for contacting us about the ongoing Open Internet proceeding. We're hoping to hear from as many people as possible about this critical issue, and so I'm very glad that we can include your thoughts and opinions. I'm a strong supporter of the Open Internet, and I will fight to keep the internet open. Thanks again for sharing your views with me. Tom Wheeler Chairman Federal Communications Commission The FCC actions recently do not coincide with your comments to me. Please reclassify ISPs a common carriers and keep the internet neutral. This may be the most important decision the FCC makes in this decade! Please do the right thing! Laurel Holmstrom-Keyes
—Laurel Holmstrom-Keyes, Cloverdale, CA

It is beyond obvious that the interenet is effectively a 'public utility' given the various services and vast majority of users who are deemd the 'public'. Internet networks are treated like common carriers in many respects already and since the TCA of 1996 telephone companies the option of providing video programming on a common carrier basis or as a conventional cable television operator it is only logical that ISP's be classified as common carriers.
—Bruce Sims, Escondido, CA

we need an open and neutral internet!
—Prem Chugha, Charlotte, NC

I like many other have had to cut our bills down by having only internet service through our cable companies. We can not afford to have a two tiered internet. I use Omma (which is a VoIP service) for my phone service, I watch tv using Hulu Plus, and our internet connection for web searches and email. To me, my internet connection through our cable company is a common carrier and should be reclassified as such. For once please listen to the people instead of the lobbyist's and special interest groups, and prove that our government regulatory agencies are not for sale to the highest bidder! Thanks for listening (I hope!). DeAnna Pruett-Boushele Cheyenne, WY
—DeAnna L Pruett-Boushele, Cheyenne, WY

Ending net neutrality without reclassifying ISPs as common carriers gives these already massive and profitable companies far too much power and control over the most useful communication tool ever created. ISPs that already are multi-billion dollar profit machines will only strangle small businesses further while restricting who has access to what and how fast online. They will stretch the American public's wallet even thinner, in these already tough times, by increasing costs to access information and people through their services, and then two-fold when the companies the ISPs charge more to pass those extra expenses onto their customers to keep their profit margins. In a time when the ability to talk to anyone anywhere at any time is at its greatest, they want to rip it out of our hands – how many American soldiers will no longer be able to video-talk to their wives and kids while they are halfway across the world because they can't afford the costs of it anymore, or because the software they use no longer works or is in business. When we need every job we can get they are robbing an untold number of future jobs by ending dreams of new online startups before they begin because it is too expensive to have a useful online presence. They will make it increasingly hard for already started businesses to expand and explore new customer demographics, which would increase the amount of workers they need to employ to be successful The ONLY benefactors to these new rules are the major ISP companies - NOBODY else stands to profit or expand their business through these rule changes. It's repugnant that you would even consider changing these rules in favor of ISPs simply because they ask that you do. They don't need the rules changed, and we don't want them changed.
—Nate White, Chesterfield, VA

I work in high tech and know the real impact of a tiered internet on future technology and application development. Please allow entrepreneurs, such as myself, the ability to develop applications and technologies on the same neutral net that past technologists have enjoyed. Enact net neutrality.
—Mr. Matt Chavez, Austin, TX

America means a fair chance for every single person who plays by the rules and works to contribute to our society. A two-tiered Internet means that the rules are skewed to favor those with the most money. That is wrong. Protect Net Neutrality. Preserve our free and open Internet.
—Cristina White, Corvallis, OR

I telecommute over the internet, so I need it for my job. Having different tiers of service could hurt the speed of transference of large files. Also, tiered service would give an advantage to established, well-off corporations and make it harder for start-ups to enter the market. Right now, thanks to net neutrality, the playing field is even. If you truly believe in the concept of free-market capitalism, net neutrality is essential. We don't need big corporations having an unfair advantage in yet another sphere of influence!
—Brian Rice, Indialantic, FL

The proposed rules of the FCC for a two-tiered internet will kill the open exchange of information. It is even going to end up hurting your overlords at AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast. If you weren't so blinded by your own greed you would see that.
—Matt Edwards, Marlborough, MA

DO NOT DESTROY NET NEUTRALITY!
—Tyler Weiss, Carlsbad, CA

I want equality where possible and necessary. Do not turn the internet into another tiered pay-tp-play service that leaves the less fortunate to suffer.
—Adam Guedry, Prairieville, LA

The internet is filled with voices, giving higher priority to only those that can pay will hurt all of us. Our public schools are already under funded, don't create a system were additional educational tools are required to come up with funds or find themselves slowed down by cable company greed.
—Amy Linder, Seattle, WA

To preserve free speech. Whatever is decided in US will be a big influence elsewhere
—Roberto guareschi, Buenos Aires, CA

I need net neutrality to maintain my life.
—David Gerke, White Oaks, NM

Because we all need the internet. Not just the rich.
—Matthew Holland, Irvine, CA

Please stand for equality and the public good.
—Thomas Eugene Musselman, Tucson, AZ

It should remain free to all, not sold to the highest bidder. I run a small non-profit and can't afford to pay more for faster response.
—Will Richardson, Medford, OR

Please do the right thing and classify the Internet as a Utility. It seems quite against Public Policy to stifle the Internet as it is a means of communication and the means of maintaining business competition and the creation of hundreds of thousands of small businesses. To allow the ISPs to financially throttle usage as we know it flies in the face of the intention of the creators of the Internet; to allow a free-flow of communication and ideas. The creators of the Internet essentially "gave it away" to the public in order to facilitate this. I don't believe it is the Government's place to sell it away from us. I believe it is the Government's duty to uphold Public Policy and protect our rights to continue to use the Internet as we currently do. For this purpose, the current FCC proposal is not useful. Please classify the Internet as a Utility, like many other sophisticated countries have already done.
—Justine Bateman, Los Angeles, CA

Net neutrality is important to me because I want there to be real competition between large internet companies and smaller start ups. The language in this plan is too vague to truly protect everyone's interests. This plan only benefits large, established online entities. I don't know how you have fooled yourself into thinking that this plan would create a level playing field, but you are dead wrong. If you want to protect the free and open internet and the economy, then make internet providers common carriers. The internet is an important of a commodity as a home phone and should be treated as such.
—Alysha Troxell, Farmington, NM

In recent years, the Internet has become the only way that ordinary people have any chance to sidestep and prevail over the influence of money, which is now consolidated in the hands of a very small proportion of the populace. If political, social and economic influence is concentrated in the hands of a small minority, then our nation has reverted to oligarchy and abandoned democratic governance. The only way that people should react to such a condition is to abandon the Internet altogether and revert to pre-Internet methods of living. This would have grave consequences for the national economy and will destroy the companies that are trying to profit from the policy that you are adopting. The Internet should be treated as a public utility with equal treatment for all members.
—Mel Klegerman, Houston, TX

the average American cannot handle the ever increasing cable and internet fees
—Jamie Bothen, Florence, KY

For once let the people have a voice and not the money hogs. Classify ISPs as common carriers. I pay for broadband and I should get all of it.
—Michael W Proctor, Weeki Wachee, FL

Maintaining a free and open internet is not only important on the basis of enterprise and business, it also matters because of the message it sends. Since it has been accessible to the public, the internet has been one of the most transformative inventions in modern history. Ensuring that it remains equally accessible to all parties big and small is of the utmost importance moving forward. Large ISPs cannot be allowed to determine who gets priority and who does not. Purely from a basis of affordability, this is destined to stifle start-ups in favor of larger existing companies; companies who were able to grow and become successful because they had the same accessibility as anyone else to the internet. This action must be stopped now and a message must be sent that it is not appropriate nor allowable to do anything other than provide access to the internet in an unregulated and unbiased way.
—Alex Moon, Steamboat Springs, CO

The Internet is a common resource, and should be classified as such. To allow large companies to pay for faster speeds will stifle innovation.
—Jake Forrester, Washington, DC

Internet service has become vital and essential, even more than telephone service. Our democracy depends on everyone having equal access. Internet service should be regulated as a common carrier.
—Mark Duncan, Menlo Park, CA

It would be a crime to the American people to use your so-called net neutrality rules which are nothing of the sort. You need to reclassify broadband internet as a common carrier and tell the big media companies that the concerns of the American people are more important than their coffers!
—Chuck McNevich, Lexington Park, MD

This is the government picking winners and losers again. Take action against the lobbyists and make the internet free again!!!
—Bryan Harper, Monroe, MI

I spend hours every day on line. I am a senior and depend on it for many types of information. I will not be able to access many smaller sites that I use daily. If you can't keep the internet free and open Mr. Wheeler you should resign. President Obama made us a promise and you need to help him keep it. Stop catering to corporations. I know you were one of them but you are supposed to be working for ALL citizens now.
—Judith Bodie, Bloomingdale, IL

I only have one option for cable service in my area, and I live in downtown Dallas. I have only one option for actual broadband through time Warner. You may think there are not monopolies, but there are, local monopolies. That is all that matters. Now Comcast is buying time Warner, I will be stuck with a company that limits the amount I can even use the internet, not to even mention deliberately slowing websites. If you allow a company to sell a fast lane to certain people, everyone else is getting inferior speed by default. That is unacceptable. Please do not let these new rules go into effect. These companies need to be regulated like the phone and utility companies. An open internet is essential now more than ever before.
—Justin english, Allen, TX

Net neutrality is essential to keeping a Democracy!
—Gina, Ankeny, IA

Real net neutrality is crucial to innovation, growth and development. Classifying ISPs as common carriers is the best way to protect the future of the Internet in this country. Large corporations should not be able to pay for a "fast lane" or any advantage whatsoever. Allowing them to do so crushes innovation and precludes small upstarts and new sites from standing a chance. I urge you to discard these proposed rules and reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Niklas Peters, Spearfish, SD

Everything that I and hundreds of millions of others value about the Internet has occurred under a regime of Net Neutrality. It has not only provided free and open access to a range of services that have become vital for the conduct of everyday life, for information and education, for public life, and for business, but has also been the incentive for the innovation that has led to information goods and services being available, as business have figured out how to make content of all different kinds available via the one equally graded terrain. Abandoning Net Neutrality by allowing businesses to pay for higher bandwidth will not only create a two-tiered Internet world, like the airlines in which economy passengers are increasingly squeezed into less and less space, it will also reduce the incentive for businesses to figure out innovations that will efficiently deliver content over a common carrier. The current FCC proposal, if implemented, will be a gigantic obstacle to the ongoing progressive development of the Internet. For example, as phone companies figured out how to provide VOIP service, the price of long-distance telephone service fell drastically for millions of individuals and businesses. As companies figured out how to make meetings workable remotely over the Internet, all using the same "pipe" as other data, universities have made education accessible to people for whom it was not accessible before. Introducing a two-tiered Internet will at the same time reduce the incentive for innovation and make information and collaboration less accessible for millions. As someone who has benefitted incalculably from the information services that have been developed under a regime of Net Neutrality, I am very strongly opposed to its abandonment, and urge the FCC to resist the pressures coming from a few corporations to undo the magnificent work that the Internet is. Net Neutrality will contribute to the health and vibrancy of both American society and global communication, collaboration, learning, and scientific progress. Jeremy J. Shapiro —Jeremy J. Shapiro, New York, NY

I run a small web-based educational nonprofit, and we can't afford to bribe ISPs to give our users timely access to our content.
—Michael Chidester, Somerville, MA

This country was supposed to be about equality what you tom wheeler are proposing is an act of discrimination and WILLresult to millions rioting on top of the economic collapse which will make things worse just so you and other companies monopolize the internet tofill your own pockets making everyone else poorer than they already are . Who made you god. If you kill net neutrality the rioting and looting will be on your hands trust me ive seen scenarios like this happen and your bill to kill net neutrality will be the cause.ive said my peace.
—Xeroflare Luton, Wilkes Barre, PA

It's a disgrace that this is even being considered.
—Brandy N. Urich, Baltimore, MD

Across the political spectrum, The People recognize the value of the Internet as their unencumbered access to the democratic process and exercise of free speech. Your proposals run directly counter to the spirit if not the letter of democracy and free speech. Limiting democracy is the goal of the business class. The FCC is supposed to operate in the PUBLIC INTEREST.
—Martin Eigenberger, Kenosha, WI

Net Neutrality is important to me because I'm going to need the internet for many stuff like looking for jobs, talk to friends that's outside the states and/or country, and do or assist projects from different clients. In addition to that, I'm currently working on a small project, so that I can work on my marketing and business skills that I learned from the college that I graduated from. Have you even thought about the people? There are many people who doesn't have extra money to pay for this. If this does succeed, then I just get the feeling that this will cost serious trouble and dreams will be destroyed.
—Bryan Wesson, Baltimore, MD

Net neutrality allows me to appreciate niche online creators and broaden my horizons without having the powers that be trying to extort me to consume the content they own themselves.
—Ryan Rogers, Owosso, MI

I want small businesses to have a chance to compete online. I want all voices to be heard, whether I agree with them or not, or whether big ISPs agree with them. I don't want things to deteriorate to an online world of piracy (it will) and pornography (because they are the ones who can pay). Do you really want to consign our future to that? Those activities are so detrimental on young minds (read a study or two on this). This is about more than a little bit of lousy money. This is the society you are giving us. Think beyond business, dollars, and cents. Don't do this.
—Annalisa Wiggins, Rexburg, ID

The internet should be as open and free as speech. All given an equal chance to be heard. This proposal destroys that. Do we really need to make someone even more rich by destroying our freedom?
—Timothy Franson, Woburn, MA

I beleive that net neutrality is what makes small businesses able to compete in this brave new world. If you don't decide to preserve net neutrality as it was previously defined and not as you want to define it, and reclassify Internet Service Providers as common carriers, you will be the downfall of the tech industry of tomorrow. Libraries and small tech companies will live or die because of your decisions.
—Aaron Glett, Dayton, OH

I thought we'd gotten past the RICH getting RICHER on the back of the masses by monopolizing markets. NO MORE MONOPOLIES, EVER!!!
—Noland C. Ardis, Brooklyn, NY

Net neutrality means competition, investment in infrastructure, more people on line, more innovation, JOBS and better life in rural areas as well as cities with quality low cost information transfer.
—Greg Koshak, Larsen, WI

Net Neutrality keeps internet access available to those who need it most, the poor, underprivileged, seniors, young people and people of color. It is a way for those who have little power to use their voice. The internet allows us all to communicate - to be heard. Net Neutrality strengthens our democracy. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers to prevent discrimination and a two-tiered system. Guarantee the internet for all.
—Millie Magner, Seattle, WA

Who is paying you off to get their [programs passed.
—Erwin J Crawford, Longwood, FL

Internet access in modern society is not a commodity, it is a staple required for communication, work and entertainment alike. What makes the internet great is the vast amount of content that is available to all who have a connection, regardless of how much they pay for it. I know I would rather have no connection than have to live with a restricted version or pay extra for the privelidge of high speeds and extra content. This proposal serves only one purpose, to make more money for ISP's, it's a blatant money grabbing scheme and should not be passed.
—Gawain Brewer, ,

The internet has never been simply a tool for making money. If our web sites become intolerably slow, we will not be able to use and internet diversity, creativity, and contribution to the social good will become a thing of the past. Please don't let this happen
—Barbara Zilles, Iowa City, IA

We WILL be ripped off without it.
—Danielle Crawford, Memphis, TN

Has anyone at the FCC looked at the latest survey results on cable and internet providers? There is a reason why their customer satisfaction levels are lower. HIGHER prices, worst quality. Bundled services, less choice. ONE company, no competition.
—Larry Chan, Columbus, OH

Net Neutrality will protect innovation, freedom of expression, and diversity. It will enable all citizens to participate in the democratic process.
—Robert Kaiser, Whitefish, MT

Many are poor and are in school. How will students get their education if they can't afford it? College students are drained dry of their money.
—Chinh Do, springfield, MA

The FCC must throw out the newly proposed rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. We must work toward passing a law to protect net neutrality, the principle that all Internet traffic should be treated equally, regardless of content or origin. Keeping the Internet equally accessible to all, especially small content producers, is key to ensuring tomorrow’s inventors and entrepreneurs have the same opportunity to succeed as their predecessors. Ensuring the Internet Service Providers remain neutral in all Internet traffic delivery is vital in maintaining the growth of our economy and the success of our country in this technological age. Stomping on small businesses stomps on our entrepreneurial spirit. You’ll hear the Service Providers make the “That’s not what we’re going to do” argument but ask yourself why they’re fighting so hard for the ability TO do it if they don’t plan to use it. If Net Neutrality is not maintained millions of small businesses will suffer, jobs will be lost, and the economy for working Americans will suffer. Furthermore, prioritizing content from certain companies isn’t the only thing ISPs could do once they abandon net neutrality. It’s a slippery slope that could also slow down or block some content entirely. Thank you
—Steven Knapp, Newton, MA

Internet Service Providers (ISPs) should be classified as common carriers. A two-tiered system is at odds with the intentionality of the Internet, which is supposed to be a Digital Commons. Please do all you can to preserve 'Net Neutrality.
—Jinna Maxwell Anderson, Guilford, CT

I'm an independent musician, and depend on the internet to share what I create with the world, book gigs, and generate publicity. I'm on a tiny budget. If net neutrality becomes a thing of the past, then you will be effectively killing my livelihood. PLEASE reclassify ISP's as common carriers, and save entrepreneurship, ingenuity, and the American dream!
—Talia Segal, Brighton, MA

The proposed FCC rules will kill the internet. Are your kickbacks really more important to you than the ability of the American people to freely exchange ideas?
—Ronald Matthews, Marlborough, MA

As a sole proprietor whose work depends heavily on on research, Net Neutrality is essential to my business. Small business owners cannot afford the extra fees that will be required of those who need efficient Internet access to a variety of sites. For small business owners throughout the U.S., PLEASE reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Maribeth Maher, Maplewood, NJ

Are You People Aware That The Evil You Do, Comes Back On You,,,,Dump Your Stupid Rule Changes And Allow All Americans Access To The Free Press That We Don't Have Now.....I Rely On This As Communication, Education And A Social Connection
—John McClain, Fort Worth, TX

Internet service is quickly becoming as integral to daily life as any utility (certainly wired telephone). Let's classify it as such.
—Will Gee, Baltimore, MD

As a small business owner having net neturality allows me to compete with the big businesses so that I can feed my family. As an American I would hope in sort of democracy here, I can guarantee a vote on this matter would keep the internet on neutral grounds!
—Cynthia fusillo, Cornwall, NY

The internet can change the world, but only if we keep it open. Don't let corporations lock it down! Stand up for net neutrality now!
—Aeraby Allen, Portland, OR if the net isn't neutral, it means that our democracy is dead. Freedom of Speech.....First Amendment. Do the right thing and stop sucking at the corporate teat. Sincerely, db

—Dee Black, westcliffe, CO

Net neutrality is vital so that all Americans can have a voice.
—Daniel Hawley, Ketchum, ID

Incredible, or target incorrigible.how could Obama appoint anyone that side with the rich few. You will stifle what makes this nation great. Freedom of speech. Please reclassify the isp.
—Dennis N Schurr, San Francisco, CA

The internet should not be yet another tool for the rich to get richer.
—Michael Mounteney, Springwood,

Please reclassify ISPs as a common carrier. As if the people of this country need another avenue for prohibition of equality. The Internet is perhaps the last frontier for uniform and readily accessible information, and to allow several companies ,the power to curtail that in the interest of garnering an ever increasing margin of profit is detrimental to the general public and a shameful proposition. Ethics and social responsibility are not aligned in this matter, as service providers will maintain that they are meeting the needs of the consumer according to the norm of society and simply adjusting business practices to ensure growth, they are doing so by sacrificing the needs of most for the wants of a few shareholders. Implementing a practice that neither benefits the majority of consumers nor acts in the interest of fairness. Allowing the said companies the power to monetize and adjust the internet's neutral experience will only further the gap that is being created between those who have the means to afford luxuries from those who do not have the means to afford adequacy. Policies such as the one being proposed, exacerbate the notion of inequality and are prime example of the greed and self interest displayed by corporation's and highlight the need for self-evaluation in regards to the values, merit and worth of the ideals and moral aptitude of this country.
—James Scott, Brooklyn, NY

Well, potential employers use email just as readily as they use phone. If I can't get to my email accounts, or other ways of communication on the internet, then I might not hear about things I need to know.
—RyVonne Werner, Portland, MI

Net Neutrality allows everyone to compete on an even scale. These rules allow incumbent behemoth companies to snuff out competition even before they have a chance to prove themselves. Our telecom landscape already is a virtual monopoly and these rules are allowing these monopolies to become even more powerful.
—Muhammad S Ali, Durham, NC

All websites should get equal treatment on the Internet. Small businesses and organizations do not have the budgets of big companies such as Microsoft. This would give large companies an unfair competitive edge with their budgets for purchasing fast lanes on the Internet. Small businesses and organizations is where new ideas develop, and it can turn into a money making idea. Division of fast lanes and slow lanes on the Internet might prevent new money making ideas from growing. Look at the success of movie review websites such as http://www.aintitcool.com/, http://www.upcominghorrormovie s.com/, http://www.latino-review.com/ & http://geektyrant.com/. Ain't It Cool created by Harry Knowles is a perfect example of success on the Internet with a small business website. Knowles started this movie review website in the mid-90s' when he was sick in bed. Knowles was a movie buff. His mother was roommates with the Bond girl Lois Chiles. So Knowles designed a website for movie news and reviews. This effort payed off. Anyone who is a movie buff knows about http://www.aintitcool.com/, and it paid off!
—Abrar Qureshi, Willowbrook, IL

Without Net Neutrality the ISPs will determine which data they want to get through and which doesn't or gets slowed down. Speeding any traffic up slows others down and the ones to be slowed will be the new starts, the up-and-comers, those without the cash to buy fair access.
—William Winslow, ,

It allows for the free flow of ideas and beliefs.
—Neil Mc Sweeney, ,

a 2-tiered internet hurts those who can't afford the higher tier.
—Harald Conradi, Los Angeles, CA

Reclassification is the only way to insure internet equality. Thank you in advance for doing what we all know is the right thing.
—Beverly Henry, Huntersville, NC

Dear Federal Communications Commission: FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet, and as a result limit competition, do further damage to the economy, and allow Internet Providors to potentially censor dissenting opinions. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Logan J. Tomko, New Kensington, PA

A free internet is good for free comerce. A corperate internet is good only for corperate companies, resricting compition.From the smaller companies
—Charles W Lynch, Shorewood, IL

I'M 85 and my real life is on the internet.
—art rosenzweig Yale 53, Orleans, MA

At age 75 and retired, I really depend on the Internet yo easily communicate with my family. Allowing additional fees to keep at least the same level of access is repugnant to me. If worst comes to worst, i will get out the short wave radio for my communication needs and bid farewell to the Internet. I hope you understand my position.
—Duane De Vries, Wyoming, MI

It was a mistake to not classify the internet as common carrier in the first place. Please respect a future generation's start ups, alternative media and freedom of speech. It is never a mistake to change a course of action when new evidence has been provided.
—Chloe Smolarski, Brooklyn, NY

Net Neutrality's EQUAL access favors consumers over giant corporations. We need the help, the corporations don't!
—Gay Kramer-Dodd, Eugene, OR the net belongs to the people .not the big three ,verizon, comcast and at&t...they are only the roads we get it on..they should not say who gets what speed and who does not —William D. Gaskill, punta gorda, FL

Please keep the internet fee and open for all users by reclassifying all internet service providers as common carriers. It's the only way to insure real Net Neutrality. Thank You.
—David G. Martin, Bay City, MI

The Internet is the only thing left that treats everyone equally.
—Adrienne Hochberg, Jupiter, FL

As a poorly paid university professor, I depend upon the internet for my research (no longer have to travel 1000's of miles to do research). Therefor, I would be severely hampered if I had to pay for what are now free services.
—Virginia H. Bennett, Honolulu, HI

Most people I know agree with me -- they would not value or use an Internet that is dominated by a biased few. The new Rules that the FCC proposes would allow the few -- the shareholders of major telecommunications companies -- to decide what sort of access we have, to the free content on the Internet. This is totally unacceptable. I would not even want to utilize an Internet like that. I no longer watch television, for the same reason -- it repeats over and over, opinions approved by a few. The information that radio and TV give us are terribly slanted and biased by corporate interests. Your proposal of rules that favor a company like Comcast's right to determine a "two-tiered Internet" with fast access to websites that they like, and slow access to the rest -- indicate to me that you are aware of Corporate business interests, but frightfully unaware of what the rest of us who don't frequent Corporate boardrooms, really want. My friends and I do not want to be limited to websites approved by or of interest to Comcast, Verizon, and other telecommunications companies. We want to seek out and hear information that is honest and not filtered through the lenses of Corporate self-interest. We want to hear about subjects of interest to us, and we want to understand the world based on facts, not on other people's opinions. The only place to get facts now is the Internet. Television and radio are too biased by monied interests. Everyone knows this now, even though it is not openly discussed. The Internet is one of the few public forums available to individual Americans regardless of status, income level or nationality. Please show me and the rest of America that you care about what we want, and require all telecommunications companies to treat each and every website exactly the same regardless of content.
—Mary Weaver, Rio Rancho, NM

As an employee at a small video game studio, the ability for rent-seeking ISPs to demand fees for better delivery of our services would be devastating to our ability to compete in the marketplace. The destruction of net neutrality and the creation of "fast lanes" allows entrenched corporations to gain a profound and permanent advantage over possible competitors, due to the funds and deals necessary to take advantage of these systems.
—Stephen Cheney, Roswell, GA

Why do you (the US government) ALWAYS give the advantage to large corporations? You are responsible for the destruction of this society. Please change how the internet is categorized. It is a utility, just like the phone lines and electricity. It is 2014, the internet is not a luxury, it is a necessity.
—Marc Vermette, El Dorado Hills, CA

To Who It Concerns: It is of utmost importance that all data be treated equally on the Internet. CHOICE - If we allow the purchase of preferential treatment for Internet traffic, we are essentially a captive audience. Personal liberty includes our right to choose--we must keep the Internet neutral and cultivate disparate sources of online information. Without proper access to all of the data sources, we will be confined to the ideas and information deemed important to those with the deepest pockets. VOICE - The Internet is a virtual extension of our society--if we allow some members of the virtual space to pay for better access to Internet audiences, the voice of the individual will be lost. Our freedom of speech is at stake. Please support net neutrality. Sincerely, Shannon Grothaus
—Shannon Grothaus, Cooper City, FL

Do not make us second class citizens on the internet. It was created with public funds.
—Ethan Eldon, Huntington, NY

The 99% have had enough taken from us for the greed of the few. If you don't want marching in the streets and upheaval by the mass users of the internet, I suggest you keep the internet OPEN!
—Madeleine Fisher Kern, Los Angeles, CA

Television was a free service for years. Those days are gone but the Internet must remain useable for all citizens. Children use it for schoolwork and this would make it difficult for people with limited incomes.
—David M. Miller, EVANSVILLE, IN

We must preserve an equal playing field on the internet: save net neutrality! You MUST classify ISPs as common carriers to preserve an open platform for discussion and entrepreneurship.
—Maxine Anderson, Kaneohe, HI

There is only one place to go to find out the truth or to share an idea or to ask a question. That place is the internet. It must remain an environment with equal access for all and access at equal speed.
—Barnet Cohen, East Quogue, NY

Keep the internet fair, please make no change and leave the rules as they have been in place. If you must change something, change it for the better, reclassify ISP's as common carriers. Keep it open, keep it fair and equally accessible by all.
—Jeremy Lucha, Union City, CA

Is there no end to their greed?!?! They charge the customer and they charge the vendor to gain access to their network. They stopped building out the networks but took our dollars saying that they will. We have not seen improvements on our networks. They already charge us for greater speed so this will be just another cost till they want more money. Where will it end? It won't because we live in a digital world and there is no going back. So with no real options for the consumers we are forced to do business with them. Sounds like they have the same business model as the mob! They have their own territories carved out and we a left dealing with them. If you will not stand up for us then we will not stand up for you. But I am sure Comcast, Verizon or AT&T will have a job for once you turn your back on us. They don't need your help we do!
—George Coppola, Hazlet, NJ

The internet is meant to be a place in which everyone is at an equal playing field. All websites accessible to everyone and equal for all. Disabling the quality of internet on specific sites unless we pay up is unleveling that equality. And there is no benefit to anyone but you in this situation. Consider the world outside of you. Please keep net neutrality and make the right decision.
—Kayla Deeden, Swedesboro, NJ

With the widespread use of the internet and the subsequent technological boom mankind has created the first truly exponential market in existence. The FCC's proposed rules will cripple the ability of the United States to keep up with this market and indeed we have already fallen behind. These rules will create barriers to entry that will allow a few companies to remain successful while not having to innovate. If the foundation of capitalism is small business and competition why would it be beneficial to create rules that effectively prevent competition. I would also like the add that there is a flagrant conflict of interest between Chairman Wheeler's former career and his current responsibilities. Considering his rules represent an oportunity for his former employers to make a significantly greater amount of money and stamp out much of their competition at the same time I can only see this as willful if not gleeful corruption and I would ask that he immediately resign in favor of someone who has any interest in actually representing the public interest rather than their own.
—Stephen Hunter, Dublin, OH

Free internet was what led to the bloom of ideas, advancement in countless parts of our life like technology and really the list goes on and on! Limiting the internet will be one of the most catastrophic decisions you can take and it will push back progress and years!! Specially in America that one of the dominant effects that this country has to the entire world (in a good way), it will bring all that to a halt. i wouldnt understand why you would take a decision that cripples the progress of your own country. I cant use fancy words to describe in a more effective way how serious the effects of stopping net neutrality can be since English is not my native language. But i trust that you are smart enough to understand what limited internet could bring for the entire globe. Limiting ideas and creativity is like committing mental genocide. you know im not exaggerating. Please reconsider. Maybe some will not become richer than they are now but this is for the best of everyone. Thank you.
—Nikos Kalofonos, ,

Back in 1999, I was one of the first 50 broadband users on the Verizon network in the Squirrel Hill neighborhood of Pittsburgh, PA. I had DSL service with a static IP address. Today, I'm still stuck with DSL service from Verizon even though many houses within a 1-mile radius have fiber-optic service (FIOS), some for more than two years. You see we are captive to Verizon on this matter: the prices are high, bundling services is de rigueur if we don't want to be gouged, and our access to third party services suffers immensely during prime time where our throughput drops by more than 75%. Aside from copper wire, I can have cable installed, but both providers consider the last mile to be marketing leverage to sell other services, whereas I have very little interest in buying those services as a bundle. There are many things wrong with this scenario: I am captive to an obsolescing network (copper wire) with no upgrade in sight by Verizon. While our theoretical bandwidth goes up to 17 mbps, we only get 2.5 if we are lucky during prime time. I have no realistic options that exclude content bundling and while everyone around us is getting 25 mbps both ways, I'm stuck with 17/.8. Please please reclassify ISPs as common carriers, and make them depend on their last mile for more than selling me their own content.
—Adel Assaad, Pittsburgh, PA

I strongly oppose any and all measures that would affect the neutrality of the internet. No one owns the internet, and as such, no one should be able to limit or deny access to it. Furthermore, there should never be any taxes levied upon its use. It is the ever-increasingly essential matrix through which all manner of human transactions are conducted, which means that those without it are automatically discriminated against. So, allowing Big Business to dictate who may access and use the internet (and at what level of access) is akin to these companies actually owning a piece of the internet, which they do not. Right now in this country, Big Business has far too much influence on all aspects of our society. This is NOT how the framers of the Constitution designed things. Everything must be done in the best interests of The People, not the owners and stockholders of companies. There can be no tollbooth placed on the internet. There an be no "tiers" of access. There can be no discriminatory controls established by any company, or even the government itself. ISPs must be treated as common carriers and nothing more. Anything less would be completely anti-American and completely unacceptable. Government needs to immediately stop getting into bed with Big Business. This country belongs to the people, not to Big Business. I demand you throw out Tom Wheeler's plan and never entertain such a preposterous notion again!
—Russ Guthrie, North Las Vegas, NV

Truth is freedom, and equality for all breeds truth.
—Frank Zedek, Novato, CA

If ISP's are to be regarded in law as publishers, and granted editorial power over content - to edit, hobble and block as they choose - then the vital portion of the Public Commons known as “The Internet” will shortly and tragically complete it's metamorphosis into little more than 1) a method of surveillance and control and 2) an interactive TV we can shop through.
—Mr. Cameron Atwood, Thousand Oaks, CA

Net Neutrality is the reason why the Internet is so popular. New ideas can grow easily and everybody gets treated the same way. If you take that away you basically kill the Internet!
—Timo Hoth, ,

To: Chairman Wheeler and the rest of the Federal Communications Commission, We want action for democratic media, not platitudes as smokescreens for corporate domination of the Internet. We want net neutrality. The Internet is my world. The Internet is only possible because taxpayer's money was used to pay for the Satellites that make the Internet possible. The Internet belongs to the people and the criminal corporations who want to destroy Net Neutrality have no right to take over what belongs to the taxpayer's. "The Internet is a tremendous tool that 99% of the American people use for thousands of different uses, to run businesses, buying products, emails etc. These greedy corporations have no right to take it over and make the taxpayer's whose money subsidized the satellites and infrastructure the Internet uses. These corrupt corporations are destroying Net Neutrality, so that only the rich will be able to pay to have fast service and those who have limited income will have slow service and some sights will be censored. The Aristocracy running our country have taken away our democracy, our Internet and only the rich will have access to justice and the Constitution." Chairman Tom Wheeler you are a greedy bought and paid for sociopath, bought off by the corporations that want to control and dominate the Internet. I realize your pockets are too full of corporate money to do the right thing. Those of us who are fighting against the corporate control of this county, will be fighting also to see you and other traitors put behind bars. Why else Chairman Tom Wheeler would you want to do something so egregious as to take away the freedom to use the Internet that everyone enjoys and is part of our every day lives? If you have even a single thread of conscience left, please consider not making such a horrific and destructive decision as taking the freedom of the Internet from people who use it every day and giving it to the corporations so they can delve it out in pieces, the more you pay the more you get. This would give only the rich complete access to the Internet and the poor would only have very limited use of the web. A patriot and loyal servant of the FCC would not abuse his position as FCC Chairman to make a decision to destroy net neutrality. We need to face reality; we need to call everyone out who are trying to destroy net neutrality. We have to list the corporations pressuring our politicians to allow them to destroy net neutrality, then the amounts of the bribes being paid to each politician along with their names and the Chairman of the FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler who are working with the people and corporations who want control of the Internet need to be listed and exposed to the voters. Well Net Neutrality is just another victory for the corporations in their coup to completely take over this country, we are officially no longer classified as a democracy, we are now classified as a plutocracy and an Oligarchy. The corporations control the US Supreme Court; corporations own the local news stations so we do not have freedom of the press, the TV, radio, and newspapers have filtered news so we will not have real news about what the corporations and the republicans are up to. Our Government is officially bought by Wall Street, they own the republican congress, the FCC, USDA, EPA, department of the interior, USFS, etc. Wall Street and their political arm the republican party use their massive propaganda and disinformation fear factory to brain wash people into believing it is the democratic party that is causing all the problems, until Wall Street can formulate there plan to eliminate the voting process so Wall Street can start appointing who they like into every office from Dog Catcher to the Presidency.
—Michael MacPherson, Milbridge, ME

The socio-economic divide would get worse if a two/multi-tiered Internet was created. Please protect the open Internet for us all! Thank you.
—Pamela Davis, Rochester, NY

I've written and called Mr Wheeler, my US Representative and US Senators, but the message agpparently is not getting through: TREAT THE ISPs AS COMMON CARRIER! The internet is too much like a public utility to treat in any other way!
—Tim Naughton, Roseville, CA

I can't afford to pay big bucks to make my website fast. What are people like me with small businesses supposed to survive? AND, I'm concerned about manipulation of speed and access for political as well as monetary reasons. Allowing big corporations to take over a formerly FREE and open Internet and use it for their own gain is just plain WRONG. RECLASSIFY ISPs AS COMMON CARRIERS. It's the only way to keep our Internet free and open.
—Carol Holaday, San Diego, CA

Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers. As an educator and librarian, I worry that the new rules would have a detrimental effect on my ability to teach my students how to use online tools available. Schools and libraries are already stretching budgets. Net neutrality is important to nonprofit schools and libraries that cannot afford higher fees. The digital divide would widen for the students and library patrons who depend on their school or library as their only on-ramp to the Internet.
—Jane Glass, Portland, ME

We already pay way too much for internet access! A two tier internet will cost us even more and destroy internet freedom. You must classify ISPs as common carriers.
—Dave Harrison, Brandon, FL

Quit selling out to your buddies in the big telecoms and represent the will of the people. I will not use the internet if you mess up net neutrality. Typical bureaucrats selling out to Comcast, Time Warner and the other big companies that bribe our government bureaucrats the are supposed to be working for the PEOPLE.
—Edwin Britt, mount washington, KY

I don't want fat cats screwing with the net. It was designed by the people for the people not the fat cats who want to get rich off the people.
—Gary Gall, Cambria, CA

Freedom of information and commerce.
—Nicole Potter, Irvine, CA

Rules won't hold but reclassifying ISPs as common carriers would be a major step in the right direction. The Internet is as basic to modern life as air and water are to people and deserves to be a part of the Commons. Without real Net Neutrality we will become a 2nd rate nation. Our internet service is already much worse than it is in Europe, for example.
—Theodore Wilcox, Rochester, NY

What happened to "Of, for and by the People"? Instead, this is another move toward - Of, for and by the Corporations and the Rich and Powerful !
—Stan & Cleo Venetos, Naples, FL

The Internet has become nearly as important a commodity add electricity, in terms of its effect on our daily lives. Allowing ISPs to charge content providers for access to their customers is ludicrous and dangerous. Don't strangle the future on Internet entrepreneurship.
—Justin Birt, Dayton, OH

Isn't it bad enough that many rural areas get slow service. My blind sister cannot work from home because her net is too slow. Are the rest of us 99% going to be in the same boat. Pls think this over and ignore the lobbyists.
—Priscilla Dow, Commerce City, CO

Companies should not dictate what information i receive nor should they be influenced by other companies that want to push their message. Internet should just be an opensourse of information.
—John Shek, san mateo, CA

Everything in this world isn't about making a profit. Get your head our of your butt and realize what a disaster this move would make.
—Carl Richardson, Purlear, NC

As long as ISPs can bundle content with internet services they will give preferred treatment to their own content on the internet. Classifying ISPs as common carriers will force them to decouple their service provider business from their media business and make them compete with other media companies who aren't ISPs. Please force them to to do this.
—Barry Bloom, Plano, TX

This is a normal roadway to communication that doesn't need toll plazas!!!
—Ramsay MacInnes, Cherry Valley, MA

Net Neutrality is important to me because Internet service providers should not be able to determine winners and losers by creating a two-tiered Internet for which they can charge twice. Protect Net Neutrality and throw out the proposed Internet rules and classify ISPs as common carriers.
—Dierk Seeburg, Scottsdale, AZ

Furthermore I would like to know why we have one of the slowest internet thru rates in the developed world and yet pay more for this inferior product. If this country is to be a leader in commerce and developing new technology why can we not expect a better product for all of us not just those with fat wallets.
—Greg Gaucher, Jacksonville, FL

The Internet is for everyone, not just the rich.
—Austin, Raleigh, NC

Losing Net Neutrality would be a huge economic and technological blow against small start-ups such as my company!
—Gage Hutchins, Bethlehem, PA

I telecommute to work for a small business. Abolishing net neutrality would directly affect me and my employer, to our detriment and that of our customers. That's not in the public's interest.
—Robert Hood, Hixson, TN

Quit kowtowing to the telecoms. Get real!
—Roy Bennett, Corvallis, OR

Internet Service Providers are de facto Telecommunications Providers and must be regulated as Common Carriers or else the entire intent of the older laws will effectively be circumvented for the profit of a few large corporations at the expense of most U.S. citizens. This must not be allowed to happen!
—John Villere, Colchester, VT

Reclassify ISPs as common carriers please! Such a move wouldn't be anachronistic; instead, it would ensure the free market can be at its best instead of monopolized by a few telecom oligarchs.
—Matt Rich, Decatur, GA

The European Community voted for net neutrality, that was a wise decision. Internet is by the people for the people, not by the providers for their money!
—Jan van Galen, ,

The internet was developed for all people. You selling out to Verizon, AT&T, and Comcast will destroy that. Judas sold Christ out for 30 pieces of silver. How much did you get?
—Dro Green, Lowell, MA

I am part owner of a SaaS startup that will be adversely impacted by the proposed rules. We need Net Neutrality.
—Kenneth Daybreak Loafman, Plano, TX

I have no interest in the Facebooks and Twitters and Big Media outlets on the web. I use it for information and communication, not advertising and games. Without pure "net neutrality" the internet would be about as useful for me as pre-cable TV.
—Hollie Conley, Accord, NY

I've already paid for a certain level of bandwith; this is just an end run to make me double pay by charging the people providing content. it's time for providers to actually give the bandwidth they advertise and stop trying to double or triple dip for their services.
—John Greenfelder, herndon, VA

I believe the Net Neutrality issue, while -very- important and must be preserved, is a red herring. It has been proposed at the behest of Chairman Wheeler to give the Commission something to appear to defeat the industry on and appear to be a victory. I believe that Metered Internet Billing is the real goal and objective of Comcast and the AT&T and other "industry" monopolists. Comcast and the "industry" will cave on Net Neutrality in order to seem -entitled- to Metered Billing. Metered Internet Billing will be a very Bad Thing: Multiple credible studies, around the world, have repeatedly shown that the incremental cost to the ISP to deliver a gigabit of internet traffic, above some arbitrary cap, is nearly nothing--it is an almost unmeasurable cost. Any charge for internet traffic above some arbitrary cap is almost total profit. Huge Profit. The very few, very rich monopolists will have (and actually already -do- have) huge pots of money for lobbying, electioneering, and just plain bribery. Perhaps more than any other industry segment in America. I believe this is not an exaggeration. The cost of internet service is -not- like groceries or gasoline or electricity. The price to the consumer for the next bag of groceries is the same as the price for the first bag. The cost to the grocery store is the same. It is not even -close- with internet service. Metered billing fees for internet service are almost pure profit to the ISP--in the area of 95%+ pure profit. Comcast EVP David Cohen has publicly stated that he expects "metered internet billing to be in effect across our footprint within 3 to 5 years." Of course, the "Industry" will go right along with him. The "industry" is projecting billing for internet service to average $200 per month per subscriber in that same time period. Remember, this is just for bits. Not for Netflix, or MLB.tv or any subscriptions. Just bits. This would be an unwarranted and unjustified windfall for the franchised cable and land-line monopolists--who, after all, got into the internet business by accident. Throughout history, monopolists -never- invest their profits in innovation or quality improvements or service improvements, or do so to the least extent possible. Their incentive instead is to create and maintain artificial scarcity--and then to charge an ever increasing price for their products. Research the demise of the DuMont Television Network in the 1950's. A good case can be made that AT&T caused it. These monopolists are doing everything they can to further the idea that people using less "bits" are "subsidizing" people who use more. Many believe this. Based on the above, it is pure nonsense. All are paying the same basic monthly fee--which is already very profitable to the ISP. Internet service is, today, already, the most profitable product the cable system monopolies sell. By far. These monopolies simply want MORE, and are under ever increasing pressure to deliver higher profits to Wall Street. They will cave on Net Neutrality to get Metered Internet Billing. If we don't win both of these fights, the internet will look like cable TV does today, within 5 years. Only more expensive--much more expensive. With less information, news, diversity, choice, competition and innovation. I truly believe that America will sink on this. I believe this is not hyperbole. Is this what we want?
—Ronald Rauscher, Austin, TX

If what you're trying to accomplish through this act is an overall faster internet, then you're doing it wrong. The web is worldwide, and should be equally neutral. Once again, government is collapsing to the whim of corporations instead of the concerns of the people.
—Markus Knight, Oshkosh, WI

You are killing innovation and clearly re-arranging rules to favor telcos and established Internet companies. As an entrepreneur who has founded 3 successful startups, my world is in jeopardy if this action is not taken. We will be heard!
—Mark LaRosa, San Jose, CA

Big corporations already have far to much control. This is absolutely going to far. Stop the pandering to big money and at least act like the government is for the people, by the people and not just the highest bidder. This is one more example of oligarchy at work. Millions of people spoke against this, yet the big money was the only one listened to. Enough is enough!
—Gregg Wynia, Evans, CO

As a senior citizen I depend on the Internet for information pertinent to our well-being. I live on a fixed income and my budget, most likely, will not allow extra fees. A two-tiered Internet is discriminatory and is apt to cripple the Internet access for the less affluent among us. If you side with corporate interests you do a disservice to the poorer among us.
—Ella Robson, Huntley, MT

Eliminating net neutrality is another step toward complete domination of American society by the very richest "1%" and its ruination of the objectives outlined in the Declaration of Independence and for the most part striven to be protected by the Constitution and its Amendments. Even today it's difficult to see in front of me the America prescribed in those documents. Mr. Wheeler, you seem impatient to make it worse. I would like the chairman of the FCC to come from the mass of people who suffer the consequences of its rulings, and not from those whom it must oversee and regulate.
—Stephen L. Brown, Saint Petersburg, FL

Reclassifying ISPs as common carriers seems to be the ideal way to protect true Net Neutrality! As Senior citizens - aged 76 and 81 - my husband and I depend on internet access to stay in touch with family and friends around the world as well as to conduct essential business, both personal and relating to our many volunteer commitments. Fifteen years ago when we established our first email address we had no idea how important this service would become to us and how thoroughly hooked and dependent on internet access we would become. We urge you to maintain neutrality by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers!
—Jill A. Roberts, Brevard, NC

Regional providers are effective monopolies for internet service. Collective participation by regional providers to establish rules for internet access is tantamount to collusion since competition plays no role in establishing market prices. With regional competition one of the main ways to attract consumer and business subscribers would be to offer better speeds and lower prices. If you allow the proposed FCC rules then you prevent true market competition from playing a role in pricing. In other words, the proposed FCC rules effectively provide government support of monopolies. This is not what you did with AT&T in the past. Why would you be willing to do it now? The Internet is a road of information. Service providers cannot charge different tolls for access to this information since they do not own that information. In fact, they don't even own the complete throughway connecting the information with the consumer of that information. Information is key to the advancement of our society. Please do not restrict access to that information based on an individuals financial status. The Internet is the one thing we have left that can easily be left as completely equal for all people. Don't change that.
—Michael J. Hammel, Colorado Springs, CO

No end to net neutrality
—Roger Lowry, ,

two-tiered Internet only benefits corporations with deep pockets, and those government employees with financial ties to those same corporations.
—Robert Stevens, Northampton, MA

Reclassification of broadband providers as “common carriers.” Would require ISPs to treat all content equally. It would also allow the FCC to pass comprehensive and legally sound Net Neutrality protections and to go after companies that violate these rules.
—George Henry, Midlothian, IL

Small businesses and self-employed people like me depend on the open internet to function and to create revenue. If the proposed FCC internet rules are put into action, eventually a few large companies will determine which websites get into the fast lane. This will make it very difficult for the rest of us to survive and innovate, as the technology changes and the slow sites get left behind. No one can predict the future, but it's easy to see that this will lead to disaster.
—Thomas H Lichtenstein, Burnsville, MN

The internet has been a revolutionary leveller, giving everyone equal access to its content and enabling everyone to feel their views and opinions can carry some weight. It is essential that the internet doesn't become in any way the fiefdom of private interests.
—Michael Pountney, ,

Hello, my name is Zach Sousa and I do not support the proposals the FCC has recently made to allow internet service providers to charge more money fo faster lanes. That will severly cripple new online start up companies to compete with the more established online companies. How will a new online company that streams Legal Movies/Television shows to compete with companies like Netflix or Hulu? That is one example and there are countless more. Please, Net Neutrality is very important and killing it will will have dire consquences. I will tell you, one of the reasons why I voted for President Obama was because he was in favor for Net Neutrality. He appointed you Mr. Wheeler, and I trusted you to keep Net Neutrality safe. I guess I was wrong, and you have dissapointed me and millions of Americans. Do the right thing and protect Net Neutrality.
—Zach Sousa, Orange, CT

It is unAmerican to sell the right to free speech away for business gain. We expect our leaders to protect our interests. That is your primary job function and we watch with great concern. Please move with honor. Classify ISPs as COMMON CARRIERS. thank you.
—Dee Furjunque, West Hollywood, CA

In the information age equal access to the flow of information is a fundamental human right.
—Niles Calder, ,

Internet fees are already too high for what we get in the USA.
—Honz Zondorgh, Tucson, AZ

Enough of the "24 hours of stupid" corporate media monopoly. We need an alternative, we need an open internet!
—Brian Rasche, Orlando, FL

Your favoritism of corporations over the world community that uses the internet is disturbing. All people deserve a free, fast and open internet. Stop messing with this, it does more harm than good. Thank you.
—Trevor Walker, Bothell, WA

Net Neutrality is essential. Do what the people want, not your cooperate lobbyists bribing your people with $$$$ —Nick Disney, San Diego, CA

American society has become severely polarized already by income inequality. Internet fees increase annually at a rate greater than inflation, while salaries stagnate or even decline. Creating internet bandwidth tiers promotes greater class divisions in society--is that your goal? As a government Commission funded by the taxpayers you are charged with acting in the public interest. It should be clear to you what that is. Destroying net neutrality clearly favors corporations and is wrong.
—Max Mastellone, Las Cruces, NM

Discrimination in any form is a bad idea. As well as "pay for priority" falls into that category. Mr. Wheeler, please, think of the general public and not profit.
—David Szeflinski, Greendale, WI

Net Neutrality is important to me because I work in education and youth development in the social sector where resources are scarce. My colleagues and I, and the young people we work with, need access to all the innovative technology we can get to collaborate, teach and learn, organize to solve problems in our communities, and work together to create a more inclusive and robust economy and society. Creating a two-tiered internet makes my job of helping prepare our country's next generation of citizens, leaders and workers more difficult, and traps them in a less efficient, innovative and open technology environment.
—Michael Swigert, Brooklyn, NY

The creation of a "two-tiered Internet" is an elitist, Ancien Régime attitude that has no place in the twenty-first century. ALL people deserved to be treated and served equally regardless of class or financial holdings.
—Ella Dermon, Franklin, TN

The transit method of information is not important, be it fiber optic cable or copper wire. Those who provide internet service should be classified as common carriers, before it's too late.
—Erik Hendrickson, Minneapolis, MN

The internet is the new information database of the millennium. As it is, anyone can access and upload information onto the web that anyone can see and consider. If the internet is restricted, then the only information available to the people will be information backed by those who can pay the fees. As a fungi I g democracy relies of freedom of information, to limit the Internet would be to limit democracy itself
—Eliza Trench, Rockaway, NJ

Commissioner Wheeler, as a "Baby Boomer" and tech CEO who worked for Steve Jobs 3x's, I beg you to take a deep breath, take a step back, distance yourself from the selfish interests of DC lobbyists, some of your former buddies, corporate elite in the Communication Industry, and THINK about the future of America, and of our children born who are destined to live, work and hopefully thrive in a the high technology era. Do not sell them down the river to accommodate political pressure driven by greed rather than serving the American public and especially future generations. Our country is the leader in innovation that is our differentiator in the global economy. Insure that all technology-driven entrepreneurs and consumers of technology rich products are given an affordable, level playing field. Your historical legacy will be that YOU murdered the fair and equal concept of Net Neutrality and you contributed to the demise of America's dominant position in the world. You have the power and opportunity to do just the opposite and insure that America does not end up like Russia; run and ruined by a power elite of greedy oligarchs. Look into you heart and do the right thing. The Internet is the lifeblood of economic, political and social power and world influence accessible and a source of amazing opportunity for each and every citizen, or if you choose limit this extraordinary public utility to be under the thumb a powerful, controlling, minority of megalomaniacs. Your choice Mr. Commissioner! Thank you (I hope).
—Bob Longo, Cleveland, OH

It's time we have REAL NET NEUTRALITY !!!
—Carlos Baeza, Glendale, CA

This is insane. The only true free system left in America is going to be divided up between the rich and the rest of us. Throw out your proposed rules and reclassify ISP's as common carriers.
—Grant Wilson, salt lake city, UT

I am a low-income and partially disabled senior. I depend, EVERY DAY OF MY LIFE, on an open Internet - for communication, for economical buying, for information, for mental stimulation. None of the reasons the open Internet is so vital to me are of the least importance to major ISP's. In fact, some of those reasons are antithetical to big business and its profit-making agenda. I always believed that the tasks of the FCC were about promoting the good of American citizens - but I am rapidly being disillusioned by Mr Wheeler's ongoing efforts to place the interests of major corporations far above those of citizens/voters/taxpayers like me (this in spite of a HUGE negative public response to his plan(s))
—Jeanne Young, Sequim, WA

I want to choose my sources of news, who I buy from, and so forth. I don't want to find that my favorite sources are at a disadvantage in my being able to access them, and their being able to respond to me. Our entire society will lose if monied people and businesses care able to buy favored, fast access on the Internet. Shame on you for considering it.
—Elizabeth Walker, New York, NY

The internet is one of the great equal platforms of discussion and debate in the world, and it has the ability to educate people all over the world, and bring people together across borders. Dividing internet access in this way would take away one of the greatest tools for self-enrichment modern society has. Please, for the sake of so many people across the world, keep the internet equal.
—Jim Baars, ,

Wouldn't it be lovely if the internet didn't go the terribly frustrating way that most things do? Please don't spread and deepen poverty.
—Gavin Bondy, Milwaukie, OR

It fascism otherwise!
—Sebastian Natera, Brooklyn, NY

It's OUR internet. It belongs to the American people...NOT rich people and corporations!
—Richard Phillips, Greensboro, NC

Because it is the right thing to do! No one should have too much power over others!
—Carol Wagner, Happy Valley, OR

You cannot allow this to happen
—Gary miller, Pflugerville, TX

I do not want to internet to look like cable television. For once, please do something that actually benefits regular people, not corporations.
—Jimmy Smutek, Baltimore, MD

The internet is a public location. Limiting access to it would be like limiting access to a marketplace or an interstate highway or a national park. It's a short-term money-grab that's bad for capitalism and inherently unethical. ISPs do not own the internet, they did not invent it or build it - logically they must be classified as common carriers.
—Jesse Case, Chicago, IL

Use common sense. Obviously the internet is a communication medium, like the phone system, and requires government oversight to preserve everyone's rights to free access to information. Let the big corporations build their own infrastructure if they want faster service! They can certainly afford it, judging from their astronomical rates.
—Ernie Renaud, Tonawanda, NY

Net Neutrality really matters to the small businessperson, the start up, non-profits and more. Giving a Fast Lane to some means the rest of us look slow By Comparison - and that means traffic dries up. PLEASE protect REAL Net Neutrality by keeps us ALL equal - protect an open & vibrant Internet!
—Susan Mohn, Bothell, WA it is just wrong and unfair to us because the companies will pass the cost on to us and it makes it hard for small business who rely on the internet for their business

—G Blake, Newark, NJ

The cable, phone, and ISPs have told Congress for years that everyone would have access to the internet and consumer costs would go down. The opposite has happened, and every year they want more of our money in fees and charges, for poor service and infrastructure. Make the internet a PUBLIC UTILITY, and keep the capitalist pigs' hands out of our pockets.
—Kris Bunda, Moorland, IA

We all know that the internet is and has always been a Title 2 Common Carrier. We all know that Michael Powell changed the definition in exchange for a multi-million dollar job as a lobbyist, which he enjoys today while collecting his checks from his lounge chair by the pool and holding an umbrella drink. We all know that Tom Wheeler was a lobbyist for BigCable before he was appointed and that he is ONLY there to collect on the same type job/BRIBE for which his predecessor sold us out. We all know that the object of BigCable is to solidify monopoly and stifle innovation while censoring content by regulating its availability and speed. The internet is a TITLE 2 COMMON CARRIER, regardless of what crooked chairmen of the FCC say.
—Mike Michael Kelly, Huntington Beach, CA

The internet should not be controlled by corporations. Net neutrality is as important as freedom of speech. ISP's are common carriers and must not be given the kinds of privelages you propose.
—Eric Netneutrality Gottschalk, Rialto, CA

PLEASE KEEP THE INTERNET OPEN FOR ALL!!!
—Kranti Mailliard, Watsonville, CA

No free press, no democracy--pure and simple. Net neutrality is a Freedom of the Press issue.
—Felice Bachrach, Long Beach, CA

My business uses secure video sessions with clients who are not local. Slowing the internet adds to my costs and will drive up health care costs, as I'm a health care business.
—Cherylann Brown, Seattle, WA

Does the old saying "the customer is always right" matter with regards to net neutrality? It should. As a customer I pay a specific fee for a certain bandwidth/speed and should be able to chose my internet content within that bandwidth/speed. Currently my ISP (Charter) slows the connection speed when I watch a Netflix movie. Charter is therefore limiting my ability to use the service that I pay for. In business terms Charter is in breach of contract because they are not fulfilling the terms of our contract. The FCC should be focusing on the consumer to include regulating the ISP providers and not allow ISP providers more freedom to choose the winners and the losers of internet content. As a consumer I should have the right to chose my internet content and not have it dictated by what makes the ISP more money. Therefore there is no doubt that ISP providers should be considered common carriers and governed as such. Currently my only power lies at the ballot box and I will vote for any candidate who supports net neutrality and the strict regulation of ISP providers.
—Mr. David Downing, Baxter, MN

Open is better. Leave the Internet alone.
—John Fulton, Aurora, CO

Net Neutrality is important because a free internet is a competitive and innovative internet. Don't let big business get in the way of change and innovation.
—Brian McCarthy, Paoli, PA

Protect innovation & small businesses, the future of prosperity in the U.S.
—Sherry Vatter, Los Angeles, CA

These proposed rules are ridiculous. I can't believe that a former Cable lobbyist is now in a position of power that can change the industry in a way that ONLY BENEFITS CABLE PROVIDERS and pretend that it is still neutral. If you were to hold a vote asking Americans which woudl be more improtant to them, a land telephone line or Internet service, I would think that most would say Internet. Ans yet we provide more protection for telephone lines? This is stupid. Please protect the Internet and treat all traffic the same. Treating all Internet traffic equally is the only way to keep cable companies from extorting "fast lane" fees from their competition (ie. Netflix). Don't let Wheeler service his old friends in the cable industry in a way that hurts consumers and the free market. Thanks, Eric Nordlund
—Eric Nordlund, Seattle, WA

I run a small non-profit and unless we can raise funds and compete with the bigger corporations, we are doomed. Its critical that we all can compete on an equal footing. Regulate the Internet like any common carrier.
—George Cohn, Tucson, AZ

In this modern world internet access is a basic necessity akin to electric service, clean water, and gas to heat our homes.
—Judith Abrams, Newton, MA

Regarding commerce, the internet has the status of a utility and access to it must be made equally available to all Regarding democracy, the internet is the best thing to come along. As it is now, it gives everyone an equal voice, as long as they have access which should be guaranteed by it's status as a utility. Regarding investment well, the internet was developed and built by the people of this country and as a citizen and taxpayer, I vehemently object to giving it away to the greedy moochers who want to squeeze more money out of it for themselves alone. WHATEVER THE SHORT TERM POLITICAL GAIN, IT IS NOT WORTH IT BECAUSE IT WILL NEVER BE UNDONE. THE FCC HAS ALL THE POWER HERE. DON'T BE SUCKERS. SHOW SOME INTEGRITY AND DON'T LINE YOUR PERSONAL POCKETS WITH A SELL OUT.
—Ms. Cecilia Brown, Oakland, CA

I depend on the internet for contact to friend and business.
—Sandra Singleton, Kansas City, MO

The US is getting less and less like a democracy. Don't add to this, keep the internet open and free!
—Mr. Bruce Neilson, SALT LAKE CITY, UT

"Transparancy" won't lead to competition. Merely requiring ISPs to disclose their "network management" fixes nothing. If Comcast plainly stated, "we block Netflix", or "we charge Netflix a ton of money for access to our customers", what would it matter? I, like millions of people, have exactly one choice for internet access. I can't vote with my dollars for the kind of ISP I want. As I understand the issue, the courts have ruled that the FCC doesn't have the authority to enforce net neutrality because ISPs are not classified as common carriers. If that's the case, the solution seems pretty clear: classify ISPs as common carriers. I really see little difference between an ISP and a telephone provider, except that we have more to lose with the internet by failing to keep it open.
—Phil Frost, Commerce Township, MI

Information and knowledge should not only be available to groups who can pay a premium price and it's incredibly important that governments and corporate entities are not able to control, mute or remove voices or communities that they disagree with or are in competition with.
—Richard H, ,

Everything is controlled by corpocrats, but the internet shouldn't be. As a young person, I can vouch for the absolute importance of the internet for work, schooling, socialising and admin, and net neutrality lets these things remain simple. It isn't fair to allow big business to charge extortionate fees for what has previously been free - for example, the speed of browsing. Please don't allow this to happen. It would only allow the top 1% to profit while the rest of us would be even more out of pocket.
—Rhiannon Thompson, ,

The internet should be classified as a common carrier because that is what it is - nothing more. Information should always remain free and accessible.
—Ruth Mather, Waxhaw, NC

This debate isn't just about today but for how we define the internet and it's wonders for future generations to use. Without true and enforceable Net Neutrality I fear that the innovation, commerce and information resource that internet has become known for will die a slow death. There can be no true competition where the one party can pay for such an advantage. Corporations will push and prod their boundaries and limitations until they find a crack or weakness. The proposed rules are full of cracks that can be exploited and the checks limiting them too ambiguous to do any good.
—Robert Sweeting, Austin, TX

The Net needs to be treated like a public utility. So net neutrality is critical.
—Richard Boyce, Cincinnati, OH

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Caroline Miller, Portland, OR

The FCC's plan will stifle innovation. Only by treating Internet service providers as common carriers providing a utility service can the FCC ensure that the Internet continues to provide affordable access to services that the general population has come to depend on.
—Gord Tomlin, Scarborough,

It's important because we already pay enough money for the internet as it is plus schools use the internet, if net neutrality is gone then the schools will no longer be able to afford to have the internet. It doesn't make any sense for us to pay to visit a certain website we aren't made of money this act will cause many websites to be shut down because of the lack of visitors, and we don't want that to happen. This will only end badly so please don't kill net neutrality we can't afford to pay for every website we visit our bills are already high enough as it is and this act of shutting down net neutrality will end up leaving many people poor or worse broke. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers and throw out these terrible rules that will lead to very negative consequences.
—Mathew Nichols, Jackson, MI

The internet was created under a NEUTRAL system. Corporations like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon inherited control of this US government developed, NEUTRAL system we call the internet. The current NEUTRAL internet is for the benefit of all citizens, not just whoever can pay for it. How can anyone believe that the internet could be better if a few large corporations could just charge us more for faster service? Who would this benefit besides currently large and already hugely profitable corporations? Not start-ups, not small businesses, not the citizens.
—Aaron W Pyle, Bangor, ME

An Internet fast lane is NOT net neutrality. Initiating this proposal would spell the end for net neutrality, it would be destroyed. Without net neutrality, the Internet would no longer be a thriving place for education, entertainment, socialising and fun. It would be a toy that only the richest could afford, that is not net neutrality. The Internet is, even if its not classified as one, a public utility, not a luxury good.
—Harry Spillane, ,

You are a representative of the citizens of the U.S.A. As such, the interests of the citizens need to come first. Businesses seem to have no problem taking care of their pocketbooks. You are supposed to take care of ours.
—Judith Krain, culver city, CA

Net neutrality has allowed all the advances that have occurred to date.
—Katherine Farago, Mesa, AZ

Undemocratic.
—Adam Reilly, Brooklyn, NY

I have worked for many startups and my current company was also a startup working through the internet. In fact a lot of our economy depends on the internet. And if people who have nothing but ideas and coding skills like my self are not able to get access to the traffic or the data that helps them survive, thrive and make money that would simple kill the innnovation behind them for everyone. All of the startups that I've been involved with could not have spared money to pay more to the internet service providers who claim they own the pathways. That is ridiculous to even think of. The internet and the links to it are utilities for everyone.
—Rikesh Chouhan, malden, MA

I lived some place with a 14.4kbps dial up connection. No broadband was available. The number of web pages that simply would not load for me because they are so content heavy was astounding; I couldn't even pay my bills online because of slow connection speeds. Why is it suddenly fair to limit someone's ability to connect? Is this like how cable companies get away with saying "Speeds up to 7mbps" when actual connection speed is maybe one tenth that, but heaven forbid if you pay anything less than what the cable company determines you should pay? The electric company can't get away with charging you for "up to 7000 kilowatt hours". They also don't put a cap on your usage. Why is it okay for internet companies to do so?
—Miles Grant, Silver City, NM

the FCC is allowing 3 companies to create a monopolistic with the "new rules." ISP's need to be classified as common carriers and the FCC needs to protect the people instead of the CEO's running AT&T, Comcast and Verizon.
—Kim Alvesteffer, Deltona, FL

The USA is already a laughingstock where Internet connectivity is concerned, but these proposed rules would also force businesses to pay more in order to be competitive. That competitive edge shouldn't come from that source; it should come from product innovation and competitive pricing. There's nothing wrong with that way of doing business, why force a change now? Classify broadband ISPs as utility companies. Keep the system balanced.
—Nathan D. Rice, Ypsilanti, MI

My government must not allow those monopolies more access to our money. Currently their fees are outrageous to all except persons like their vastly overcompensated executives. I have Verison FiOS service. Verizon tells me I can get faster internet by paying another monthly fee. It seem the speed is already there but they have to send an unlock code to my modem to stop slowing it down. So, in a big way, they are blocking my access already without the new proposed rules. My money built much of the Internet. I don't want that given away to greedy corporate interests.
—Lawrence D Lyford, Voorhees, NJ

I am a small business owner who simply can't compete with Corporate America. If the Internet becomes tiered based on fees, my business will suffer. This is not the American Dream! Please, PLEASE, no more big-business-big-bank favor. Please think of all of us on the ground, working just to have a good life. This will make a difference; please keep a fair, open Internet and protect Net Neutrality.
—Erin, Atlanta, GA

Mr. Wheeler. Think about the ramifications of your actions. The internet has prospered with the current paradigm. Changing the model threatens its viability and creates an incumbent-weighted system. The telcos are pressuring your commission to change the structure b/c 'infrastructure costs are too high. These are some of the most profitable companies on earth. Profitable enough to be acquiring one another for huge sums of money. They already have regionalized monopolies. Don't fall victim to their quest for even greater domination. Consumers will clearly suffer.
—Steve Birnhak, New York, NY

The internet must be treated as any other household utility
—Ian Lenz, Austin, TX

I want to keep net nuetrality to preserve the freedom of the internet. Even though I am a minor, I feel that if we do not preserve net nuetrality, the next generation of people will believe that fast lanes are ok.
—Tonino Sarandrea, West Newton, MA

With so few of our freedoms left, don't let the internet be the next to fall victim.
—David Kelley, Marlborough, MA

Net Neutrality even being debated continues to shift my perception of this country from the land of the free and the home of the brave, to the land owned by greed and the home of the unjust.
—Enan Heneghan, Los Angeles, CA

ಠ_ಠ STOP BEING SELFISH! KEEP THE INTERNET FREE!!
—Emelie, Greeley, CO

Make the right choice for citizens not huge corporations.
—Brian Lamprecht, Marquette, MI

protect what feeble Internet America has.
—Glenn Alford, Pocatello, ID

i sent an email to them, the day this thing escalated. Thursday i think it was. Here's what i said: I don't use the internet for Facebooking and general messing around. I use it for WORK. I work from home. Remote employees are very common this day in age and this new proposal would kill my ability to work efficiently from home. If my job were watching Netflix and Hulu all day and posting selfies, I wouldn't be sitting here complaining. The internet should be open. As the commissioner said [and yes I watched the whole meeting, that's how you know this is important to me]: "There is ONE INTERNET" It should not be divided. Division never works. Remember segregation? That didn't work. Women not having the right to vote? That didn't work. Separation, division and inequality DON'T WORK. Apportionment of our internet would be a massive blow to not only remote workers, but society as a whole. When you're on your deathbed, will the dollars in your bank account comfort you? No. Please don't take away my livelihood just to make yourselves more money. Please don't let greed and lobbyists ruin this beautiful information highway. Traffic is bad enough in real life, we don't need a virtual version of it. Please don't let money ruin this like it's ruined everything else. If trees gave of wi-fi signals, we wouldn't be having this debate. Unless the trees were owned by Mother Nature, Inc. Stop this. Please. My ability to pay rent depends on it. Thank You, Emily Razi
—Emily Razi, Aliso Viejo, CA

Net Neutrality guarantees open access to everyone, regardless of what they can pay. The free-flow of information and open access are vital to our lives in all areas. Keep the Internet a level playing field.
—Ann Bracken, Columbia, MD

please dont let the 1% win
—Catherine McCoy, Murrieta, CA

Please do the right thing,vote in favor of real net neutrality and reclassify ISP's as common carriers. Keep the playing field level....The citizens of this country deserve no less.
—Brooke Pekkala, Duluth, MN

Net Neutrality is essentially for retaining the internet as a means of communication and discourse not subject to bias and discrimination.
—Leah Saddy, ,

This is not the ussr give us what we deserve.
—Bill Polesnak, Troy, MI

Bureaucracy is being bought out by the biggest companies most of them not even located in america to save on taxes. Don't lock up the internet in their greedy mess all over capital hill.
—Andrew Yunker, Rochester, NY

We have no free press—thanks to the revolving door at the FCC (and Reagan-era policies). Now you want to take away freedom on the net. What is it about freedom you don't like?
—Matthew Straw, Brainerd, MN

Make the internet a public utility instead of a cash cow for monopolitic ISPs to gouge consumers and businesses.
—Tsung-Yun Tzeng, Somerville, MA

My Comcast bill for internet and TV gets more and more ridiculously expensive every year, while the quality and speed are very backward compared to other countries. I believe that Comcast continues to rake it in regarding profits and mergers, whilst continuing to not upgrade areas of my state with fiber optics, and continuing to use old copper wiring. Meanwhile, entities like google fiber ARE making inroads into certain other areas in my state, to make the internet more of a PUBLIC UTILITY which is what it should be, and this is for regulation but also because electricity was to the 20th century what the internet definitely IS to the 21st century. It's just common sense finally and how it must be, and especially for FCC regulation purposes. I mean, it could NOT be regulated otherwise!
—Pat White, Ogden, UT

Free speech shouldn't cost more money than it already does.
—Sam McPherson, Danville, CA

The Internet today is fundamentally structured as a means for transporting data (information) from the source to the end user, independent of the meaning of that data. Customers pay ISPs for their personal connection speed and bandwidth allowance based on personal need. That need is determined by the customer and they can make the determination of which services they are willing to consume based on the economics of paying for their connection. Likewise, the data providers (ie. Netfix, Amazon, Google, etc.) pay their providers for their bandwidth feeding into the Internet infrastructure. Allowing individual ISPs the proposed ability to prioritize traffic on their network based on the source allows the ISP to provide different levels of performance for different bits carried into the customer's home. In effect, the ISP would be influencing the quality of service for an Internet based business based on that business' ability to pay for enhanced delivery. This favours established services (with the deep pockets to pay) over new and potentially more innovative services. Such a change does not benefit consumers. Instead it means that the customers loose the ability to control their Internet experience and runs the risk of stifling further innovation by creating an arbitrarily imposed barrier to entry. It would be analogous to having the US Postal Service charge a different fee for a package of the same size and weight, based on who the sender was. That thinking is fundamentally wrong. I respectfully request that you take a clear, consumer driven approach to net neutrality by abanding the proposed rules and instead classifying IPS as common carriers.
—Dean McNeill, ,

Information is important. This plan is not taking the future into account.
—Benjamin Williamson, Chicago, IL

Capitalism is about competition, but most of us don't have much of a choice when it comes to telecom providers: it's just a couple of carriers, with equally high prices and dismal services. Giving them even more control over the content by allowing 'fast lanes' infringes on our rights as citizens. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers and protect consumers' right to have access to the broad spectrum of information and services.
—N Dalton, Paso Robles, CA

Without net neutrality, a few large corporate players have the ability in effect to censor and chose content that favors their own monetary interest. The content available on the internet should remain open to all without some corporate (or government) entity decided what should be favored over something else.
—William Eckert, Paso Robles, CA

The world has an absolute need for net neutrality. The web is so many people link to the world, to gain information to improve their lives and at times transform not just their lives but to be a part in transforming their communities. Keep the net open to all. Please do not cower (or sell out) to corporate greed. Make the internet a common carrier and a utility evenly accessible to all.
—David DeRemus, Long Beach, CA

I have spent the last 20 minutes coming up with arguments based on fairness and my desire for same. How is it fair for me to become a second-class citizen because I can't pony up the cash to get the premium service? But then I realized two things: Life is not fair. Far from it, life is so unjust that children are murdered and the wives of hiphop artists become rich and famous. That my boss can afford a Rolls Royce and I cannot is part of the American reality. The second thing that occurred to me, beyond the essential injustice of life, is that the nature of business, big and small, is to charge money for what people want. There is nothing inherently wrong with that (well, there might be, but let's ignore that for now); my grandfather was able to shoot rabbits for his dinner, but if I want Hasenpfeffer, tonight, I either have to eat someone's pet or go to a German restaurant. Life changes. Things that once were possible no longer are. So fairness is out. No one owns the Internet. Charging me to gain access to it makes sense, but charging me to gain access to the part of the Internet (that is the content) that you--the ISPs--want me to have access to is not unfair, it is illogical. ISPs are the roadway that is taken. The destination--as long as the road leads there--is my own. I can choose not to take a particular road, just as an ISP can opt out of being that road, but if you--the ISP--are going to offer your services as a road to me, then after I pay the toll, you are not allowed to tell me that now I am forbidden from taking the road to certain destinations. Don't get all anal on me and tell me that the analogy is imperfect. I am aware of that fact. Imperfect it may be, but I think that it's close enough.
—Bob Ritchie, Ponce, PR

Fairness, a level playing field, non-discrimination, equal access--that's why Net Neutrality is important to me. It should be important to you, too.
—Jane & Charlie Kellner & Kelley, Salisbury, CT

The internet is incredibly important for me and my friends to continue to function every day. If this were to go through and our various websites were to be buried under rubble, it would destroy us.
—William Purdy, Panorama City, CA

I host a blog and share information with people. My site should not be slow for family and friends to access because I can't afford to pay for "fast lane" access. I already pay my host for bandwidth and they pay their ISP, there is no reason to set up additional costs to a model that works. It does work as long as companies don't hold hostage their end users which should be illegal. Thank you
—Oliver Hansen, Federal Way, WA

For me, net neutrality is the basis for free speech and freedom of the press. These are fundamental American rights that should never be compromised due to technology or a corporate agenda for growth. Giving up these rights for the short term growth of a few corporations, denies the long term growth of our country's economy by the value of a free internet. The corporate benefit pales in comparison.
—Brenda Cross, Lake Oswego, OR

The open internet has been one of the greatest achievements of mankind. It belongs to mankind as a whole, and not the corporations who supposedly control the pipes that pass the bits from location to location. Do not corporations to control something that belongs to humanity as whole.
—Bara Kathawa, Sterling Heights, MI

I have watched my country spirit down toward feudalism and fascism ove the past40 years. Without net neutrality, our poor limping sick democracy will become terminal in its illness. With neutrality, the voices of the people can be heard. Without dissent, there is no democracy. Favoring the moneyed folk is anti-everything I understand as democracy. Elizabeth Hallett —Elizabeth R. Hallett, Ashland, OR

The internet belongs to everyone. People have their own thoughts and ideas, properties, friends and family, and even lives on the internet. By removing Net Neutrality it threatens the community that people have spent years to create. It's not fair to begin watching our communities simply because of fear or misunderstandings. By removing Net Neutrality, it would effectively be killing off this community we've set up by allowing ISPs to monitor and do whatever they want with it. Does the internet really need dictators?
—Kyle Tilghman, Gwynn Oak, MD

It is imperative that net neutrality is maintained. The two-lane plan is blatantly discriminatory and discourage creating new and innovative ways to use the internet. It will effectively choke out smaller enterprises that would have had the potential to grow and generate revenue. ISPs need to be reclassified as common carriers; they are protected as such - they are not liable for what their users do. In order for the internet to continue as the phenomenal creative and communicative platform it is, ISPs must be reclassified as common carriers.
—Christina Lee Glad, Salt Lake City, UT

Maintaining net neutrality would be a step in a good direction, in contrast to so much of our beloved society and its 'equal opportunities' being given away to the big guys who already have so much.
—Robert Owens, Greeley, CO

The 1% has enough!
—Marjorie Cogan, Seattle, WA

We do NOT want corporations to decide on OUR behalf what WE need. They need us to sell their things. they should leave us alone !!! and politicians should protect US, NOT THEM.
—Vincent Marneffe, Dion-Valmont,

Net Neutrality was the reason the Internet grew so fast so weaken it will only doom it. The internet belongs to the people NOT the ISPs!
—Mr. Michael Jason, Buffalo, NY

I can't afford to put my small business on the fast lane. To do so would bankrupt me.
—Hazen Nester, Mount Pleasant, MI

Do not destroy the open Internet
—Carla Skidmore, Pittsfield, MA

I understand that Tom Wheeler currently believes that having an ISP slow down your broadband connection would be "unreasonable" and not tolerated by the FCC -- but I don't want to take the chance that someone later changes their minds. People pay for capacity and all traffic on that capacity should be equal, just like all electricity and water is equal. Because some broadband is a shared resource (e.g., cable internet), I think it would be reasonable to allow companies to set rules on overall usage (e.g., a cap after a certain amount) but those rules would have to apply equally to all customers and all Internet traffic. Moreover, cable companies shouldn't be allowed to pocket huge profits without taking action to upgrade their service to provide more capacity.
—Abigail Welborn, Redmond, WA

The Internet is primarily used for information and the sharing of knowledge. I truely believe that the speed in which that information is delivered should not be determined by any one set of people. The net should not serve companies that only serve them, the net should have a level playing field that gives everyone what they need fairly. The only people who will benefit from this are corporations while the public is left to sift through sluggish internet service at a premium price. Where are the ethics?
—Benjamin Hain, Salt Lake City, UT

Please do not allow corporations to take control of the internet. It is vitally important that we all have access. It has become an integral part of life for many of us. Please keep equal access (and speed of transmission of information) for all. You can make a difference in the lives of the average person, or give special treatment to those with money. It's in your hands. Please do not let us down. It matters greatly. Sincerely, Marge Heggison
—Marge Heggison, Lincoln, RI

The last thing America needs is another scheme that lets big, old companies supress or co-opt innovation by new players. The internet has revolutionized our society by being a many-to-many mass medium; we must protect it.
—Bryce Schroeder, Port Jefferson, NY

Allowing internet companies to do as they wish will destroy the internet as an open and free source of information. Equal access to information of all kinds is vital to the American people being educated global citizens and to the health of our economy which is increasingly moving toward eCommerce as a primary mode of business. Please reconsider your decision to allow ISPs to discriminate. The internet should be equally available to everyone.
—Kathryn Bryzgalski, Homewood, IL

This isn't hard. Make the rules the same as for the other communication carriers.
—David Neale, Albuquerque, NM

We must prevent the oligopoly of internet providers/media conglomerates to control everything from content to last mile delivery. Denying Mr. Wheeler the payout by those companies he pretends to regulate after he retires from the FCC is an added benefit.
—Klaus Fechner, Los Altos, CA

You are putting the short-sited interests of the few ahead of the needs of the many. The free and open exchange of ideas is far more important than whatever financial kickbacks that you're getting from your pimps at Verizon, AT&T, and Comcast.
—Mzd Brown, Marlborough, MA

net neutrality is important to me cause i do streaming media threw my roku player. and i think the way u want to set the internet up stinks!!! i also am living on a very fixed income so i need net neutrality
—Brittany James, piermont, NH

Something about this just doesn't seem fair and just which are principles that US is supposedly founded on.
—Manetric L. Douglas, Indianapolis, IN

The corporations are steeling our democracy!
—Alexis Laine, Pebble Beach, CA

Net neutrality needs to be maintained for the greater good. AT&T, Comcast, Verizon and the like will always find a way to capitalize on their use of the internet, even when it's used as a utility, just as it should be!
—Nina Salvo, Depew, NY

The internet should remain open for all, with complete net neutrality. Any other option will only increase the already bloated bottom line of the large ISP's at the expense of individual users and small businesses. Stop pandering to corporate Americe at the expense of everone else!
—Linda M. Reilly, Saint Helens, OR

Reclassify ISPs as common carriers. I use the Internet daily and don't want to have corporations paying (or myself) for a "fast lane". Stop this now.
—Jon STOA, San Francisco, CA

I grew up with a free and open internet, and have seen it foster communities that would otherwise never have come to pass. And those connections are priceless - don't condemn future citizens to a world without them.
—Caroline Binder, Mc Connellsburg, PA

The internet is information freedom. Restricting freedom and keeping people ignorant is not what this country is about!
—Rob Rushing, St. Peter, MN

Net Neutrality is absolute vital. Too many people struggle with internet cost as it is. To allow internet service providers to create different internet speeds at different costs will be detrimental to say the least. Many people who are jobless depend on the internet to find and search for jobs, small businesses need it to thrive, families and friends need it to keep in touch, and most students are required to use it for school and homework. The internet based companies would surely suffer, more people would be far more likely to find a way to forgo internet because they wouldn't be able to afford different internet pricing. Please, FCC, get rid of your rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Please keep the net neutral.
—Kristine, Holbrook, NY

ISPs function as common carriers, and should be designated and regulated as such.
—Mary Donch, New Rochelle, NY

I suffer from severe anxiety and depression that keeps me from earning much. I cannot function as well as others. This has kept me from being able to seek education because I have never been able to finish school as work AND school is not possible for me and I had to choose survival.Ending net neutrality will take away one of the few connections I have to learning and staying connected to the larger world. Ending net neutrality will do nothing but promote ignorance and greed.
—James C. Humphries, Hyattsville, MD

Keep the internet totally neutral.
—Roger Vill, Middle River, MD

This is not a future that anyone with thank us for.
—Faith Myhra, Los Angeles, CA

the internet is for the people, not for the biggest corporations. reclassify internet communications as a utility
—Michael Dimore, whitehouse station, NJ

Net neutrality is important to me because I rely on the internet at my job and for school, not just for myself. My job requires large downloads of courseware files for microsoft classes, and if not for net neutrality I might not be able to afford the connection I have. Thus my work will suffer. There have already been abuses of power to extort money from businesses that rely on the internet, like how Netflix had its bandwidth held hostage unless it paid outrageous fees.
—Christopher Pingel, Waukee, IA

Chairman Wheeler, Over time, society changes. Things like municipal water services, sewer services, and electricity used to be considered novelties and luxuries but have become vital components to the lives of American citizens. Internet access has made this transition as well. While in the past, it could be considered a luxury, it is now a vital necessity in order to communicate, gain information, and do business. Therefore, it is IMPERATIVE that the FCC classify broadband service as a communication service and actively regulate it as such.
—Anthony Ewers, Cleveland, OH

I do not want any ISp or other company to stifle my access to the internet and let large corporations and ISP's to control the internet It is working fine the way it is and improvements to it should be open to all of us not just the few.
—Joe Atkinson, Fort Smith, AR

The internet should be the same for everyone. It has and will continue to inspire innovation and no one should have to pay more to using it.
—Patricia Lundgren, Kansas City, MO

I feel that should a fast lane be implemented, the increased cost will be reflected in consumers prices. If I already pay for high-speed internet, why do I need to pay more to ensure I am getting the delivery speed promised?
—Matthew Wainwright, Syracuse, NY

Global giant service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon should not be allowed to control what and how fast we can access information on the internet. It should be the governments job to keep the www free and clear for all to enjoy and access without limitation, censorship or speed control.
—Edmund F Piotrowski III, Lahaska, PA

Under a multi-tier system, those with the most money wins (Again!), relegating others to a not-so broad band Internet.
—Michael Penkrot, Omaha, NE

Removing Net Neutrality will strangle and stunt the growth of business in the United States, and internationally, and could have terrible and long reaching consequences on businesses, charities and other organisations. Net Neutrality is vital to promoting growth and business in the modern world. Do not let the worst come to pass; reclass ISPs as common carriers. This is vital.
—Matt B, London,

Let's not kill the next big internet idea by making it too expensive to challenge the established players.
—Michael Weston, La Honda, CA

Net Neutrality means the difference between having a life worth the living and not having a life worth living. The reason these telecommunications companies want this is so they can get a toe in the door to completely control everything we see, say and have access to, like information. Information is power, we all know this, and these companies want to monopolize the internet to have all the power for themselves which will only lead to abuses for absolute power corrupts absolutely. This should be patently obvious to the FCC whose job it used to be to protect the public and whose job it should be to protect the best interests of the public. We don't need another governmental agency shilling for the Neo Nazi's. And this is not a pejorative, it's a fact. These ultra rich industrialists like the Koch brothers and the Bush family are the children and grand children of Nazi's and all that goes with that mentality. The FCC is a firewall against the excesses of extreme mentalities such as these and it is quite necessary that the FCC does the correct things and not sell out to these fanatical Rightwing rule-the-world god wannabe's. What is coming down the pike is a complete world revolt and remember, 'he who troubles his own house shall inherit the wind'. You need to start listening to We the People and stop the nonsense... now. Reclassify the ISPs as common carriers and get rid of your really terrible rules dismantling Net Neutrality. Please.
—Annelise Ekland, Bartow, FL

I use mostly non profit and charity web sites, with the new rules they won't have a chance with their web operations which is most of their businesses and messages. This also makes me think that they are being unfairly targeted because they can't make a profit for another billion dollar monopoly disguised as a "company" or whatever.
—Kyle C Bracken, Los Angeles, CA

Please throw out your rules and reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Equality for all users is vital to a healthy democracy. Thank you.
—Jane Tigar, Oriental, NC

we live in a democracy don't we?
—Lorraine Please enter your last Kirk, Nederland, CO

Cut the bullshit and do your job by getting serious about Net Neutrality or you will be replaced, Chairman Wheeler. Wake up!
—David Schonberger, West Hills, CA

We need Net Neutrality. The internet is slow enough now. Any slower and it will be AWFUL!
—John Comella Comella, Philadelphia, PA

Another sell-out to pig corporations, who are already goguging users! No way!!!
—Merlin Emrys, Santa Fe, NM

Please use the power you guys have to protect the common interest of all people who live in the United States.
—Alberto Luna, Alhambra, CA

It Help Small Companies stay the Job creator we need —Eugene A Thorne, Tacoma, WA

Freedom of speech and access to information, in any medium should be a right to all.
—David tholfsen, San Leandro, CA

I don't know all about this but I feel its gonna violate freedom of speech and we won't be able access information that we do now I myself believe this information given on the net should be accessible as it has been we have a right to know what's going on and be able to access information without somebody controlling it to the point that you have to be wealthy to have good speeds of internet I'm on a fixed income and I use many different sites for information and we have a right to knowledge .. I will do my part to support NET N
—Ronald Lanning, Kokomo, IN

Net Neutrality is important to me for a few reasons. Equality, non-discrimination, fair, information, and knowledge are the things that makes the internet open and free to everyone around the world that uses it~. The internet has truly become a dominant source of information, business, entertainment, and one of our main coping mechanism for dealing with the pressures of life. Businesses, schools, hospitals, and a lot of places uses it everyday. Without Net Neutrality everyone would lose their money, be on the streets, the right of independence, and especially the window of opportunities to new possibilities and careers as well.
—Bush Nguyen, Memphis, TN

How many times do we have to implore you not to let money control this vital means of communication for ordinary citizens?
—MAryAnn Ann Brown, allen, TX

Fcc Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan is terrible and allows corporate interests to block freedom of communication EXCEPT for the moneyed classes. Children depend on the internet for their education, and the privatization of a public utility further weakens education for poor students. I depend on Net Neutrality in performing my work and demand protection of the open internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers!
—Jay Cardinal, New York, NY

We have become a nation of Monopolies and our government is allowing it. Keep the internet Net Neutrality.
—Mirtalita Matos, N Bellmore, NY

I want to be able to get information that isn't tied to big money.
—Janice Clark, Portland, OR

I'm a small business owner who needs access to high speed internet for my business. Allowing carriers to throttle or limit band width for small users with shallow pockets will hamper the growth of my company. It is disgraceful that the FCC can be so easily swayed by those with money and power. It's time for the FCC to take a stand for the general public and fully support true net neutrality.
—Matthew Carter, Las Vegas, NV

I depend on relatively fast access to a number of sites to help me educate myself, and others. With these proposed rules, not only would access to many of the sites I depend on be severely restricted, the possibility of me opening my own site and having others access it would be greatly reduced.
—Chester Payne, Crocker, MO

You know, I am starting to finally get that you don't give a damn what the majority of the american people want. You guys decided this a long time ago and the corruption and greed is pervasive at the FCC. YOU ARE DISGUSTING! ALL OF YOU!!!!!!!!
—Rebecca Nesline, Dover, DE

Net Neutrality means that nobody has an unfair advantage in the digital marketplace of ideas an innovation. If we give a few people an unfair advantage, then innovation and cultural progress will suffer. Please do whatever you can to preserve Net Neutrality.
—William Wright, Coralville, IA

The internet is a place for people to start small and go somewhere. If you discriminate against these small businesses through fees, you will take away that part of the american dream.
—Leah Narun, Chadds Ford, PA

In a time where internet is needed, but still treated like a luxury, how would allowing the companies that already profit form us paying for this service force websites into a fast and slow lane benefit the people? How would it benefit the college students who have to write research papers, how would it benefit entrepreneurs who have to pay for their products and other necessities themselves? The Internet is a valuable resource, but if the companies who make it already difficult to afford have their way, it'sll be a luxury again, but this time, it'll be a luxury for the rich.
—Lauren Williams, Detroit, MI

The Internet is a tremendous resource for our modern America. To allow any private or public entity the kind of power being proposed is NOT in the interest of the AMERICAN PEOPLE. Tom Wheeler- ask yourself, who are you working for? Are you serving your country or are you serving Big Business? Ironically- most of the technology driving the Internet has always been OPEN SOURCE. The principals you propose destroy the very principals that have created the Internet! We as a people WANT NET NEUTRALITY.
—Christina Rubino, Staten Island, NY

The internet is the great platform t is because all data is treated equally. Without neutrality we cripple free communication and innovation.
—Brett McMullin, Delmar, NY

In a country where EVERYONE is guaranteed equal rights and opportunities, Net Neutrality is crucial to protecting these rights. Our society relies heavily on the Internet for countless daily tasks, business and personal matters. Net Neutrality should be something our government is fighting for, not against.
—Erica Cullum, Nashville, TN

Please do not mess up the internet. Thank you.
—Sharon Fortunak, Colttage Grove, MN

If the internet is turned into what it used to be, FCC will be responsible for bringing technological innovations back to when we thought 5.6kb on AOL was all we were ever going to have. I am a musician, a game creator, and a youtube channel aide. Making us pay MORE because of bandwidth -- and the money going into the pockets of just the company CEOs -- is idiotic. If you want to halt progress and return America back to the era of civil unrest and stupidity, congratulations. You're on the right track.
—Isaak Kein, Benicia, CA

Because the internet doesn't need to be one big pay site.
—Cody Smith, Jackson, MI

Without net neutrality, innovation is more likely to only come from established companies. Start-ups without the resources to pay for the ability to compete with the monopolizing behemoths of both telecom and software will be at a severe disadvantage and the marketplace will suffer as a result.
—Rob Johnson, Fort Wayne, IN

Tom Wheeler is nothing more than a cable industry muppet who should be fired immediately. To anyone who has not been bought and paid for by the cable complanies, it is obvious that the internet is as vital today as telephones have been in the past. The American people should not have to go to war against the Cable industry to make this happen.
—Jeffrey Hagerty, Portland, OR

Net neutrality fosters innovation, creativity and freedom of expression. Don't kill it!
—Judith Hendricks, Santa Fe, NM

Kill net neutrality will not only threaten to stifle free and open communications in our country, but it could also kill our innovation economy. Startups depend on net neutrality to have a fighting chance. Tech is one industry in which America is still competitive. Killing net neutrality threatens to push our economy back into a long term recession, all so a couple of a telecommunications companies can exploit their monopolistic powers and earn more at the expense of society.
—Alexander Snyder, Glendale, CA

This is a horrible idea. The internet should be kept open for innovation. That isn't going to happen if the little guys don't have equal access. Who will be the next centuries Apple, Google, or Microsoft? You have the power to keep American innovation powering our economy or give it to greedy corporations who have already made billions.. Innovation has always been America's true economic engine. Don't limit it now, when we need it the most.
—Derrick W Binnall, Denver, CO

Small business is what makes this country great. Do not ruin America by making the internet an unfair playing ground.
—Robin Wada, Concord, CA

I really do not want Internet service providers to be the ones who control how fast my connection is. This is another example of big business controlling something that should be uncontrolled especially for their profit.
—Tobin McCracken, Austin, TX

The net was made free for everyone. It should not be privatized and taken over by corporations. By allowing an ISP to control bandwidth, they can discriminate against certain websites that share unbiased news and information. Please keep the net free!
—Christopher West, Riverside, CA

I pay for for a certain speed of internet, don't let those same providers cut the speed of sites that dont pay them an extra fee.
—Charles Norris, Olathe, KS

"Net Neutrality" benefits consumers by enabling free competition among creators of independent content and innovative services. The Internet is the most level playing field for publishing/distributing news, information and entertainment in the history of humankind. Sites like Facebook, MySpace, YouTube, Skype and Twitter -- which have revolutionized the way people communicate -- all began as little startups that likely never would have existed if they'd had to pay a "toll" to connect with end users (on top of the costs they already bear for storage, servers, connectivity and distribution -- and the price each user pays an ISP for Internet access). As it stands, sites that stream a lot of content have to pay CDNs to cache and deliver it to the end user without getting bogged down by net congestion. Broadband ISPs and wireless carriers are what economists call a natural monopoly -- it's impractical to have free competition in the market because of certain economies of scale. At the end of the day, there are only two real pipes into the home for broadband: Cable and telco. That's a duopoly, not real competition. Net neutrality is really just another variation on the century-old idea that monopolies, if left unregulated, have every incentive to maximize profits and harm consumers. Throw out your proposed rules and simply reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Michael E Brown Jr, San Jose, CA

Common Carriers not ISPs!
—Mark Walker, Brooklyn, NY

The ability for everyone to have equal access to the internet is essential to maintain the quality of the internet and the democratic exchange of information. We have enough news and information by favored, high paying companies!
—Gale Simplicio, Morgantown, WV

The Internet has become a necessary commodity in our culture. It must be classified in a way that ensures equal high-speed and quality to all users. Allowing any type of tiered model would prevent high-speed innovation, and price usable speeds out of the reach of millions. But that isn't all. Despite any perceived best efforts, this will ultimately result in further censorship and knowledge control by greedy corporate interests. The US is the ONLY industrialized nation that still offers such slow speeds to customers, and at a much higher price than in other countries.
—Jeff Willoughby, Charlotte, NC

Net Neutrality is critical for user choice on the internet. It isn't content providers' fault that ISPs promised their customers a certain amount of bandwidth based on the assumption that not all of them would use that bandwidth all at once. Don't make the content creators responsible for ISPs' bad business models.
—Todd Gage, Oakland, CA

We ordinary citizens should have equal access to the internet. We should not have to buy access according to whims of big corporations who are also subsidized by our tax money.
—Peggy Yates, Seminole, FL

Without media democracy, political democracy is nothing
—Alejandro Andres Monreal, Auckland 1446,

I work from home, a slower internet access will impede my progress and effect my work performance outcome.
—Dorothy Lebovitz, Upland, CA

Anything that puts a control on the internet WILL cause the internet to CRASH because the people that NEED the internet will NOT be able to continue to surf the internet like they do NOW. It will be either THAT or a HUGE increase in the cost of living because almost ALL businesses will have to PAY a LOT more just to use the internet that they have USE to run their businesses. I think this is just a PLOT of the Obama GANG to gain more control of the internet. He has STATED time after time that he wants America to be HIS IDEA of what a country should be and THAT is for HIS GANG to make everybody a virtual SLAVE of their agenda or in other words "HIS WAY OR THE HIGHWAY"
—Donald Mccormick, Portland, OR

I know there are powerful interests behind abolishing net neutrality - do not listen to them. Define ISPs as common carriers - that is what they are!
—Ken Reynolds, Claymont, DE

net neutrality stops companys like comcast and virizon from using the internet as a money machine
—Rowan walker, Coalville,

The internet has been instrumental in the increasing democratization of our society, giving voice to many more citizens than at any other time in history. Tiered service silences and disenfranchises the non-wealthy. Our government "of, for, and by the people" is already sorely beset; if net neutrality is lost, it's another blow.
—David Negaard, Wailuku, HI

The flow of information and services online must not be left to the control of enterprise. AT&T, Comcast and Verizon know they are actually nothing more than a utitlity. That is why they are so against Net Neutrality. Please don't sell the people to big business. The real value online is content, not access to it.
—Trevin Wagner, Sterling, VA

These rules will put the financial burden on the consumer, grow corporate profit and puts the Internet into the hands of those with the most money. Throw out your proposed rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Now is the time to make history in a positive way when it is written.
—Stan Makowski, Aurora, CO

Don't follow the path of countries such as China, Iran, and North Korea, the people demand net neutrality and an open internet!
—Brad Shearer, Norton, KS

Regulations, in general, are a plague upon this nation. The United States should be about freedom, quite especially our 1st amendment rights. By creating a "fast lane" for larger corporations, you will have immediately created a "slow lane" by logic alone. A fast lane does not give anyone today any faster access to popular domains, we're still using the same physical connection. Paying does NOT make things faster, just the inverse. AS an IT Professional, it creates a frustrating environment to have things not only throttled, but restricted in our work relying on the access of information. I would close with a "thank you," though I will hold for now as events unfold discovering whether you are for, or against a REAL net neutrality.
—Cody Duncum, Abilene, TX

Because it appears that these buracratic,bloated agencies can't seem to get their act together, and if we, the CONSUMERS do not speak up, we are going to be given higher rates for lousy internet service, and we are already seeing that via the cable industry. We must have Net Neutrality!
—Ray Bustos, Fullerton, CA

By throwing out actual net neutrality you are killing future online small businesses. This isn't just going to effect the US you are killing innovation globally and singlehandedly ruining the internet.
—Caleb Leupold, Kent, WA

In the past, the internet has always been a place of equal ground to form connections, gain up-to-date information, and communicate with people all over the world. We do not need a system that separates and discriminates us into two groups based on our provider.
—Margaret, ,

Once again corporations, these faceless entities with $$$, persuade elected or appointed officials with lies and empty promises of how they, the corporations, can help the American people. We must remember, corporations do not have the American people's will and want in the forefront of their business plans. Corporations main goal is to make as much money for their shareholders. If this means charging the American people excessive amounts for basic services, they'll do it. The FCC must keep Net Neutrality and, in fact, label it as a utility! The internet is a tool used by many to conduct business, innovate, and educate. Allowing corporations to dismantle the internet would allow them to be the judge, jury, and executioner for small start ups, for entrepreneurs, and for those trying to use the internet to follow the American Dream. The next facebook, amazon, netflix, or who know what service that is being developed in someone's garbage will not be able to compete. The FCC must keep the internet a level playing field so that corporations with deep pockets can not rely solely on their deep pockets to keep their market share, but must innovate. It's David and Goliath. Imagine how different if it was a Legion of Goliaths verse one David. That's what the internet would be without net neutrality. Let's keep the dream alive. Internet service providers already make an excessive amounts of profits off of their customers. We already pay internet for home, business, smart phones, and tablets. Now ISPs want to charge how the data gets to our devices! That is criminal! I pay for data to get to me, and if I have a business on the internet, I pay to get my data to my customers. If the FCC ends Net Neutrality, the FCC and Chairman Tom Wheeler has failed the America people by allowing corporate greed control the internet.
—Aldo Figueroa, Agoura Hills, CA

This internet was founded about this basic principle, and its fostered an open and collaborative community encouraging advances in technology, services, security and revolutionized how our world operates. Why limit that environment now after it has done so much for all of us?
—Nathan Guenther, Orlando, FL

Net neutrality is important because it allows small companies the ability to compete against bigger corporations. Not having competition would result in jacked up and prices, much like how you've allowed ISP's to turn into. The fact that you even consider allowing something so discriminating clearly shows the corruption and greed that has plagued you. From what I understand, you serve the companies because if you give what they want, they'll pay you. Probably pretty well. But you are only thinking about the short term. Giving the ISP companies the upperhand will result in high prices, unfairness to the people who care about the internet, and ultimately, no innovation. If you think about the long term, you'll see that competition and innovation will bring in more profit than what the ISP's can provide now. They should be classified as Title 2 common carriers, and they cannot be allowed to throttle something that is unlimited. Data is unlimited, unlike other resources, so the excuse that they make where "the data needs to be shared" cannot be used. Companies should NEVER be able to control the people, and allowing the slow-lane would do just that.
—Josiah, Newhall, CA

Hi, I just see big business having a little too much pull in politics these days and think keeping this great innovation of the internet free and open to all as an important issue moving forward in the modern world. Thank You, Curtis Bidgood
—Curtis Bidgood, Laguna Hills, CA

I own a small business. Under the current plan I could never compete with large corporations who will be able to buy faster access from telecom companies. Please reconsider and reclassify the internet service providers as common carriers.
—Skip Colon, Miami, FL

We live in a democracy, the internet needs to be easily accessible by all. I equate the internet to the old newspaper communications. The right to free speech should extend to the internet. The only way to ensure that the internet is free for all to access their freedom of speech is to reclassify the internet as a utility.
—Edwin Lee Hill Jr., Lapeer, MI

It's bad enough that the mergers and lack of competition makes the internet and cable outrageously expensive compared with the rest of the world, please don't change the rules and make it even worse for the average wage-earner and those of us retired and on fixed incomes.
—Iris woods, Londonderry, NH

I am an Internet entrepreneur and my success depends on network neutrality. Please help me succeed by treating me equitably on the Internet.
—Neil Balthaser, Redwood City, CA

I'm a retired senior, and only have a small income. If net neutrality is not maintained I'm not sure the internet would hold much for me. I would hate to loose this invaluable information source so important to keeping me an informed citizen & voter
—Mary Sullivan, Kalkaska, MI

We the taxpayers are tired of everyone catering to the corporations! How long do you think the people will accept such actions!
—Dorothy Staby, Aliquippa, PA

The growth of American innovation - and prosperity - relies on net neutrality.
—Kathryn Kelley, Columbus, OH

This proposal would slow down the advancement of a bigger, faster internet. ISPs can simply collect ever-increasing rents on large providers using video, and will have no incentive to scale up to a national fiber system capable of farm more than Netflix streaming. We need to develop the next generation internet, not solidify the current deficient one.
—Benjamin Short, Felton, CA

FCC, I'm opposed to your suggestion of an end to net neutrality. Allowing ISPs to charge higher rates for premium lanes will cripple small businesses and encourage monopolies. My ISP provider is Time Warner, who also provides cable television. If your premium lanes are allowed, then Time Warner would be free to charge higher rates to content providers such as Youtube and Netflix. After all, they are competitors to Time Warners cable service. Those costs would likely be passed onto me, the consumer. Small businesses like Vimeo and CollegeHumor that can't afford the premium lanes will be relegated to fighting for bandwidth. Premium bandwidth means dedicated bandwidth, so no other company can use that capacity of the network. Your rules have the capacity to diminish regular bandwidth in half. I've been around since the start of the internet when it was a "neat thing". Now, it's part of our daily lives. I dare say the younger generation couldn't get by without their smartphones. We need the internet and it needs to be free. It's too important to sacrifice to capitalistic greed. Bill Clar
—Bill Clar, Sanford, FL

I have friends that live far away from me as far as several states away and overseas. It would emotionally hurt me and them if we were unable to communicate due to discrimination such as this. I know I am not the only one who has friends that live overseas or several states away, and limiting that communication is a terrible idea as not only does it limit the ability to share ideas, cultures, and meeting new people but it also prevents others from reaching out to one another in a time of crisis and need. Many people reach out to others beyond their region for help during hard times, such as a family member being wrongly arrested and persecuted, or worse. Limiting communication because they cannot afford a "fast lane" and unable to call out to others willing to listen will mean said family member or friend was wrongly persecuted and thrown into jail. That is an injustice we cannot afford. There are plenty of day to day examples of things such as this happening as well as things beyond just the law, and people have fixed these wrongs by being able to reach out to others over the Net. Severely limiting communication with discrimination would be a major step back from all this, and will allow people being wrongly accused of crimes they did not commit or very minor offenses to serve jail sentences and perhaps even death penalties that did not deserve it.
—Matthew Lowery, Oklahoma City, OK

I am on a fixed income and second i want to be able ti access web sites that are not big money makers.
—Robert Berry, Petaluma, CA

Net Neutrality prevents the 2 service providers in my region from blocking anything they don't like and extorting money from other groups to let them reach their users. I want to be able to visit obscure sites just as easily as Facebook!
—Ryan Prickler, Akron, OH

In the information age, all should have equal access to information at the same speed. A two-tiered system favors only those that can afford to pay for faster internet service.
—Stuart G. Baker, Ticonderoga, NY

Internet is the incubator of entrepreneurs and business, free speech and free thinking; net neutrality destroy's this, ultimately hurting society.
—Andrew Plaza, Long Valley, NJ

I'm a very heavy user of the Internet. I'm retired and live in a small town. I depend on the Internet to find out what's going on in the greater world. I use it to keep up with developments in areas that reflect my interests, such as railroads and hiking. I use email and instant messaging to keep up with friends I'd otherwise have trouble keeping up with.
—Tom Hoffman, Pearisburg, VA

The Internet is a public utility, especially so since U.S. taxpayer dollars funded the government employees who originated the idea. Charge premium fees locks out people with little or no money, further reinforcing the idea of a two-tier citizenry, which is antithetic to our nation and its founding ideals.
—Walter Wade, New York, NY

This is a no brainer. Either the internet remains neutral for all, or becomes the property of the rich, just like Congress and the Supreme Court.
—Theresa Lauro, Matthews, NC

I prefer to use the term Net Freedom - and would like to take this opportunity to emphasise that freedom for capital to impose its rules stands in direct contradiction of freedom for living beings. I stand for free Internet, which means free access to information and communication, not freedom to enclose and supervise.
—Wiktor Ostasz, ,

I believe that creating fast lanes for big corporations will be detrimental to free flow of information on the internet. The FCC should, in my opinion, protect the open internet and reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Daniel Kirk, glen ridge, NJ

I can't afford to pay more for a slow connection--ATT DSL. Stop giving in to corp. pressure, and think about the people.
—Judy L., Carson City, NV

There is 0% incentive for ISPs not to abuse the internet. Competition between major ISPs in much of the country is non-existent. Even in areas where they compete, if AT&T and Comcast are both speeding up every site except Wikipedia (thereby slowing Wikipedia down by using a larger percentage of the bandwidth for every other site) what difference does it make to switch between them? Example time: 5 sites share 100% of the bandwidth, each at 20%. If Comcast speeds up 1 site to 30%, the other 4 sites all slow down to 17.5%. How is this any better than being able to slow down sites? It isn't.
—Andrew J. Young, Bloomington, IN

I'm writing in support of net neutrality. Your plans are self-serving or serve only a couple of corporations. People are tired of being bossed around by corporate greed and political corruption.
—C Smith, ,

Please stop catering to the big telecoms and start thinking about the real consumers out here. Why is the FCC against us?
—Susanna J Schaum, Willow Street, PA

A free and open internet promotes innovation. Take note of the tools and technology we citizens have available at our disposal because of an open web—from social media to open source code to crowdfunding and beyond—in the past couple decades alone, we've gained the ability to do amazing things with just about anyone around the world. Don't impede innovation with rules shaped by the lobbyists of wealthy telecom giants. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers and keep us moving forward.
—Olivia Cheng, Arlington, VA

ISPs should not be permitted any power over the internet itself. Our telecommunications conglomerates are always pushing for more power and control and this is, at the LATEST, where the line must be drawn- when they begin to attempt to wrest control of the flow of information on private sites.
—Nathan Jackson, Houston, TX

You disgust me. All you greedy people care about is money. I demand an open Internet!
—Thomas Recoskie, ,

I cannot afford higher rates. The internet should be equally available to all!
—Mr. Anje' Waters, Grass Valley, CA

There is only one party in America right now, and it is Greed.
—Lyndel Brown, Brooklyn, NY

My wife and I are the second generation in a small, family-owned company. After 26 years, we still struggle every day just to stay open. Please don't give the big corporations a further upper hand by reducing our internet service or making it more expensive. Our customers cannot afford increased prices and we already discount to our greatest extent possible. Please help small businesses and stand up for the average internet user. Please support Net Neutrality!
—Todd Manning, Topeka, KS

Stop favoring the big corporations and have the internet be what it started out to be, equal access for all.
—John Csaszar, Fleetwood, PA

Net neutrality is important in order to fulfill the original promise of the internet itself: equal access to all, a very important democratic concept. Not, "some of us are more equal than others," If Tom Wheeler approves this two-tiered approach, or if he approves the Comcast-Time Warner merger, or the AT&T-Direct TV merger, we should escort Mr. Wheeler back to the revolving door he came in. Time for him to go back to the private sector and allow someone who cares about consumers to assume the role of guardian. I think he doesn't get it.
—Cindy May, Los Angeles, CA

Mr. Wheeler, we hope you remember that you and the FCC work for the public, the real citizens of the United States, and not corporations like AT&T, et al. As such, you must protect the democracy of the internet on our behalf. Thank you.
—Ardith Lowell, Nampa, ID

Most of my life and livelihood is online. What you propose will harm my personal and professional life. "Fast" and "regular" are just terms. What's "regular" or even "fast" today becomes "slow" tomorrow. With this rule in place, the most sites made and accessed in the US will be at a great disadvantage compared to both sites that pay to play _and_ international competitors. In one fell swoop, you will undermine the current American dominance in the online world. I'm already seeing my international competitors and customers shift their habits and money due to Snowden's revelations. This would be the nail in the coffin for the American web industry. You wouldn't disadvantage all new web companies and technologies. Just American ones. I remember when Alta Vista was the most popular browser. I remember when Amazon just sold books, and other stores out paced them. I remember when Facebook was only for college students, and the most popular social network was MySpace. Things change fast online, and newcomers can take over in a very short time. You're not stopping that from happening. Just ensuring that the next time it does, it won't be an American company that rises to the top. It will be British or Brazilian, Czech or Chinese, Israeli or Indian. It will be from a country where they pay less for faster speeds. Which right now includes most of the developed world.
—Malaika Boyd, city, TX

You are ruining the internet. the internet is about the free access of information and to better the knowledge database of all. If you start allowing internet providers to charge websites more for access since they are popular you are discriminating across the web. Equal access is a must. Internet providers already charge more for faster internet but they shouldn't be de-valuing our current access by requesting more money for what we as internet users are accustomed to. That is unacceptable. That is discriminating and that has no place in internet access. Just because I may check out more books at a library doesn't mean I should have to be charged more money than anyone else. The library is the internet. You pay a fee to have access. But what they are doing is they are saying hey you really like this author... you need to pay more to read books by him. That again is unacceptable.
—Timothy Renshaw, Grandview, MO

Keep the internet free for all people- information is powerful, and all people should be able to access the internet. ISPs should be classified as common carriers.
—Mrs. Melissa Daniel, Holly Springs, NC

The internet should give equal access to all. Last I checked we still have a democracy.
—Christopher Michaels, Eugene, OR

Wheeler, you sure know how to ruin the good thing with the internet. We built it and entrepreneurs built their business. So, you want all of this to stop. NO corporate B.S. or their control. Corporations will ruin as they do everything they touch.
—Ann Cobban, Grants Pass, OR

Discrimination is occurring everywhere across the country, headed up by Obamacare. Now they are trying to take the internet away too. Tell these jerks to stop thinking about money and start representing the people's wishes, which are net neutrality.
—R H., Scottsdale, AZ

Chairman Wheeler, I ask that you consider the ramifications of of the proposed rules. It's not just about corporations being able to charge for higher traffic, this can and will lead to censorship and infringement of our 1st amendment right to free speech. There is nothing in place that would keep the companies from slowing down or charging more for any new site that they feel may publish unfavorable information.
—Damian McCleod, Brooklyn, NY

Free internet allows writers to share their works with their fans.
—Andi Lewis, Cedar Rapids, IA

The Internet is a tremendous resource for our modern America. To allow any private or public entity the kind of power being proposed is NOT in the interest of the AMERICAN PEOPLE. Tom Wheeler- ask yourself, who are you working for? Are you serving your country or are you serving Big Business? Ironically- most of the technology driving the Internet has always been OPEN SOURCE. The principals you propose destroy the very principals that have created the Internet! We as a people WANT NET NEUTRALITY.
—Christina Rubino, Staten Island, NY

La neutralidad de la red es vital como vehículo para la dignidad humana y no ser manipulados.
—Eva Ric, Roquetas de Mar, PA

The internet has become the way people interact with so much of the world outside our localities. . . Why does the US lag so far behind Europe as far as the internet and access goes.
—Edward J. Perrin, Portland, ME

I expect a free and uncommercial iced internet.
—Joseph R Brown, Canaan, NH

The internet needs to remain equally available to all citizens of this country and without corporate discrimination. To allow corps to regulate access of content and increase fees for speed is un-democratic! We are not a dictatorship!
—Heather Graziano, Truckee, CA

The free flow of information is the purest form of free speech the United States of America could even hope for. Unless the internet infrastructure technologies are treated as a common carrier, you can kiss that goodbye. Should rich people get to use the carpool lane? Definitely not.
—Steven Fischer, Petaluma, CA

I strongly oppose a classist internet. The beauty of this medium is that it is freely accessible to anyone with access to a computer and a modem. Choking this access hurts our economy, our education system, and the quality of life for every American. Protect Net Neutrality!
—Jamie G, Burlington, VT

To protect small internet start ups, to give everyone the same fair chance online and to provide a free open market. These are a few reasons why we must protect and preserve net neutrality. The only way to do this is to reclassify the Internet as a Type II telecommunications service. We must do this now. You've had a judge tell you the same last year, now is the time. The internet was created by the people, for the people. Not some ISP entities. It is not ISPs your title represents, it is for the people's interest you were appointed. Mr. Wheeler, you must reclassify the internet as per the people's request.
—Danny Pires, Valhalla, NY

I can not imagine an internet available for some, and not for all...this is NOT the way the internet was supposed to be. Where winners have the money to pony up and losers do not. How on Earth would start-ups and such have the ability to get out there without the funding available to do so. This is pathetic. The ONLY solution for a FREE and OPEN internet is by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers...anything else is unenforceable lip service.
—Anthony Mastronicola, Rome, NY

It's not fair to have to pay extra for the same services.
—Angelica Sanders, Memphis, TN

Net Neutrality fore-ever! Let the internet be reclassified as a common carrier. Thanks.
—Guillermo Cancio, Miami, FL

Taxpayer dollars created the Internet, and it is now an essential part of everyone's day-to-day existence. It is alarming corporate interests are being put ahead of the people when we're talking about such a vital system -- what is a lifeblood for finding jobs, for interacting with local, state and federal governments and agencies, for conducting and engaging with all forms of businesses, for signing up for vital services like healthcare and paying bills in an age when branches and other "on the ground" services are fast disappearing in lieu of Internet-enabled virtual-only services. The list goes on and on. This agency claims to be for an open Internet, but your actions indicate otherwise. You could have moved decisively to guarantee that the Internet remains an open platform for free expression and the exchange of democracy-sustaining communications by now. You could have codified net neutrality once and for all by reclassifying broadband and mobile connectivity as 'telecommunication' under Title II of the Communications Act. Even judges ruling on recent net neutrality cases indicated doing this was within your power and their recommended way to resolve legal and regulatory inconsistencies that arose from these cases. Yet instead, you introduced a highly questionable and obfuscating legal framework on 5/15/2014, leaving broadband users without the protections they deserve. You turned your back on what is clearly in the people's interest in lieu of protecting those of corporations, as well as your own, by opening the door to tiered treatment and by creating need for ongoing regulatory assessment of tiered treatment (e.g. what is 'commercially reasonable'), when the "common carrier" approach would have killed the tiered treatment concept entirely and codified net neutrality permanently. Let's be clear, any proposal that allows for the possibility of fast lanes for the few, no matter how gently the language is couched, is emphatically not net neutrality. The obvious common-sense prerequisite for an open Internet is Title II reclassification, guaranteeing the agency's authority to protect consumers and ensure free speech and equal treatment online. Every individual has a stake in the Internet remaining open. May 15 should have been about adopting strong safeguards, enforceable rules, and sound legal footings. It wasn't. Let's fix that now. Please reclassify broadband and mobile connectivity as 'telecommunication' under Title II.
—Joanne Marino, El Cerrito, CA

The Internet is necessary to exist normally in modern America. The rules, as is, make me wonder who the FCC actually represents? American citizens or corporations? The informed public does NOT agree with Tom Wheeler, his rules, or this corporate handout. The FCC must uphold its duty to the general American public, and passage of this plan would warrant an investigation to determine why consumer interests were ignored.
—Paris Flores, Chicago, IL

I am a handicapped senior living on Social Security and can't afford to pay a fee for what I choose to see on the internet. Don't change the rules for the benefit of the big companies. Robert Donohue —Robert Donohue, Gresham, OR

I can't afford a fast lane. Your rules will discriminate against small businesses and middle class users of the internet. Classify the internet as a common carrier.
—Lynn Schuyler, San Francisco, CA

There is no need to mess up a system that is working so well. These new rules are going to challenge net-neutrality no matter how this is 'sold' to us. Formation of 'fast' lanes automatically renders the others 'slow' lanes. How is this so difficult to see? Internet segregation also has political interests behind this. Net-Neutrality is also one of the last remaining factors in our society that positively impact our democratic process.
—Lilo D. Pozzo, Seattle, WA

We have to stand up for our rights for a free and open internet! I don't want to see our internet torn apart for just a select few. We should all enjoy the internet that we know and love equally no matter what!! These new rules will only bring chaos! I implore you: don't let these ISPs get the better of us! I will ALWAYS stand up for real net neutrality, and no substitutes!!!!
—Robbie, Saint Louis, MO

Because we don't want sensorship like China, Russia and even Nazi Germany and that's what AT&T, Comcast and Verizon would user in. It's just greed on their part and the people they are paying off. The open net has to ability to end wars and disputes and allow creative thinking like never before, if Mr. Wheeler's plan who is obviously getting paid by the big three to be for their greedy corporate interests and with now consideration for the rest of the seven billion people of the world; goes through, it will send the scientific, creative and inventive community back to the stone ages.
—James Christopher Hill, North Charleston, SC

The Internet should be treated as a commons as much as possible, so making ISPs common carriers is the right legal fit.
—John Abbe, Eugene, OR

This should be a public utility! In these times when so many are struggling to make ends meet allowing a system that will end up costing more for consumers eventually is wrong. Please keep Net Neutrality simple and open for all by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. Thanks.
—J Lane, Sebastopol, CA

Without Net Neutrality the internet will become like TV and no longer relevant.If money rules the internet then we ALL loose.
—Normand Bureau, Verdun,

60% Of my life revolves around the internet. Put two and two together.
—Euan Brenton, ,

WHY would you want to take this away from the "people" and give EVERYTHING to the corporations???? What on earth is happening to us as a society that big money corporations get everything they want and the citizens of this country don't count any longer??????
—Kaye Barley, Boone, NC

All media except the internet is already owned and dictated to by huge corporations. Don't give them the ability to censor the internet too.
—Jessie Kainz, Healdsburg, CA

This is important to me because I value the principles of democracy, which rely entirely on a free exchange of information, accessible to all. Net neutrality means that there is equal access for all, to any and all information which enables us to make the informed decisions that are our rights and duties to make as citizens of the United States. Chairman Wheeler, your proposal for two-tiered, discriminatory Internet accessibility is inimical to democracy. It is yet another regression toward the two-class society that we are rapidly becoming. Please change your mind.
—Pamela Walker, Oakland, CA

Enough with the haves and the have-nots, let's just do the right thing for all, and forget about the green for once.
—Ronnie Mahan, McGregor, TX

Without net neutrality I wouldn't be confident of ANYTHING I found on the web. It would also kill start ups, which are the real employers of this nation.
—Leonard Abrams, Mountain view, CA

Neutrality=Equality
—Matusa Barros, ,

Net neutrality is essential to consumers who depend on the internet for their way of life.
—Brian Stanley, city, VA

Look, I'm a small fry who's HIGHLY reliant on having ready, easy, timely, affordable access to the internet. If this is taken away from me, I won't be able to maintain the quality, timely communications I require, because so many of my like-minded colleagues and collaborators do not reside in my general living area. If I am relegated to 'slow dirt road' availability, it means sudden death for me and my burgeoning consultancy.
—Kimberly King, OAKLAND, CA

Net neutrality is very important- it levels the playing field for small start-ups.
—Ken Kiel, Rockford, MI

Stop the financial greed. Stop hurting small businesses. Instead of charging more for a fast lane, just create a free lane for all. It's all the same data pipe anyways.
—Robert levy, Wheeling, IL

I demand to keep my FREEDOM of choice on the Internet!! Big corporate interests are about power and money - not integrity and the best for all concerned = We The People. Reclassigy ISPs as common carriers, PLEASE!!!
—Jean Hart, Columbus, NC

PLEASE FCC! Throw out the new rules for 'Net Neutrality' (if that's what you wanna call it). The internet has always been open and free. Allowing companies to control the content and availability of the internet is equivalent to the restriction of the right to free speech. I am asking for the FCC to reclassify Internet Service Providers as Title-two Common Carriers. Signed, Concerned citizen of the United States of America
—Giancarlo Maruggi, Charlotte, NC

The internet is a truly democratic development of our time. I would be ashamed to live in this country during the era in which we allowed these freedoms to be revoked.
—Rebecca Rideout, Greenfield, MA

ISPs should not have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. I urge you reject these rules and instead move to protect real Net Neutrality.
—Bill Coffee, Louisville, CO

Net neutrality is an integral feature that drives America's innovations in culture, technology and free speech. By discriminating between websites it allows corporations to limit America's potential and threaten democracy within the country.
—Benjamin David Morley, ,

Your rules are fucking lame.....like all you politicians. Fucking losers have to keep things all fucked up so you can continue with your shady corrupt way of life. FUCK YOU rotten fucks!!!
—Daniel Beck, Redondo Beach, CA

This will kill any opportunities for entrepreneurs
—Jon Barnett, Spartanburg, SC

Net Neutrality protects innovation, especially when dealing with disruptive technology. I can think of 3 mega-corporations that would like to kill disruptive technology, especially if they hold the reins. Please don't let them deal in discrimination; that's why the FCC is in place. We pay you for this very reason.
—Joaquin Casares, Austin, TX

The internet is a force that can create more democracy and less tyranny. It was born free. Keep it free, for all!
—Michael Robeson, Plainfield, NJ

America has already fallen too far behind the modern nations, and this would be a huge step backwards. We need people in government who are willing to put the best interests of the country ahead of corporate whims and demands.
—Diane H Fabian, Fort Atkinson, WI

Preserve Net Neutrality– we already have to endure the degradation of the world's physical beauty, . . at least leave us this most beautiful and democratic of man's creations.
—Jesse Bustos-Nelson, Charleston, SC

The internet is THEWAY most people get their information these days. It must be free from monied influence! Democracy depends upon net neutrality!!
—Ann D. Hungerman, Ann Arbor, MI

Chairman Wheeler, Please reconsider your utterly stupid and irresponsible plan. The people DEMAND net neutrality .
—Brett Ellisor, Coldspring, TX

Net Neutrality is important to me because I feel it betters the world and human society. It knocks down barriers to entry and enables innovation. I do love capitalism. I believe capitalist policies are part of what makes America great. But, just as Rockefeller's pipelines had to be split up, certain Achilles heals must be minded for the good of the people, the nation, the world. This is one of them.
—Rob Harrison, Greenwood, IN

I think you guys are assholes.
—Ben Grayson Conley, Valdese, NC

For our struggling household, net neutrality provides an equal playing field in an otherwise unfair competition, where our own creativity and hard work have a chance against corporate megaliths who can outspend and outmaneuver small businesses in every other respect. The open Internet has transformed the world we live in. It is an invaluable source of information, education, commerce and economic independence. It is a major factor in any "economic recovery" this country can hope for. The corporate ISPs already profit mightily from broadband fees. They should not be permitted to regulate in ANY way the operation of the Internet, to censor content or limit access. Recognizing broadband as the TELECOMMUNICATIONS service that it is -- and these corporations as the COMMON CARRIERS that they are -- is the only logical and ethical solution the FCC can take in light of its own mission: "The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) regulates interstate and international communications by radio, television, wire, satellite and cable" (from www.fcc.gov). The FCC cannot justify anything less than preserving fair and equal access to this primary mode of communication by designating it accordingly. Do the right thing to clean up the mess you have created. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—DH Higgins, Fairfax, CA

We're counting on YOU to do the RIGHT thing!
—Mr. Gregory McCoy, Asheville, NC

Dear Mr. Chairman, i urge you as a small business owner to ensure the internet stays neutral. I also expect the FCC to reclassify ISPs as common carriers in order to protect the neutrality of the internet and availability of it for all. With kind regards.
—Reza Sharifi, Scottsdale, AZ

This is how it starts. Paid prioritization. Don't think about the short-term effects -- think about the slippery slope this precedent sets. Please, do not let this happen!
—Kevin D'Aquila, Hudson, MA

Net Neutrality is important for the free exchange of ideas and information. Please do not let anyone control or charge a fee for that. I feel that to do so would greatly reduce further development and hamper the everyday man in his quest for knowledge
—Charles Tronco, Columbia, SC

STOP THE STUPID SHELL GAME! WE ARE NOT DECEIVED! The federal court told you that net neutrality rules are, per se, common carrier regulations and that the only way you can impose net neutrality regulations on ISPs is to reclassify ISPs as common carriers under Title II of the Communications Act. Your stupid proposal to continue trying to enforce net neutrality under Section 706 is therefore totally FAKE! Even if the court were to accept that you have a legal foundation for doing so, the case-by-case approach totally stacks the deck in favor of the Big Telecom oligarchs who take in billions of dollars a year in profits and have armies of lawyers; they're the only ones who could afford that kind of contest. In any case, this foot dragging is just an attempt to favor the Big Telecom oligarchs by dragging out this process indefinitely. STOP DITHERING! Reclassify ISPs as common carriers and adopt REAL net neutrality rules -- rules that explicitly prohibit all "pay-to-play" schemes, including "fast tracks." And Chairman Wheeler: Do the American People and Prsident Obama a favor: RESIGN, and take the other Big Telecom weasels you brought onto the FCC staff with you.
—Mr. Donald Campbell, Moultonborough, NH

We cannot accept any rules that will stratify the Internet. It is the last place where an equal playing field exists.
—Charles Kausler, Green Valley, AZ

Net neutrality is vital because it keeps large companies from hiding information that they don't like from the general public. It makes sure that internet companies can't charge websites money for faster loading times, and numerous other things. Net neutrality is extremely important in making sure that that Internet remains a fair place for all users.
—Sam Lee, ,

I'm elderly, disabled and have a severe hearing loss. Much of my communication is by email and anything that would increase my expenses in the way of fees, impaired service or raised rates would seriously affect my ability to function on a service I depend on.
—Elizabeth Furber, San Mateo, CA

The internet is essentially a public utility that ensures the free and democratic flow of information and communications. It should not be for sale to corporations who can mold it into a for profit agenda.
—Mo Kafka, New Brunswick, NJ

The internet was created with money from US tax payers. We should not have to pay more to have equal speed access to the internet as to be determined by ISPs.
—Don Lewis, Pleasanton, CA

Please do not go forward with your current plan. Instead, please reclassify ISPs as common carriers and enforce net neutrality.
—S Michael Convey, Camas, WA

The internet is no longer just a luxury, it is a means of essential communications, commerce for everyone (not just the giants), medical communications with doctors and hospitals, etc. It should stay open and equally fair for ALL.
—Barry Bindell, Studio City, CA

Do not allow a tiered internet, leaving who is known, who succeeds and who innovates in the hands of private ISPs. I know you mean well, but you are fixing what is not broken... and breaking it in the process. Thank you
—Carlos Perez, Miami, FL

As a software engineer who creates web-based applications not having net neutrality could negatively impact my job.
—Christopher Lamm, Knoxville, TN

A two-tiered Internet would stifled innovation by penalizing smaller start-ups and companies who cannot afford to compete with larger, more established companies. We already pay some of the highest prices in any developed country and limited choice in choosing an internet provider. This would make things much worse.
—Warner Belanger, Atlanta, GA

We all have the same right to free speech and information. No one has more or less claim than anyone else.
—Cassandra Lyons, Lexington, KY

The internet should be equel for everyone. The (bad) plan you're pushing won't just affect the internet for the US, it will affect "The Internet". Not just yours, not just mine, everyones. Please reclassify ISP's to "Common Carriers" as well. They provide the road, not the destination.
—Tijmen Hoekstra, ,

We use the internet to safely deliver cargo, including very sensitive cargo, for DOD contract and need to not be put in the slow lane for weather info, safe parking, directions, legal routing etc.
—Kate Kosse, Surprise, AZ

This is unfair
—Dustin Coyle, Pocatello, ID

My company is a media delivery service, and we move significant amounts of data through the internet for large and small clients alike. These clients represent a wide variety of artists and neither the clients nor their artists should have precedence over the other when it comes to accessing their data via the internet. Net neutrality is important for my business and for theirs.
—Craig Anderson, Canoga Park, CA

As a folk musician, I depend on a free, open and non-discriminatory internet to get my music to people. As a political activist, I depend on a free, open and non-discriminatory internet for access to non-commercial, non-profit sites for news and information that is not available from corporate owned media. As a consumer, I demand an internet that is not hobbled by monopoly cable interests who refuse to invest in network upgrades. I am sick and tired of paying Comcast exorbitant rates for sluggish, intermittent service. The ISPs will only abuse consumers more if you allow them to discriminate... and the ONLY way to forbid ISPs from abusing the public is to RECLASSIFY broadband as a telecommunications service under Title II. I URGE the FCC to end it's disgusting tradition of regulatory capture, and for once serve the public interest. Reclassify broadband as a telecommunications service under Title II of the 1934 Communications Act.
—Bob Soper, Portland, OR

The Internet has been the greatest driver of economic growth we've seen in the last 50 years. A free and open Internet is required to see that economic growth blossom over the next 50 years. The ISPs are common carriers. Please classify them as such and preserve Net Neutrality and the open Internet. Thank you.
—Rob Enns, Los Gatos, CA

The internet is the 21st century transportation system, except that the material required to build and maintain this infrastructure is not nearly as expensive as freeways. Yet lobbyist written government policies continue to subsidize freeway construction, car ownership, and oil production when such measures are clearly outdated. Why isn't net neutrality a matter of public interest today and on into the future? I'm baffled. It's a cheaper, more effective, easier choice than maintaining an unsustainable car infrastructure. So do it!
—David Rice, Los Angeles, CA

It's the internet that I pay for and I should get to choose what gets delivered at what speed if I pay for the speed.
—Jack Fruin, Birmingham, AL

Agencies such as the FCC are set up to protect us citizens in our lives--not to further tip the scales of our society to the benefit of groups with big money so they can become bigger and more influential in our society. After my recent move from another California city, I was reminded how the communications giants are becoming more distant from us ordinary citizens. I went through weeks of Kafka-like procedures to get my service cut off at the first home and the bills for unreceived service to stop....
—Vernon Faulkner, Torrance, CA

Please stand up for net neutrality!
—Amy Corey, SPOKANE, WA

The existence of "fast lanes" requires also the existence of "slow lanes," into which we will all be forced by the ISPs as they extort money from us to re-enter the "fast lanes." The FCC does not have the budget or personnel to police predator ISPs - so don't give them the opportunity to require policing. Re-classify them as common carriers and keep them under control.
—Fred Granlund, North Hollywood, CA

Stop privatizing the benefits and wealth of our society while forcing economic loss and costs on the working class!
—Lucia You, Kailua, HI

Fast lanes and slow lanes are extortionate nonsense. Pure and simple. There is no guarantee that allowing such a situation will not lead to ISPs gouging content providers and/or degrading their services in order to extort money. ISPs are basically like phone companies (not "content providers"). All they do is shuttle data from one point to another point on the internet. That is it. That is their primary, if not sole function. ISPs contract with end users to deliver a pipeline of a certain size (bandwidth; Mbps). If an ISP contracts with an end used for 25 Mbps (Megabits per second) and that end user decides that they wish to fill that pipe by using some service (vis a vis NetFlix) that utilizes LESS than the contracted bandwidth, is is absolutely their right to do so, and it is the ISP's duty to carry that data, so long as it does not exceed the contractual limits and or reasonable expectations of the end-user. ISPs are seeking to upend this notion, double-dip and burn the candle at both ends, charging BOTH the consumer AND the content provider for the bandwidth consumed. However, this downstream bandwidth is ALREADY paid for by the consumer via their monthly service charges. ISPs have NO LEGITIMATE CLAIM against the content providers, by which to charge them a single dime. It is firmly my opinion that all bits are created equal, and as the jingle for the USPS Media Mail goes: If it fits, it ships... That is to say, so long as the end user is not exceeding their contractual limits, and amount of data usage below said contractual maximums are contractually obligated to be provided by the ISPs. If the ISPs FAIL TO DELIVER on those contractually obligated bandwidth guarantees, they are effectively in breach of contract (ohh sure, they'll put all sorts of legalese loopholes into contracts, saying that the bandwidth level isn't guaranteed, and thee may be network congestion at busy times of day, but the spirit of the thing is still there). If ISPs are being LAZY and failing to build out sufficient infrastructure to accommodate the level of bandwidth they've sold to end users, whose fault is that? Is it the end users' job to foot the bill? Aren't we already footing it via out monthly bills? Where is the money going? To pad ISPs' bottom lines rather than build out infrastructure to provider higher QoS? Is it the content providers' fault the ISPs have failed to build out sufficient infrastructure to accommodate current trends in data usage? It seems that all the ISPs wish to do is double dip and charge both sides to pad their profit margins. Consider this another way... If a popular content provider (vis a vis NetFlix), makes a NET profit of $100,000,000/year, but this "I'll degrade your access to my customer base unless you pay me extortion money" notion becomes policy, and ISP X (we'll call them Comcast) decides that Content Provider Y (we'll call them NetFlix) need to pay them the "reasonable" price of $1,000,000/year, what is to stop 100 other ISPs (AT&T, CenturyLink, Time-Warner, Verizon, Time-Warner, T-Mobile, Sprint, Frontier, etc. etc.) from each demanding the same "reasonable deal" as ISP X (AKA, Comcast) and effectively eating the entirety of Content Provider Y's Net $100,000,000 in profits for the year reducing profitability to $0? Paid prioritization is a ridiculous notion. It is a double dipping money grab from LAZY NON-COMPETITIVE ISPs trying to stifle competitors by denying them access to their networks or degrading their performance on their networks in order to force customers into the ISP's own services (one of the problems with allowing companies to own BOTH data transfer AND content provision capabilities is that they can use the one [data transfer] as a hammer to drive people into the other [overpriced non-market-competitive content provision]). ISPs need to be reclassified as what they are. Not as "content providers" but as DATA CARRIERS, and regulated as such. Wheeler has already said that "if ISPs ever abused the new system, he'd resort to reclassifying services as common carriers." Frankly, ISPs have always demonstrated their propensity for violating both the letter and spirit of the law in anti-competitive ways. Why hold their hands, or throw them free money which they have not earned and in no way deserve, in a way that will probably end up stifling innovation due to an increased "barrier to entry" for new services? Just make the leap and reclassify them, and avoid the carnage that will most likely ensue in the meanwhile if you DON'T reclassify them as they should have ALWAYS been classified? Skip the middleman and have the balls and political will to go straight to the final solution and a STRONG net neutrality rule...
—Michael Gmirkin, Portland, OR

Net Neutrality is a MUST. No one should control this, it must remain free.
—Ann Marie Lahaie, Lynn, MA

Large, powerful corporations have no right to better access to the internet than individual human beings. Such a scenario would stifle innovation, and the corporate bullies will gain even more power and influence. This is inherently wrong.
—Milton Bosch MD, Napa, CA

I believe the internet needs to remain a level playing ground for all people, not a place where those with money have power and those without are left on the sidelines. The internet has become an essential part of life for most Americans and should be governed under common carrier rules.
—E Parkinson, Warren, NJ

I think my internet days have had their short innings. And that it's (soon) GOODBYE FROM ME.
—David Taylor, ,

Without true net neutrality, I can imagine a day when quality internet services will cost about $220.00 or more per month. Tom, stop serving your corporate handles, stop acting like a little whore and grow a pair.
—Jayna Williams, Pomona, CA

We're falling behind other countries as it is. Creating premiums on already-slow speeds will move us backwards, not forwards.
—Rex Anderson, Baltimore, MD

Do right by the American people!
—Faris Zaman, Renton, WA

Monopolies are dangerous.
—Dana Higgs, Noblesville, IN

The internet MUST be protected for EVERYONE. Democracy will not be possible when corporations will make decisions on what and who will be given privledges on who has the faster and more favorable assess to the public. PLEASE reclassify all ISPs as common carriers. Simple.
—Susan Stephenson, Fort Worth, TX

Without Net Neutrality, the internet no longer belongs to the people.
—Adam Charles, West Lafayette, IN the internet IS FREEDOM OF SPEECH to censor ,slow or in any way interfere with such is against the constitution!

—Eric Keegstra, Brooksville, ME

Freedom!!
—Brett Grosso, Enumclaw, WA

Because technology companies used fedrel funds[i.e. public monies] to develop the internet, it should be classified a public utility.
—Scott Taylor, Anna, TX

These large organisations will be able to create monopolies, restrict access to startups and will force us to use their products and media instead of us being free to chose. Innovation will be stifled and the net will not be able to grow.
—Stephen Johnson, ,

As a professional novelist at a small press, I would never have the means to compete with large presses who could pay for priority. This will result in an unfair advantage, helping wealthy companies quash competing products services before they can gain popularity. The Internet has become as vital a service as the telephone, especially to independent content producers like me. It is therefore critical that we reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Tempe O'Kun, Bismarck, ND

Everyone deserves to have the same benefits from the internet, same access to information in the same amount of time. I want no censorship through this ill-conceived pay-off to business or other interests who wish to pay more or limit the information I receive. If you believe that freedom is a concept that should be honored, you will stop all efforts to move ahead with your 'new' and illegitimate rules. All ISP's should be classified as common carriers.
—Vivian Hildebrandt, Minneapolis, MN

Take back the power to regulate that the 1996 law provided for, by reclassifying internet service providers as "communications service" providers. Do it now!!
—Charlotte Pirch, Fountain Valley, CA

ISPs already have too much power, in my own opinion, being able to bully their customers with ridiculous prices and contracts without repercussions. If companies were given the power to pick preferred customers and give them faster internet speeds, it would simply add to the already hardly moral treatment of the consumer. Consumers don't have a choice when it comes to internet. If we want it, we have to pick whichever of the big three is in our area. That's it. Because of that, companies are given a monopoly in certain areas and abuse it. I don't want to be abused more than I already am.
—Jeff Harding, Severna Park, MD freedom to use as I want

—W P, overland, MO

Technology has been getting ahead of our collective management of it. We must slow down putting technological power and resources into the hands of huge business interests.
—Naomi Myrvaagnes, Newton, MA

Please classify the Internet service providers as common carriers and avoid stifling innovation. The market is currently moving towards a more efficient way of distributing content. While this might result in lower revenues for Cable TV providers, the consumer and society as a whole will benefit in the long term from better service at lower cost. TV is dead, long live TV.
—Tom Cohen, San Diego, CA

This should be an even playing field, America is supposed to be all about free markets not corporations who bend the rules to favor them.
—Jonathan G Norris, largo, MD

Stop being a cable lobbyist shill and work for America!
—Dakotah Pena, Los Angeles, CA

What matters to me is that net neutrality remains in place, so that all internet content is treated the same way, at the same speed. Company "A" should not be allowed to create fast and slow lanes based on their customer's ability to pay more money. Reclassify the internet as a common carrier, or public utility, under Title II, since that is what it really is anyway. It is the only way to adequately protect the internet from two-tiered schemes that will stifle innovation, and discriminate against small businesses.
—Michael Grish, Austin, TX

These rules give ISPs an unnecessary amount of control over the internet services we have access to, and take the attention away from a problem we really should be focusing more on: improving our infrastructure. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Jeremy J Matias, Flushing, NY

An internet without Net Neutrality would be illegitimate. The idea that corporations would have superior access/use/availability to the internet brings to mind the old "separate but equal" laws used to justify racial prejudice in education. Defend democracy and do the job entrusted to you as a regulatory agency!
—Gina Clemens, Panama City, FL

Without an open internet, freedom of speech is limited to the rich. Economic improvement through development stops.
—Dennis Murphy, Taylor, PA

The proposed rules would stifle innovation by making it much more difficult for incumbent companies to compete with the big guys
—Timothy S Conkling, San Francisco, CA

The internet was meant to be free. Only greed is driving this.
—Stephen Moorehead, Carrollton, AL

We need REAL access to information - not just more ads!
—Elaine Fischer, Roanoke, VA

Our Founders were careful to add communications as part of the commons in the Constitution. The Post Office and Post Roads were the 18th Century version of the Internet, which we use for postage and information conveyance. ALL citizens need equal access to information.
—Russell D. Ryan, Portland, OR

As a small business owner I depend on the open internet to be competitive and linked to customers
—Becky D Wharton, Campbell, TX

I work for a small Michigan manufacturer and we can't afford to get pushed into the slow lane by those who wish to become monopolistic gatekeepers. And as a private citizen, I'm afraid they'll never let a comment like that (or anything they disagree with) even get through. The fact that my comment as citizen to my government is going over the internet is proof enough that the internet is indeed a common carrier - classify it like that!
—Greg Collins, Coopersville, MI

Revise your rules to reclassify ISPs as common carriers
—Lance Ofenloch, Chicago, IL

Hey, it used to be : The Russians are Coming ! Now, it's Half the Aspirants to US Govt. and within it Many Powers That Be Want To Do Away with Democracy and Drag In Tyranny !
—Joe Gonzalez, Miami, FL

Giant corporations need to play on a level playing field. Why is socialism always bad unless it benefits a corporation?
—Bradley Colden, Whittier, CA

I want to have the same access to the internet as any other user, no matter how big or small they are. No special deals for those who can pay more (and who will pass these added costs on to consumers like me. That's what democracy is about - equal treatment for all. The most sensible way to provide equal access is to reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—John Flick, Redondo Beach, CA

As one of the 98 %, I rebuke the 1 % that control everything already. They are the reason the US of A is under the threat of terrorism forever!
—E M Knight, Park Forest, IL freedom is the future

—Michael Ringqvist, Bronx, NY

I use a plethora of services on a daily basis; getting rid of net neutrality implies that ISPs want to control what we can see or engage in, inadvertantly creating a propaganda tank for the super rich that can afford it.
—Allen Francisco, Hayward, CA

Giving over control of the internet pretty much means that it is the end of free speech. When content of a public service can be controlled, it amounts to censorship.
—Suzanne Bremmer, Dryden, NY

Do not mess with our internet freedoms.
—Allison Hildebrand, Colorado Springs, CO

Letting big corporate companies discriminate against its own users is a bad idea. Having two-tiered fast and slow internet lanes would allow big companies to put whatever price or extra fees on the top notch lanes. This would only allow the rich and above middle class to get the fastest speeds possible while allowing the middle and lower classes to suffer while in slow bogged down lanes. This as well as the merger of Time Warner Cable and Comcast being one of the biggest internet company in the US would be very damaging. Citizens are at the mercy of very little choice of carriers and big ISP's would dish out outrageous prices to have only the rich being served with the best internet. The internet should be affordable and used by everyone with the same exact access and same services without being bottle necked into a slow lane. Please throw out these rules and have ISP's be reclassified as common carriers. In 1934 Telecommunications Act gave the FCC broad powers to regulate telephone companies as common carriers. Why are ISP's so much different as they give us "Access" to the internet. Please reclassify ISP's as common carriers and save net neutrality!
—Branden Tolbert, Lexington, NC

As a librarian, I am aware that large numbers of our population have either no access or barely-adequate access to the internet. Libraries of all sorts have provided an option for these people to participate online, have access to online-only information on health care, nutrition, government sites, etc. Libraries cannot afford to pay premium fees for fast internet, yet our computers are so heavily used that we have to impose time limits on time on the computer for any individual user. This policy only impoverishes our users the more.
—Brenda Dingley, Kansas City, MO

Protect Net Neutrality above all else. Classify the internet as a public utility and service providers as common carriers. Nothing short of the above is acceptable.
—Richard Law, Youngstown, OH

Net Neutrality lets us access the internet at the quality we deserve for free. We should not be unfairly charged to get what we already have for free.
—Paytyn Bradley, Grand Rapids, MI

I'm a web developer at a small company, and we're developing a new product that will directly compete with some established competitors in our space. If the FCC's proposed rules are approved, our larger competitors could simply outspend us for improved transfer speeds, and our product would stand no chance in the market – regardless of its merits. You're the FCC. I thought your job was to regulate these things so that a situation like I just described doesn't happen. Your proposed rules would do the exact opposite.
—James Scariati, Monroe, CT

Reclassifying ISPs as common carriers is the only way these companies can be held accountable in court, as has been demonstrated in past cases.
—Robert Fiebing, Spokane Valley, WA

Net neutrality is an all American value
—Ivan Storck, Seattle, WA

Internet must be like laws: the same for allí
—Fernando Manso Manso, ,

Because It upholds Freedom of speech!
—Andony Escudero, beamsville,

Without true net neutrality, access and use of the internet will become skewed in favor of the more affluent in society. The major ISPs and carriers are making more than enough profit already. There is no need to cave in to their one-sided view of the internet's future in America.
—David Burke, San Francisco, CA

People who work at home need reliable, fast internet. This would crush small businesses.
—Kathy Moseley, Chicago, IL

Pensioners and Jobseekers.... that's already half of the adult population can NEVER afford an Internet whose providers have already created huge wealth for everyone involved. Deprive your core base and you will have NO customers and what were once profits will become criminal and moral liabilities unless our Russian and Chinese friends buy you out.
—Robert Hooper, stamford,

Without Net Neutrality, the internet will no longer help the USA innovate and compete with the world.
—Charles Aylworth, Salem, OR

If I'm not going to be able to quickly use sites there is no point in having wifi at home. Won't it be fun to order stuff from a little shop at one AM? Or I can call them to order. Is this the plan. Don't make me or anyone else a second class citizen.
—Cheryl Lawrence, Cloquet, MN

Your contemplated actions will contribute to the ongoing creation of a two-tiered society - one designed for the rich, and designed AGAINST the rest of us. STOP IT. Keep the Internet NEUTRAL.
—Dean Robb PhD, Plainfield, NJ

Hello, Net Neutrality is specifictly important because everyone deserves a fair chance at success and playing to the larger bigger companies is not only favoring larger companies but you're hurting the smaller man and it is largely unfair to give one with more money the power of faster connection, these companies who also started out just as small please think and stop this horrible proposal.
—Hadley Nelson, Boise, ID

The internet should be open and free to all citizens of the world. Corporations should not be allowed to take it over as they have the US government!
—Gayle Rogalski, Delray Beach, FL

Net neutrality is important because the internet needs to kept a place where all information has an equal chance to reach people.
—Vivian Garcia, Inver Grove Heights, MN

This is a change that will affect the entire history of the internet, and it's a very bad turn for everyone besides the coporations making money off of it. This does NOT represent America and FREEDOM of speech! Please don't do this!
—Kyle Davis, San Diego, CA

Please dont adopt these rules!
—Todd Mc, Austin, TX

If the becomes a commodity to be bought and sold to the highest bidder, the innovation and creativity we have grown to admire and love, will no longer exist. There would no more small business that could compete on some level with the major corporations. This would destroy the American economy in a short period of time. The internet should be neutral from all attempts to turn into a commodity. It must remain neutral for the sake of current and future Americans.
—Nahchon Guyton, Minneapolis, MN

Net Neutrality will make sure that small businesses, start up companies, and independent creators will have the same access and visibility that big companies and corporations would have. People already pay for access to the internet; they should not have what they see controlled by big companies.
—Rachel Simmons, Taylors, SC

I want the freedom to make my own choices; keep it FREE!
—Mr. Roderic G Stephens, Redding, CA

Freedom of speach is at stake, small businesses and start ups would be hurt, keep a level playing field on the Internet, every other medium is controlled by corporations. Most providers already have or pactically have a monopoly and are charging much higher rates than in Europe, for example. We the people gain nothing from a two tiered system, while all back end costs will be passed down to us. ISP's are in direct competition with other Internet video services, this new system gives them way too much power and will result in higher costs, less competition and a very unfair advantage for ISP's who already controll too much of the market and WA agencies such as the FCC.
—Rob Wells, milwaukie, OR

First, I'm an educator who believes that net neutrality will pave the way for schools and students to be better served by access to internet at reasonable speeds no matter where they live. Second, I have a number of grandchildren who will suffer higher prices, poor access and possibly content controlled inappropriately if the monopolies are allowed to create a two-tiered internet.
—Dr. Judy G. bramlett, Meadows of Dan, VA

I'm the self-employed owner of a very small business. The only form of advertising that I can afford is the internet. Fortunately, I can compete with much larger rivals because the net is a level playing field...for now. Mr. Wheeler, I will consider it an attack on my rights as a citizen if you allow me to suffer due to an unfair advantage by larger companies. I promise, I will write my congress me, senators, and the president to demand your removal as FCC Chairman. Clearly, you've been bought-off by big business. That makes you a servant to special interests only, not to the public...and that's disgusting. ISPs must be reclassified as common carriers, or we'll see you thrown out of your position.
—Charles McKibben, Philadelphia, PA

In France the internet is free. In the US we are lagging behind in internet speed. I believe the internet should NOT be an idea that costs money to participate in. Do not allow the telecommunication companies own the rights to what amounts to a legal right and freedom in another. Please do not sell out to the big corporations. As a legal tax paying citizen I am against companies choosing to exploit the internet.
—David J. McLay, Foothill Ranch, CA

Net Neutrality might not be such a big deal now, but giving that kind of power to corruptable (or already corrupt) ISP's can only mean trouble in the future. The internet has a huge advantages for a true democracy and is one of the most promising phenomena of our time. Please keep it open and equal.
—James Atin-Godden, ,

Please don't let the internet become a victim of profit driven ethics.
—Marquis Chamberlain, Clifton Heights, PA

OUTRAGEOUS DECISION against citizens and pro greedy profiteers
—Maryann Ann Leitch, Phila, PA

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Daniel Litvak, ,

With out action, isps are going to charge more to people just for doing that same thing they are doing now. It will cost consumers a ton down the road. Also will make it difficult for small companies to try to get started online because they will not be able to afford to pay the fees for fast enough internet. And all the fees are going to going to get pass along. With out appropriate action, the internet is going to change from something to help with growth, into being treated just like cable tv is now. Having to pay extra just to go to different sites. If a site is not in the package i am paying for, i can't go to it.
—Scott Eberle, Corry, PA

The Internet is the last truly free and equal market left in the world, where start-ups and big corporations sit on a level playing field. In every other instance, the uphill climb for a new business is almost insurmountable for individuals without investors (which, are fairly hard to come by these days, certainly as a new guy). Don't take away the last land of opportunity from entrepreneurs, artists and free-thinking individuals all around the world. The big corporations have a huge leg up in every other market in the world, they DON'T need it in this one. We, the people however, do! You take away net neutrality, and you completely remove the opportunity for self-made men and women in this world. PROTECT NET NEUTRALITY.
—Jacob Bension, Los Angeles, CA

The new internet rules would backfire.
—Michael-Vincent Robinson, Topeka, KS

Under your plan, Chairman Wheeler, corporate and plutocracy-serving internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon would, with profit, seize effective control of the internet. Their plan is to allow faster service to similarly motivated, wealthy corporatist and plutocratic, right-wing leaning ("conservative") web domain holders, restricting those lacking the demanded money and malignant, "conservative" policy goals to intolerably slow internet access, with the deliberate corporatist objective of reducing their user audience and outreach capacity to constructively and progressively shape public opinion with honest and truthful information and opinion. The corporatist objective in so doing is, of course, to eliminate any real alternative to the non-stop 24/7/365 dishonest and tendentious, "conservative" messaging typical of right-wing Republican AM Hate Radio. In other words, the objective is to pervert public opinion by restricting public access to alternative political, social and economic perspectives and commentary. The ultimate aim is to use this monopoly of commentary and interpretation to politically and economically secure a dictatorship of the 1% over everyone else---the death of democracy in the United States. Therefore, your plan is intolerable and unacceptable.
—Michael Dervan, Arlington, VA

I am planning an online business for counseling webinars, and fear the high speed fees would obstruct many potential clients. This is terrible for small businesses and a huge unfair handout to the giant internet corporations, who don't need the help.
—Jannah Goodell, Decatur, GA

I don't like to be force fed information, products, news, etc. from big companies. I want to be able to make my own choices when it comes to internet content because I can't easily anywhere else. As the consumer, I want net neutrality because I'm tired of the monopoly. Give us some credit and let the people decide for themselves.
—Lauryn Bertke, New Bremen, OH

The idea of charging for fast lanes or express lanes on the internet is a horrible one that will only lead to fewer choices, fewer available options and an internet that is less accessible than it is today. I depend on Net Neutrality.
—Rochelle Chisum, Las Vegas, NV

Please don't turn the internet into a corporation cash cow. Its for the average person just as much as it is for corporations.
—Marjorie Blignaut, Kingsford, MI

Wheeler is an insider who worked for the very people he plans to give these sweetheart deels. It is a prime example of the revolving door between (poor) Government and Business. It smacks of a lack of transparency and oversight, that has become the hallmark of the current administration.
—Karl Baldwin, Bridgewater, NJ

I don't know you keep sending out automatic responses to these e-mails, with the LIES that you are considering all the comments from us citizens. You have made it very clear, that you plan on doing the bidding of your corporate MASTERS, and that you don't give one hoot, what The People have to say about it. I have one question for you. How soon after you try and make this decision final, will it be before you quit your govt job, and begin your new job, at one of your master's companies?
—Thomas M. Cannon, Haslett, MI

Destroying Net Neutrality by adopting the FCC's proposed rules would promote more inequality and discrimination on an Internet which was designed to be free, open and democratic. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers -- throw out the FCC's proposed rules!
—Katherine McNeill, Sacramento, CA

Verizon & time warner already make a fortune off internet service. Leave well enough alone and everyone wins.
—john Alicea, New York, NY

Internet is a płace which allow many people to comunicate and spend thiere time and it should not be restricted by any means. Internet is not someones property.
—Łukasz Grygier, ,

As powerful as they are, the last thing we should start doing is giving mega-corporations more say and more control in how traffic is managed on the internet. That sets a very, very, very dangerous precedent for free speech and democracy. Whereas net neutrality has served us so well for 45 years, please also consider the unintended consequences of changing it now; the bad things that we know could happen as a result, and the things that could happen that we can't even anticipate from where we are. Do something for citizens of the United States, for its people, for once. Preserve the internet as it is!
—Ryan Provonsha, Lynnwood, WA

The US is already an embarrassment in terms of internet service, with third world countries doing more to improve their infrastructure. Now you want to make it possible for ISPs to totally ruin any chance of our country being a hotbed of innovation. Are you people so far in Comcast, etc.'s pockets that you're willing to hamstring the entire country's future so some cable executives can get even richer?
—Jason Curran, Somerville, MA

Without net neutrality the age of innovation on the internet would be over. Throw out these new proposed rules in favor of true net neutrality.
—Stephen J Rhea, Denver, CO

Net Neutrality is basic to a healthy Internet. And, please keep in mind that now you and the rest of the commissioners are not anymore been paid by other interests but by the tax payers money of the American people. Start working for us and defend "our interests". The money interests did not create the Internet, it was the ingenuity of the people that made it. Do not allow the money interests and its greed steal it from us. Net Neutrality belongs with the people!
—Graciela Huth, LOS ANGELES, CA

Net neutrality gives everyone an equal chance to communicate and compete. With preferential treatment ISP and Telcos can squeeze out small players and build defacto barriers to entry. Net Neutrality is the reason that the internet is so much more interesting than all other traditional media.
—Paul Duke, New York, NY

Please do what is right and give our internet net neutrality. Make the internet something that all people in this country can use and use equally if you implement net neutrality and make it equal for all.
—Sharon Doggett, crooked river ranch, OR

I depend on having the same rights to be seen as big business. Having small pages throttled back is unfair and not right. Preserve net neutrality.
—Jana Brown, Riverton, UT

You are supposed to work for the People of the US, Not for your Bribers, stop screwing us over and stand for net neutrality, YOU are not to big to jail.
—Elizabeth Havens, Oxnard, CA

Large corporations do not need further advantages over smaller groups. Sure, they can pay the extra fees, but it effectively silences smaller competition, in other words monopolizes the bandwidth. Of course, the consumer is the one who pays the extra fees ultimately for services such as on line video or content, creating more of a profit margin for larger companies. There is also the distinct possibility that an ISP can be owned by one of these companies, and can virtually eliminate choice by slowing down a competitors service. Reclassify ISPs as a common carrier and protect the internet for all!
—Kenneth Miller, Salem, VA

To have online services that discriminate, is so wrong. When Democracy is the word of the day, maybe we should walk the walk and not just talk the talk. Even the NSA should have the same access as the common Man. Net neutrality is crucial to everyone I talk to, Lets do the right thing by our people. Thank you.
—Joaquim Cerqueira, Mansfield, MA

The internet is an essential common wealth and it is foolish, unjust and dangerous to give control to a few corporations. The health of the global community and economy depends on the maintenance of Net Neutrality. ISP's should continue to be classified as common carriers!
—Toshi Hoo, Berkeley, CA

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Erika Logie, Boulder, CO

FCC STAY OUT OF THE INTERNET. YOU ARE NOT NEEDED OR WANTED.
—John Mazula, San Diego, CA

The rich have already taken so much of what is owned in common. Please, Please, Please, do not let them take our internet as well
—Arnold McMahon, Arcadia, CA

DO NOT ALLOW THE SERVICE PROVIDERS TO DISCRIMINATE ON THE World Wide Web EVER!!!!
—Dorothy Piper, McKInney, TX

We demand an open and free internet... stop the corporate pandering already!
—Matt Johnson, Minneapolis, MN

Is there any other reason to do this beyond $$$ and power?
—Stephen, Georgetown, TX

You killed analog TV for digital. As a Time Warner customer, our service now is worse than ever. Missing audio, pixelation, freezing, not to mention the constant battles between the networks and TW, dropping channels and barring networks in dispute, with we customers suffering from all angles. I can't wait to see how bad you can screw up the internet in light of your past performances and their net results. Time Warner and Comcast are the worst companies for customer satisfaction and you are ready to give them the green light to do what they want with us? Unbelievable!!! At least if you were politicians, we would have half a chance to vote you out. As such, we are trapped.
—Jim Albrecht, Saugerties, NY

Corporations are controlling everything in our daily lives , from food to information , we need to have an outlet that's free of their control !
—Carole Smith, Brooksville, FL

The net isn't just about commerce - it's also about the global sharing of ideas, events, news. It's a place to educate oneself without having to go to a traditional school. It's a way to research one's family and origins. To travel without leaving your home. To meet people around the world. Why should anyone have control over who can access ideas, thoughts, experiences, news?
—Karen Abrams, Arlington, MA

It is really important cause the internet has alway been a free place and not controled by any big companies and i really wouldnt like companies like T-mobile etc. to control wich websites i can view and with what speed so i want it to stay free
—Izidor Bunjac, ,

Dear Tom Wheeler, I like the internet the way it is. Billions of people like the internet the way it is. And you don't? Why? Leviticus 19:15 New International Version "Do not pervert justice; do not show partiality to the poor or favoritism to the great, but judge your neighbor fairly.
—David Flowers, Brentwood, TN

NO discrimination online!!!
—James Moore, Jackson, TN

It is a money scam plain and simple. As a customer I should get what i'm paying for!! Mbps not sites. I may want to download from some tiny website across the world that no one has ever heard of and why should they have to pay more to get DATA to me faster?? If they have and upload speed of 100Mbps and I have a download speed of 100Mbps then that is the speed I should get. It is NO ONES right to limit that speed because that is the speed I PAY for!!!!!! by : MICHAEL SCOTT HAMILTON in Odessa, TEXAS
—Michael Hamilton, Odessa, TX

I want to find obscure sites and little known products - not get guided to sponsored content and see video content only of preferred sites. With two speed internet there will be no need for censorship, slow service will get the job done.
—Jeffrey Tischler, Monterey, CA

Please throw out the rules, we can only be truly safe when the internet is reclassified as a tier 2 telecommunications program, because otherwise ISP provider companies can go through the loopholes that are created from the cheap wire forged by lobbyists who have created these openings for themselves. Get rid of this notion of fast lanes and slow lanes, all lanes should be equal and no one should be charged more or less for using any road that he wishes compared to others. Do whats right
—Dmitri, San Jose, CA

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Nicholas Cobb, Collierville, TN

Please do not let the ISP's do this to us. Keep it the way it is.
—Mary Gabrielson, Flagstaff, AZ

I already have to pay Comcast twice their base fee just to keep them from running my net connection through antiquated, slow modems. Other than feathering Mr. Wheeler's nest for when he goes back to openly working for cable companies, this will discourage every ISP from providing better service through infrastructure investments and software improvements. The US will completely lose dominance of the internet - all so certain people can be well paid once they leave public employment.
—Rosemary Williams, Westport, WA

As a software engineer intent on making it in this world, the proposals by the FCC on Net Neutrality are worrisome. These proposed rules would make it impossible for start-ups to compete in the same space as monopolies like Comcast and Verizon. These start-ups are needed. Innovation is key in the ever-changing world we live in. The huge companies don't care about me, they care about making money at my expense. Take your telephone for instance (voice only). You pay a company to connect you with another person. Phone companies will do this without degrading your service if the recipient of the call is on another network. They are a utility. The Internet should be a utility also, under Title II of the Telecommunications Act. It wasn't classified as that at the time because no one knew what it would turn into.
—Alex Vernacchia, Indianapolis, IN

These new rules place us on a slippery slope to a purgatory where the big internet providers dictate what we read and watch. They will have too much power to manipulate internet content to suit their own political and financial interests. This will ultimately destroy the free sharing of knowledge and discourse among people. It is imperative that the FCC reclassify ISPs as common carriers. The internet must remain absolutely and entirely free and neutral, or risk a censorious dystopia where news and history go to the highest bidder.
—Michael R Maughan, West Lafayette, IN

With big corporations having an advantage in all other fields of communication and business, an open internet is the only place where everyone is on an even playing field. This encompasses the "American Way", if you will, and getting rid of that is very unpatriotic and very rude.
—K, Gastonia, NC

As a concerned citizen, I am writing to urge the Federal Communications Commission to protect Net Neutrality. I agree with the FCC in that an open Internet promotes innovation, competition, free expression, and infrastructure deployment. However, I do not support the underlying context which allows corporation and ISPs to implement paid prioritization. The idea that the proposal can allow restrictions to the benefits of fast internet to consumers is disgusting. We're already faced with having only one or two options for internet service, who charges us whatever amount they choose, which increases the power of that ISP. The internet is essential to American business, innovation, and democracy. As such, Net Neutrality principles must be protected. Please protect the open internet, scrap paid prioritization, and reclassify the internet as a telecommunications service to ensure Net Neutrality.
—Sarah Williams, North Hollywood, CA

Allowing huge internet providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon "the fast lane" for only those who can afford it is not fair to those who can't. Why would you and the FCC even consider these proposed rules? Internet Service Providers should be common carriers for all. Cynthia Byrd San Francisco
—Cynthia H Byrd, SAN FRANCISCO, CA

I live in a country that should be proud of its accomplishments and in which if we had a government for the people we would have broadband coverage for everyone, instead this country is now run only for the rich. You are supposed to help the people not destroy us by caving to the amoral, greedy ones who must have you in their clutches like the game of mafia protection.
—Kenneth W. Winkle, Kenosha, WI

ISPs should be reclassified as common carriers because they are common carriers. They should not be able to chose the speed of my connection depending on whether I am reading my email, watching videos or buying from online stores.
—Flamur Kasa, ,

The overwhelming majority of Americans are opposed to this takeover, but it's still happening with no powerful opposition. What's wrong with that picture? Nothing? Perhaps in China or Iran, yes however here we are supposed to have adequate representation behind the majority's voice in America! This is not happening during this administrations reign.
—Rod Azar, Antelope, CA

The Internet is great, because it just takes a good idea to become successful on it, unlike mediums like television, where it takes a lot of money to become successful. Destroying net neutrality will destroy what is great about the Internet. Don't destroy what is great about the Internet, because we will have to build a new one.
—Dan Wysocki, Poughquag, NY

internet access is the road to learning. letting big corporations get bigger with faster lanes while average people may not be able to afford access, is not what the FCC should stand for. fairness to users should be the goal. please. please. Net Neutrality is a must in today's society!
—Dianne Kennedy, dallas, TX

It is critical for democracy to be a real democracy.
—Patricia Hackney, Ann Arbor, MI

The internet should not be owned by the rich. It is for all and limiting access only goes further toward ending democracy.
—Beverlee Patterson, Ballston Spa, NY

FCC...KEEP NET NEUTRALITY...the proposed change is just another attempt at complete control by the Global Elite over the so-called "dumb-masses"...drop the m and it further reveals the elite-attitude. THINK ABOUT..."Without Prejudice (UCC 1-207)" T. Mack Jennings
—Thomas Mack Jennings, Sulphur Springs, TX

In this day and age we all need a freeand open internet without big corporations picking deciding whose sites load faster
—Ms. Suraya Karjeker, Plano, TX

Equal the playing field! I enjoy visiting websites off the beaten path and i want fair access to all the websites available.
—Helen Douglas, Washington, DC

It is important to me that the fcc in collusion with commerce does not decide who gets heard on the internet. This is a free speech issue.
—Karel Driesen, Los Altos, CA

Get your hands off the internet, or we're coming for you with an eviction notice. The FCC will be dismantled and abolished if it continues to work against the will of the people and to work only for corporate interests.
—Elizabeth Devine, Norcross, GA

Like the airwaves for radio, which is the same for everyone, the internet MUST be kept equal for everyone. Since the means to make it faster exists, please make it faster for EVERYONE. It is the only way for communication for many, if not most, people. Thank you.
—Willa Rolfes, Las Vegas, NV

If you do this many people, who either barely afford internet or cannot afford the higher prices, will drop you and hurt your precious profit.
—Skyler Davis, Fayetteville, AR

Net Neutrality is what makes amazing the Internet. Please, don't contribute to destroy it for the benefit of a few very, very powerful companies
—Israel Vela, Berkeley, CA

When making regulations on behalf of the government, it is the duty of an agency to consider the public's interests over special interests by which they may be "captured." Please prove to the citizens of the US that corporate interests do not trump those of actual people!
—Linda Immler, Mechanicsville, MD

Net Neutrality is important for so many reasons, that I can not possibly hope to consider them all. I do know that the internet is a source of information, resources, and networking that needs to be equal access for all. It's a simple matter of doing what is right, and supporting freedom of speech and press, by not restricting who gets access via the internet, while promoting others. Please, please, don't implement rules to create tiers of internet!
—Amanda, Ithaca, NY

the companies who provide access should be classified as common carriers and not discriminate
—Eric Greenbaum, San Diego, CA

Quit stripping us of our rights, you greedy turds!! The internet should be equal across the board regardless of financial status.
—Jeff Grubesic, Denver, CO

For several months before Comcast bullied Netflix into paying it extra to not send the Netflix signal through know congested Comcast servers, I couldn't even watch Netflix at night because the download speeds were typically below the 0.5 Mbps that was needed for successful watching. The surprise, surprise, surprise after Netflix paid Comcast's ransom the download speeds went up to 6.0 to 10.0 Mbps. I kept a record of the download speeds which are displayed by my SMP-200 Sony Media Player for almost 5 months to prove this.
—Richard Lambert, Roseville, MN

The best interest of monopolized companies will never align with that of it's users. We have given rights to all these companies so their businesses could succeed in local markets, this is ours to keep.
—Chris Erickson, Milwaukee, WI

All ISPs (landline and wireless) should obviously have been classified as common carriers in the first place. Their role is just like that of water and electric utilities. They should never have been allowed to own content providers. The FCC needs to man up and admit it got this wrong years ago and fix it now. Yes, we know they'll lobby and sue and bribe. It's not going to get any easier next year.
—Jeff Barlow, Bend, OR

I depend on the Internet to work. I'm not wealthy or one of the 1% that would benefit/can afford to pay more for a faster lane. To me, it's a utility as important as power. Leave the net as it is!
—Maria Gonzalez, Chicago, IL

Why would we slow these businesses to do this? Are they not already making enough money of their customers? This is political posturing at its finest. Obviously Tom Wheeler is in the pocket of several organizations...
—Dan Divirgilio, Pittsburgh, PA

I think alternative media needs to have no new disadvantages besides the lack of money and exposure they already have.
—Paul Nehring, Seattle, WA

Net Neutrality is vital for fair opportunities for businesses, access to political speech and protection of Freedom of Speech.
—Bill Brown, Clovis, CA

The members of the FCC as government employees took an oath which included "promoting the general welfare," not the corporate welfare, not the investor-owned telecom welfare, the "general welfare." I expect no less from the members of the FCC. The internet ought not to be a tiered service which costs more at each tier. The U.S. is behind the rest of the world in the area of bandwidth and everyone, telecom companies, internet service providers and the FCC need to clean up their acts, in my opinion.
—Oliver Seely, Lakewood, CA

Without net neutrality, large internet service providers can manipulate end user's bandwidth in a way that is not apparent to them. It allows ISP's to control what consumers see by adjusting network speeds based on any factors they want (customer, domain, time of day, etc.). Restricting the speed at which consumers can access a site is effectively permitting ISPs to censor content at their own discretion since consumers are not going to wait an arbitrary amount of time to access a site. Allowing ISPs to put speedy access to websites behind a pay-wall ensures that only the wealthy would get free and unfettered access to the internet. This would be destructive for libraries, schools, and disadvantaged consumers.
—Shawn P Hill, Garfield, AZ

A fully functioning Internet is the right of all people, not just those who can pay extra for access. It should be a public utility, not a private commodity for sale to the highest bidder.
—Robert Cattle, Belleville, NJ

I believe the free-reign of the huge internet companies is a very dangerous way to go. The internet affords so many life-sustaining activites and connections that I believe the internet needs to be treated as a PUBLIC UTILITY. For the elderly, believe it or not, the internet is essential for many ADLs, which includes communication with doctors and medical info and services.
—Caitlin Mac'Iver, WELLS, ME

Please, please move toward what is good for the majority of the population of the United States of America not what is good for corporate profits.
—Tobin D. Jeffery, Tucson, AZ

The open internet is one of the most democratic playing fields to have existed in our age. It provides access to information, the ability to innovate, and the prospect of creating new businesses and services at a very low barrier of entry. The very people now looking to lock-down and segregate the internet would not be as successful as they are if they had to compete in the environment they are now trying to create.
—Kevin Liuzzo, East Lansing, MI

It is undemocratic to divide what is essentially public domain into financially skewed partitions.
—Edward Rosenthal, Brooklyn, NY

Heck, we need some 'neutrality' in this country.
—Ellene Shapiro, Highland Park, IL

Net Neutrality needs to stick around. The world, especially the internet, is full of underdogs, who deserve to have their freedom on the internet. The Internet is wonderful because of its limitless freedom. If restrictions are put on it. it loses what makes it so great. So please, keep Net Neutrality around, so the Internet can remain the wonderful bastion of freedom it is, and so people don't feel like they're being targeted or discriminated. Which is definitely not the American way.
—Michael, Salem, OR

STOP ALLOWING THE GREEDY CORPORATIONS TO HURT IS MORE THAN THEY ALREADY ARE!
—Anthony Schmidt, Carrollton, TX

The internet should be fair and equal
—Caitlin Hogg, ,

Net neutrality is important to me because it is one of the only systems that has not been plagued by corporate interests...yet. The internet has thrived and become the amazing entity it is today not by corporations picking and choosing how it should be developed, it was an open free market that allowed innovation to take place. Listen to the millions of people who are standing up and voicing their concern over the future of the internet. A democracy is run by the majority of people, not the majority of deep pockets. Do what is right.
—John Schmidt, San Francisco, CA

Already there are artificial data caps in place that shutdown my modem if I use the internet too much. My ISPs help desk said in order to avoid hitting the cap and having my modem shutoff I can only watch one movie per month online and that's if I use the internet for nothing else except watching that one movie. There are no other ISPs in my area so I can't change companies. These issues are only going to get worse until real net neutrality is enforced.
—Shane Shane Davidson, Auburn, CA

We deserve the free flow of information. Everyone deserves the ability to share information.
—Sean Palmer, New York, NY

come on
—John Cabe, Lenoir City, TN

The open Internet is the reason the Internet is what it is today. To limit that in any way shape or form is absolutely immoral and unacceptable.
—James Krug, Rochester, NY

Please classify the internet as a Title II common carrier. Democracy depends on the free flow of information. We must not slow some sites down to increase the speed of others.
—Dana Wylder, Naples, ID

It matters to everyone. The internet is one of the few remaining places where equality still exists.
—Jay K lawson, ,

The internet has evolved as in integral part of people's lives, not unlike the telephone as the technology evolved. Many people, such as myself, depend on the internet to communicate, conduct business, study in (grad) school, network, stay in touch with families and friends in ways that the phone cannot, and to do daily and important things like pay bills. Because of this, I am dependent upon it and to create this "two-tiered" system is not only unfair to consumers like me, it further broadens the divide between the "rich and poor"; those who can afford additional fees, and those who cannot. There is no practical reason to create this system except to generate more profit for these large telecom companies. They already generate tremendous amount of profit for themselves: how much is enough? How much is too much? Lastly, not reclassifying the Internet and allowing this new rules to remain weakens the credibility of the FCC and those who over see it. In other words, Tom, it seems that you are "in the pockets" of these big corporations and NOT working in the best interest of the American People. So, what kind of person are you?
—Coby Lyons, Las Vegas, NV

Information should be an open resource!
—Quinn Bayola, Lombard, IL

Net Neutrality is the single driving factor driving innovation online. To take it away is simply to deny our human right to free flow of words and thought made possible by the use of the Internet. Extortion comes to mind when I think of this subject. If a government agency were to allow such a thing, government policies intact for over 100 years would be nothing but dust. I give this comment because I want my voice to be heard, even if it falls on deaf ears.
—Nicholas Allen, Annapolis, MD

It has already begun. Netflix having to pay Comcast and others to stop throttling their data. We need an open internet!
—Damon, Houston, TX

Because I believe that every website should have equal priority. No sites should be allowed to pay for higher priority. That's corruption.
—Caleb Rodgers, Westminster, MD

We are in an age where continual increases in corporate control is eroding the very fabric of our society. The internet is providing the air and blood of society. Don't allow that to be sacraficed on the alter of corporate greed!
—Leonard A. Williams, Chino Hills, CA

Millions of people, like me, no longer use television or print media for news, and to follow worldwide events. I am a disabled senior, very limited income, and it is difficult and challenging to find the funds to use a web service that I can afford. I do not own a television, I have become accustomed to relying on the Internet for communication with friends and family. Limited access, or increasingly expensive access will affect many of us in detrimental ways. Eventually, it will be you, as web servers, who will lose. Because people will not be able to afford to meet your demanding prices, if it comes to a choice between food and internet.
—Ms. Pamela buckingham, Seattle, WA

i am asking my congress to hold investigative hearings fot only one so corrupt could not only negate public willbut also screw them at the expense of greedy corporate america
—James Harland, Pittsburgh, PA

Broadband internet has become more vital to daily life, interaction with government, business, workplaces, and places of education than phones were once upon a time. To not guard against monopolies stomping all over consumers and to give them free control over the world's most important medium for exchange of information is more than absurd in this context. It would be like going back in time and handing the robber barons a blank check. It is irresponsible in the extreme, detrimental to competition in the marketplace, and damaging to the ability of Americans to interface with their government, employers, schools, and businesses. Forget about the entertainment industry. Forget about video games, movies, and TV shows. Those are not what are important here. What is vitally important is that the FCC is now allowing rampant abuse of infrastructure that our entire society relies on. This cannot, in any way, be construed as the government working for the people. This is, without question, the government working for their rich friends and their own bank accounts. Please stop this and actually do your jobs.
—Ryan Alber, Gainesville, FL

One speed for everybody, rich and poor. Everybody is equal. Common Carrier must be the rule.
—Don Bay, Östersund,

Net neutrality is important to me because it promotes competition to improve websites and products rather than allowing companies to pay off ISPs while sacrificing the quality of the product.
—Justin Patton, Dallas, TX

I'm a Web Services Executive at a telecomunications company. The fact that my job exists is by itself a sufficient case for reclassifying Internet Service under common carriage. As a person whose professional career and personal hobbies predicate on an educated understanding of the Internet, I find the FCC's proposal completely ludicrous. It's very kind to ISPs, but hurts just about everyone else, with stated reasoning that clearly aspires to avoid subjection to logical analysis. ISPs can deal with common carriage, but the public cannot and will not recover from this plan if it is passed. Listen to your taxpayers. Kill the FCC's proposal with extreme prejudice.
—Seth Dunkin, Littleton, CO

The internet is fine just like it is. Stop fucking with it and get your kick back money somewhere else.
—Ed Hallman, Thomaston, GA

The internet should be the same for all. This concept of equality regardless of $ is the basis of our founding fathers dream for this country. They would be so dissatisfied with the trend in this country of preferential treatment for those with money.
—K Martin, Davis, CA

Net neutrality is important for jobs, startups, charities, etc as well as for social equality. The internet is an important way for news to get disseminated through channels that are not controlled by entrenched interests. The congress and supreme court have already been bought by the powers that be--don't let the same thing happen to the internet.
—David Windrem, Sunnyvale, CA

PLEASE ENSURE THAT THE INTERNET IS CLASSIFIED AS 'PUBLIC AIRWAVES' - big money companies should understand their access to the American public is a PRIVILEGE NOT A RIGHT. This must be established NOW.
—ML Fowler, Lynnwood, WA

Do not let big corporations and ISPs control how and what we see.
—Tony Konzal, San Diego, CA

My family and I depend an open Internet for our news (not just fox's spin), our phone and other communication with family, friends and others. Please don't make it harder for us.
—Cindy L. Ferver, Eau Claire, WI

The Internet is a utility not an entertainment company... In the last decade we have seen the emergence if new economic modelas all predicated on neutrality. Crowd sourcing methods , charities, and start ups would all get pushed to the side when they can't pay for visibility. The proposed new rule is terrible. I bet you can't find anyone in favor who isn't affiliated with a multimillion dollar company... Enough said.
—Jonathan Thayer, Greenwood Lake, NY

I am a retired school teacher with a modest income. If you allow ISPs to provide faster service to can afford an extra fee, that extra fee is going to be passed along to people like me.
—Brian Larkin, Washington, DC

The internet is the only open source of content left that is controlled by the people rather than the corporations. To take that away would be Orwellian and abysmal. Don't be a dystopian stereotype.
—Jayme Warner, Midvale, UT

I am a small business owner, who cannot afford to pay more for internet service. My business has taken a loss for two years. I do a very specialized thing, and people mostly find me on the internet.
—Jane Reading, Phoenix, AZ

Having come from a family in poverty, it was very important that I could not only access great content from the Internet, but also have the opportunity to share my own and have it be seen (at the same speed as anything else out there). By placing tiers on the Internet, it becomes more one-way, as only those who can afford it can effectively shut out those who cannot. Tiered Internet stomps out possibility and creativity that currently thrives, and creates a bland, corporate, one-way, paid transmission service. Very few of the overall population get to create and present the content on one-way services like radio and television. Don't make Internet into another corporate advertising tool, keep it open and free.
—Isaac Furniss, Sandy, UT

Fuck corporate america
—Max, Austin, TX

"Yes, Your Internet Is Getting Slower" by David Auerback http://www.slate.com/articles/ technology/technology/2014/05/ network_neutrality_dinosaurs_l ike_time_warner_and_at_t_have_ nothing_to_worry.html Deregulation of the internet utility in this fashion is akin to what happened in California with the public utility deregulation that Enron preyed upon and will lead to similar negative results. The inherent conflict of interest for private industry in the public utility sphere: private companies seek profit first and foremost (i.e. monetary surplus, or waste), whereas public utilities seek what is in the best interests of the commonwealth (i.e. maximizing the impact of every dollar spent). When we deregulate commerce which participates as a public utility, we are shifting from the latter to the former in terms of interests--that is, from public to private. If we have learned nothing from the past two decades, it is that the private interests do not align sufficiently with public interests to remove the rules which enforce public interests. If we fail to learn from the mistakes of history, we are doomed to repeat it ad nauseam. The United States of America cannot afford to pretend that these things no longer matter. We must practice salient policy-making now if we are to stand a chance in the future as any sort of global competitor or technologically relevant society. If we do not start taking a stand, we will not be given the chance to make up for it later. With most sincere regards, Joseph H. Gorse, IV
—Joseph Gorse, Columbia Station, OH

The proposed rules are unacceptable. It's the minority dictating to the majority, the rich dictating to the rest. In "the land of the free", this is not democracy. Criticism of other nations' behaviour cannot be against a background of unfair treatment of Internet users. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Michael Young, Barnet,

The internet as a free and open forum is crucial to the American people, as freedom of expression is a central part to our sociery.
—Jeff liggett, Plant City, FL

I want to be able to keep using the internet as the greatest tool for free speech that it has become and if it is not reclassified to be handled as a title II common carrier telecommunications service it will become the exact opposite. I am tired of the interests of only the rich and powerful being heard while the masses are ignored for profiteering. Allowing the telecoms to determine legislature that benefit only them and does not improve America is a terrible decision and not in line with what the FCC was created to do
—Peter Rennolds, Wilmette, IL

The Internet is our last platform. It's the last possible way or voice can be heard. Unbelievable that in the land of the free corporations are allowed to buy elections, because it's supposedly free speech, and now these same corporations are allowed to silence the public. I guess money really does talk.
—Roman Samul, Sandy, UT

I belong to a minority religion and I don't want larger churches who can hog the "fast lane" to steal my bandwidth.
—David R. Burwasser, Oberlin, OH

Ever hear of free speech? Net Neutrality protects our ability to share thoughts in the modern world. It is our RIGHT!
—Karen Kirchdoerfer, Orefield, PA

Net Neutrality is important because the internet should be treated as a public utility that is available to everyone equally.
—Amy Herren, New York, NY

You are assholes!!! I am sick of your lies!!! Fuck you!!! The American Internet situation is beyond messed up! The corporate favoritism, mistreatment, underpaid employees, and skyrocketing prices for an already terrible internet controlled by one of 4 giant monopolies who choke our bandwith and provide shitty service is not acceptable!!! You are going to make it even worse with this legislation. I am disgusted by you and the sick politicians and wealthy who are ruining this country and the world!!!
—Andrew W Lazin, Winter Springs, FL

The SCOTUS has already given elections and essentially government to the wealthy elite. Must we give them the internet too?
—Lawrence Severt, Brainerd, MN

The internet must continue to be free for all. not just those who pay extra for broadband.
—Nancy Mueller, Chapel Hill, NC

The web is once of the most precious resources available to mankind. It is a repository of knowledge and it should be open to all without restriction. Whilst there can be abuses perpetrated by a minority, the greatest abuse would be to restrict access to those that can afford to pay. The www was established as a resource for all and to be used free from prejudice and restriction, it must remain that way.
—Dr Chris John Newton, ,

It allows information to flow freely and not depend on how much you can pay....
—Gordon Kircher, Lakeland, MN

It allows for innovation
—Aleksander Berg, Los Angeles, CA

The internet should remain equal for all. Bible Study ToolsBible VersionsDeuteronomyDeuteronomy 16Deuteronomy 16:19Compare Translations Compare Translations for Deuteronomy 16:19 Compare Translations Deuteronomy 16:19 ASV American Standard Version Thou shalt not wrest justice: thou shalt not respect persons; neither shalt thou take a bribe; for a bribe doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous.
—David Rawlings Flowers, Nashville, TN internet access is no different then other fundamental service in our society. Access to it should be treated equally.

—Scott Kavanagh, Apex, NC freedom to innovate and compete

—Jesse Fitzjarrell, Portland, OR

EVERYONE deserves equal access to the internet. I can't put it more simply than that.
—Cheryl Conklin, Austin, TX

We need a fair and honest internet.
—Alex Oshiro, Honolulu, HI

Most of my life revolves around the internet, as do most peoples even if they do not know it. I communicate with family, perform tasks at my job and even opt into things like this using open internet. I grew up in the age of discovery and always had a front seat to the newest technology. By having tiers of the internet we literally take away the ability to learn anything at our own pace and put a speed limit on gaining new knowledge. Nowadays more than ever kids use tablets and phones to answer questions that some parents don't know the answer to. The internet is everything and it's a place if used right that could expand our minds to unknown universes. Please keep the internet open and free!!
—Thomas Ressa, San Diego, CA

Net Neutrality is Free Speech in Our Time.
—Charles Brobst, Binghamton, NY

Because freedom of speech is a fundamental human right,
—Dee Roye, Cromer,

Corporations always try to make a commodity of whatever doesn't cost basic fees (like a cable connection)... Next they'll find a way to charge for plain drinking water. Oh, wait -- they have. Please keep the internet free and open for ALL Americans.
—B Cole, Shelter Island, NY

It is essential the internet remain free. It's a basic human right.
—Margaret Redus, Denver, CO

Let free market competition thrive. Ending net neutrality will create an un-level playing field, favoring deep pocteks and discriminating against small innovative players.
—Dan Rodgers, Cincinnati, OH

The Net has been a valuable tool in giving me access to magazines and blogs that are not part of the big entertainment corporations. By eliminating Net Neutrality, the FCC is devaluing information that is independent.
—Peter Wong, San Francisco, CA

My job involves researching new technologies. The best tool I have is the internet. Companies should not have the power to dictate the future of such an important and basic utility for their profit. The only way to ensure the protection of internet jobs, freedom of speech, and individual expression is to reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Other wise the best technology and communication tool since electricity will be striped of its (internet) best qualities... NON-DISCRIMINATION!
—Bryan LeBlanc, Cary, NC

We need REAL net neutrality - not another lie that strengthens the powers of the telecom monopolies. We need an internet that will allow for innovation and education of ALL, regardless of ability to pay. Protect those of us who work and study online. Anything other than true net neutrality is unacceptable, as the hundreds of thousands of voices you have already heard proves.
—Sara Crane, Seattle, WA

Enriching Comcast, AT&T and a handful of corporations who have only their shareholders interests in mind is poor public policy. The Internet is huge for my business and should be left neutral to encourage innovation and social evolution. The Internet should be run like a good public utility.
—Dwight B. Hilpman, Lawrence, KS

Free and open internet is a vital source of communication about world events, local news, and simple, person to person conversation. We have seen it change the course of history, on more than one occasion. Please do not let big corporations take over THIS mode of communication too! It is a priceless tool that can change lives and should be open to all, equally, regardless of ability to 'pay to play' at higher speeds.
—Jacqueline Pomranky, Clio, MI

It should be about truth and fairness not money!!
—Greg Bint, ,

DON'T TAKE AWAY OUR FREEDOM!
—Mark Piontek, Milwaukee, WI

1. I am about to start photo business that would use a web site, but a quite low cost site that my fixed SS income would allow. I will never be able to afford increases in order for me to get my product to the public. 2. The internet service I now use is almost beyond my budget..... and I depend on the internet for personal communication, education, news, and political participation.
—Bruce Cox, Brevard, NC

The FCC should throw out it's proposed rules and should reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—David Dufour, Irving, TX

With these rules, America's Internet will turn into the wasteland that is Canada where the major ISPs force everyone to kowtow to their power. I know something about this as I am a citizen of both countries and have actually submitted official comments to that country's regulator on a similar issue. These new FCC rules must be thrown out.
—Jonathan Blaine, Mc Lean, VA

The American PEOPLE are sick of being treated like replaceable parts by megacorporations and their big bucks. The Internet is not yours to give away; it belongs to the PEOPLE.
—Stefan Berger M.D., East Setauket, NY

I use the whole internet, not just the parts AT&T, Comcast, and Verizon like.
—Bridget Magnus, Las Vegas, NV

Giving certain providers preferential internet access will open Pandora's box on consumer choice.
—Don Bursch, Nashville, TN

Make ISPs common carriers so prices stay fair for everyone.
—Michael Pittman, Marion, IA

Allowing money to control our internet access is a form of thought control. Please respect the intelligence and freedoms of the American people by protecting the open internet. It is one of the reasons our country is as great is as it is.
—Cassandra Koslen, Portland, OR

As an American, I believe equality is for everyone - not just those who can afford it. The Internet means access to information and education - we all pay the same amount for water and electricity, so should be the case for a universal service such as the Internet.
—Dennis, Elgin, IL

A strong and free internet is vital to our economic future. Adding fast lanes will only stifle competition that could continue to allow us to lead the Internet.
—Erik Peterson, Manteca, CA

>>>>>>>>>>DO IT NOW>>>>>>>>
—Dennis Shea, Evanston, IL

Net neutrality is essential to the free flow of ideas, and corporate America, particularly the telecom sector has already shown itself to be unconcerned with the rule of law or free speech.
—Sabrina Wojnaroski, Pittsburgh, PA

Do not change a thing. It's not perfect but it's good enough. What you propose surely would not improve it.
—Nick Bricteux, Lake Forest, CA

What happens when a competitor to Netflix, or Amazon, or eBay, tries to compete but can't afford the higher fast lane speeds? Their service will by default be lower quality than the establishment. You're putting competition and innovation at an automatic disadvantage in relation to the old and status quo. That is blatantly un-American.
—Krzysztof Chorzepa, Norwalk, CT

our lives have become dependent on the internet and you've got a lot of nerve trying to restrict it now that we dont have a choice... I cant wait to move to Canada, I'm so sick of this damned country.
—Scott Spradlin, Highland Park, IL

I depend on fast communications for connecting with friends and online orders. I am also retired and need to keep my spending as low as possible.
—Glenn Wright, Oneonta, NY

I WANT A FREE AND OPEN INTERNET. NO FAST AND SLOW LANES. NO PREFERRED SERVICES. FREE AND OPEN!!
—Pat Frederick, Downingtown, PA

Corporate hands off our Internet!
—Andrew Kearney, ,

As an engineer and inventor I find myself using more obscure internet resources to aid in the creation and innovation of all of my projects. By limiting bandwidth to sites it will greatly affect the pace of innovation I am capable of. If the government truly cares about creative technical thought in this country it will support net neutrality and allow for the truly free flow of information
—Michael Huber, Milwaukee, WI

Much like our roads, traffic on the Internet is generated by all users. Content results from this usage, not just by a few content providers. The Internet is a shared asset, its value created by the users who share it, and it must be recognized as a common carrier.
—Gail Heylmun, Boise, ID

Ethics over profit!
—Rick Brott, Fort Lauderdale, FL

Without Net Neutrality, nobody wins. The Internet will be divided and segregated and it will become a shriveled shadow of what we have today. Innovation will be stifled, upstarts will be squashed, and those who rely on the Internet will be forced to pay out the nose just to maintain the same level of performance that they have today. This cost will be passed to the consumers, and will hurt e-commerce greatly. It's absolutely mind-blowing that the government would take stance - just a few months ago! - to vow to protect Net Neutrality, and then propose these ridiculous rules that would throw it out the window! Please stop the corruption, the personal agendas, and the "politics" and just do what is right for this country and its people!!!
—Emily C., Salt Lake City, UT

Net Neutrality is the only option worth following. Public utility is what the internet was designed to be.
—Jeremy Lefevre, Silverthorne, CO

Since the early days of the taxpayer-funded DARPA Internet, I have enjoyed unfettered access to online information, which proved critical in my abilities to serve the academic community in a taxpayer-funded university library. Your refusal to reclassify ISPs as common carrier utilities is a gross betrayal of those same taxpayers and a deraliction of your duty to protect the public interest. Please do your damn job!
—Spencer Hunter, Tucson, AZ

People and organizations without a lot of money need to use the Internet, and we need them for the information they provide. Especially organizations that expose problems in government.
—Ray Kronquist, San Jose, CA

I believe in an America in which all voices, no matter their monetary value, have an equal voice with which to speak in a public forum. Discrimination against online content and applications by ISPs goes against our First Amendment rights to free speech.
—William Lee Anderson III, Augusta, GA

Equal access to the Internet is very important in a democracy. Information access, education , and entertainment are but a few of the important areas. Just do it. Keep the net neutral!
—Kari Andrikopoulos, Santa Fe NM, NM

I, like most Americans, depend on the Internet for many things. It is really undemocratic and unfair If we the many are forced to get into a "slow lane" because a few rich folks feel they are "entitled" to go ahead of everyone else in line because they are rich.
—Faith Franck, las vegas, NV

This is the first step in a slippery slope towards internet being slower for those of us who rely on it's quickness. It's also the beginning of being boxed into having a certain carrier simply by cost. There is no reason why my internet should be slower because it's less expensive than someone else!!!!!!!!!
—Erik Ortiz, Thornton, CO

ISP's use a shared system which must be considered a public utility and they should be classified as common carriers. The two tiered system would be destructive to business innovation, artistic creativity and the free exchange of ideas. It will further disadvantage persons with lower incomes and cause de facto segregation of many communities, creating even more limited opportunity to change one's circumstances than now exists. It also puts far too much power in the hands of a few corporations who already have demonstrated their alliance with political groups who strive to deregulate all aspects of government in order to increase corporate profits. Often this deregulation is harmful to the public welfare. You are sworn to work for the general welfare of all citizens of the United States, and this will not promote the same. In my own personal case, I am a low income senior. The amount that Comcast wants for internet even now is far too high for me to pay. I am able to use my landlord's internet at this time, but if they begin to be charged more for amount of data usage, I may lose this. And most people at my income level do not have this opportunity at all. More and more one must get news, access to health, social services, and goods via the internet. The disadvantages of poverty are currently sufficient; they do not need to be increased by government rules.
—Thora Reynolds, Minneapolis, MN

THE INTERNET IS OBVIOUSLY A PUBLIC UTILITY! ANY ATTEMPTS TO SAY OTHERWISE ARE BLATANT CORPORATE PUPPETRY MOVES!!
—Paul Palla, Waynesboro, PA

Don't take us back to the gilded age. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Darren, Elgin, TX

I'm with Tim Berners-Lee the true creator of the Internet who said fittingly as concerns the importance of Net Neutrality: Freedom of connection with any application to any party is the fundamental social basis of the internet. And now, is the basis of the society built on the internet.
—Deborah D'Amico, Reno, NV

The internet needs to remain a neutral place for information to travel.
—Zachary Spratt, Puyallup, WA

It is essential that the government provide these small bits of a quality life to the slaves.
—Thomas Moses, Sierra Madre, CA

internet providers must be reclassified as common carriers. A two-tiered system will only let us slide farther away from "free" speech and actual democracy.
—Rosemary Fritz Grabowska, Poughkeepsie, NY

Living in a small rural community, the Internet is a valuable tool. Don't let AT&T, Comcast, Verizon, and any other provider create fast lanes. With the disappearance of many small local newspapers, the Internet is becoming my major source of news....
—Carol Cate, Ripon, WI

So how much money has Big Telecom spent on bribing you to take this despicable action?
—Ole Nielson, Abbotsford,

Besides entertainment procured online, I use the internet to work from home. Allowing ISPs to create a tiered structure and only provide fast internet to those who have hundreds to pay for it hurts those of us who rely on stable, fast internet for our livelihood. Keep true Net Neutrality and treat ISPs like common carriers.
—Andrea Moore, Dayton, OH

The internet is the people who use it. Allowing any one person to have control over how it is allowed to function is the opposite of how it was designed to work. It is a tool, when used properly, a powerful and useful tool. Education about proper use is what is needed not persecution of all users.
—Peter Ekstrom, lincoln city, OR

Net Neutrality favors large companies and those with money over newer companies, essentially eliminating the open playing field of the internet.
—Allyson Hamacher, Phoenix, AZ

As a silicon valley entrepreneur, I believe it is essential that new startups have the same access to internet bandwidth as the larger companies. We need to ensure that maintain low barriers to entry for innovative (under funded) startups.
—Tamir Scheinok, Oakland, CA

Keep the neurtal so all Americans can compete not just those who can afford it. Other wise the market i not a free market is it.
—Ivan Womboldt, Palm Springs, CA

This is the most important way to keep the internet neutral and fai. Please quit appeasing big business and fight for the real desires of the people.
—Megan Verno, Lehi, UT

Why do you want to destroy our American way of life, just so fat cats can make more Billions. This is exactly what you are doing, to me and every other American. Fred Belt
—Fred Belt, Sunland, CA

The internet is an undiscriminating, open place for everyone. It's unique in that everyone is equal. Everyone has to be on the same plane for the internet to carry on being a safe place for all.
—Serena O'Shea, ,

The internet is our only way to get information to keep us informed about what's 'really' going on. Or what's "really" good for us". Or what "really" works medically, etc. This is America's last chance to stay a free country.
—Jeff Pokorny, Bend, OR

Net Neutrality is important to me, as it should be to all the citizens of this great nation. Please reclassify internet service providers as common carriers, and regulate them accordingly. Thank You Peter Hoyt
—Peter Hoyt, Medford, OR

If your proposal is approved the Internet as you know will be drastically different than it is now. Not just will there be a fast and slow lane for those who chose not to pay extra, ISP's will be able to filter content and block access to certain websites. Right now the Internet is not just a form of entertainment, it is a way for people to share ideas, get news, share new, uncensored information. And that is why I love the Internet, it is an open wonderful community of people! And by blocking and censoring parts the Internet you are crippling it. Not only will it prevent the spread of ideas and information, it will have a huge effect on the economy, new startup tech companies or really any field which relies on fast Internet connectivity will come to a halt. So I urge you, do not let these proposals ne approved and classify the Internet as a common carrier.
—Tyler Henderson, Canton, MI

Free internet is the only place to receive truthful and both sides of information and issues from both sides. The monopolies we have today are not bipartisan and follow their corporate and individual owners agendas.
—Steve Irwin, Melbourne Beach, FL

I work for UNICEF in Africa. I know what it means to work with throttled bandwidth. You'll be turning something egalitarian into a stratified, classist mechanism. Why would you want that to be your legacy? That moves us all backwards. Don't be shitty people.
—Nathaniel Calhoun, Needham Heights, MA

I like things the way they are...
—Kenji Clark, Memphis, TN

Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Richard Kiskis, Salinas, CA

Net Nutrality matters because we should all be striving for the world to be an equal place for everyone and creating a two tiered internet would be a massive step in the wrong direction so please keep the internet as it is, neutral and fair!
—Alex Buckley, Preston,

It's important to keep information and access to information neutral. We don't give people preferential access to library books just because certain individuals could afford to pay more for a library card . The same should hold true for the internet.
—Raenell Soller, Atlanta, GA

Net neutrality is required for the continued innovation of our internet. By allowing 'fast lanes' for ISPs, the internet will no longer be a free source of information and the greatness of the current internet will be destroyed. I depend on net neutrality almost daily to do my job. Please do not make this system a pay to play cesspool.
—Nathanael Letchford, Austin, TX

I absolutely don't trust the government or the corporation! Net Neutrality must be maintained to protect the people and preserve our freedoms. Please keep the Internet free! Thanks for listening, Jeff Mauney
—Jeff Mauney, Lincolnton, NC

We can not lot companies in monopoly position determine the winners in the future of the internet. I have a start-up company that leverages the internet to provide services to consumers. An ISP could easily put me out of business by blocking my traffic. The internet is to our economy as water is to life. We can not trust an ISP to be fair. They are only looking out for their own self interest and stock price.
—Dan Goodman, Needham, MA

Chairman Tom Wheeler. May I remind you sir that you do NOT work for the ISP. You work for the American Citizen who will indeed feel the pinch or vice grip of this terrible plan. NO sir to Net Neutrality.
—Ricardo Trinidad, Milwaukee, WI

It is important that the internet remain an open and equal global communication resource for all people regardless of financial or any other means.
—Collin Smith, Westminster, MD

How else will we able to express our opinions on certain issues, much less our feelings, if it wasn't for net neutrality, I grew up with the internet and would appreciate it a lot if you put yourselves in the shoes of someone who couldn't live without the internet, supporting her needs as well as the needs of others. Then, tell me how would it feel, to have that all taken away in an instant, like an ocean dried up except for the ones, who only need it to make money. Now tell me, wouldn't that be unfair. Did you think, even for a second, that there is more than one way to save net neutrality, without giving in to lobbying demands, from ISPs or Internet cable companies, they're only in it to make money anyway, they couldn't care less about the fate of the internet at stake, much less it's freedom.
—Danielle, Whitestone, NY

True Net Neutrality is the keystone of the Internet. Without it, the entire network will just collapse into a pile of garbage. If Net Neutrality is destroyed, people will stage boycots, cutting off a large chunk of money from ISPs. The laws will eventually be repealed anyway, but it is better to prevent a problem before it starts.
—Connor Lowe, Phoenix, AZ

You must take action to protect a free and fair internet.
—Mr. Larry A White, Clinton, CT

The internet is one of the PINNACLES of freedom in this country and of fundamental importance to our national identity. The move to stamp out Net Neutrality sends a clear message that powerful interests are not content to be part of and benefit from the openness and creativity of this society... they simply want rig the game and RULE the society. These interests are crossing lines never meant to be crossed and We the People will not tolerate it.
—Stephen Hahn, Tucson, AZ

it's a PUBLIC UTILITY, for christsake, anybody with half a brain can see that.
—Julia Kuhn, cincinnati, OH

Under the proposed regulation it is only a matter of time before extra fees are implemented. This is not fair. This is not morally correct. This is yet another example of the actions that will drive the 98% to rebellion. Take heed.
—William Fleischer, Akron, OH

Chairman Wheeler's plan would let ISPs like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees — and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. These companies would have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. And no one would be able to do anything about it.
—David John Ulibarri, Chicago, IL

Families can not handle anymore fees. We already pay for access to internet. I got my first paycheck when I was 12 years old and I have had to postpone retirement due to rising medical cost. I enjoy staying informed on the internet. If I have one more fee to pay, I will not be able to enjoy my well earned retirement.
—Karyn Herman, Honeoye, NY

This is truly a common carrier. I, like most of your constituents depend upon the Internet in both personal and business.
—Ralph M. Shannon, Hudson, FL

The internet was conceived of and has developed as an open source resource that is available to everyone with an internet connection regardless of their 'status' or ability to pay. It would be a tragedy and a betrayal of the vision and far-sightedness of the internet's founding fathers for it to be commodified and carved up by corporate profiteers. I can't believe that the ISP is proposing to jettison the most valuable attribute of the internet and in effect privatize it, to the lasting detriment of all internet users. It is not too late to withdraw these damaging proposals and reaffirm the principle of genuine net neutrality.
—Jim Dignan, ,

We should not allow companies to provide access to some content, while blocking other content. It would ammount to a corporate take-over of what was once a haven for information to flow freely!
—Jessica Tomlinson, Saint Petersburg, FL

The openness of the internet is fundamental to democracy. Is democracy not what your country and mine fight for, be it in Afghanistan, Iraq, or at home - or indeed almost anywhere in the world?
—Marion Geddes, ,

My life is so embedded into the internet. I do all my banking, pay my bills, receive and send correspondences, share photos and videos with family and many more things that require a fast internet access. I pay a high price for this access now. I cannot afford to pay more.
—Gary James Olson, Port Orchard, WA

Doing this takes away our first amendment rights, and allows companies to censor what they consider inappropriate.
—Travis Dieringer, Vancouver, WA

Net Neutrality is important because a free internet allows everyone to have access to everything, I don't want a plan where the rich can have access to everything they want and those who can't afford it are left out.. Our country is already divided between the poor and the rich.We don't need another avenue that tends to divide.
—Bernadine Baltrinic, Batj, OH

These rules will hurt the average American while benefitting big business. These are the kind of things we should expect our govt. to protect us from.
—Todd Fundaro, Royal Oak, MI

Your decision is intolerable. You work for Atilla The Hun, not for the people you are supposed to protect. Shame on you.
—Linda Owen, Loveland, CO

Education the truth would be a victim of these new rules.
—Warren Steven Cushway, bay city, MI

A free unrestricted internet is essential for innovation. With tiered internet it allows cable companies that already have a disturbingly monopolistic control over the internet, to make further profits by controlling who succeeds in what should be an open market. Don't let their lobbying ruin what so many have worked so hard for. If you can't see how money is becoming more powerful in this issue than organized criticism by a much larger portion of the public than you have already sold yourself...enjoy being their whore.
—Axel Olson, Tempe, AZ

Allowing companies to pay more for a "fast lane" internet is the kind of elitist plan that middle America will not stand for. Please keep in mind that even if this horrible plan is enacted, all it will take is one major ISP to not follow the greed and become the number one carrier in the world because of it. I personally plan to boycott every site and business that conspires with this current FCC plan. You have a chance to make things right. You are in a position to do something great. Give the people and their descendents a free internet regulated as a public utility.
—Steven Gauthier, Cincinnati, OH

Save the internet! It is more than a way for many companies to make money - it is the lifeline of We the People to the world. It MUST be regulated to avoid tier services! Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Thank you!
—Clyde P. Schaff, Oak Harbor, WA

The ISP's do not need a new profit stream to keep the Internet going. We, however, need the equality of access for all content that has been one of the great hallmarks of the Internet Age. Equal quality of service for ALL content must be assured on the permanent basis. The ISP's are de facto common carriers, and should all be regulated as such.
—Cary B. Cornett, Lincoln Park, MI

The Internet is my basic connection to the world. I can't afford to travel to see it personally.
—Esther Stanley, Framingham, MA

The proposed internet rules provide way too much opportunity to be abused by the largest ISP providers. Judge Green's original decision keeping carriers and content providers separated was correct. Please classify the internet as a common carrier, otherwise the internet just becomes another cash cow for the rich in control of the big Telecoms.
—Tom Voorhees, clioton, WA

The free market works most of the time, but there are certain situations where a company can earn more money by treating its customers unfairly. In this case, without net neutrality, ISP's have a financial incentive to create fast lanes for their wealthiest customers and slow lanes for everybody else. This is unfair to the vast majority of internet users, including many small business that will now have a harder time competing with the big guys. But you can prevent this by reclassifying ISP's as common carriers. This won't stop them from doing business. It'll just ensure that they play fair with ALL of their customers.
—Stephen Hawkins, Pensacola, FL

By doing away with net neutrality you are in effect stopping internet innovation as we know it today. Other countries have faster internet and no such rules in place like you are trying to impose on the American people. By the way, it was the American people who paid for the development of the internet (DARPA), NOT the internet carriers. The internet carriers make enough money as it is, so what you propose is not only unnecessary, but seedy and suspect. Start representing the American people, not big corporations. WE are the ones who pay your saleries, not Verizon or ATT.
—John Williams, Durham, NC

Dot coms should be on level playing field and internet really should be classified as a utility because every student needs it and really everyone uses it every day.
—Catherine Lambeau, Huntington, WV

The internet grew into the amazing force it is today exactly because so far its content has been mostly free of preferential treatments by carriers. Allowing carriers to give preference to some content or services based on financial incentives, or any other benefit they could derive from it, can only benefit those tied to those incentives: carriers and the deepest pocketted content and service providers. It's pretty much only the old-school content providers, those who grew with no internet, who only moved later online when the net was already hugely successful, who are lobbying to be permitted to become non-neutral. Regular citizens as well as most modern internet-based companies clearly see the danger ending net neutrality poses, and have even banded together to make sure the FCC does not fall prey to the illusory belief things will be better with a reduced or absent net neutrality. The internet didn't grow into what it is today thanks to the lobbying corporations that want to end net neutrality, far from it. Don't mistake their advice on the matter for expertise. It is not. Listen to actual experts instead, like Google and Microsoft, and the countless alarmed citizens who clearly see what's going on here.
—Nicolas Cadou, ,

I use the internet for information. Not interested in waiting for someone watching a movie.
—Marsha Shaiman, Seattle, WA

I make my living and find my entertainment with services over the internet. Manipulation of my data by choosing which services reach my house in a timely manner by my providers should not be allowed.
—Ricky Casey, Birmingham, AL

I think the internet should stay at Net Neutrality for many reasons. For ex: •Almost any job that you apply for requires an online application, and not all companies have an open computer to which you can apply on site (so if you don't have a job, how can you afford internet to look and apply for one?) •Almost all schools require some sort of research that needs to be sourced from the internet. (which not all families can afford) •There are people that work online for a living: people who sell goods through their shops online. They already have to pay a fee for selling (also a percentage of what they do sell) and now they have to pay for decent internet on top of that? I think there are many more reasons, but these are very important ones, that will hopefully have an impact on everyone's opinion.
—Jessica Harvey, Deer Park, TX

Keep net neutrality and do not help to create internet monopolies
—Karen Thaw, Boston, MA

Please don't kill Net Neutrality. People need a free and open internet.
—Dave Smith, Blaine, ME

Net Neutrality is important to me because big business's are already making so much money why do they need more? So the rich 1% that pay under 5% in tax for the billions they make can have millions more, and the poor and middle class get poorer? Here let me put it another way. Would the FCC like to pay everyone that uses the internet $1000 every month, so ISP's can have the right to charge their users different prices to view different websites? Because it's pretty much the same thing as asking normal everyday internet users to be more out of pocket just for visiting some websites. Also killing Net Neutrality will infringe on everyone's right to freedom of speech. Because you can't spell freedom with out free.
—Joseph Reiher, ,

I depend on the internet for my farm and small business. Any changes to the internet can adversely affect my businesses.
—Mr. John Erdmann, Christiana, TN

Allows me to stay connected with my family, friends, and school. There are more reasons but this is the most important to me.
—Andrew Torres, Bronx, NY

A tiered internet will undermine the fundamental openness of it. Do not let corporations like Verizon to flip flop between Telecommunications and Information Service take control. They have already done enough damage by over chagrining for terrible service and getting away with merging into massive monopolies. Stop the consolidation of providers. Make the Internet a public utility and make companies that offer and telecommunication or "Information Service" a Type II service provider, free from discrimination.
—Nicholas Williard, Chagrin Falls, OH

Because internet is for people, not for companies
—Camelia Camelia, ,

The free interchange of ideas is one of the hallmarks of our society! Net Neutrality MUST be preserved!
—Eugene J Cahill, Hackettstown, NJ

Thank you for your attention to this matter.
—Zak Zebrowski, Arlington, VA

Everyone deserves the same access to the internet. It does not belong to one corporation!
—Stephen Lara, Katy, TX

Please protect net neutrality. A free Internet is best for the world.
—Jason Gleason, Rio Rancho, NM

It shames me to even think that the FCC would adopt rules that establish the Internet as anything other than a common carrier. Through pursuing feckless lobbying rather than consructive R&D, the large last-mile ISPs have already compromised the full potential of the net far in disturbing ways--- price gouging; inequitable access e.g. rural vs. urban; bandwidth not keeping up with technical advances, IP rationing. We definitely don't need or want them prioritizing or throttling content.
—Lloyd R. Prentice, Marshfield, MA

Please don't let the internet be hijacked by corporations that can afford the price only!
—Christine McGillen, Berlin, MD

I'm an early adopter. Today, I cannot imagine internet access being less ubiquitous. Looking back, it is hard to imagine what a difference the impact on Internet-related development would be had the Internet NOT been freely accessible. It is like telling me that the water I drink can come to my house slowly or quickly, pristine or passable, depending on how much I am able or willing to pay for it. There are so many ways for mega corporations to capitalize on services. Please don't sell out the public's interests.on this matter. Has the day arrived that the FCC's very reason for existence can be subverted? Well, yes, since one would be hard put to declare the airwaves belong to the people any more. The airwaves might be, but try finding a signal one could receive and transmit for free.... The FCC mission statement plainly and clearly states the Office is supposed to be consumer focused, an agent of positive change. Consumer DOES NOT equate to PAYING CUSTOMER. Nor does it equate to Corporate entity, no matter what the Supreme Court suggests. I believe the FCC has fallen down in its mission to protect the interests of the individual citizen consumer, the right of unencumbered access to broadcasts that have already been paid for by advertisers. Now is the chance to rectify that grievous error. I support media-ownership caps, network neutrality, public broadcasting, and seeking active means of increasing minority ownership of broadcasting and print outlets. When it comes to fairness, I would support rigorous re-visitation and debate of the INTENTION of that doctrine. I seriously doubt that anyone in the 1940s, even a decade ago, anticipated the nasty vitriol infused in "public" debate these days. I would vigorously support debate over a doctrine addressing a requirement of responsibility for truth, one that addresses blatant falsehoods disguised as opinion. Alas, however,we cannot seek to legislate manners. But you are in the catbird seat. You CAN address and protect net neutrality and public access. Please do so. Your grandchildren will thank you.
—EC Goller, St Petersburg, FL

Please keep the internet neutral. Cable and phone companies have too much power now and we all pay more than our fair share to them for TV, Phone and Internet access. Creating the opportunity for them to charge more for faster connections to their customers will put many small internet companies out of business. The Internet is the Epitome of American ingenuity and entrepreneurial spirit. Please do not limit that spirit by giving more power to the media monopolies!
—Eric Semmelmayer, Pleasanton, CA

This will stifle innovation and economic growth. It is short-sighted in the extreme.
—Daniel Cox, ,

DONT STEEL OUR RIGHT! IT IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL AND PREJUDICE.
—Edward F. Kapun, Yonkers, NY

The internet is a form of free speech and your ability to share your views, opinions, facts, and data on the internet with ease should not be severely limited based on how much money you're willing to spend.
—Archaa Shrivastav, Roselle, IL

The Internet was started as an open entity and it needs to STAY that way. There's way too much MONEY control in the U.S. as it is. Your proposal will ruin the Internet in the same way as corporations ruined over-the-air radio.
—Mr Jack R Smith, Ashland City, TN

Neutrality the net remember we are the people we are the majority hight speed for all
—Ferold, Columbia, MD

Stop trying to take our freedom away from us!
—Sylwia Wasilewska, ,

The smaller companies as well as will not be able to pay the higher fees for fast track streaming or even for getting their products out to the public..thus once again big business would win out agains the smaller guys...a very bad idea!
—Lynn Bengston, Belchertown, MA

Wheeler’s plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. These companies would have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. And no one would be able to do anything about it. and I don't want that.
—Alex Pomorski, Whitmore Lake, MI

I am low-income senior, TOTALLY dependent upon internet...but I am tied to TWC & its abuses. If my ISP were independent, I would feel free to be able to mak better (& cheaper) financial decisions. P.S. My ISP was independent until TWC BOUGHT it out fm under its customers.
—Barbara e. Hollis, san antonio, TX

Keep the net neutral. Allowing the big guys to basically block the little guys will have the long term effect of killing internet development. Neutrality is what made the internet great.
—Shawn Regan, Tampa, FL

As the owner/author of a small niche website that pays its bills, I don't want anyone to have more or less access to the Internet and its contents than anyone else. I want my website to be immediately available to those who want to explore, but I don't want these bits and bytes that I have labored over to be sitting in some "slow content cache" lane because my provider hasn't ponied up the dough to get his "premium" package of preferential bandwidth or traffic treatment. Don't think it won't happen. The Internet is what it is because of the ability of nearly anyone to share, access, pioneer, profit... it's there because huge company or small start-up, when you click on "Lowe's Hardware" or "Mom & Pop's Hardware Store" the bits for either are delivered with the same priority. Take that away, create fast and slow lanes for traffic, give an ISP the legal ability to choke bandwidth any way they see fit, and you begin to dismantle the essential freedom that the Internet's success was built on.
—Randy Holmes, DUNN, NC

DOES NSA RING A BELL?
—Dale Reynolds, Salt Lake City, UT

EVERYONE should have equal access to the Internet. The FCC must throw out its proposed rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Mark Freeman, Saint Charles, MO

It is the last, best hope for democracy and freedom.
—Dagny Phillips-Stumberger, atlanta, GA

As both a consumer and a businessman that consults and works with many small, emerging Internet companies, it is critical that the Internet be accessible to all without any special classifications or inherent discrimination (i.e., the tiered approach you are considering). One of the core principals of our democracy is the notion of a "level playing field." one of the core strengths of our economy is that creativity and different points of view and techniques are valued. With all due respect, the proposed guidelines will gut both our democracy and the economic engine that both feeds and is enabled by it.
—Michael Kagan, NY, NY

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. ANy other course of action is unacceptable
—Candace Hibbard Lillie, Eucha, OK

Please protect consumers by protecting the internet.
—Jessica Janecki, Durham, NC

I use the internet at my local library to do community activism and to organize grass roots activities, without internet neutrality, I couldn't do this.
—Joel V. Johnson, Vancouver, WA

We have enough inequality don't start it in the internet
—James L Sellers, St.Louis, MO

Everyone should have an equal opportunity to access the internet without paying for what was designed for the public. Even the creator of the internet knew that it shouldn't belong to any one person.
—Jessica Price, Monroe, OH

The internet I believe is protected by the first amendment of the Constitution of the United States. I see this as a matter of free speech. To allow internet providers to create a two tiered internet is just plain wrong. Please leave the internet alone and reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Thank you...
—John, Juneau, AK

Net neutrality is of critical importance to the development of new companies of unforeseen technologies. Please don't stifle the growth of new businesses by artificially protecting a few (large) existing companies.
—Chris Friesen, Mount Gilead, OH

As a young college graduate who is only a few days fresh out of school and attempting to find footing in the job market on a very small, very tight budget, having access to an open internet is a necessity. My peers and I cannot afford to have our wallets (already stretched so thin by tuition fees and loans) stretched even more in order to pay for the internet, a piece of technology which has become a staple of everyday life for millions of people across the country. The internet is no longer a privilege, and people don't seem to understand that. It is a necessity, an important resource and means of communication for everyone, from government officials to students to the unemployed seeking jobs. It is essential that the internet remain free, fast, and accessible to EVERYONE who needs it, not just the people who can afford to pay twice as much. The internet is a tool, an outlet for creativity, and also a source of income for more people than just internet service providers. Business owners, small or big, corporate or independent, rely on the internet to help them earn a living. And when only large corporations and businesses can afford to pay for the right to make their websites and products available online speedily and efficiently, small and independent businesses, many of whom may be just about to start up, will not be able to compete effectively. Our market revolves, for good or bad, around competition, and this move to allow internet service providers to decide who is allowed online and what they're allowed to put online is only going to hurt the parties who matter most: American citizens and internet users. I sincerely hope that the FCC will do the right thing and start putting American internet users and their rights and needs first, rather than let corporations who want to turn the internet into their own personal money tree have their way and ruin a valuable tool for the rest of us.
—Briana Tiano-Mohr, Forest Grove, OR

I'm a retired school teacher and I just now paid my internet bill: $176.35. That is outrageous! Your plan is only going to cost me more, since internet content providers are going to pass the extra cost along to people like me. Don't pass your rules. Keep net neurtrality!
—Elizabeth VanderPutten, Washington, DC

The 1% have enough $$$ without taking more from the rest of us. We want to keep our rights without paying extra as privilege. ISPs ought to be classed Common Carriers.
—Robert Ridgard, The Villages, FL

The open Internet is the only level playing field left to non-corporate interests. If we don't have money, we still have voices--voices that will be silenced if open access is available only to those with money.
—Karen Chalfen, Boston, MA

Across-the-board equality for WWWeb communications is imperative. Only an equal playing field can produce the diversity that keeps societies, nations and people strong, and together.
—Hal B. Anthony, Grants Pass, OR

If the ISPs are able to create "fast lanes" and slow lanes, they will be able to control the research that is easily accessible. In order for scientific discovery to progress, all information needs to be accessible, even that which is not in the spotlight. Sincerely, A Doctorate Student in Medicinal Research
—David Baggett, Seattle, WA

Seriously, though--our nation depends on innovation, and allowing companies the ability to limit access based on cost will only hinder that innovation. Please don't implement these new rules; reclassify internet service providers as common carriers.
—Jared Klundt, Provo, UT

FCC- I should control the online content in my house, not Comcast or Verizon. I already pay a delivery charge for internet at my house, I should not have to pay more to access one kind of data over another. It is not costing the internet provider more to deliver the data why do they get to charge me more?
—Kara Quinnan, Fredericksburg, VA

Net neutrality is about the best thing humankind has got going for it. Please support the will of the people.
—Marian Volkman, Ann Arbor, MI

As a house bound veteran my computer is my access to the world, if I'm forced to pay for a better speed to do my routine actions on the internet, I won't be able to do it and my screen may as well be shut off. I already have one of the better cable speeds in my area which I can barely afford as my small social security check never comes close to the rise in inflation.
—William Haley, Tye, TX

I am concerned about any Internet structure that censors or restricts my access to information I want to see as well as censors or restricts other's access to information I wish to share. Is 'censor' too strong a word? Any scheme that analyzes content for origin before passing it on is a type of censorship. Don't let the genie out of the bottle.
—David Jabs, Boring, OR

In today's world the Internet is an essential too for not just me, but for millions of people. Up to this point I have been given the choice to do what I will with the access I have. Some would be content to fight for that right alone, but that would ignorant. The services I use on the Internet for like Netflix, YouTube, and Amazon only exist because of the freedom of the Internet. I shudder at the thought if a upstart company like Netflix had been forced to pay an ISP higher for faster speeds in its infancy before it had a wide audience. It might have never come to be. It is so blatantly obvious that ISP's are in a position of power and quite frankly if they are given a chance to abuse that power I have no doubts that they will. To beleive otherwise is wishful thinking at best. Access to the Internet has become an essential utility to both the consumer and to start-up businesses. Reclassifying the ISP's as a common carrier would be a great step in continuing the open Internet. Handing over the keys to the Internet to ISP's is the first step down a slippery slope of higher prices and lower quality services.
—Mitchell Brown, Connersville, IN

We need balanced information on matters. People are losing trust in government and the systems with this type of internet censorship. Free press Index shows US is very low in rankings. Shameful!
—Jennifer Jeffrey, Calgary,

As a rural resident who depends on adequate online access and speed for college classwork, I am opposed to any tinkering by telecom giants unless it is to improve my access.
—Linda Inness, Philadelphia, TN

I use my internet connection for both business and pleasure, and pay too much for too little as it is. Removing 'Net Neutrality protections gives corporate "gatekeepers" a way to charge even MORE for services. In the E.U., Internet service is treated as a public utility and they pay less for faster speeds and better service!
—Amy Carpenter, Eugene, OR

Every citizen should have the right to information that is not chosen for us. We have the right to either choose to read something, or move on to read something else. Keep open access. I do NOT EVER want to be part of a country that treats its citizens like sheep. China. Saudi Arabia, and others do not allow or honor freedom of access to information. Do not make us like them. The internet, for all its warts and foibles, should remain open and unfettered by both government and the corporate world. Keep the net open and neutral!
—Melissa Bell, Cabin John, MD

Protect equality FOR ALL, net neutrality has ALREADY been shown to work well. Don't let corporations take over our lives to increase THEIR bottom line. My internet bill is already out of line.
—George Zirfas, Colorado Springs, CO

Please support more competition not less.
—James Janus, Sturgeonbay, WI

We shouldn't have to explain to you FCC pawns why an open and free internet should not be compromised by corporations only interested in more profits at the expense of the public. The internet is a tool that allows the public to communicate to others and back to government that no longer permits any feed back or protest against its destructive and non democratic policies which are destroying the country and the world's economic system and leading us all to a livng hell.
—Cedric Ward, Athol, ID

I am a web designer and I want to make sure that innovation is not hindered by giving certain content providers preferential treatment.
—Jessica Sideways, Longmont, CO

My ability to determine what information is important for me to have access to and receive my selected information at the same speed as any other information on the internet is paramount to open and free competition of the internet market place. I do not need a bundle decided on by a third party as the way to get (pay for) the information I want. Simple classifications are a much more preferable option than rules that would eventually need to be interpreted on a case by case basis by the courts.
—Robert Crawford, Longmont, CO

There should not be a "price for bytes".
—Michael Muylaert, Lenox, MI

We need equal access for all users.
—Ron Williams, Travelers Rest, SC

Everything we do is increasingly online. Commerce, communication, information, political debate. And if there is not a true open Internet, the gatekeepers become the ones in charge. They set the fees, they reap the rewards, they control the conversation. For the sake of our open markets and our democracy, it's YOUR JOB, Chairman Wheeler, to make sure that the Net is open. If you're not in the back pocket of the ISP's -- and by virtue of your position, you certainly better not be -- then why is this so hard a decision?
—Clay Anderson, Wheaton, IL

To whom it may concern, It is imperative that you reclassify ISPs as common carriers. The reason for this is that it is the only real way to protect Net Neutrality. The open internet is vital for anyone who goes online. Thank you, Yehuda
—Yehuda Greenberg, Saint Albans, VT

As a small business owner, my livelihood depends on the open internet. Killing it would be a mistake for the both of us.
—Ryan Dougherty, Morristown, NJ

Wheeler is going to cripple the free market for the corporations' and his personal gain. Please don't let him do that.
—Caleb Szalacinski, Gallatin, TN

I've been creating some web applications of my own. Independent developers don't have a chance if you allow the biggest companies to buy up the bandwidth. You are breaking the internet, please fix this.
—Ben Brophy, Cambridge, MA

If there are not enough to convince you not to kill net neutrality than think of all the people that use the internet but don't even know about net neutrality and aren't interested because they aren't aware of the consequences. So listen to those who fight and show us that we live in a modern world with democracy and EQUALITY!!
—Lachner Lachnet, Gaimersheim, AZ

Net Neutrality gives us the right to speak our minds about things we do or not like. Net Neutrality has paved the way for hotels, restaurants, airports, etc., to have internet at no extra charge to consumers all over America and not to mention shopping. The people of America & around the world demand that you save Net Neutrality so we can all have the fast lane without paying additional charges. Failure to do so would destroy the open internet that we work so hard to make popular all over the world. It would rip off finances for our families and it would put the people to the lowest road we could even go. We demand that you save Net Neutrality now so we can keep connecting to friends & family before it's too late.
—Jerren Reid, Cleveland, OH

I am a small business and always will be. I cannot afford a "fast lane" on the internet. I would rather spend my time and money innovating my product. Best wishes, Bruce C.
—Bruce Childress, Kennebunk, ME

Restore net neutrality. No one has the right to own t he internet.
—Peter Butt, Los Angeles, CA

Toss your rules. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Serve the peoples' interest rather than that of ISPs.
—John Clark, Warren, NJ

Our Politicians are always ready to fix something that is not broken. Leave the internet alone.
—Johnny Matos, Orlando, FL

Net neutrality is a means to preserve democracy.
—Selma Lynch, Arlington, VA

Personally, I don't believe the FCC should have any influence or connection, no pun intended, to the Internet, period. Other "first world" countries hav deemed access to the Internet as a necessity. Shame on you who would put the monetary, and information interests of Big Business begore the needs of any American citizen. Internet neutrality must be doggedly maintained. Get on the ball!
—J Kosoff, Newtown, PA

I don't want a fast lane for the rich and the slow lane for everyone else!
—Mr. Michael Weaver, Bethesda, MD

I rely on the internet and am tired of having big corporations take over so much of our business world.
—Carole Burns, Arlington, MA

Selling out the internet to a handful of corporations is wrong. Redefine it as a utility so it can remain the way it is.
—Tracey Fleming, Fort Worth, TX

The radio spectrum is available to all as a public good. Radio stations can't buy more spectrum just because they've got more money. The internet should be no different.
—Jeff Harrison, Worley, ID

Government doesn't have any place in my Internet.
—Jacques LaRose, ,

I AM SICK OF BIG BIZ OWNING ALL OF US! PLEASE, LISTEN TO REAL PEOPLE, NOT BIG BUSINESS!!
—Lou Pharo, Calistoga, CA

Dear Federal Communications Commission: FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. Thanks, Dilip
—Dilip C Louis, Tempe, AZ

No more Wheeler lies. He does NOT support net neutrality no matter how he tries to spin his talk. FIRE HIM!
—Harry Swensen, Pensacola, FL

The ONLY reason for having a two tier service on the internet is to satisfy Wall Street greed for 'profits'. The internet is an essential in today's society and ,just like a phone is needed in gaining employment,so is the internet. Therefore it is in the public interest for ISP's to be considered common carriers.
—Bruce Sims, ESCONDIDO, CA

Dear Chairman Wheeler, Please reconsider the FCC proposal to allow ISPs to create multi-tier plans for their services. By not reclassifying ISPs as common carriers, the internet stands to be weaker, more mercenary, and less accessible to all US citizens. As a software developer, I find it beautiful that information is so readily available for those with working internet connections. The internet is a great equalizer! Please protect the open internet and reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Thank you! -Weien
—Weien Wang, Lemont, IL

I want to have the freedom of the online world. A world where knowledge and friendship and everything in between runs freely without the overbearing rules of other entertainment services. I need to have a plae for creators to make new and exciting things; a place for others to share and enjoy themselves. Without net neutrality, online freedom will be a mere facade.
—Bianca, Dalton, GA

My family isn't very well off, and my situation is abusive. All my friends, all my support and the people who care about me, I can only reach through the internet. I couldn't afford any extra fees, effectively cutting me off from my support structure. I've been on suicide watch repeatedly, and my friends are the only reason I haven't succeeded in killing myself. Please don't do this.
—Emily Daniels, Tomball, TX

You are going to contribute to the deficiency of social mobility and creativity in the U.S. The American Dream has died, you have killed it! It is looking at your face; it is saying "Et, tu Wheeler?" Many people win money and aspire a better life through sharing their creativity through the internet. Not only are you going to make it harder people who can't pay for a faster internet, you are going to judge their product "objectively" (because creativity is objective right? right?!). All those Internet service providers should be thanked for "providing the internet", yet, I wouldn't let a businessman judge what is truly good for everyone else. A businessman of the amoral market is just going to choose what is most profitable; and the geniuses of this world are quite averse and disadvantaged when judged under such a stance. As if everything great is economically profitable... Even though silly sounding at first, hypothetically, if aliens invaded the earth, the only thing you could show them for them to think we deserve to be free and not their slaves would be our philosophical, scientific, artistic, and cultural ideas; not our business statistics, our CEOs, bankers, and marketing strategies... All those just would prove that humanity is just good as a tool! Not as a thing that can do good when free! Giving privileges to those who have the money shows well your true intentions! The world is beautiful when you have the money right?! You just were born in the "right" family, idiots! "Because daddy and mommy come from wealthy and privileged families, I Tom Wheeler declare, let the others eat shit!" Right? You hyperpriviledged people recognize merit as good as an insect recognizes itself in the mirror! If there was a 100% inheritance tax you wouldn't have been anything but mediocrity. How come somebody who doesn't deserve his position is to judge who deserves his/her position? "This is madness!" All say > "This is... USA!" you say by kicking the populace inside a hole as deep as your fucking cash... Sorry, but sooner or later, the internet will stop being your plaything. You want proof of your mediocrity Wheeler? These rules you are pushing for are a great example to start with!
—Jone Sang, Bentonville, AR

The people own the airways and our access should not be compromised.
—Ann Hollyfield, Seal Rock, OR

The internet has become an essential, not an option, a required part of the infrastructure needed to function in today's world, not a luxury that can be chosen or not by those who can afford it. Protecting net neutrality, therefore is essential, and the FCC's current proposal does NOT do this. Reclassify IPS's as common carriers. Do the right thing.
—Dan M Keusal Jr, Seattle, WA

The only ones to benefit from a tiered internet service are the providers. They get to charge both directions despite the fact that each side has already paid for the bandwidth necessary with their respective providers. Don't give the telecoms this pork barrel of a decision.
—Kevin Potter, Rio Rancho, NM

Egads, how much pandering to the rich and powerful is this government going to do?!?
—Robert Sink, Odenton, MD

I'm not an ISP's commodity. I do not believe ISPs should be able to sell access to me. The ISP is my already-bought-and-paid-for-se rvice and I expect them to deliver the entire web to me, efficiently and uncensored. The only excuse for a website or web-based service to be slow or unreliable is if the service itself is underpowered - it should never be slow or unavailable because my provider has chosen to throttle certain content as a shake-down for preferential delivery fees. Once that starts, I expect ALL my favorite sites will get throttled in turn until everyone is paying for the privilege of getting through to me. To prevent that, I am in favor of the FCC treating ISPs as utility service providers - who should be regulated as to the types of services they may (and may not) offer. My electric company doesn't offer me brownout-prone, inferior electricity unless I pay for a 'premium' service - my ISP shouldn't be allowed to do that either.
—Paul Thompson, New York, NY

The neutral environment we've enjoyed is what has lead to the internet being as popular and innovative as it has been for services, etailers, etc. While ISPs claim regulation would be harmful, they'd effectively be regulating it themselves, raising costs for consumers, online businesses, stifling innovation and competition. Ironically, this is exactly what they're predicting would happen if the FCC regulates them! ISPs are simply pipes and carriers from the web services to consumers, and nothing more. They're functionally the same as electricity and water/sewage providers. As is the relative lack of competition and investment has hurt American broadband compared to the rest of the industrialized world, resulting in slower, more expensive service as well as virtual monopolies in many areas. Please classify ISPs as common carriers.
—Sam Takara, Kahului, HI

Taxpayer money from real people, not faux-Citizens- United-people, developed the Internet. So, the Internet belongs to the people, not corporations. Stand up for people and Net Neutrality or stand down from the FCC and allow real representatives to fill your seats.
—James & Elizabeth Davies, Aurora, CO

Internet access should be treated the same as telephone access is! With every year, the internet becomes more and more necessary in our society. Allowing providers to give the best internet access to the highest bidders will only leave people in the dust. People trying their hardest to take online courses to get a college degree, new and small companies trying to get their presence known, these are the people that will suffer, and yet they truly need the internet to thrive. Declare ISPs common carriers!
—Jeremy Ondov, New York, NY

big business interests do not have a free functioning democracy or free media model in their best interests....gee, too bad.
—Michael Quick, Newport, WA

An open internet provides the opportunity for innovators and communicators to contribute and grow business and ideas. Nothing is more important than the widespread sharing of ideas. A two tiered internet only gives added advantage to those who are already established and closed to ideas not directly in their self interest. It is important to acknowledge that corporations are in the business of making money for the sake of their investors. That duty leads to a certain kind of decision making. The health of a society demands more these rules you have put forward can only be destructive to out society. The internet must remain neutral. Define it as the public utility it is with ISPs as common carriers. Establish rules to keep it open with equal access not censored and managed for the advantage of the few.
—Thomas Walther, Longmont, CO

In a world regulated by those who have, dictating to those who do not, Net Neutrality is imperative. Access to premium paid services does not belong on the net. It will be the virtual death knell to free expression for disabled individuals, who by our societal rules, are consigned to poverty. It will bias and skew the Net as people of color and low income are excluded. It will destroy equality and entrench the already empowered in a falsely-protected space, away from anyone deemed not worthy. The idea behind the Neutral Net is to create a universally level form of communication. The destruction of net neutrality will eventually lead to a communication revolution, as people find newer, unrestricted access to other forms of expression. As these forms will negatively affect the net, Your creation of two- or multi- tiered access is the first step towards the demise of the PC, and other businesses and innovations which rely on net neutrality. When you hold on too tightly to water, it slides thru your hand. Freezing it so you can hold it means the water cannot be used. And mix it with the fire you are stirring up in the general public will sublimate it into steam, and no one can use it then. The Net is a modern-day public commons. You are entrusted with its stewardship. Do you REALLY wish to create a sectioned public commons? How well has that ever worked? Keep the Net free from tiered access.
—Stacy Levenson, San Diego, CA

I value a free and open internet because one price gets me access to anything I want, no matter what it is or how different it is from what someone else wants to access. Take away Net Neutrality like you're planning on doing, and I'll unfairly have to pay more for the things that matter to me.
—Joel Farris, Solana Beach, CA

Stand up for Net Neutrality.
—Catlin Spargo, Lakewood, OH

We need the net to access wise and timely information that allows us to make good choices as world citizens.
—Mich Doyka, Santa Cruz, CA

The only thing holding our world back is the limits we put on it. The internet is a power that does not need restrictions to who can use it and how much they get. Equality to all who show up.
—Christopher Skylar Bolton, Durango, CO

The future is so much bigger than this. Please don't create any precedent that is not perfectly optimal. Your grandchildren's future may depend upon it.
—Mr. D Boller, Fountain Valley, CA

True Net Neutrality is necessary to foster innovation to keep our county competitive and stop global corporate conglomerates from dominating the marketplace.
—Andy Drake, Somerset, NJ

No matter how much you think your can "protect" the little guy with a set of complex rules, the guys with deep pockets will always find a way around them. The only solution is to keep it simple: classify them as Common Carriers. Those rules have been proven to work; why do you think the deep pockets are lobbying so strongly against them?
—Kay M Purcell, Carbondale, IL

ISPs say they allow UP TO a certain amount of speed. That means they could send you 1 byte a year of data and still be compliant with what is in their contract. Don't let them fuck over their customers that way and make them a common carrier for fuck's sake.
—Greg Pritchard, charlotte, NC

SICK OF BEING BULLIED BY PSYCHOPATHIC CORPORATIONS!
—R Palm, DRIPSPGS, TX

The internet is an important place where ideas flow freely, and it should stay that way.
—Sawsan, North Olmsted, OH

We all depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Conor Woodard, Henderson, NV

Access for all at the same speed and rate is essential in America's democracy. FREE speech. Not more free speech for a price, a price that billionaires and powerful corporations will be able to pay while 95% of us must accept less access. Keep the internet open to all. And, by the way, when will FCC demand that our rural friends get any access!! The internet should be deemed a public utility not sold to highest bidder.
—Ali Vorhies, Petaluma, CA

att already charges me extra for "faster" internet. others i know dont pay for the extra speed and their service is faster. this is what your rules encourage. net neutrality means no discriminarion of what services or sites i use online. i pay to use the internet, not to be told what i can do with it.
—Truman Fugle, Bandera, TX

Our Gonernment is notorious for an unsatable appetite for growth. Unfortunately as it grows it absorbes more and more of our freedoms. Enough already! What will it take for us to regain our freedoms? Lincoln Fox
—Lincoln Fox, Paonia, CO

Net neutrality is one way to protect our right of free speech and give all the same opportunities that people with money have to deliver a message. Human knowledge belongs to all the humans and shouldn't be restricted by greedy rules that discriminate and bully websites and users on the internet.
—Ricardo, Portland, OR stay away from the internet. Yall are nothing but PARASITES!

—Jon VanBeber, El Dorado, KS

No Matter what big business says it is going to cost the consumer in the end. PROTECT NET NUETRALITY
—John W Haney, Ft Pierce, FL

Televised news content is already dictated by their advertisers. Imagine McDonald's telling a library which books it can keep, or Disney Inc. determining which medical treatments are available to you. Corporations already control too much media content, and what they condescend to let us view is pathetically banal at best, tyranny an censorship at its worst! Tell "Giant Corp." to play nice, or go home!
—Elinor Higgins, Oakville, CT

Net Neutrality is a huge deal to me and my family. We've taken action, now we want to see you do the same, and PROTECT the open internet.
—Sophie Willborn, Oak Ridge, TN

Net neutrality is important because I want to be able to start a new business without worrying about competing with larger companies. If small businesses are a Priority then net neutrality should be a priority too.
—Paul C Shuey JR, Arlington, VA

These rules are terrible and would crush independent websites. The only reason I can think of for even wanting to this is if you, Chairman Wheeler, are receiving financial incentives from the Internet service providers, a gross conflict of interest and misuse of your position. Your job is to represent the people and not big business--don't forget it.
—J LeBlanc, Lebanon, NH

This proposal would in effect turn control of content over to Comcast and essentially amount to a monopoly.I always thought that was ILLEGAL. it should not be allowed. You are aiding and abetting a felony, in my opinion.
—clayton ford, Albuquerque, NM

A free and open internet is the single greatest, and most democratic technology of our time, and control of it should not be at the mercy of corporations. A free and open internet stimulates ISP competition. A free and open internet helps prevent unfair pricing practices. A free and open internet promotes innovation. A free and open internet promotes the spread of ideas. A free and open internet drives entrepreneurship. A free and open internet protects freedom of speech. To end Net Neutrality would be to destroy these things. This would be the most grossly irresponsible, selfish and greedy action any governing could enact. It would promote the spread of ignorance and massively widen the gap between the rich and the poor. I urge you in the name of humanity, please support Net Neutrality by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—George Forrester, Bristol, CA

I do not want my internet access cencored of made financially impractical by Corporate interests.
—Craig Browning, Alameda, CA

A free and open internet, being essential to free and uncensored speech, being an essential means of communication for a free, well-informed, populace cannot be encumbered, cannot be restrained by placing the means of access to such a medium within reach of only those who can afford it. The Internet, and the wires that carry the data that comprise the internet, is a public utility, are a part of the public commons, and should not be constrained or encumbered by any means. Classify the ISPs properly, call them what they are: common carriers of the peoples voice.
—Christopher Andrews, N. Fort Myers, FL

I work on web content for a public university competing with other institutions globally for students. If "fast lanes" are developed, our work is impeded - either by drawing away funds from other necessary uses to pay off ISPs for fast access or slowing down access to the information on our programs, which makes it more difficult for us to compete globally.
—Tina Ray, Haslett, MI

This decision reeks of corporate greed. You're already part of a country where the rich take most of the money and rule. Don't descend into Judge Dredd levels of corruption.
—Olivia Martin, ,

As a small business owner I value the reach to my customers via the internet. Everyone in government has been saying for years that they value and want to protect small business owners - well this is one way to do it!
—Kate Savage, Los Angeles, CA

For every citizen, access to information and services via the internet is a critical resource needed to function in society, almost as critical as basic literacy or having gas and electric at home. You do not want to be responsible for creating a two tiered society, restricting access to those wo do not have the money to pay for adequate internet speeds. Please do the right and sensible thing and classify the internet as a utility.
—Rachel Stevens, LIC, NY

Common carrier status for the American commons
—Jan Kravitz, Cotati, CA

I have worked in internet development for 20 years. The internet would be nothing today if net neutrality had not been enforced throughout that period. Removing it will be akin to hitting the pause button on internet development and innovation. Restore net neutrality immediately and in perpetuity.
—Aidrian O'Connor, Purdys, NY

This needs to stop. Companies are not supposed to rule the people....
—Trevor Cox, Bloomington, MN

The open Internet is valuable to everyone. Destroying Net Neutrality would ruin everything. People rely on the open Internet every day.
—John Zachery Carr, Roxboro, NC

The internet has replaced phones and faxes as the default communication system it need to be classified in way that the FCC can have regulatory access.
—Patricio Dominguez, Albuquerque, NM

a free speech is very important in this country don't let it go away
—Christopher riehl, warren, MI internet costs are already a joke in the USA. make it better and cheaper, not less useful and more costly.

—Paul Neujahr, Appleton, WI

Stop discrimination! Now
—Lachner Lachner, Gaimersheim,

Why would this, or any country, allow privatized agendas to run what is currently 'open information'? Why would this be allowed to be allowed? As our individual freedoms are whittled away, is this to be the next? This is completely unacceptable. Why would a few corporations have the right to dictate who/what has bandwidth, how much, and how available can that who/what make itself? The internet is currently a representation of 'free market' - 'open information'. Why would this be censored by private interests only interested in furthering their own profit? If this is to be allowed, then why do we need an FCC???????
—Mary MacNab, Crestone, CO

We need REAL Net Neutrality, we don't need "fast and slow" lanes.
—Larry Kimball, Cotopaxi, CO

Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Juan Camacho, ,

No one should have to pay more for access to the internet, either as a subscriber or a provider of content.
—John Pivovarnick, Dunmore, PA

A two-tiered Internet will further exacerbate the inequality faced by Americans today. Much of the innovation and commerce that have created this country has been built on the foundation of a strong middle class, access to education, etc. This will only exacerbate the problems and intensify the issues we face. WHY does it make sense to treat the internet as something that only the few should be able to access at its most effective? Treat ISPs as common carriers and allow the Internet to serve as the economic and educational innovation it can be. Giving further power to large corporations will not further the interests of the typical American. I am an American who has a significant investment in Wall Street (including AT&T, Verizon and Comcast) as well as other American corporations through my investment portfolio and I still think this is a terrible idea!!
—Kristin Kiely Pearson, Portland, OR

The internet must be free and equal for all. Anything less would undoubtedly have genuinely frightening consequences for democracy and free speech.
—Amanda Adams, Tacoma, WA

The internet belongs to everyone. We need to choose what we see and how we see it.
—Marilyn Stern, Fort Lauderdale, FL

The internet neutrality is part of our freedom, according to the Constitution, of choice, personal expression and peaceful action.
—Herald James Johnson, Albuquerque, NM

It's important to me because the internet is our the Users domain not to be bribed by the lobbyists who just want to corrupt it by their own selfish ulterior motives.
—Joel Greene, Fall River, MA

To keep rates reasonable!
—Arlene Thompson, Glenview, IL

If you appease a model that essentially allows ISPs to create an Internet fast lane for the consumers and vendors who can pay for it, you will severely encumber my small business's ability to compete in the open market. We can't afford to pay for the exposure that the current Internet provides. I urge you to prevent Big Internet from segregating the thousands of businesses like mine to an online ghetto and rewarding the financial elite. Please, act now!
—David Hernandez, Cloverdale, CA

I am disinterested in Big Corporations regulating what I can read, hear and do. Their goal is profits - one of the easiest ways to protect profits is to suppress competition. Please do not allow this to occur. Unfortunately, despite even the best intentions, it is absurd to think that any government agency could be a watchdog over the duplicitous and greedy behavior exhibited by the major service providers. It is also absurd to think that innovation will NOT be slowed by these absurd rules. Innovation is America's future - it MUST be protected.
—Thomas St John, Woodway, WA

Everyone should be able to access everything on the Internet equally. End of story. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Ryan Littman-Quinn, Sarasota, FL

Come on. This is important business. But the governments role should be ensuring the same rules apply to anyone for what is turning into the default way of communicating for many.
—Wade bowen, Brooklyn, NY

The internet is vital to citizens, schools, businesses and nonprofit groups. Any "tiering" of the Internet is unacceptable and a recipe for discrimination--even more so than it is today with some households still able to have only dial up. Do not throw out the rules--keep the Internet equally accessible to all.
—Marilyn Jasper, Loomis, CA

The sharing of ideas needs to be open to all not only big business.
—Wilma Davison, Vincentown, NJ

I'm sick of the widening gap between the haves and the have-nots. I'm also sick of the government trying to regulate things they have no business in. Back off!
—Camilla, Riva, MD

I am paying the ISP for the internet and not for specific services. ISP has no business in what I use internet for and they have no right to meddle with or to control the traffic. Let's say I am paying for 10 mbps speed, they better provide me that 10 mbps for everything and anything I want to use. Please protect Net Neutrality.
—Naveen Thallati, WADSWORTH, IL

The reason is simple: If it ain't broke, don't fix it! If the power brokers need more money, let them mow lawns.
—Mrs & Robert Levins, Clayton, GA

What a joke, Tom Wheeler is obviously some revolving-door scumbag. How much money did they pay you TOM???!?!!? FU!!!
—Edward Tilbury, Las Vegas, NV

The internet is my only window to the world. When you have medical problems you need something to do, the internet fills my day that would otherwise be empty.
—Robert Guzzy, shavertown, PA

The internet is for online businesses, buying, selling, talking with friends and family, job searching and, banking. It works best the way it is now.
—Adam, Rock Island, IL

Internet is a service just like water and sewer and phone. It should be open and equal for everyone.
—Anne Barrat, Shenendoah Junction, WV

The proposed 'rules of the Internet' stand to inhibit free speech, a fact which is unspeakably heinous. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers and give everyone the freedom of cyberspace that we not only demand, but should be our RIGHT.
—Asher Brown, Lewisville, TX

I depend on Net Neutrality to keep my content providers giving me first class service.
—Emil Reisman, Encino, CA

The Internet should remain a free and open place for every user, not just ones who can afford to pay more for extra content. Someone who has access to the Internet should have that access be unrestricted. The Internet is an important tool for learning, a place to connect to others, and a form of entertainment. Something as integral to the country as it is shouldn't be dominated by big business. Every time companies get their way, little people lose. Stand up for the little people by standing up for Net Neutrality.
—Chel George, Orlando, FL

Reclassify ISPs as COMMON CARRIERS, we need net neutrality. In this day and age, the internet is an important part of everyone's lives, we all use it for day to day needs. These companies are paid to give people internet, not decide what's okay or what isn't. Some people don't have a choice in what providers they can use, and are already stuck with unfair costs. Allowing big companies like Comcast, AT&T and Verizon to also further impact prices based on what they like or don't like is horrendous. Monopolies are supposed to be illegal, step up, actually listen to those you represent, and force ISPs to reclassify as COMMON CARRIERS.
—Jordan Rushing, Paris, TX

Please protect the public! I don't think you need an explanation on WHY ISPs should be reclassified as common carriers. Americans are watching this carefully. Please do the right thing.
—Chris Meredith, Sunnyvale, CA

Net Neutrality is very important for many reasons; sure we have our little things that people do like youtube, facebook and such, but the internet is a great communication device and one that many people worldwide have come to rely on, and it would be unfair to put the power of the web to people who can pay extra for it.
—Connor, Helena, MT

Giving internet providers the option to discriminate against certain content is fundamentally wrong in the American way of life and fundamentally wrong against free speech in America. Keep net neutrality alive and give the American people what they want.
—Ethan, Saint Charles, IL

I would hope that the FCC would not allow a corporate take over of the net. Please think about the millions of folks who use the net and enjoy what it has to offer. Please classify ISP as common carriers. Earl Keefer
—Earl Keefer, Naperville, IL

There will be no way my small business will be able to compete without net neutrality. The people are the real backbone of this country from working the menial tasks that keep society moving to buying the majority of goods and services big companies produce. However, the backbone can and WILL break. Allowing big corporations control over the internet for no other reason than profits will go a long way towards crushing that backbone. Of course, you already KNOW all of this and that means only one thing... you, too, have been bought and don't care.
—Cathy Spalding, Olympia, WA

A two-tiered internet would not serve the highest good.
—Winnie Durdant-Hollamby, forest row,

Net Neutrality is important for the future of communication within the world. The Internet is a great resource and its openness must be preserved.
—Mr. Faraaz Sareshwala, Pleasanton, CA

Schools and education will suffer the most when you deny them access to education videos from around the world via the Internet because many schools have old and slow equipment that will make using a slower Internet impractical and unjustifiable. Stop working for corporations and start to work for the people.
—Kevin FitzMaurice, Portland, OR

When I first made a comment on this topic, I received a reply ostensibly from Tom Wheeler in which he indicated that he was on the side of Net Neutrality. What a shock and disappointment it was to learn that apparently, he was lying to me. Keep the internet open to all. No service provider should have the right to limit my access to the internet.
—Esther M. Leonard, Huntington, WV

The Internet is a Public Utility. Please make it so!
—Jim Snee, Center Rutland, VT

Please reconsider the action you want to take.
—Matthew, Manhattan, KS

The internet should not be bastardized by corporations like the rest of America. Its a necessity in today's society and should be treated as such.
—Keeley Augsburger, Cuyahoga Falls, OH

i make part of my living from internet traffic. if you go ahead with the proposed changes i lose that part of income. then i shall be at poverty level. do you want another person on food stamps????
—Cheryl Kumiski, buxton, ME

My phone bill costs enough for just DSL speed internet. I can't afford to pay more and it's unfair for this kind of two-tiered internet to even happen in out country.
—Susan H. Jackson, Columbia, NC

A two-tiered Internet sets up the "haves" and the "have nots" once again. The Internet should be accessible to all at the same speed. The Internet Service Providers should be building the system to allow more access to more people in more regions rather than restricting access.
—Barbara Perea, San Francisco, CA

We already have inequality in internet speeds. Just go to a library at a College or University and see how much faster the internet loads than us private resident users. We expect equal access without having to "buy" speed.
—Kris Snider, Moses Lake, WA

FCC Chairman @Wheeler: If you follow through and change the Net Neutrality Act I would have to question your intelligence, Your fairness and the depth of your Americanism. Apparently you are not aware just how unfair our country has become because of people like you work for the benefit of Wall Street, Big Business and Big Government. If you present and pass this proposed two level neutrality act, you will not be serving We The People rather you will be serving Selfishness, Unfairness,and will be taking a citizens right away from them. You Sir are serving the devil.
—Duane O. Jackson, Saint Croix Falls,, WI

The internet NEEDS to be treated like a public commodity, available to all equally. This is essential to both democracy and technical innovation.
—Bethany Morse, Louisville, KY

The Internet's openness and egalitarian nature has fueled innovation to a degree never before seen in this country. It's had a tremendous impact in commerce, education, entertainment, and virtually every aspect of human endeavor. Let's not be shortsighted. It is important that we keep the Internet as it is, a one-tiered Internet, an Internet for all.
—Edison Thomaz, Atlanta, GA

I make my living by making multiplayer games. If the internet is not protected, only big corporations will be able to afford to make games that are played over the internet - and the best, most innovative developments in gaming have always been driven by small developers with nothing to lose and everything to gain
—Leonard Boyarsky, Lake Forest, CA

you must reject these rules and instead move to protect real Net Neutrality.Net Neutrality is important
—Elmer Verguson, mercer, PA

Net Neutrality allows the free exchange of ideas and content between people that would be taken away if you were to enact this plan. No corporations should be in charge of what goes and what doesn't. This would be a dangerous precedent.
—Jovan Gauthier, Albuquerque, NM

I, like 90% of the people, cannot afford your love of (or kickbacks from) big business. We cannot afford the extra costs and should not lose or ability for a fast internet while you bend over and kiss big business's south side. Start thinking about the average person (the majority).
—Gerald R. Westfal, Plymouth, MI

In fear of the new proposals, Venture investors are starting to back away from new projects that feature high bandwidth use. The proposed rules are already having a negative effect on the economy that I make a living in. Please, do not back the new "Fast Lane" regulations.
—Thomas Rideout, Cardiff by the Sea, CA

Chairman Wheeler's plan is JOKE, a SELLOUT. How pathetically disappointing. Will no one stand up against GREED?
—Thomas Matthews, Ben Lomond, CA

We already pay too much for Internet access. Why should we pay more for a fast lane? Please require Internet service providers to do what we pay them to do: give us fast and open access to the entire Internet. Don't mess with net neutrality.
—Ms. Cathy Lundmark, Galesville, MD

A democratic country needs as much transparency from a wide variety of news sources to thrive . If 2 or 3 internet providers are running the show they will promote their preferred sources to the detriment of all other sources by charging a extra for those not favored by them or simply slowing them for down
—Gene Ankli, Tacoma, WA

So it doesn't cost me $1000.00 a month for my computer!!!!!!!!!!
—Mercy Drake, Mesa, AZ

Broadband it already a monopoly and only available in most areas from a single carrier and our costs have tripled in just the last few years. There is no other option and as such cable should be regulated under antitrust like any other public utility and certainly not allowed to create a multi-tiered internet with separate speeds for different communications co's.
—Camille Ellis Vickers, New Orleans, LA

Please keep the internet open. Don't make communication a privilege of the rich.
—Sebastien Lavoie, Phoenix, AZ

This change could leave many internet goers in very unfair and probably very overpriced situations. Keep the net equal like the way it has been.
—Solomon Branch, Toledo, OH

Important to all small business!!!
—Judi Duncan Yantiss, Royal Oak, MI

The Internet belongs to the people, not the corporations. To make common users pay more for Internet fastlanes is grossly unjust and we will stand for it!
—Michael Camp, Winooski, VT

Net neutrality is the only way to globalisation, fair markets and international development
—Mikael Laine, ,

My provider offers a few different tiers—or speeds—of Internet service, so I choose the one that makes sense for my household and that’s the end of it. It is none of the broadband provider’s business how I choose to use the pipeline, or which sites or services I stream content from over the pipeline, and the broadband provider shouldn’t be allowed to extort additional money from those sites or services for the privilege of delivering that content to me. In my opinion, that is the sum total of the role of the broadband provider—to build and maintain the pipeline. I don’t think Comcast CMCSA +1.25% should give priority access to NBC content just because it owns the network, and I don’t think broadband providers should be allowed to throttle or limit any specific types of content, or content from specific providers.
—Dakotah Morgan, Plant City, FL

Our internet speeds and access are already sub-par, given what is available in other countries. We will not stand to be held back further by corporate and governmental greed.
—Patricia Willenborg, Glendale, CA

Net Neutrality will assure that communication is free and clear of interference or control by a third party. We don't need peer to peer communication being intentionally slowed or any type of discrimination that would discourage those who are not in the "fast lane" from using the Internet. ISPs should be classified as common carriers which would give us only one tier, not two.
—Lea Harlow, Shavano Park, TX

A free and open Internet is vital to the future of democracy and the interests of corporations should not be put ahead of the people. My business too depends upon free and open movement of data across the network from providers to clients.
—Brian May, New York, NY

By abolishing Net Neutrality we take another step away from fair play and add another feather to the oligarchical cap.
—Phillip Frey, Los Angeles, CA

ISPs need to be classified as common carriers for the United States to remain a decent nation. Failing to classify the ISPs as a common carrier would create a caste system of the internet where small start-up companies will never be able to compete with the larger ones. Please classify ISPs as common carriers and make the United States a world class innovator again.
—Conor Keilty, Scottsdale, AZ

The inter is a free place When having the neutrality it open up a monopoly for Big Business
—Andrew, Pittsburgh, PA

Dear Mr. Wheeler and colleagues, As if the millions before me haven't already spoken clearly enough, you MUST protect our 1st Amendment right to free speech. It is your responsibility. It is your duty. You have been tasked with keeping the communications market safe, fair, and open. You are the sole protector of our rights as citizens to operate within a free market and not be pushed asunder by the rich and powerful. The FCC alone stands between a fair market, and a complete monopoly. The internet has become tantamount to existence in this nation as of recent. You will be hard pressed to find a job that doesn't require you to apply online instead of in person. Our children rarely get paper report cards anymore and parents must check the status of their progress in school online. Much of the banking we do, and bills we receive are online as well. An email can even be held as evidence in court. Bearing that in mind, how can you allow the word wide web to be bought and sold by the powerful? How can you allow corporations to dictate who makes it in this world, and who does not? Everyone deserves an equal opportunity to access the wealth of information the internet contains. It is how we connect and share our lives. It is how we receive news and current events. It is how we shed light on human rights violations, environmental destruction, and many other atrocities that would never be brought to light without the internet. It is how we will unite and produce a better world. Internet access is so crucial, so all encompassing to our existence in this day and age that it was even deemed a basic human right by the UN in 2011. How can you deny us this right to a free and open internet? Reverse your decision. Be a hero. Be a patriot. Be an American. Declare Internet Service Providers (ISP's) common carriers. Bring an end to this madness once and for all!
—Marc Whitmire, Morristown, TN

This idea is simply a bad one all around if anything based around the fact these companies like Comcast, AT&T are already in violation of many of the Anti-monopoly laws the Federal govt. has set forth yet refuse to take action to stop and break up these companies into much smaller ones. This would only allow those monopolies to grow even further. This time action must be takes to strip the power out of the hands of these corporate hogs and greedy CEO's and the FCC and put it back where it belongs and that is in the hands of the people not these greed driven corporations.
—Chris Worthing, Littlestown, PA

When I pay for my internet connection, I expect to get the advertised speeds from my ISP regardless of whatever content source I am viewing. What I do not expect is that my ISP will intentionally throttle and lower my download speed because the content provider is not also paying for that same speed I HAVE ALREADY PAID FOR. ISPs are already doing this by asking content providers to pay more. This amounts to corporate extortion. This is why Net Neutrality is important to me!
—Peter Chen, Torrance, CA

Because the people funded development of the internet and it should benefit all users equally, not just be a cash cow for monopolistic corporations.
—Armin wright, Oakland, CA

I want internet to be how it is now.Why people always destroys what they have built.DON'T CHANGE THE INTERNET!
—Aivars Vilks, ,

The Internet is a public utility! It is also a crucial safeguard for democracy, which is why the oligarchy wants to BUY it. Come into the 21st century.
—Carol Fusco, Berkeley, CA

The internet is a utility and should be reclassified under Title II as a common carrier, thus giving it REAL net neutrality, not this loop hole filled doctrine.
—Ian Caronia, Queens, NY

Keep the internet free for all! Once we provide partiality in any way to big corporations it's a slippery slope to losing access and along with that information and knowledge that should be available to anyone who seeks it. Don't let big business decide who can access the internet
—Daniel, Edmonds, WA

To me it seems like more of the same; Widening the gap between Wall street and Corporations and Main street. Keep the Internet open and equal to ALL!
—Paul Cobb, Tucson, AZ

ISPs should be classified as common carriers to avoid monopolistic conflicts of interest that stifle innovation and prevent tech-sector start-ups and small businesses from growing the economy.
—William Luebke, Fairfax, VA

it is already hard enough for those without deep pockets to do business or make our voices heard -- do not endanger the open internet. Your legal jargon to the contrary, it is plain to see the direction the FCC would like to take in the proposed internet rules. Please listen to the people who are demanding that ISPs be reclassified as common carriers.
—Linda M Thomas, Cornell, MI

The internet should be equal for everyone, making customers pay for faster internet (instead of the slow lane) ontop of the monthly fees they already have. That would be outrageous.
—Harris Hubert Rothaermel, Cumming, GA

Leave the Net neutral...
—Tom Gledhill, ,

The U.N. declared the internet a basic human right. Stick up for we the people instead of the corporations.
—Alan Hoffar, Muskegon, MI

I believe that the FCC should throw out its rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. This proposal would kill the open Internet.
—Johnathan Pringle, Lawrence, KS

Please do not take the open internet away from American citizens and give it to corporations who will charge more and more as the years go by and pass the costs along to American customers while raking off a new source of profit. Why should government give this to big business?
—Robert McAndrew, Boise, ID

More Freedoms
—Avner Wareheim, north miami, FL

The internet is for everyone not those who can afford it. These new rules are limiting how much we as a PLANET can develop. Lets remove the breaks an push towards the future.
—Nicklas Steffens, Chicago, IL

I deplore an internet that goes to the highest bidder. It is unAmerican to hobble this public utility. Don't kill Net Neutrality!
—Patricia McRae Baley, Las Vegas, NV

Television and radio are already controlled by major media corporations. Internet is the only place where the common people still have an equal opportunity to have a voice--that is why the internet is so popular, because anyone can participate. Please don't take this away from us too. Represent the desires of the common people. Please. Thank you
—Amanda Ashley, North Hollywood, CA

Giving preferential treatment to certain content providers is dangerous and undermines the power of free speech that the internet has given us.
—David Berk, Waupaca, WI

The first law in our Constitution is that discrimination is illegal. And even though the Internet did not exist at the time this law was written down I am sure the makers of that law intended it to work for all (future) cases. So discrimination is illegal, also on the Internet. Meaning that the Internet should be open as it is now.
—GPM Buiskool, ,

The internet is the one world wide neutral zone where everyone can be without being affected by things like wars, or fighting, or constrictions. It's where the world thrives, where the world comes together as one being and coexists, humanity has made it clear that we cannot do this in person, so why take away out bonds from the rest of the world and basically make us slaves again? The Internet is something that no one should control, and SHOULDN'T control, it is free, free from government control, free from war, free from pain and hatred, taking that away from us will take away our rightful freedom to be who we are and do what we want within reason. Taking that away would ruin the beauty that programmers, and designers, like me, have worked so hard to create and perfect. You aren't just hurting those too poor to pay for the fast stuff, you're also hurting those who create what the web is, please, don't take away out freedoms like this, it's not right, it will never be right, we have a right to be free.
—Charles Heller, Sabina, OH

The US is already behind on internet speeds, please don't divide and marginalize us even further. My future as a ux designer and innovator depends on net neutrality.
—Rachelle Adams, Seattle, WA

If the new proposed rules are implemented, new internet business will be at a significant if not unsurmountable disadvantage compared to established businesses. This to me violates the whole concept of the internet, changing it into another tool for the rich and well-heeled instead of the tool for all of us as it should be —Duane Hall, Sandy, UT

Creating a two-tier system would further discriminate people who are poor and prevent them from information which can help them find jobs, be used in their education and in processing college applications, and even help them stay connected with family and friends. Plus, we are already behind what people in other countries already are able to access in terms of speed, reliability, and cost.
—Cecile Adams, Iredell, TX

As a senior citizen, I have only modest resources upon which to draw for my daily, monthly and yearly expenses. Should big Internet providers such as Verizon, Comcast and AT&T create a two-tiered Internet, I would be unable to afford the extra expense. I believe it is fair and just to EVERYONE who uses the Internet to have equal access to its capabilities. This is why I am requesting you to eliminate rules to create a fast-lane, slow-lane Internet and to reclassify Internet service providers, noted above, as Common Carriers. Please remember that you and the men and women of the Federal Communications Commission work for and on behalf of everyone in the United States and not just very wealthy corporations. Thus, I believe it is your duty to provide equal access to all of us who use the Internet. Please contact me with any questions or observations you may have. Anne B. Ruud abruud3300@aol.com Tel: (415) 668-6086
—Anne B. Ruud, San Francisco, CA

Net neutrality is critical to ensure that content from providers such as non-profits or organizations that might not be popular with ISPs and backbone providers isn't "downgraded", making it harder or impossible to access such content.
—Bruce Lott, Cincinnati, OH

Well if this rules go through I will dropping my provider I have emailed this information to them as well and am going to start a campaign to get more people to boycott isp's this will hurt their bottem line god forbid that.
—Brendan Kenny, Milwaukee, WI

The Internet is the greatest communication network of modern times. There is no good social reason to subdivide it into a hierarchy of access based on capital resources. That would only benefit major businesses and perpetuate the dominance of big capital enterprises to the determinate of smaller businesses and consumers.
—Robert Sacco, New York, NY

Please help keep the playing field even for small business owners & start ups.
—Joe Tatro, San Diego, CA

The ability to get unrestricted access to information and communication in all its forms through the WWW is important to me as an information specialist, working in a public library where access is of dire importance for those with limited means. I also value it as an individual that spends a great deal of time communicating and streaming entertainment from the web.
—Patrick Brennan, Medford, MA

The internet is an amazing force for democracy in the world today. Equality of access to media and equality of access to the means of distributing media are central to this kind of democratic Internet. Please do not allow America to fall behind in this respect by allowing a corporate take-over of the Internet. Please protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Kevin Harriman, Portland, OR

Right now we pay for speed of access, but not the ability TO access certain sites/businesses. Please do not take that away.
—Julie Luxenberg, Montgomery Village, MD

Don't kill thousands of small businesses and business opportunities. Keep net neutrality. Let not the rich get richer and more powerful always.
—Stephen Gregoire, Mill Valley, CA

Don't you have enough money? Stop allowing corporate special interests groups to monopolize the internet.
—Joe Donnelly, Anderson, IN

I stand for Net Neutrality, I want the FCC to throw out it's rules and reclassify ISPs as common carriers!
—James Vincent Gomez Jr., San Antonio, TX

I view the internet as a place where everyone can interact, don't take that away or even try to limit it.
—Patrick savill, Wellington, NY

I work with a number of small businesses and start-ups, many of whom struggle just to survive. They are learning the many ropes they have to jump through, the staff they need, the operational structure they need. And one thing they all desperately need is a free and open internet that doesn't give an immediate advantage to larger competitors. To put up yet another barrier to entry for businesses by establishing a world of fast lanes, which by it's very nature means slow lanes, you will be stifling both innovation and small business America. Our roads are used for transporting goods across the country, our phone system is a communication backbone and by and large that traffic is treated equally. The internet, does the same things, and should be treated and seen in the same light? Why exactly is it any different than a phone line? This is especially hard to fathom in an age where the internet has become a lifeblood of businesses and individuals both. How will small business compete in an era where fast lanes are created? Many small businesses depend on internet traffic, and using content to drive traffic to achieve success for their business. Shut that down or start to control that and you are in effect shutting down numerous small businesses across the country. This seems like a very slippery slope. And due to the money and political clout of the ISP's, a slope I have no doubt they will continue to go down. Chairman Wheeler has mentioned that he won't let the ISP's start selecting the have and have-nots, not under his watch. Even if that is the case, at some point there will be an FCC chairman and board who will reflect the values of these large corporations and be blind to the wishes of small businesses. How does the FCC factor for that happening? What will stop all the small businesses and all of us from in the end being on either a fast and slow lane? I have yet to hear what will stop this evolution from taking place besides having a proactive Chairman. Either way, I hope the FCC can seriously consider the dramatic step they are considering taking and the long-term harm it may do to business in this country and equal opportunity. Is it really worth the risk of making a few ISP's happy when it could evolve into being the death knell for many businesses across the country? Thanks for your consideration.
—Kevin McGoldrick, San Diego, CA

The internet is not a private privilege. It is a modern day necessity. Please make it a utility service we can all use.
—Mark Arntson, Seattle, WA

Plenty of people get all their information from the Internet. By enforcing non-net neutrality rules you are discouraging the free exchange of knowledge and growth of the human mind.
—Jason Hyman, Kiefer, OK

Stop giving more power to corporations who put money and shareholders interests above the common good. Bring back DEMOCRACY and TRANSPARENCY to the USA instead allowing corporations to re-monopolize, i.e. ATT and Direct TV, in order to control content and speed to squeeze more money from those of us who most need and can least afford the services.
—J Agata, Sebastopol, CA

The Internet is an increasingly important part of our world, and it is very important to me that it remain open and neutral. This is a matter of free speech and, therefore, it is integral to democracy.
—Rebecca Connor, New Orleans, LA neutrality of the internet is vital to our interaction as a society and to my professional activity conducted via the internet site of my employer.

—Doris Thurber, TEANECK, NJ

Let Net Freedom RING!!!
—KJ Nelson, Port Charlotte, FL

I'm a teacher and I have seen the way that web access has transformed education. I believe that it is important for these companies to be considered common carriers. This will allow for the net to remain affordable and accessible for students and all of us to get the access to information we need to be competitive in a global market.
—Lauren L Shetler, Rockville, MD

Please act in the interests of the American people, not the carrier profits.
—Bill Sorem, Minnetonka, MN

The American public paid for the infrastructure the internet is running on in the 1990s. More than half that infrastructure is sitting idle. Please stop giving it away to Comcast. It belongs to the Public and should be treated as a National resource.
—Lawrence R. Beauvais, Portland, OR

My easy, speedy and affordable access to the internet is necessary to my activity on a free and open democracy. I should matter than large corporations.
—Diane Verhoest, San Antonio, FL

Please, everyone depends on the internet for their own personal success. Its obvious to everyone that this will only result in increased pricing for everyone, even you. How will i get people to view my website when i'm looking for work? how will I get possible customers to come to me if i start a business? The internet isn't just for those who can pay to use it. Please, Please fight for us. This country was not founded on capitalism and greed, but rather freedom and action.
—Zachary Asher, New York, NY

A neutral Internet is a prerequisite for REAL DEMOCRACY. Shame on you Mr. Wheeler for subverting it!
—John Witte, Portland, OR

I believe that true net neutrality should be kept, to keep the ideals of america strong. Please stand with me in saying that this proposal must not pass.
—Chase Gilbert, Las Cruces, NM

I am a retired senior with a fixed low income. I do not have television, don't receive newspapers or journals. This is my primary connection to the outside world. I'm trying to understand your motivation- besides money- because I know you don't need that. Unless you are in the category of where enough is never enough. In that case you'll leave this earth an unfulfilled person. There are some folks who are simply insatiable, and operate under the illusion that taking away from others make them, somehow more powerful. If this is the case, I suppose I might feel some sympathy for you.
—Caro Lorber, Kelseyville, CA

Free speech in the US has been severely compromised by media consolidation. Further destroying it in the last place it effectively exists is unconscionable. There is no excuse for this rule; it is bowing to the wishes of huge corporations who have no interest in the welfare of the US or the people of the world.
—Jeffrey H. Cope, San Pablo, CA

The end of net neutrality would disadvantage a number of small-medium businesses and effectively amounts to an assault on freedom of speech.
—Kapil Amarasinghe, ,

This would do nothing more tan give the isp's a license to screw the public. For once how about doing the right thing?
—Albert L. Wiest, Birbsboro, PA

Open internet is a right. Not something ISP can toy around with and take away just for irrational financial gain. Keep the Net Neutrality and keep the internet equally open. This country doesn't need something else to be unequal. Don't take more from the lower classes. I need Net Neutrality.
—Madison Reardon, San Jose, CA

ISP's are common carriers and need to be classified as such. I am counting on you to make the right decision instead of caving in to special interests.
—Steve Collins, Tijeras, NM

The proposed actions by Chairman Wheeler are preposterous. THERE IS NOTHING BROKEN HERE TO FIX. Unless he is in the pocket of some seedy backroom lobbyist there should not even be a discussion. Please designate the open Internet as a utility and end the very real possibility of destroying a magnificent creation which presently is one of the few privileges left to people of all socio-economic classes.
—Amy Ettinger, Phoenix, AZ

This is yet another attempt by the rich to get richer, making people pay for what they already purchased. MSKE ISPS COMMON CARRIERS. Don't pave the way for them to abuse their position and extort more money from subscribers.
—Jared Christensen, McKinney, TX

Don't let Congress let big business do to the internet what they did to the banking system!
—Barry Gillogly, West Brookfield, MA

It s wrong to let a few corporations ambush and aquire for their own interests something that has developed organically with the people of the world. I have met many interesting and positive people from many cultures and had access to purchase goods from companies of my choosing. If this is controlled by limited number of companies, development will be slowed and access to any products not controlled or approved of by those claiming ownership will become limited. I thought America believed in freedom and free trade not closed shops reeking of totalitarian oligarchies
—Bryan Meloy, ,

Let's keep the Internet fair and accessible to everyone.
—Aniket, Morrisville, NC

With America already in hardship and still reeling from the economies downfall. It would be an added burden to our society. We also want the internet to be available to all as it is even used frequently at school and at home for children to learn and finish assignments but with high cost and useless service this could be detrimental to their education. It is in my own home that my boys needed the internet for school assignments. It is also a very social format for my wife and I who use the internet for socializing. As we are not comfortable and experience anxiety around others and crowds. It is also a very free speech arena where you can voice your opinion, share ideas, discuss issues, watch videos, listen to music, download info or the aforementioned. It is a tool for a wide variety of things. From entertainment to shopping. My wife buys clothes online. She doesn't like stores and crowds and they have her size at online stores. Please do not let the internet be two tiered and keep the internet open to all. Even this message is online!
—John Stephen Melland, Boise, ID

The internet shouldn't be capitalized it is a innovation that should be for the people by the people not corporations for money.
—Alex Bishop, Ambler, PA

Some cannot be more equal to others on the internet. To have the internet otherwise is just another scheme of " pay to play". Please preserve true net neutrality.
—Susan Watson, Orinda, CA

The internet is based on open free access...please don't commercialize it.
—Adam LaFever, Cumming, GA

I am a teacher and my students use the Internet to research and complete their homework. Other students take classes online. The Internet is a critical part of our education system. Please maintain a fast and fair Internet; it is critical to being competitive with other countries.
—Hazel Rozema, Manchester, MO

Net Neutrality is what has kept innovation going- a two-tiered system will stifle new initiatives, and make free speech more difficult.
—Nils Ohlson, Alameda, CA

The internet has become the single most important resource for the entire world. With the new laws in action, my company and any other companies I may start/work for in the future will suffer because we can't afford a "Super Fast Lane" on the internet highway. The internet is one place that freedom and equality continue to prevail, and this plan would ruin that for all of us.
—Mike Cunningham, Providence, RI

The Internet should be an example of and for democracy. It should be equally available to all.
—Frances Bicknell, Madison, WI

These proposals are unconstitutional and against the ethos upon which the interne is based.
—Adam Capps, Davis, CA

It gives everyone more freedom!!
—Dave Smith, Prineville, OR

Net Neutrality is what allows our nation in these modern times to resemble anything close to a democracy. Without it, we are lost.
—Paulette Yousefzadeh, Southlake, TX

I am not just a consumer on the net - I am a provider. I provide content for other consumers and provide items for market places. I am a craftsman and a creator. I surely could not afford extra fees to make my website easy to use for my customers and viewers. I rely on the equality on the net to give me a chance to run with big corporations. It is the only way I can stay in business, and without access to high speed traffic, my business will die.
—James Clark, Glenside, PA

Your job is to protect the rights of communication access to all Americans without bias to ensure the same access for everyone. The only reason anyone can see for you taking an action giving exclusivity to some via the internet support providers is based solely on greed. Someone at the FCC is obviously getting a kickback of some kind. There is no sound reasoning behind allowing ISP's to segregate access to internet streaming speeds for additional funds as money should not be an issue. Access for all is the issue. Shame on you for sponsoring discrimination. There will be consequences such as a class action suit by every American out there that believes in common ground for the common man. That's what this country is supposed to be all about. Sadly, with actions like yours it is becoming more and more have and have nots!
—John Booth, Pensacola, FL

A tiered internet is bad for our economy and bad for consumers. Supporting yet another give away to big media is poor stewardship of the internet highway which belongs to all Americans and is only rented to corporations.
—Mrs. Jean Waller, Chicago, IL nothing is broken so nothing needs fixing!

—Blake O'Quinn, Mount Pleasant, TX

I used the internet to complete online assignments and take quizzes while obtaining both my Bachelors and Masters degree. Without net neutrality I wouldn't have been able to access the information I needed quickly. The threat to net neutrality is a threat to the ability to access higher education.
—Kira Younger, Carmichael, CA

Life in the fast lane is only for the rich and corporations. This plan is anti-democratic. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Susan Haywood, Portland, OR

I cannot believe this "fast lane/slow lane" delivery method is even being seriously considered. It benefits corporations at a huge cost and loss to society at large. Net Neutrality is critical and it is up to the government to protect it. In case anyone has forgotten it was tax payer dollars that paid to develop the Internet and World Wide Web in the first place.
—Anne Menzies, Salt Lake City, UT

ISPs should be classified as common carriers - that is, in fact, what they are, and they should be treated and regulated as such.
—Jonathan Head, Raleigh, NC

Keep internet servers/ISPs as common carries. Throw out your ruling.
—Linda Tift, Chapel Hill, TN

It is anti-competitive for big companies to be able to effectively block smaller competitors by buying bandwidth.
—Robert Garlough, Renton, WA

I'm elderly, disabled, very low income, and depend on a reasonably priced internet for much in my life including communication between me and my doctors. A grandson needs it for research for school. Be honest and fair.
—Sonja Stahlhut, Durham, NC

Everyone deserves fair and equal access to information.
—Julia Duvall, Oakland, CA

As an artist and musician, in the early stages of my life and career, like many others, I need Net Neutrality, We need the open internet. Without the ability to share my content online where anyone, anywhere can freely access it, myself and many other self starter business owners will immediately suffer. Having a closed and restricted internet will only be detrimental to our society. Many people depend on their access to the internet not only for information but also to supplement their income. This is a war on the citizens of this country, being waged by those in power. Those who have more than enough money, have no need for more and have no place in making any decisions that would greatly impact the function of our society. What they truly are is a conglomerate of bloodsucking, selfish bastards. The ability to access information does not belong to the ISPs. Access to Information belongs to the people. Remember, the ISPs work the people. We pay them to ensure that the internet continues functioning, we are not here to pay them to separate it and make it more difficult to access. There is no need for a "middle man" to dictate who can do what. How can we function as a worldwide, and at this level, national community if our internet access is cut off and dictated by who has money and who does not? Our civilization has come to point where it depends on our access to communication. We need to work together to ensure that this happens, not be fighting each other about who gets to do what. It is not your place to allow these companies to have their way. Access needs to be equal for everyone, and free. It is not their place to take a resource that belongs to everyone and try to restrict it. This is an infringement on my rights as a human being to have access to information, so I demand that the FCC save the open internet and do the right thing for Net Neutrality.
—Ruben Alvarado, Kennesaw, GA

Because of corporate monopoly, U.S. internet service is slow, unreliable and expensive. Ending Net Neutrality will only worsen this. You must reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Marco McClean, Mendocino, CA

Internet service providers should not be able to restrict what legal internet content their customers have access to, by either cost or speed. The internet is the forum of opportunity it is because there was equal access for anyone. Allowing ISPs to charge for faster service will eliminate opportunities for small businesses and nonprofit organizations, reducing competition and variety of services. Protect net neutrality and reclassify ISPs as common carriers, which should have been done years ago.
—Rebecca Schuetz, North Syracuse, NY

The Internet was invented on public dime. It's time to remove the 1% from their thrones and to stop their assumption of priveledge and greed.
—Bob Gaffrey, Southfield, MI

Because I believe in freedom of business competition and without ao neutral net, I fear it will be gone.
—James Taylor, Columbus, IN

If we believe in "freedom of speech" we believe in "Net Neutrality"!
—Chuck Smith, Sandpoint, ID

ISPs are common carriers and shall never be anything else. WE are the content providers. Period!
—Ivan Vedic Ai, ,

Preventing the underprivileged from having equal Internet access to the rich is a discriminatory policy. Everyone should be able to use the Internet without being segregated based on economic status.
—Josie Walker, Austin, TX

Internet competition in the US has come to a standstill, as a few companies purchase their competition and leave most markets with no competition for broadband. The US pays more money for lower speeds than any other first-world nation in the world — and quite a few less prestigious nations as well. Comcast, Time Warmer, etc, are rapidly becoming de-facto monopolies in their markets. While monopolies are not illegal, abuse of monopoly power is — and enforcing net neutrality is a simple way to prevent abuse of power. We've already seen Comcast choke the life out of Vonage and other VOIP competitors, and extort money from Netflix to transmit data to Comcast's own paying customers. Where next? Thank you for your consideration.
—Robert Mohns, Newburyport, MA

The internet is not a corporation stop trying to make it one. The internet was meant to be a free place that anyone could go and see anything.
—Bryan McCray, Clackamas, OR

Please save the USA from total fascism
—Francis Hall, Duluth, GA

protect equal rights for all!
—Michael Keene, Nevada City, CA

Television is a one-way medium that overcomes democratic, participatory debate with spectacle. The Internet has countered that by being open, participatory, and neutral. It is vital to the future of American participatory democracy that the Internet not be turned into another profit-making medium for one-way spectacles, and that ISP's be protected as common carriers.
—Richard Herskowitz, Eugene, OR

The Internet is a public utility now and should be treated as a common carrier.
—W Flanagan, Oakton, VA

Net neutrality is vital to the economy because small business have enough on their plate. Separate but equal didn't work before it certainly won't work in this application either.
—Anastacia Stone, Charleston, WV

Net neutrality will only help people who make their living on e-commerce, as it seems most people who do can barely get by paying their bills instead of needing to pay more for a decent connection. Furthermore this two tiered internet is pointless aside from sucking money from everyone and will kill web services such as Amazon, Ebay, Second Life, Craig's List... The list is practically limitless.
—Mr. James Caraway, Des Moines, IA

reclassify ISPs as common carriers!!!
—Laura landberg, Lancaster, CA

I am already poor, surviving on $770 a month for a family of two. The internet has become an important source for news and I use it to communicate with my granddaughters doctors. If you do not keep net neutrality, I will no longer be able to use the internet. You will effectively kept people from applying for jobs online and the other services that are now just through the internet. PLEASE DO NOT ALLOW THIS TO HAPPEN. WE MUST KEEP NET NEUTRALITY!
—Virjeana Brown, Belgrade, MT

Stop the greed.
—Raul Ruiz, Sun City, CA

Leave this alone. What point are you, chairman Wheeler and the FCC, trying/attempting to make? The internet is a free place and there's no need to pay for carriers; common carriers are just as good.
—Ashe Brock, Plain Dealing, LA

Your job is to serve the American people, not the big businesses. Do what is right for America and do NOT end net neutrality.
—Erin McElwee, Annapolis, MD

This will be yet another major blow to anti-trust and continues the hopelessly flawed policies of the FCC to allow a few very powerful companies to control all the media. This needs to immediately enforce net neutrality as well as anti-trust policies for all media owners going forward or the head of the FCC should step down.
—Mr. Evan Hughes, Northridge, CA

You appear to have a misunderstanding between net neutrality and revolving door. I would assure you that they're not the same thing.
—Enzo Piccone, Clearwater, FL

por favor.
—Michael Hoopingarner, Torrance, CA

Concentration of media ownership has removed most independent voices from main stream media. The net remains a vital tool for providing balance. Allowing money to decide which voices are most easily heard will discourage diversity.
—Dirk DeLu, Santa Cruz, CA

Reclassifying ISPs as Common carriers is important so that the Intenet can continue being the completely open platform it always has been.
—Noah J-Cook, Camden, ME

To charge extra fees to get a "fast lane" connection to the internet would discriminate against users that can barely afford the service such as myself. Please reconsider this decision that would end Net Neutrality. Thank you
—Gino Picart, San Juan, PR

I currently pay an internet provider for X bandwidth that they make a best effort to meet. What right do the ISPs have in determining what or at what speed I use my connection for? If I purchased a 15MB connection then I expect to be able to use that 15MB for any kind of content I want. The ISP often over allocate bandwidth. So, instead of whining about infrastructure costs and then spending billions on mega sized mergers how about enforcing net neutrality where the ISPs have to actually deliver on their obligations. Netflix may be the epicenter of the conversation however this issue can very easily be applied to the next start up that fails because the ISP either won't fulfill their obligations or will purposefully choke the bandwidth required to deliver this new product. In the end everyone looses except the ISP who's getting their cake and eating it too. The ISPs offer a service. Why the hell are they being allowed to be the power brokers of that service and the emerging technology markets that rely upon those services. Everyone pays the ISPs for access to the internet. An open and free internet will ensure that everyone wins and not just the greedy owners of the ISP. Please bring some sanity back to this issue and stop caving under pressure from the ISPs.
—James Morse, Gorham, ME

As a small business owner, I am very concerned about net neutrality. Having fast and slow lanes could be the end of many small start-ups. In this slowly recovering economy, putting further stresses on small businesses to favor the huge companies who want this, is bad for America.
—holly Hamilton, Brighton, MA stop being greedy and leave it the way it is —Joseph Yenkelun, Paramount, CA

Federal Corporate Collusion really needs to take the side of PUBLIC INTEREST for a change, instead of furthering corporate domination of every aspect of our lives.
—Joel Blumert, Salisbury, CT

An informed electorate is necessary for a functioning democracy.
—Thomas Forsyth, Hooksett, NH

As a college student, I use the internet daily. I use it for research, for learning, for entertainment, and for being able to provide my same materials at home as I do at school. I was once middle class, but you may have noticed my entire social class is gone. Greed has taken over in a very unsustainable economy, and causes people like myself to suddenly have to do without. You have lied to me, in an email. You say the open internet is important to you, yet you're literally pushing for it to be divided. How can I trust you on anything? The American people don't deserve this treatment. This is on par with book burnings and witch trials.
—Jessica Beninati, Chicago, IL

I am one of those retired people on a fixed income you are always hearing about. I don't have a car, so I do a tremendous amount of my life's business by computer. If I can't afford a car, it goes without saying (but I'll say it anyway) that I can't afford even highwr costs for Internet access. My issue aside, this access is now so essential to the needs and even employment of the average citizen as to require the same protection as electricity, water and other basic utilities. Please do your mandated job!
—Edie Cleveland, Absecon, NJ

As a common user of the internet, it would be absolutely rediculous if some websites had to pay more for their services. All websites should have the same service when it comes to its speed. In general, we NEED Net Neutrality.
—Anthony Tang, Honolulu, HI

Do not give away the common wealth of your natiions to corporations. Everyone is entitled to enjoy the benefikts of internet interconnectivty, even the NSA as long as it follows the constitution.
—Doug JAcques, Ottawa,

Would Job Search sites be high speed? Homes where people are using the internet for applications, or libraries, count as fast lane?
—Sammantha Merriman, duvall, WA

The net belongs to all of us. It cannot exist without us. It does NOT belong to Verizon or AT&T
—Carol Davidek-Waller, Mercer Island, WA

I spend my hours working with customers doing commissions, this involves a lot of communication, and uploading to many different sites, I need the freedom which I have currently to not change for me to pay my bills! Keep the net neutral!
—Brandon Williams, Melbourne, FL

The two tiered internet is an obstruction to economic development for small business people
—Andronetta Douglass, Blaine, WA

DO the right thing
—Todd Smith, St. Pete, FL

Dear Chairman Wheeler, While you may have arguably compelling points from large providers that a two-tiered system is good for business and the common folk, please do not believe it. While many products and services are best priced with a "market" approach, access to the internet has become a necessary... necessary... tool for everyone in our society. Hence we need TRUE net neutrality. We need access to fairly priced, reliable, fast internet regardless for all, not just those who can afford to pay for it. I am a business owner, a consumer, a citizen and I urge you to keep OUR internet open! The large ISPs will truly be OK. They will find alternate means to monetize complementary optional services. Bandwidth and speed should not be limited by ability to pay. Competition is NOT served by limiting small, agile, innovative, but cash strapped companies. Well funded, large companies have the means to create good products and services and to market more broadly anyway. Again, I urge you to keep our internet open and maintain true net neutrality in order to foster innovation and true market driven economic growth. Kind Regards, Ann Peterson
—Ann Peterson, Bozeman, MT

I am an independent filmmaker and web entrepreneur. this measure would kill any chance my voice is heard. it would cripple small business entrepreneurship. not immediately after it's implemented, but once the cable company lawyers find all the loopholes and the public is distracted. then they'll start racheting their service down.
—Mr. Lawrence Whiteside, Portland, OR

Open and equal communication is vital to a democratic society.
—Jack Stansfield, Stanwood, WA

Wheeler’s plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This is totally unacceptable
—Larry DiMaio, Newark, DE

This is absurd. What don't you get? Its the world wide web! Its very nature is freedom. Please do not let these rules pass.
—Joshua, Simi Valley, CA

Don't allow big business to dictate to internet users! We pay for these services, and this is all the result of greed on their part, which will only get worse if this is allowed to continue. I already give Comcast enough of my money!
—McKenzie F Kleinman, Huntington, WV

I run a small business and I depend on the Internet to make a living. This proposal would kill the open Internet and kill my future. It's already hard enough for small Internet businesses like mine to compete against Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon when they not only provide Internet access, but also provide all of the others services as well. Most of these very same providers also provide cable TV service as well as many others. It is a conflict of "public" interest to allow these companies to have COMPLETE control over how we receive data and other content, especially, since in MANY areas of the country, there is only ONE choice for Internet service provider. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying Internet service providers as common carriers.
—Rob Mayhue, Hudson, FL

throw out its rules and reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers. This is the ONLY way to protect real Net Neutrality. This is important because the internet was created by the US defense department and was given to the people. This should remain in the hands of us not corporations and with out limitations no matter how it impacts there bottom line. They make more then enough money with out rules and limitations.
—Justin Lavoie, davie, FL

The FCC works for all Americans, not just the 1%.
—Timothy Taylor, Los Angeles, CA

The internet was made for everyone and it should stay that way. FOR NET NEUTRALITY!
—Stephen Davis, Houston, TX

The internet has been a force for social good and change, as well as technological innovation since its inception BECAUSE it treats all data the same. ISPs claim that true net neutrality would ruin the internet. This is a ridiculous claim simply because net neutrality is how the internet has always been run and how it has thrived for decades. To change this would be to destroy one of mankind's greatest achievements since the invention of the printing press. You have it within your power to make sure that this great tool remains undamaged. It is the purpose of government, and government agencies such as the FCC, to serve the people, not large corporate interests. Destroying net neutrality would help no one but those corporate interests, and even then only in the short term, and would take away a powerful tool that belongs to everyone.
—Mark Persuitte, Columbia, MD

We need equality!!
—Manjot Chana, Wolverhampton,

Big, powerful corporations are running roughshod over individuals and taking precious freedoms away from us. Please stop them!
—Ann Rettic, San Diego, CA

Do not allow the creation of fast lanes!
—Ikrima Elhassan, College Station, TX

Killing net neutrality with these new rules would threaten our freedom of speech by confining smaller news and opinion outlets to the "slow lane," create a monopoly with very few large companies controlling the internet and finally, stifle innovation which is the lifeblood of this country. Therefore these new rules are bad for the American people and the nation.
—Jonathan P Decker, Baton Rouge, LA

What is the reason for taking away freedom of the internet? That, sir, is a violation of personal freedoms and I am appalled by your willingness to strip us of said freedoms. The country is already unequally divided by classes of wealth, and now, you choose to make the internet a part of that? I have been lower middle class my entire life, and to make parts of the internet unavailable to me and others like myself is truly wrong. We connect with people and find news stories, and work and research topics for school, and gain some relief from the stresses of our everyday lives, and now, you're trying to charge us more for it, resulting in our inability to pay for and subsequently to use it? That is, simply put, rude, and greedy. What can you really accomplish by doing this? Nothing.
—Emily Cummings, Dallas, GA

It's time to quit screwing around with what has determined to be a Basic Human Right. The United States is miles behind other countries in internet resources because it's being sandbagged by companies like comcast and ATT. Mr. Wheeler, you are nothing but a pathetic shill for large corporations, and you need to grow a pair and stand up for regular americans.
—Andy Jonathan, North Aurora, IL

Without Net Neutrality, education would suffer as a result of unequal internet speeds furthering the divide between the impoverished and the wealthy
—Elliot J Pachniak, Wausau, WI

The Internet is the best way for people to share information. It's the best communication system for everyone to use, and should be a fair system. Giving rich corporations further advantages would give them still more power, specially for news corporations, which basically can show us the "reality" they want already on radio and TV, as they own almost everything. Why would the ISPs be given the power to choose what to do with our information and communications? I don't want my communications to be delayed just because big ISPs want to have a way to make still more money. If we want a better tomorrow, we need to stop cutting rights to the people to benefit big corporations. We are heading right to a dystopian future if we continue on that path.
—Fernando S Rapetti, Hurlingham,

Its the only place that the media and governemnt can't completely sensor me.
—Logan Ledbetter, Denver, CO

The Plutocracy already controls most media. Two internet tiers would be the last step by the plutocrats towards the complete control of information accessible to us peons. In addition, it would seriously hamper the net traffic of small business, start-ups, the self-employed. Most clicks would take you straight to Wal-Mart. This is a BAD IDEA: Keep Net Neutrality!!!
—Angela Holden, Hopewell Junction, NY

The proposed plan punishes the poor.
—Catherine Hammen, Olympia, WA

I am the owner of an internet retail company and have been doing business for over 14 years. Don't put me OUT of business!!!
—Mary Clement-Hill, Corvallis, OR

The Internet was built on the open exchange of ideas and information. Any ability for one idea to get preference over another erodes at this foundation. Classify ISPs as common carriers and protect the founding principles of the Internet.
—Ragan Webber, Seattle, WA

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—David Altmasn, Bedford, NY

For many people dial up Internet is a thing of the past. I am now able to get 4G access on my phone. If we are relegated to certain lane access we will find that institutions that are not favored by the powers that be, relegated to slow lane access. Institutions such as colleges that teach climate science would be relegated to slow lane. Many computers today would have problems with slow lane access.
—J Boucher, North Adams, MA

Dear FCC, you must classify isp's as common carriers. The big cable companies / isp's below occupy 3 of the 4 top ratings for being the worst companies in America according to the 2013 polls by the ACSI (American Customer Satisfaction Index) Charter Communications: #1 worst rated company in America for customer satisfaction. Comcast: #3 worst rated company in America for customer satisfaction. Time Warner Cable: #4 worst rated company in America for customer satisfaction. You cannot put the future of the internet in the hands of these horrible companies whose corporate mantra's and mottos is greed above all! Thanks, Steve Krog
—Steve Krog, Boulder, CO

The free and open Internet is one of the greatest — and most democratic — technical developments in human history. The Internet should be open and accessible to everyone, NOT OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY PRIVATE CORPORATIONS FOR THEIR PROFIT! I urge you to reclassify Internet Service Providers as common carriers and regulate the Internet as a public utility.
—Adam Goldman, Santa Monica, CA

I am one of many entrepreneurs who depends on the Internet would be bad hurt by a two-tier system. Make the reclassification! The only people who will suffer are the large providers whose profit percentages will be what they are today, instead of larger.
—Pieter Kark, Mountain View, CA

We don't need another thing controlled by corporate America ... everything owned by them , including congress does not function anymore
—Cliff Jordan, Jeffersontown, KY

Net neutrality is extremely important because the internet is the last truly open and equal platform now. Without it we would see the mass monopolization of one of the biggest forms of media,the internet.
—Ravyn Simmons, Hampton, VA

I am a developer and I depend highly on net neutrality. If i start on a project and need to at the very least test on the Web this will cost a fortune because it sure as heck won't be cheap. The isps will hold my connection hostage and throttle it. For some developer that work in a big company this isn't an issue they bathe in money. But for the home developer trying to make the next big thing and get out of debt and student loans. this is going to be impossible.
—Israel Bermudez, Tampa, FL

If this is the new FCC's plan of action you would be better off disbanding as you seem to be doing more than harm than good as of late. I take offense when you shit my face, which are what these proposed rules are effectively doing to all but the one's with the deepest of pockets.
—Tim Sanders, Orrtanna, PA

please keep the net neutral it's important
—Ronald Bougie, auburn, ME

Stop putting corporate control ahead of freedom for all - shame on you for leaning toward fast lanes for big business. In fact, access to the internet should be a right not something you have to buy into. And don't let these 2 big mergers proceed. paid tv is way too expensive now and so is high speed internet access. The corporations are already stealling from us - time to regulate their prices down to no more than $20/month per household. PERIOD! Start standing up for the people not the big profits of corporations.
—Julie Adelson, Santa Monica, CA

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Mr. Paul Ginnetti, Lackawanna, NY

do the corporations really need to take more money from us? i know,i know, its better if we have less access to the truth---for those in power. disgusting.
—Susan Korupp, duluth, MN

What you are doing is illegal and favors the few above the many. You are a regulatory agency. Regulate and remove them as being common carriers as they most certainly are not. Do your job. We pay your salaries.
—Maria Lock, Chicago, IL

Allowing a 2 tier system creates class bias & a lack of democratic freedom. Unethical, unfair & prejudicial.
—Robert Fitch, Leonia, NJ

I have been a in "data processing" (that ages me) since 1972. I have been involved in two technology small companies since 1978. A open, free, and fair internet has accomplished much over the last couple of decades. Net Neutrality and an open and free internet is important to the economy and our country's future. It is not just all about a few big and powerful corporations.
—Gary DeCamp, Eugene, OR

The internet is a utility like having a phone line. Everyone should have equal access to service at the lowest possible cost.
—Donald Cadenhead, Austin, TX

To achieve true net neutrality the Internet can only have ONE tier. The rich already control nearly everything in America. The American People have a right to an open Internet. Please do not take that away from us too. Anything except all ISP's being classified as common carriers will destroy our freedom to the internet.
—Robert Tafanelli, Las Cruces, NM

Net neutrality should remain how it is. The people should have the right to access the internet without fees that would otherwise occur once the net is owned by someone! It's all about money for a few people, not about what's best for everyone.
—Alesha Henson, Mountainburg, AR

Net neutrality keeps the internet a level playing field for all ideas. It is one of the only truly democratic edifices of our society. Without it, only the voices of the wealthy and the established will be heard, and often those are not the sources of the greatest ideas.
—Dominic Forbush, Edmonds, WA

Let me be blunt. The average middle-class American feels he/she is being screwed on just about every front as it is. Do you really have to remove Net Neutrality in a country that already has one of the slowest services? Truly we are a country in decline, with a middle class that continues to be victimized by ever-more-greedy big business interests.
—Annette, Genoa, OH

The internet is America's gift to the WORLD.... Like America herself, it MUST REMAIN FREE.... Like Gill Scott Heron said, "The revolution will NOT be televised", but you can watch the videos on youtube. FREE....(well, ok, yeah, there's a monthly hook-up fee to the ISP / cable company, etc....
—Bradford Hutchingson, Keene, NH

The internet needs to be reclassified as a common carrier or utility. Much commerce and communication depends on this, there should NOT be a faster lane!
—Judy Archibald, Verona, WI

This is prof we're living in an oligarchy when these greedy corporations can manipulate the FCC and everyone else in a government position.
—James K. Inkenbrandt, Tennyson, IN

We all deserve an open and neutral internet. Internet belongs to the people,¡¡ that matters!!
—María Carmen Santana del Gil, ,

I want to make sure that the Internet remains an open channel for communication and commerce that is not subverted by large companies.
—Craig McLane, Los Angeles, CA

Do the right thing
—Tim Norton, Gardner, KS

Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers for the Real Net Neutrality that will help to keep America competative in a Global Market!
—Paul Whiting, Portland, OR

Net Neutrality is important to me because America does NOT need to turn into Animal Farm.
—Risa Moreno, Tracy, CA

I rely on the Internet to actually do my job, and my company relies on it for our livelihood. Disrupting my service because some large company paid for a fast lane - a fast lane I'm not using! - is allowing the ISP to double bill for the privilege of degrading my ability to do my job or just get service from the providers of MY choice rather than the ISP's. Beyond that, allowing entrenched content providers or networks additional power builds on their already considerable advantages, tilting the field against startups. Comcast, AT&T, and others are not exactly lacking for funds - look at the round of mega-mergers going on. We have an effective monopoly or duopoly situation across most of the country, including where I live. Common carrier status would actually introduce competition and shake up the market instead of the existing situation where Comcast and Charter are proposing to trade operating areas - meaning customers - like so many heads of cattle.
—Brent W. Ezell, Snellville, GA

I've had enough of AT&T, Verizon and Comcast controlling our internet! We need real competition and real new services! The net is the only way to express freely what you believe! I'm urging you to turn down this crazy idea!
—Richard Clifford, Milton, MA

Net neutrality is important to maintain because we have created a culture with the internet as the infrastructure. This has happened with very little regulatory attention, which the FCC seems to be trying to correct but if the proposed measure go forward you will be hindering innovation, employment, education, and business. The internet started as a privilege but has turned into a utility and a necessity. You wouldn't have us charged more for "good" water or "quality" electricity so please keep the net free and equal.
—Jared Ransom, Marshall, MI

Without Net Neutrality, Censorship will run rampant on the lower tiered Internet
—Elliot Pachniak, Oshkosh, WI

As a small business owner who very likely will not be able to afford ISP fees, my website will be relegated to the Very Slow Lane, severely damaging my ability to reach customers. As vital as my website's download speed is, equally important to me is the likelihood, under your proposed rules, that ISP's will impose large fees for fast broadband service on websites of whose content they disapprove. In this day and age, this would be tantamount to muzzling the providers of such content. Free speech issues aside, this would be grossly unfair and would give every totalitarian country food for propaganda -i.e charging the U.S. with hypocrisy when it criticizes information control in other countries. I urge you in the strongest terms to discard your proposed regulations and reclassify ISPs as common carriers, just like phone service providers.
—Fred Nothnagel, North Andover, MA

As an Internet user who believes strongly in the importance of a free and open Internet, I urge the FCC to reclassify broadband Internet access as a telecommunications service, and save Net Neutrality. In addition, the FCC should reject the proposed rules that would allow Internet service providers to divide the Internet into fast lanes for wealthy corporations and slow lanes for the rest of us. Higher education and library organizations released a set of net neutrality principles. Please read them here: http://www.ala.org/news/press- releases/2014/07/higher-education-library-groups-release-net -neutrality-principles Make a decision for the welfare of generations: Save Net Neutrality as outlined in these principles above.
—Don Wood, Chicago, IL

Nobody directly profits and monitors my activities. Orwell, I'm looking at you.
—Eli Vosburg, Poulsbo, WA

This proposed policy is exactly wrong for Net Neutrality and real nice for the big corporations leading to more discrimination for Internet users. Why don't you really do something to provide equality for most Internet users instead of further enriching the rich service providers. Here we go again,providing for the continuation of discriminating between the haves and have nots! This proposal is a sham idea and completely goes against President Obama's promise of Net Neutrality. Shame on you for trying to hoodwink Internet users!
—Ann M Stock, smithtown, NY

The internet is obviously a common carrier. A level playing field enables me to use any source of information I please. I know of no one who is pleased with their internet provider now, and that would only get worse for us who are not part of the .01% or a multinational corporation. Mr. Wheeler is exhibiting preference for his previous employer, and needs to leave his current office to officially resume his career as a lobbyist. Mr. Wheeler, it appears, is incapable of acting in the public interest. It is your duty to do so.
—Cynthia Mace, Lake Forest, IL

I work as a web programmer for my wife's small meeting planning firm. I build websites for Federal meetings. If our federal client registrants cannot access our websites at the same speed as other websites, we will not be considered for future contracts and may lose multi-year contracts we already have in place. I work online every day of the year. It is bad enough to be in a rural location, forced to rely on satellite for my broadband connection. The loss of fair and equal use of the internet would be devastating to my family's way of life. The last thing our economic recovery needs is a tiered internet causing large segments of our citizens to be in the slow lanes. It would reduce our world-wide competitiveness as other nations would not have this "slow lane" barrier effecting their citizens and businesses. ISPs should be reclassified as common carriers. The internet should be treated as a utility since that is how it is used. And it should be the same internet for ALL of us. Small businesses should not be relegated to second class status on the internet.
—John Gammon, Raphine, VA

The people have spoken loudly and clearly. The FCC needs to listen to us. The FCC is supposed to work for us, not the media monopolies.
—Lynne Weintraub, Amherst, MA

The internet is probably the greatest achievement in a long line of great achievements by this country. It's development was paid for by the tax payers and this investment shouldn't be exploited by the telcoms to increase their already ridiculous profit margins while at the same time giving us taxpayers worse service. We made for it and paid for it, they are just riding that initial effort of arpanets coat tails and making billions. This must not go any further.
—Russ Alexander, South Jordan, UT

It is important to the growth and future of our country that we ensure Net Neutrality!
—Adam Rios, Hutto, TX

Chairman Tom Wheeler, I urge you to reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers.
—Josh Peichoto, Austin, TX

I'm one of "the rest of us." My work often relies on the internet and since I am not one of the "big bucks" people, it would kill my living and, naturally let the rich get richer. Whose pocket is this guy in?
—Bob Squires Jr, Albrightsville, PA

The Internet should be a level playing field. This aspect allows all to compete fairly and evenly, no matter what their size. By allowing the increase and decrease of speeds to specific sites, you are ruining the chances for young entrepreneurs. This is a serious issue. Leave the internet a neutral place. -Zachary, 15
—Zachary Lemm, Cork,

I'm an employee of a small company and a consumer of a lot of online services. An equal internet matters to me in both of these roles. As an employee of a small business working to create new services, we need net neutrality to ensure we are not shut out of markets by players much larger than us. As a consumer, I want net neutrality so that I alone decide which services are right for my family, and my ISP gets no say in the matter. A two-tiered internet is the wrong solution for small business and for consumers. Only reclassifying ISPs as common carriers will protect the open internet we need.
—Drew Allen, Phoenix, AZ

Net Neutrality means that everyone's voice - content - is equally valuable and accessible. Discriminating against some content providers by allowing those who can afford it to buy fast lanes is the exact opposite of what Net Neutrality calls for.
—Kristin Kaul, Ann Arbor, MI

If the FCC is on the wrong side of history here, we will all be worse off because of it - even the ISPs themselves. There is only one correct choice here - and it's not the one you're heading towards. While most of the general public may not be entirely clued in, there are a significant amount of us who know exactly what the FCC is trying to do. So please! Make the correct decision, for now and for the future. It may seem this is just an 'in the moment' decision, but it's not. It will have ramifications for decades, if not more. Tom, the US needs you. The world needs you. Your family needs you. We all need you to do the right thing here. Regards, Evan Chicago, IL
—Evan Loftus, Chicago, IL

I don't think it's fair to discriminate against online contents and applications.
—Juan-Carlos Asse, Gainesville, FL

I don't want the corporations to decide if I get inferior service and pay more for it. The FCC needs to understand that the internet is a common carrier and should be regulated as such. No selling out to the corps. !!!!
—Darrell Schmidt, Rose Hill, KS

The new rules are as absurd as making people pay extra to drive in the left lanes on the freeway, we need fair, equal internet.
—Derrick Potter, Canby, OR

Chairman Wheeler, A neutral net is essential to freedom of information and access to same for all Americans. Keep the net neutral and classify ISP's as common carriers.
—Francis Fashing, Palm Desert, CA

If this passes, I will be terrified of the state of the country and what direction we are moving in. I am tired of this oligarchy, and the people are becoming more and more unhappy. Do we need another civil war to get our leaders to understand how their decisions are so deeply affecting the very people they are supposed to serve and speak on behalf of? Obama is entirely failing on promises he made to the people. Our "choice" between horrible person A and horrible person B is not going to hold up for much longer if each time we vote for someone pushing for something in our interest he/she(hahh...) does a complete 180 on it. Net neutrality is important to me, and, well, 99% of the population (which we all know is exactly why this is going through. The 1% takes advantage of everyone below them at every opportunity they get. Aren't there any good ones up there? It's quite disappointing...). By creating these "fast lanes" we will in turn stifle creativity and innovation. We will also widen the already large gap between the rich and the poor. We see the noose tightening. I highly suggest reclassifying ISP's as common carriers.
—Katie Azbill, AUSTIN, TX

It's incredible to me that the FCC, which is supposed to represent the people's interest, would back anything but net neutrality. HOW THE HELL can you favor some sites over others?!!! Frankly it's corrupt.
—Chris B. Doob, woodbridge, CT

We served our country and is this how our government is considering treating us?
—Linda I Hixson, Ludington, MI

The internet is something that should not be regulated based on corporate ideals. It's a tool for the common man in this day and age and with the loss of Net Neutrality many of the services it offers will be hindered. The internet is an outlet for art and creativity with it's features like video and audio streaming. If ISPs control the web based on who is paying them an can block services or slow them down based on how much one pays, people would lose touch with many great features provided online that have become integral to a progressive life style. Please, reclassify ISPs as common carries for the sake of free information and the creative expression of the common man.
—Cameron Van Buren, Bradenton, FL

TV could have educated us but was turned into a force for commercial stupefaction. Don't trust the same people with the internet!
—Ronald W Colman, Long Beach, CA

The Internet is a wonderful forum for new ideas and in many ways is a safe haven for people who cannot or do not have the resources to create a physical support network. In letting service providers create a system that prioritizes the rich and provides substandard internet services to those who cannot pay top dollar, you further marginalize these people as well as many others who are unable to pay these fees. Keep Net Neutrality and keep the internet egalitarian and open to all.
—Clarissa Wilson, Shelbyville, IN

The electrical grid doesn't discriminate based on which brand name your TV is. The internet shouldn't either. It's not a product, it's an infrastructure. Our entire country suffers from crippling inequality, so let us at least keep THIS free.
—Rachel Jones, West Paducah, KY

Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité - Democracy!
—Markus Ludwig, München,

I just don't understand how this can help anyone but the very few telecom companies. If this goes through it will mark the beginning of the end for Internet as we know it. Small companies and startups will not be able to compete. Innovation will stop dramatically. I personally don't see the use of the pay for speed or access to the Internet and may stop using it altogether. Please, I urge you keep Net Neutrality alive!!
—Efrain Cortez, Maricopa, AZ

ISP's are an ologopoly. The cable and wireless phone companies cotrol everything.
—Ted Silen, Gresham, OR

I got my first computer and discovered the internet when I suffered from debilitating depression and isolation. Being able to meet like-minded people, and to find my voice by blogging at sites like Daily Kos and Yahoo Voices, was a major part of my recovery into my current remission. I have not always had internet access at home, and at times depended on the library and other public access places. Without the neutrality the internet enjoys, this would have been much more difficult and might not have had the healing power in my life. Equal access matters, even in matters affecting life and death.
—Rachel Port, Catalina, AZ

With net neutrality, we are guaranteed unbiased sources of information, not just the spoon fed garbage that most of the major news media is putting out. I use the internet everyday, to communicate, to learn and to advance free speech for everyone, not just the greedy corporate hydra. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers and keep the internet as it is, so the 99% also have a voice.
—Lynette Coffey, Shasta Lake, CA

Net Neutrality has huge implications for First Ammendment rights, our economy and anti-trust situations, and the moral imparitive of freedom. PROTECT IT.
—Jonathan Allen, Twin Lake, MI

I use the open internet! I depend on Net Neutrality.
—Devyn Yurisich, Greenwood, IN

The web is the only place on earth where we are all equal. Please do not let Big Business poison it. Think about the consequences. Please.
—Frances Soosman, Tivoli, NY

I am an INDIVIDUAL who uses the Internet daily for work and don't see why I should have to compete with corporate business abilities to pay for "faster" speeds in order to compete for time and information. I think this process by Mr. Wheeler has been a cheat from the very start.
—Michael Janover, Eugene, OR

How can a Democrat do this to the people of this country? Shame!
—Clifton Usher, Reno, NV

Your new plan is unfair. Americans deserve an internet that is open to everyone, not controlled by corporate interests.
—Roger Goins, Beachwood, OH

I believe that the internet is the lifeblood of businesses in the United States of America. If we are going to continue to compete in a global market, we must allow an open internet so that new businesses have the same access to customers that larger companies have. We cannot allow a handful of companies to control the information that comes to people. An educated population depends on access to information.
—Elizabeth Tyler, Washington, DC

Make you voice heard save the internet
—Eusebio Manuel Vestias pecurto vestias, ,

Internet is our consciousness, no identy , government our secret society should have control of it. It has to be free and openminded and excessable to all out there. We are all creators and the internet unite us.
—Christian Strijbos, Venlo,

In my last oral exam back just before christmas. I chose to talk about the history of the Internet. Im not going to give you the hole story. But looking at the internet back then when it started to now, is fantastic. Allthouhg what is going on now is terrrible... The internet has in all its glory been a free, not owned by anyone and an incredibel tool for all people. Dont screw this up Sry for bad englado pls no copy pastariono
—Magnus Granath, ,

I for one would not really like it if the websites I frequently visit were then pushed into a lower bandwidth tier so trying to access them would take a lot longer. The mere fact that this plan was even proposed leads me to believe that the FCC chairman is not exactly the most intelligent of individuals.
—Taylor Weir, Johnson City, NY

Why reward the big ISPs like Comcast, AT&T, and Verizon, when they provide very little in terms of the entire Internet? Their only goal is to find new ways to gouge consumers while lining their pockets even more. I think this excerpt from an article on The Consumerist says it best: "Collecting Tolls For Roads You Didn't Build "While the Verizons and Comcasts of the world like to pretend that they do all of the heavy lifting in bringing data to your home, the truth is often very different. In most cases, an ISP is only responsible for carrying data the 'last mile' to the end-user. There are numerous bandwidth providers who do much of the long-distance hauling of data. "Much of the innovation and investment that the NCTA claims will be harmed by reclassification has actually been done by companies much further up the stream than your ISP. Verizon is not responsible for figuring out to compress and stream HD Netflix videos to millions of customers at once. AT&T did not create the smartphones or tablets its subscribers use. Comcast is not running multiplayer video game servers that allow players from around the world to square off in real time. ISPs are passive (and increasingly passive-aggressive) conduits through which this data is supposed to travel as efficiently as possible and with no regard for its source. "Interestingly enough, the companies that are responsible for many of the biggest and most innovative developments in online technology have written the FCC asking the commission to rethink Wheeler's proposal. "And speaking of investment, a large number of venture capitalists — the very people who put their money on the line for these new services and technologies — have also come out against the draft. "Allowing ISPs to decide which content gets to users the fastest — and making this decision based not on the most efficient way to deliver data, but solely on who pays the most — is like handing over highway exit ramps to a private toll-taking company and telling it to charge whatever it wants to drivers looking to get on or off the Interstate." Like it or not, the Internet is a modern utility. It's a necessity, not a luxury. People need it to do so many things in their daily lives: pay bills and taxes, bank, get the news, communicate with friends and family, search for and apply for jobs, enroll in school and register for classes, and so much more. The Internet must be regulated as a common carrier, which it clearly has become.
—Jeanine Center, Ann Arbor, MI

I live in the country, with only DSL service available and have no choice, now you want to narrow my choice even more. Make the net a utility and do the right thing, or step aside.
—Ken Deehr, Pahoa, HI

Without net neutrality the internet will be a worse place.
—Bartek C, ,

OI already know what your going to do.Your going to pretend to be for intent neutrality and still side with big business,We demand tha you dump the republican side and take back us populace side and reinforce net Neutrality.If not the hacker will invade these big business and destroy big business intent for revenge
—Michael McGee, montgomery, AL

net neutrality is very important to give equal opportunity to everyone, especially small business. if the open internet dies, our economy will crumble except for big corporate businesses. it is time to stop Corporate America and their strong hold on politicians
—Lisa Bornfriend, Winter Park, CO

Americans already have some of the slowest Internet speeds in the world. Don't take away the incentive for the corporations to build out higher speed on the whole internet instead of just buying higher speed for themselves at the expense of the rest of us.
—David Pyles, Nelson, NH

The internet is the best source of free information we've ever had. DO NOT mess it up for the 99%, just to appease the corporations. This country is now run by corporations, no more democracy. Leave us this one symbol of democracy where the playing field remains level. DO NOT eff it up
—Beerly Foster, Wayne, PA

Simply put, there's too many benefits to keeping the field level like it is now to want to change it. Do you think that things like google and amazon could have come about if they had to contend with fast lanes? Sure they could have! But it would have been Hundreds to thousands of times harder for them to come into being in any state of worth, and very likely they wouldn't be the same kinds of business's and enterprises that they are now. And on the social and informational side of it, it would be childs play to have things set in a way that actually discriminates against people and information that those who WOULD have the money and power here don't like or want to acknowledge. And then there is always the issue of the slippery slope. Certainly as an argument it can get away from you, but it is a well known fact (at least from what i've learned) that if you start with a little bit of something you can end up with a lot more of it. It can be used for good certainly. But it can be used for more malign purposes just as easily. Perhaps now it's just Hey Pay this toll and you too can be on the speedy internet. But later it could, and if we're giving enough time here most certainly will, turn out to be something worse.
—Mr. Christopher F. Kennard, Dover, DE

Because we the consumers have little choice in what we pay and we should get the best internet service for our money, one fee full connection. Period. We have little control of the few companies that provide internet service as is. Do not place us, the American Consumer at their mercy. Keep the internet open for all at the same speed for the same fee.
—Randall Patton, Battle Creek, MI

I think it's wrong to punish e-commerce companies like Netflix, just because they provide a service that a lot of people like. They shouldn't need to be charged more simply because they're more popular... The executives at these cable companies need to understand they can't bully everyone around. Like some of their customer's who don't have options when it comes to cable service providers....
—Eric Milliot, Palm Harbor, FL

Dear Sirs, as an online freelancer I am very concerned about the proposed Internet rules. Such a program would destroy my business and take away my only income source as a disabled adult. Please rethink these new rules and keep the internet available for all regardless of income level.
—Tammie McGlothlin, Wichita, KS

The net should be a place of equality. Not just a place for those who can afford it.
—Dennis Ivy, Atlanta, GA

Net Neutrality is Important because it better and not casue any proublems. Also make sure they don't block any web site services that we pay for. I don't want Fast Net Services because it casue more proublems.
—Charles Roberts, Detroit, MI

The internet should be free and equal for ALL!!!
—Kristina Peterson, Edmonds, WA

I predict that non-wealthy users who cannot afford "the fast lane" sites will eventually drop their internet access due to frustration. I believe the greed will result in revenue loss in the long run. And the FCC will be responsible.
—Russell Ranshaw, Columbus, OH

I don't understand why this is even an issue. Re classify the god damn ISPs as common carriers, the Internet is a utility in this day and age, imagine if the electric company was allowed to charge astronomical prices for electricity, this is the same principle. First the tiered Internet, then what next?
—Andrew, Northampton, MA

Corporations should not control the internet. The internet is a public utility.
—Jeremiah Bostick, Manassas, VA

I am searching for employment if the Internet is allowed to develop into a two teared system my ability to locate employment will be impeded. Content providers are not going to view people in my position as an income source. Net neutrality is the only way to continue fairness for all citizen's net needs.
—Gregory Fredrickson, Green Bay, WI

I (and many other members of the public) are so tired of you politicians and bureaucrats screwing the public just so you can please the industry lobbyists and once you have passed regulations that satisfy their need for more revenue, you are richly rewarded as you go back to work for them. With the internet, the public finally has a way to make it's voice heard without the restriction of having to pay big media to get a message out. Apparently this ability frightens some while others see it as a way to make more money. Restricting the internet speed to those who can pay is not in the public interest. The last time the FCC did something like this was with radio, and as a result, we no longer have local stations, airwaves are filled with more and more commercials. Once upon a time, the government and FCC realized telephones were so important that strong regulations were needed to govern it's use. The internet has the ability to be orders of magnitude more important than telephones, and all you can think about is how can big business make more money. The internet should be regulated as a common carrier. then perhaps we will get faster speeds and better service. But the path you are leading us down will have the opposite effect.
—Dale Janus, warren, OH

As a college student, I often use the internet to find information for papers and stay in touch with my family who live 2 1/2 hours away. By taking away net neutrality, you make such things unnecessarily difficult not just for me but for the millions of other students who also depend on the internet.
—Sarah Murphy, Owensboro, KY

Killing Net Neutrality means the Internet will not be the Internet and all of the creative expression and economic gains from it will be killed. Stop playing to corporate interests. The American public is getting fed up and we're the ones you're supposed to serve.
—Ali Hart, San Francisco, CA

Dear Federal Communications Commission: FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. Thank you for your consideration. - Lizz
—Lizz B., Breaks, VA

Can't stop the signal!
—Christopher Tobias, Pittsburgh, PA

I search for information about my health, my battle with ovarian cancer. I connect with friends and family. I seek and pursue opportunities to learn about many things. I do not want to be kicked down to the way things were when we had only a black and white screen and had to wait for the telephone dial to connect!
—Kathryn M. Smith, Little Rock, AR

The internet is NOT a tool to be used as a corporate means of expanding pockets, it is an information highway, a highway which you have NO RIGHT to restrict with a toll booth. it is absolutely ridicules, that you; a government sanctioned entity are bending to the whim of corporations to tamper with a service that is now a WORLD WIDE project, one with even its own culture, and people.
—Tyler Sturges, Wooster, OH

Common Carrier! Common Carrier! Common Carrier! is the best way. Do NOT take the oligrarch route.
—Bernard R Thomas, Santa Cruz, CA

The internet is like a public utility, it should be equally available to everyone regardless of size or wealth.
—Jeanne Hannigan, Hilo, HI

Do not steal what belongs to the people. I demand that ISP's be reclassified as common carriers. Thank you.
—Martha Keyes, Dallas, TX

Net neutrality is America's way of communicating with everyone and connecting our Nation as a whole in all areas of our lives. FCC, YOU MUST THROW OUT YOUR PROPOSED "INTERNET RULES,": AND IMMEDIATELY RECLASSIFY ISPS AS COMMON CARRIERS. YOU HAVE THE SOLE AUTHORITY TO ACCOMPLISH THIS FOR OUR COUNTRY AND HER CITIZENS. PLEASE, "DOTHE RIGHT THING," AND FIX THIS INJUSTICE FOR ALL INTERNET USERS.
—Elaine Balgemann, Mesa, AZ

The FCC's proposed internet rules create an atmosphere of unfairness, and would harm small businesses. The internet should be fair to all, and ISPs should be reclassified as common carriers.
—Jef Harvey, Palmer, AK

The spirit of the internet is to enable opportunities for everyone equally. Everyone should have the same ability to share ideas and communicate. The internet is the one hope we have to reduce the rampant inequality in our society. Please don't sell whatever is left of our democracy to the highest bidders!
—Raji Harikrishnan, Cambridge, MA

I'm retired and depend on the net for many things. I've cancelled much of my TV programming as it is getting to expensive. I really don't want that happening to my internet.
—Trina Priest, Elk Grove, CA

We are, or were, a Country of the People, for the People and By the People - what is happening is so wrong..
—Mary Mahoney, Boston, MA

Net neutrality is important to me because the only friends i have are on the other side of the world and the only way for me to remain in contact with them is through internet. These rules would make it simply make it impossible for them and me to talk to each other and thus i will lose my friends...please don't do this. There are thousands other people like me,people with problems and the internet is the only place where they can vent or tell their problems. This would make thousands unhappy, possibly depressed even. Please don't push this through, it won't work the way you want it to. Providers should not be able to determine what will go through fast lanes of the internet and what not. My country has net neutrality and it is working out just fine, don't push this through FCC. Don't.
—Felicia, ,

This should happen at all. The internet only works because access is free to all who can get on it. There are already barriers to getting the internet, do not create another more destructive one. This is so blatantly in favor of a few companies that its unamerican
—Rob Hashemi, Culver City, CA

ISPs do not have the right to dictate what websites are "premium" or not. They get paid to be an ISP, not a censor.
—Mary C.G. McMullin, Tucson, AZ

I'm horribly afraid that the loss of net neutrality will result in higher prices for internet service and the restriction of free speech. The internet is no longer a unique avenue for commerce. It is an extremely important and functional tool for the spread of ideas and speech. By allowing "fast lanes", speech will be restricted by driving up costs and reducing the importance of smaller voices. Net neutrality must be maintained. The changes to the internet must not be asked to go through!
—Patrick Hickey, North Las Vegas, NV

Having access to the Internet without extra costs that industry and owners do not have to pay, is a necessity in a true Democracy. Is the US a Democracy any longer?
—Patricia Orlinski, Sun City, AZ

The internet is the road of the future, destroying net neutrality will hurt business and slow innovation.
—Chris Pittman, Little Elm, TX

Equal access to all online content is very important to me. The Internet is for everyone. We need net neutrality.
—Jason Mortensen, Chicago, IL

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Sol Wieder, New Milford, NJ

I can't really explain it as elegantly as viheart did in her video, however I do understand that it is NOT the job of internet providers such as Comcast our Verizon to control the flow of data. It IS however their job to provide the fastest, discriminatory-free internet that they have the ability to. Just as it would be unjust for shipping companies to charge more to deliver from Amazon than thinkgeek, it is unjust for internet providers to charge more for access to certain sites. One again, it is NOT THEIR JOB
—Leith Conybeare, New York, NY

Please modify your rules to classify Internet Service Providers as Common Carriers. The Internet Neutrality, we have taken for granted provides access to crucial information that enables us to make informed decisions at the polls, optimize our health, make life more convenient. as retired senior citizens on limited funds, my husband and I rely on Net Neutrality. The removal of Free Internet Access, would have a severe negative impact on our lives.
—Arna Schutz, West Hills, CA

I cannot afford higher fees and I use the internet every day like so many others. I want Net Neutrality!
—Ann Thompson, Cypress, TX

Think of the innovations that these rules would have stifled if such a thing had already been in place. This creates yet another barrier between the wealthy, and the majority of the country. Because of the significant downward pressure that is currently upon the middle class, this is a time to defend access to universal opportunity, not to weaken it! And Think of how these rules can and will eventually be abused by the key-holders. These changes will open the door for the implementation of dictatorial powers, such as those we see in China. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers. The internet... our internet which was developed with public funding and which runs across public lands, is just too important.
—Jason Greaves, Austin, TX

The internet needs to be protected!
—Andrew Blaikie, Eugene, OR

The Internet is for everyone; its greatest impact it has had is because of its egalitarian effect. Stop this trend of our government handing over to large corporations those things that are in the public's interest. Reclassify ISP as common carriers. Please don't help the rich get richer at the expense of Net Neutrality. The Internet IS a PUBLIC UTILITY !
—Pamylle Greinke, Peconic, NY

Net Neutrality ensures that an immense collection information available to anyone who has access to internet can access it the same as another person regardless of their social and economic standard and allowing providers to limit certain groups of people from viewing information efficiently on the internet. Preserve net neutrality and stop looking towards corporate interests when their interests put the general public's interests severely at risk.
—Samuel White, Willits, CA

We can't afford cable so we have Netflix. Everyone should have equal access to the internet. No one should be able to get a special speed because they have more money. Re-classify the internet as "COMMON CARRIER"!!
—Connie Kane, Seaside, CA

I really do depend on net neutrality it offers quite a few things that if charges go up I will once again be in able to afford internet and my children will suffer with their school work. I do vote and will take your actions on voting into account when I exercise my right to vote! I also talk with friends and family frequently about these matters.
—Desirrae Nilsen, Sheldon, IL

The internet has become one of the foundations of our society, we must protect it from corruption! PLEASE don't compromise net neutrality.
—John Knetemann, Alexandria, VA

Net neutrality is critical to ensuring freedom of speech and fostering of innovation. If big, established, companies can pay a premium to deliver content faster, where does the "low" end of the spectrum end? As the internet matures, this low tier service could make smaller voices and companies unable to compete. Even now, with these proposed rules, venture capital firms are rolling back investments in future companies that would rely on the internet because these rules would put them at a distinct disadvantage when entering what should be a free market. ISPs should be regulated as common carriers so they are subject to Title II of the Communications Act. Rules and regulations should benefit the people, not help line the already thick pockets of telecom companies.
—Eric Ditzel, Tucson, AZ

I have no desire to see my Internet access unnecessarily regulated and dictated by cable companies. Classifying ISPs as common carriers is the common sense thing to do for the American people.
—Joseph Destefano, San Jose, CA

Without Net Neutrality, ISPs will hold consumers hostage!
—Sergio A. Valenzuela, San Diego, CA

Net Neutrality is important since I'm a US Citizen and the internet uses electronic spectrum allocated to citizens, not specific ISPs.
—David Kersten, medina, OH

With the internet split by this tiered system, the internet would cease to be what it is ment to be, and open source of shared information for everyone. Please list ISPs as common carriers and keep the internet the way it is ment to be.
—Adam Osowski, Fargo, ND

the internet should be equal for all consumers; not just the rich.
—Darryl Warner, Far Rockaway, NY

Net Neutrality is the keystone for information and especially business for the entire world. It should be one-tiered lane for everyone to use. This shouldn't be about putting more money into big companies, it should be about better access--a better tool for the consumer to use.
—Ryan Johnson, Poolesville, MD

FCC . Stop Your Rules and Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Gladis Little, Walsenburg, CO

It's wrong to give the big boys such power. Guaranteed they'll misuse it. Keep the playing field level and do not discriminate.
—Dr. Colin MacKinnon, Chevy Chase, MD

the internet belongs to everyone. the internet is not the wires, it is not the technology, it is the amazing content created, most of it for free by us, the humans of the planet. no one has the right to control it.
—C Walker, Olema, CA

No decrease in service or increase in cost is fair to today's users.
—Lynne Vanne, San Francisco, CA

Whatever digital material you wish to keep for yourself is a violation and criminal action against all free speech and progress of mankind.
—Josiah S. Cooper, Tucson, AZ

As a growing content creator I want an even playing field for everyone online. No tiers, no one gets faster speeds than anyone else. Complete net neutrality, nothing less!
—Micah Menefee, Winter Park, FL

These proposed rules will ruin the internet, and there will be no turning back. It will create an unfair advantage and for larger companies and extinguish innovation. We need to reclassify these internet providers as common carriers, so that we can truly protect net neutrality.
—Stephen Welch, Corona, CA

I'm a consumer and a shopper online. I like to visit all kinds of news services and educational websites. The access speed FOR EVERYBODY needs to be made faster - not just for those who can pay more for faster access.
—Roscoe K. Reed, Orlando, FL

Why should my internet slow down so that Verizon et al can make more money?
—Richard Bledsoe, San Diego, CA

the world belongs to people, not the corporations, I want to continue to have unimpeded access to the internet
—Donald Keyser, Johnson City, TN

The internet, like our roads and libraries, was created with public funds. It should not now be sold out for private corporations profit.
—Rachael Atchison, San Francisco, CA

I don't want unfair internet practices interfering with how I am able to access the web. Protect Net Neutrality.
—Tudy Garrett, Glen Ellen, CA

The internet represents free speech in the twenty-first century. Regulating the internet means you are restricting the first amendment.
—Andrew Politzer, Bethel, CT

Without Net neutrality, power will go into the hands of a few IPSs who now control most of the Internet traffic. This is way too much power in a few hands. A free and open Internet means open sharing and more innovation. Telephone companies can't make call poorer quality for cheaper packages. Electricity isn't decreased for certain customers. The Internet is as vital as these utilities.
—Knute Snortum, Portland, OR

It is not fair to consumers, to small business and most of all to net neutrality!
—Slavi Hristozov, Skokie, IL

The internet is how we stay informed about the world and having access to that is important. More importantly the internet is a way for small businesses and new businesses to get the word out about who they are and what they do. If net neutrality ends that will no longer be possible because the smaller companies will no longer be able to afford an effective web presence.
—Gary Simpson, Rathdrum, ID

The airwaves are owned by the PUBLIC not big money. Decisions and policies to create and foster a two tiered system will damage democracy and freedom of speech.
—Mary Mooney, Minneapolis, MN

Net neutrality means equal access to all. The only guarantee for equal access is having all ISP providers classified as common carriers. Please protect the future of the open internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Mary Mehaffy, Berkeley, CA

Something as ubiquitous and important as the Internet should not be subject to price-based discrimination. The impact of the Internet has expanded tremendously in recent years and a life without it is quickly becoming an unimaginable scenario. Similar to how water, heat and electricity are expected services to the American people, so should the Internet. This means that it should also be regulated under the same rules as these services, not restricted and operated under the cartel of the ISPs.
—Phil Park, Providence, RI

The proposed plan by FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler is absurd! As customers of Internet service providers, we are paying for a service that should guarantee quick access to any content, not just the content that the ISP wants to push on us. We are already overpaying for a service that is far behind where it should be when compared to other countries around the world and to add more fees on top of what we are already paying is insane! We need to classify Internet service providers as common carriers so that the FCC can enforce real net neutrality so that all ISP customers can at least get what they are paying for.
—Lonnie Cox, Wimauma, FL

I run a small internet business and I would not be able to compete if I have to pay fees to provide fast service to my customers
—Joel Brown, Oak Brook, IL

Granting this kind of power to a handful of corporations at the expense of the majority of citizens is inappropriate in a democracy.
—Irwin Hoenig, Laurel, MD

Big Money should not buy internet access - or speed. Many small businesses depend on the internet. Why allow the richest corporations to have control over the internet??? Our democracy is gone once corporations can dictate what goes over the net. Why aren't you siding with the people on this issue???
—Jerilyn Bock, Santa Cruz, CA

In a free society, it's critical that information that consumers want have unfettered, unfiltered pathways in to homes. Especially when consumers pay for those connections to a universally equal network.
—Emil Rensing, New York, NY

Please stop the proposed Internet rules that will hurt the freedom of everyone using the internet. Please stand up for the citizens of this country.
—Mona Bartoshek, Huntsville, TX

An open Internet insures that all Americans have access to all content without discrimination. This is vital to an open market economy as well as protecting free speech and free information.
—George Mitchell, Winooski, VT

Tom Wheeler, it is real simple- call isp's common carriers and be done with it. Not complicated.
—Jacob Rajan, Shrewsbury, MA

1A free and open internet is the single greatest technology of our time, and control should not be at the mercy of corporations. 2A free and open internet stimulates ISP competition. 3A free and open internet helps prevent unfair pricing practices. 4A free and open internet promotes innovation. 5A free and open internet promotes the spread of ideas. 6A free and open internet drives entrepreneurship. 7A free and open internet protects freedom of speech. Without an open internet, big corporations would have tight control over how we access websites and services.
—Brandon Loi, Clinton, IN

Dear FCC, please classify the internet as a public utility like phone lines. As a college student and an engineer, internet access at home is essential. I often remote login to my campus resources. If you let the ISPs give a "Fastlane" too big companies, I may not be able to access the resources I need. Please keep the internet free and open.
—Liz Cloos, Ann Arbor, MI

Freedom of speech and true free commerce rely on a free and open internet. My livelihood depends on it and I believe that the future of the economy depends on an open internet.
—Elisabeth Garbeil, Bloomfield Hills, MI

We in the remote areas need the Internet to be treated like a public utility, like the rural post. Folks rely on it for education, ect.
—Leslie Moore, Hailey, ID

The main problem with internet access in the United States is that access is provided largely by the private sector and because the private sector has chosen to go for a more geographical monopoly rather than 'suffer' from competition. I believe that true Net Neutrality is necessary and that it is necessary to initially redefine and treat the ISPs as common carriers and avoid a multi-tiered internet, which will stifle innovation and unnecessarily add to consumer costs, as a short-run approach and to remove/repeal laws against municipal broadbands (as you have stated is your intent -- but which may not be legally possible via FCC preemption alone) along with active encouragement of such technology such as a push to get something like the Community Broadband Act of 2007 to become law.
—Dr. Steven Douglas Cochran, Pittsburgh, PA

The Internet must remain totally open to allow for competition and innovation. These ISPes aren't being forced to provide free service. People pay them monthly fees for Internet access and should be allowed to visit any site of their choosing. The ISPes already discriminate in the form of data caps. They limit the usage of data for services like Netflix and Youtube yet their own TV service is unlimited. They limit the data on voice services like Skype and Vonage yet their own phone service is unlimited. These companies are already tipping the scales in their favor and show they can NOT be trusted period. I believe the ISPes have already violated the Sherman Antitrust Act. Why should my Vonage or Skype be limited? Why should my Netflix be limited? All this while their services are unlimited! Reclassify these ISPes as common carriers.
—Jeremy OConnell, Lilburn, GA

We are already falling behind many other countries in the quality of our Internet access and speed. Do not put what should be free under the control of for-profit corporations!
—Julia Glahn, Urbana, IL

You need to make the internet a free carrier. If your current rules go through, major internet providers will be able to discriminate against people and sites, requiring them to pay more. These rules won't create Net Neutrality, they will kill it.
—James, Nashville, TN

The internet should remain open to everyone. No pay to play!
—Lynn Anthony, Elk Grove, CA

Stop siding with the evil corporations against the American people!
—Steve Bock, Santa Cruz, CA

Net neutrality is very important to keep equality on the internet. With the proposed plan, ISPs can create fast lanes which only the richest companies can pay for. This prevents start up companies from being successful, since many people may not want to wait for a website to load and instead leave the website for a faster one. This prevents competition, a system that the United States economy is supposed to permit, and support. Therefore, the FCC should reclassify ISPs as common carriers, preventing them from being able to discriminate against start up companies.
—Tom Giffard, Wantagh, NY

The WorldWideWeb has become a very important vital means of communication, obtaining and exchanging information and of education. As such it is vital that it be equally available and usable to and by all, not just those who wield the power of monopolization vby the concenyration of wealth.
—Robert H Trickey, Sapulpa, OK

I waan the internet that I have now. I don't have the money to pay big corporations.
—Gerald Lorenz, Salem, OR

Net Neutrality is important because it treats everyone equally. To have class tiered INTERNET service is a mistake that will be costly for everyone. You would think after declining SOPA, that the message is sent: STOP TRYING TO MONOPOLIZE THE INTERNET! IF IT DIDN"T WORK THE FIRST TIME, IT WON'T WORK NOW... If you reclassify ISPs as common carriers, then the Internet will be safe, for another day.
—Luna Eclipse, Cascade, WI

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Robert Compton, Charlotte, NC

What the FCC proposes will make all but the ultra rich second class citizens. Keep the field level.
—Judith I Fordham, Coburn, PA

Net neutrality is necessary for democracy. Without it, only rich broadcasters could be seen/heard and the Internet would become a propaganda machine just like TV.
—Allen Roberts, Portland, OR

The internet has become the de facto utility of the 21st century and must be treated as such. Thank you!
—Mark Durante, Houston, TX

Dear Federal Communications Commission: FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Ann Pohlmann, Bowling Green, OH

I'm a programmer and work at a internet startup. We depend on users being able to access the internet freely and without restriction. A "two-tiered" internet would greatly reduce our ability to gain and retain users.
—R Dwayne Ramey, Nolensville, TN

Throw out the FCC's proposed Internet rules. The internet is not a commodity. It is what all citizens depend on for emergency, business and casual communication. It cannot be a two tier system. It must be a one tier system open to all.
—Peter von Christierson, Port Townsend, WA

Net neutrality is of utmost importance to me because I am destitute and I need inexpensive flow of information.
—John Camo, Monroe Twp., NJ

STOP THE CORPORATE TAKE OVER OF EVERYTHING! Enough is enough!
—Og G., Phillips Ranch, CA

Allowing any corporation to dictate how/when/if an individual is able to access information presented is insulting to the foundations of the 1st amendment. Allowing companies to determine who's voice is heard the loudest by who can pay the most goes against the very foundations of free speech in America. Reclassification of Broadband internet under Title II is the ONLY way to protect the internet and the American people from over reaching capitalistic greed.
—Brian Romanowski, Leavenworth, KS

It ain't broke, don't fix it. Get a life that doesn't interfere with ours!
—AlanDoner Doner, North Vancouver,

I'm trying to preserve a free internet not for myself, but for my children and our future. There should not be an express for some information, but for all of it.
—Charles Carey, Londonderry, NH

I really don't want a web with "premium accesses" all around!
—Emilio José Molina Molina, Nules,

Dear Tom, you should resign immediately and get someone in office that actually cares for the people! If you don't reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. Then you sir are simply not doing your job get your act together!!!
—Scott Cutler, Tustin, CA

If the cable companies take control of the internet, this means IPTV will suffer. As a user of Nexflix an IPTV supplier, this will mean lower quality service, or higher prices. As a user of the Free IPTV services such as Roku, Amazon plus, and other free services, would again mean the quality of the service will degrade, suppliers such as Roku, Amazon Fire, Hula free tv would have to start charging for their services. The law would mean more profits for the cable companies which already have windfall profits. and added costs to us low income and retired people depending on these low cost and free services. This law is nothing more then making the 1% richer, and taking away benefits for the rest of us. PLEASE STOP this action and support the middle class instead of the one percenters.
—Gary Zarzycki, Tucson, AZ

Rich folks lanes on the highways next? Only fix the potholes in the high dollar neighborhoods? Only find what the Koch's want you to find on the internet? Want to buy a CB radio?
—John Korstange, Battle Creek, MI

As it now stands, huge corporations would be the only beneficiaries if the plan, as proposed, is approved. It must be rejected!
—David Stone, Seattle, WA

Net Neutrality is Important!
—Christopher Styga, Elmhurst, NY

Discrimination of internet traffic bandwidth by ISPs will cripple the free and open internet, reducing the business and innovation that it creates. This is an anti-democratic move.
—Robert Konsdorf, Beaverton, MI

Allowing corporations to regulate Internet traffic will be unfair to everyone. Greed will determine which companies get "fast lanes", and costs will increase for consumers for content they want. I don't see how a two-tiered Internet is good for anyone other than the companies that will profit from it. This will also enable broadband providers to favor their own content, which seems to violate fairness and equality, and it creates monopoly type situations (like Microsoft used to have). This needs to be stopped before we end up with a huge debacle that will result in lawsuit after lawsuit (and appeal after appeal). I have no doubt that antitrust lawsuits will result from this, as companies will not be fair to each other in order to make more money for themselves. Please stop the madness before we ride down the slippery slope too far. Keep the Internet open by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. Please do what is best for the majority as opposed to what the service providers are lobbying for. This decision will make a big difference in the future of our country, and it would be really beneficial if the right thing is done. Please listen to the majority this time... Thank you for your time.
—Chad Lambert, Conway, AR

Many great companies like Apple became world leaders because of the open internet. if you limit access of new small companies, you will limit the ingenuity that has made the U.S. great world wide. If you take away the existing open internet will produce the stagnation of a vibrant economy and allow China, Russia and other countries to take the lead. Those who want you to end net neutrality are already rich and want you to protect them so they can stash their wealth outside the US rather than grow our economy. ENDING NET NEUTRALITY AS WE KNOW IT, IS A LOSE/ LOSE PROPOSITION
—Joanna Morgan, santa Barbara, CA

The Internet is effectively a public utility. Reclassify it as such.
—John W. Luther, Rolla, MO

The Internet is a public utility and should NOT have privileged access. Stop cowtowing to the corporate behemoths or else RESIGN.
—Annie Venesky, Brooklyn, NY

Keep the internet as it was intended, an information highway, not a toll road.
—Ronald Wilkinson, Ojai, CA

People need to communicate, conduct business, educate, and inform each other equally. Net neutrality is critical to freedom of speech!
—Andrea Fuhrman, Abilene, KS

Without ensuring ISPs are consider common carriers then small buisness like mine that depend on internet access will wither and die. We cannot afford to pay premium costs such as the big businesses for access to the same customer base. The internet is not a limited resource, and allowing the ISPs to treat it as one is arbitrary, artificial, and simple greed that will spell the doom of the current level of information and customer access that is expected on the internet.
—Jeffrey Cooper, Palm Bay, FL

I wish for the net to remain affordable for all that truly need the service. With the future plan that's about to be implemented, it'll leave the option open for the ISP's to gouge prices for people who may unintentionally use more data/bandwidth than anticipated.
—Esteban T. Madrid Jr., Pensacola, FL

The only thing that will happen is , prices will go up . There are to many big companies already . We need to split them up to create competition and more jobs .
—Dan LeMieux, Green Bay, WI

I'm tired of our 2 tiered society. It is well documented that the US middle class is shrinking, and these fat cat behemoth "information services", such as Verizon, AT&T and Comcast are trying to integrate this "monied vs. unmonied" societal framework into the internet. How much more discrimination is the lower class going to be forced to take? These companies are blatantly bullying out their competition while they intimidate lawmakers and regulators with lawsuits. Do we really want to live our lives as indentured servants to the monied, law-bending, lawsuit happy, tyrants that continue to scratch their own backs, while they step on our heads to climb their own Ladder of Success? This same scenario was played out with the Bell telephone company less than a century ago and its happening again, under a new guise. The government broke up Bell's monopoly then, it will disperse this covenant of price fixing, white collar crooks, today. What this really boils down to is that the internet should be regulated as a utility. It is as essential for a working American as a telephone, postal service, or access to electricity. In a time where the only way, for example, to obtain a copy of one's pay stub is through an online request, you must have access to the internet. Some people's jobs are based on having reliable and consistent access to the internet. Internet access is not a luxury anymore, it is a necessity. Regulate on these providers so that they treat the internet like the necessity it is, instead of simply a machine to fill their wallets.
—Wyatt Salmons, Albuquerque, NM

The INTERNET was Created with TAX DOLLARS! It belongs to the PEOPLE!!!! NOT to the ANUS' OF CORRUPT CORPORATE AMERICA!!!!
—Charles harles Petrik, Norcross, GA

Don't take away my freedom of speech on the internet.
—James Hugh Fitzpatrick, E Stroudsburg, PA

Because I've dealt with the current ISPs in this country and know they will screw us given the opportunity and this proposal is giving them the opportunity.
—Shaun McDowell, Smithtown, NY

The last vestige of Democracy is the Internet....give everyone equal access. Net neutrality must be protected. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Phyllis Goldman, Northbrook, IL

Everyone should have equal access to the internet's resources for information and entertainment. Allowing corporations dictatorial control of our resources is unethical, unfair and truly un-American.
—Arash-kia M. Aleahmad, Villa Park, IL

I firmly believe that ISPs should be classified as common carriers. By creating fast and slow tiers, you are allowing companies to hand pick "winners" and "losers" based on how rich they are. This will have a negative impact on the free market, and it only insures that the wealthiest companies remain the wealthiest and most successful. By doing this, it cements the fact that your organization, along with most others are bought and paid for by big business.
—Jonathan, Grifton, NC

The internet has become a huge hub of communication for Americans, and the world. If you were to put these corporation-boosting rules into effect, it is in direct opposition to free speech and freedom in general. The corpprations involved already receive ample payment for the services they provide, and allowing them to double-charge for these services and drown out the voices of the average man who can't pay is ridiculous. Your job is to protect America, and these proposed rules of yours are exactly the opposite.
—Brian Stumpp, Stockton, CA

Don't let rich corporations hold the internet hostage for ransom. The closer the internet is for free, the better it is for the whole world.
—Jared Ning, Oklahoma City, OK

i am a disabled person who depends on the open internet to make a living. Please do not do away with Net Neutrality! Susan E Hudson
—Susan Hudson, Mansfield, TX

So much is being priced out of the budgets of seniors under the guise of improving the way things are done. Instead it makes it worse.
—Jo-Ann Varga, Lakewood, OH

It is sad to think that a wonderful invention like the internet should be reduced to a money making tool for corporations, entities which do not have the best interests of the public at heart, but rather whose main purpose is to generate profit for shareholders.
—Adam Cargill, Carbondale, CO

Net Neutrality is exactly what it states equal service and option across the Board with out prejudice for one supplier. Do your GodDamn JOBS
—Laurence and Christine Taylor, Visalia, CA

Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Rick Ray, Troutdale, OR

The openness of the internet is crucial to all of the innovation that has been built upon it.
—Adam Wisneski, Chicago, IL

Net neutrality is important because without it people who don't have as muchmoney will be limited in their use of the internet. This is a problem because they may not enable to express their ideas via internet which is a restriction on their freedom of speech.
—Nicholas Sapsin, Lafayette, CO

2 tiered internet service is good for greedy ISP's, bad for American taxpaying consumers and bad for America.
—Rich Warner, Schenectady, NY

The internet as we know it is based on the principle that all data is created equal. As a partner in a small performance arts business, I depend on streaming video to get my work out to the world. Without real net neutrality, my work and my business becomes subject to the whims of Verizon, AT&T, and others - and they also profit off of my work by charging customers more to get the experience of my content and the content made by others like me. Please take a stand and reclassify ISPs as common carriers, which they are, so that the future of the internet is secured.
—Hans Rinderknecht, Cambridge, MA

If I understand all of this net neutrality stuff, sounds like once again we will have the rich and the poor and no middle. We need all levels - do not do away with net neutrality - keep the middle. Thank you.
—Pv Norton, Boylston, MA

the promise of the internet as a medium for expanding democracy will be destroyed unless net neutrality remains its guiding principle
—Mark Cohen, Denver, CO

The Internet is as critical to daily life as public utilities such as water or electricity had come to be throughout the 20th century. Retaining equal access to internet services for everyone is crucial as a construct of the information age and will continue to foster entrepreneurial innovation is accessible to all who choose to participate. Do not allow corporate interests to implore a tiered system is necessary, or viable for that matter, to provide their services. An evenly accessible is the only cogent solution to consider in this case.
—Mr. Corey Knafelz, Seattle, WA

I am already paying quite a lot for Internet service, and as a retired person, it will difficult for me if I have to pay even more!
—Elaine Dorough Johnson, Fort Atkinson, WI

The internet is meant to be open to all and this is not fair, big corporations all ready have too much power and they should not have the power to discriminate like this.
—Olivia Dreckman, Murray, KY

Internet Service Providers need to be reclassified as common carriers. There is no reason to favor private content providers profits over the common public interest in this time of growing wealth disparity. We do not need more corporate censorship based on ability to pay to silence ever more the voice of the people.
—Glenn Fritz, Park Ridge, IL

It's important to keep the playing field even they profit greatly and should be held acountable
—James Yoquelet, Auburn, IN

The Internet is integral to education & learning. A two tiered system will greatly impact learning in this country.
—Sara White, Inman, SC

The internet is a hub of information. It is the way we communicate, the way we get our news, our entertainment, stay connected to family and friends we can't see on a regular basis. Net Neutrality preserves our ability to access information, community and in many cases, help. To take that away would destroy so much that our world is built on in today's modern times. Destroying that is tantamount to destroying our way of life.
—Rowen Kade, Auburn, WA

Pls do not let corporate take over what should be everyone's right to have ...the Internet.
—Donna J Hernandez, Las Vegas, NV

The open Internet is key to America's continued digital innovation. Don't break it.
—Jerry Hudgins, Point Reyes Station, CA

Information innovation is dependent on a free and open internet, don't let the big corporation take over.
—Dan Kowalyshyn, Cypress, CA

Don't allow corporate America to ruin our internet!
—Thomas P. MacClave, Sewell, NJ

Net Neutrality is so important to free and open communication, very much like telephone service. Please reclassify the internet as a public utility. Thank you —Suzanne Freitag, Berlin, WI

FREEDOM is freedom of access
—Hilary Malyon, 07436, NJ

Equality is something this country was founded on. To limit the equal distribution of internet access is to spit on that principle.
—Natasha Parker, Albuquerque, NM

Mr. Wheeler, As you know the gravity of the situation, the only way we can protect our internet, its freedoms for future commerce and the rights of citizens to not be abused by the monopolies of the big telecom companies is to reclassify the internet providers as common carriers. The future of the online world depends on your hand Mr. Chairman, please please do the right thing. Sincerely, Trung Nguyen
—Trung Nguyen, San Jose, CA

Keeping the internet neutral means no favoring one side or the other; everyone is treated the same. No one gets better internet service just because they have the money to pay more than others, and no content providers are excluded because they don't have the money to pay to make their information available. The key word in Internet Service Provider is SERVICE, and the ISPs should be treated the same way as other communications services. These proposed new rules would give certain companies the power to pick online winners and losers, and allow these companies to discriminate against online content and applications, while no one would be able to do anything about it. How does that serve the public? The whole idea behind the internet was to allow everyone equal access to whatever online information was available, whenever they wished to access it. Preferential treatment for certain content providers, depending on how much they paid the ISP, was not included as part of the original intent, since there are many smaller sites that cannot afford to pay as much as a larger company to have their information put out for the public to access, even though it may be more valuable or informative than that of a bigger site. All content providers need equal access as much as all of the public. Open internet needs to be just that--open to all, and ISPs should be reclassified as "Common Carriers".
—Patricia Gallenkamp, Deland, FL

The telecom and internet providers already have too much control over what is quickly becoming one of the most dominant forms of communication. Between unwillingness to compete with each other and the high cost of entry for any new competitors they are fighting to get all the benefits of being a common carrier without the oversight or regulations required to keep them from abusing both the customers and the providers of internet information. The Internet needs to be classified as a common carrier
—Michael McGuire, Provo, UT

Allow all to access information; not just the privileged!
—Nancy Otten, Indianapolis, IN

The public should not be singled out to have SLOW internet speed, just because corporations have more money and influence FCC more..help protect John Q. Public and the public's access to a free an open internet. It is a utility, change this please!!
—Mary Driscoll, Denver, CO

Without a neutral internet, startup web sites do not stand a chance against the giant corporations paying for better service. We will never have another google, facebook, or ebay. Please reconsider the plan currently proposed.
—Alex Schimmelpfenning, Valley Park, MO

The World Wide Web was not meant to be denied to the World
—Linda Brown, Summersville, WV

The Internet is a utility and should be treated as such by reclassifying broadband as a common carrier. It's a vital resource that shouldn't be controlled by ISPs.
—Jeff Gibbons, Toledo, OH

I depend on the Internet for information I use daily. The Internet must be designated a common carrier to enforce true neutrality in the serving of any kind of data.
—Michael Schmidt, Stone Ridge, NY

FREEDOM OF SPEACH
—Jean Fleming, Studio City, CA

As a journalist, I see free press as a crucial issue of constitutional integrity. WIthout it, there's no democracy. Our American experiment is incredibly fragile now, and allowing multiple tiers would kill it. The internet is a common carrier, a public domain, like airwaves.
—Nancy Black, Santa Barbara, CA

I want my kids to grow up where information isnt discriminated on the internet. With wheelers current plan it would. This is America dammit!
—Daniel Pinzke, Chicago, IL

The internet has become one of the dominant forms of communication between individuals in our society and needs to be open to all users equally.
—Mr. Dale Edwin Wittig, San Francisco, CA declare ISP providers as title 2 "common carriers", NO TIERED internet, protect net neutrality!!!

—Allan Carroll, Lake City, FL

Don't shut out the little guys. "Fast Lane"s means that there won't be any room for anyone else once that bandwidth is allocated.
—Joe Plassmann, Tucson, AZ

The free exchange of ideas is a common good. Like the ideal of television and radio, the internet needs to belong to the public.
—Pearl Klein, Seattle, WA

Level playing fields give the truest, most exciting results. The best, not the best connected, should be seen and heard, and should have equal opportunity to prove themselves.
—Philip Rubin, Vienna, VA

One lane, not two. No Slow Lane for anyone, the Internet should be open to all, not just those who can afford it.
—Terry Thrasher, Indianapolis, IN

Being that I'm essentially a small business owner, being that I am an independent musician. I depend ona free and open internet to reach as many people as possible. By removing the free neutrality of the internet would place gatekeepers who would restrict the flow of traffic to the small business and fast track the large corporations. How many times must these corporations be told that we the people want an open and free internet?
—David Christensen, ripon, CA

The open internet can be a force for good. Think about future generations.
—Alexander Siciliano, Seattle, WA

Having reviewed FCC chairman's proposed Internet Rules are as expected & at its foundation a means to control & limit information to US citizens &/or residents. These are actions historically relevant in totalitarian regimes not a free & open society. The best way to "manage" the internet in a free & open society is to leave it as it already exists & define Net Neutrality that way. What is being proposed are the rules of a totalitarian regime not the United States of America. Sincerely, Mr & Mrs Bradley Menze
—Mrs & Bradley Menze, Lenexa, KS

The internet is something we shouldnt have to pay $50 dollars for just for a Verizon ad. It is cheap, and free of terrible ideas like this "Net Neutrality", your version is just a way for old white people like Tom Wheeler to get big bucks $$$ just so you are rich. Filth like these rules just gives me chills. And other people do too
—James Carsen, APO, AE

You have to realise that what you people do with the Not in America, affects people all over the world . the Not was designed for freedom of information and not as a mass profit medium or to be needlessly censored
—Noel Lyle-Stirling, Southampton,

Without Net Neutrality, the free and open exchange of information we've known on the internet will change to a pay-to-play paradigm, and if you can't pay, you can't play. This idea of fast lane/slow lane is flawed. It's just a subterfuge to allow huge, profitable corporations to get more money from the people they are unde rserving already.
—Gerald T. Shaia, Sun Valley, CA

The Wheeler plan will make my already overpriced second-rate service more costly, and slow. Also the plan is obviously about censoring democratic use of the internet. We're not dumb "out here", or ill-informed about what goes round and round through the "Washington revolving door". Shame on those who would betray the public trust and interest to serve the corporate! America should have the excellent - and much cheaper - service as in Europe and the Far East (in South Korea a "free free" internet is even a right of citizenship!).
—Edward Lang, East Brunswick, NJ

To me, Net Neutrality is an open line to the world, so I can view whatever I want, where I want and how I want. You take away Net Neutrality, we won't be able to communicate with our families and friends, or people who we want to talk to. Keep our internet open to everyone for good. Don't kill it! It's our link to the outside world. Thank you!
—Joe Cooper, Independence, MO

I run a small business which is totally dependent on the internet. If I can't provide quality high-speed service to my customers I will be out of business. Net Neutrality is CRITICAL to our economy and I believe that without it much of the major innovation on the web will migrate offshore.
—Jeff Moskow, Lansing, NY

I rely on the internet and being able to access it for information for my writing and for a means of communicating with friends near and far. With a slow dial-up system I use patience in some of my endeavors. If you institute fast lanes I may never be able to do anything online again.
—Marcia Halligan, Viroqua, WI

The net should be about freedom ,not tyranny by the 1%.
—Ken, Henderson, NV

I and most people struggle to pay their cable bills. I and most people think that we should net neutrality will help the poor. Internet company's should be common carriers
—Ron Alexander, Philadelphia, PA

Growth comes from small business. Your plan will slow small business and slow growth. Is that wise?
—Frank D. Watson, Indianapolis, IN

I am for Net Neutrality. Service providers should not be allowed to affect connection. ISPs should be classified as common carriers.
—Brent Linaweaver, Glenwood, MD

Net Neutrality is an extremly important tool for defending and mantaining democracy. Without the open and free internet there would not have been any Arabic Spring. Defending democracy must always be more important than help filling the already overflowing coffers of the economical elite.
—Linus Österberg Nilsson, ,

It is important that we preserve net neutrality. The internet is built and run on the ideas of many. It should not be put in the hands of the few, Mr Chairman. You work for the people of this country, not corporate interests alone. We dont need for them to charge us for something that is already in place. They already bombard us with plenty of ads and we pay them for internet access. I dont want some entity telling me what I can see and use and what I cannot for a price. Those of you who hold office really need to stand for the people of this country. We are the ones who work hard to make it what it is. Listen to us for a change. We`re more than numbers and tax revenue. ISPs should be reclassified as common carriers and be open to real competition and creativity.
—James C Sullivan, Cromwell, CT

I value the internet as a creative and democratic tool that is changing society for the better. Anything short of pure Net Neutrality would kill the best features of the internet. If the current FCC motions pass, I expect I will cancel my internet and cable service in disgust of the actions by the ISP's.
—Jonathan Yancey, Morgantown, WV

The internet is crucial to the dreams of a free world
—Robin Neal, Maidstone,

True Protection of net neutrality is synonymous with protection of all net based innovation - the proposed rules are harmful to one of the few bright spots of our economic future. Do the right thing and reject these rules.
—Jonathan Hughes, Plymouth, MA

To pick winners and losers based on how much a company pays is inherently undemocratic. This is incredibly unfair, regardless of what cover these rules are being passed under. You have a choice, to make this country less democratic and further separate the rich from the poor, or to keep the internet open and fair for everyone.
—Zach Cresswell, Ithaca, MI

Net Nutrality is necessary for internet access equality and to protect the rights of consumers.
—Lani Hink, Pahoa, HI

Increasingly, the internet is an essential service. People need it for research, for connection, for action. It is time to recognize that it has long past moved away from the province of hopeless nerds, or mere entertainment, and into the realm of the utility. Classify broadband as such. It isn't just a matter of whose movie loads fastest. It is a matter of open information, free access, and, at heart, actual democracy. Proposing a plan that would allow anyone with money to push their agenda is not only the antithesis of net neutrality, it is another step away from free speech, into propaganda, fascism, oligarchy.
—Esther Diamondstone, Phoenix, AZ

As a person on the lower class this disturbs nee because we can barely afford internet as it is and raising costs to the OPEN internet will cause troubles economically to my family and I. So please keep Net neutrality
—Kevin Cisneros, Chatsworth, GA

What an elitist pile of crap!!! The internet should be easily accessible to all, not just to those who can afford to pay extra (ultimately a small proportion of an isp's customer base)Customers who MADE these companies with their loyalty and subscription fees should be treated equally, not based on their disposable income. Net neutrality is essential!!
—Sheryl Webb, ,

Wheeler’s plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. These companies would have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. And no one would be able to do anything about it. That would NOT be fair.
—Heather Fox, wilmington, MA

I am concerned creating internet fast lanes will stifle American start-ups and our innovative economy.
—Russell Schmidt, Los Angeles, CA

Please keep the internet neutral. I'm use the internet to supplement my income. If the sites I use can't afford to pay the fees for the fast lane, then my sales will drop. Or worse, the sites I use might shift the costs of the fees onto their subscribers, like me, and I would be able to make ends meet. Discrimination based on who pays the internet service providers more money for preferential treatment is terrible for all the end users. And for small business that can't afford to pay for the preferential fast lane. Start up companies, like myself, would be at a massive disadvantage! Please don't do this to us. Protect net neutrality and protect what makes the internet so unique and innovative. There is NO reason why the internet service providers should be granted the rights to basically create an extortion ring where they can demand more money from a company to let it continue doing business as usual, or slow it down and make it suffer financially for not paying the extortion bribe money. That this would legally be allowed is madness. Please, please, please protect true net neutrality. Reclassify the ISPs as common carriers!!!
—Diana Hill, Houston, TX

Net neutrality is important to me. I want a fee not tiered Internet.
—Jim Fountain, moultrie, GA

an open fair internet is the only system of any use to 99.9999% of the users!We already pay over 10 times what the other nations pay for their access, and theirs is over 8 times as fast!
—Jim Rice, BAYTOWN, TX

Seriously? I don't have the money to be paying extra fees. A lot of people don't. You should stop, 'cause we won't —Andrea Sabillon, Silver Spring, MD

All the news and services which I actually use would be gone without real net neutrality. It's absolutely necessary for maintaining our democracy. Without it we will be a defacto fascist state.
—Joseph J Pollock, Buffalo, NY

I think we should tie up traffic near your home and charge you to drive out of your neighborhood. Comcast and others already exploit their customers, there is absolutely no reason to allow them exploit even more people.
—Galen Vandergriff, Washington, DC

There is already too much disparity on who has access to the internet. It is unethical and discriminatory to allow this two-tiered system. Please uphold net neutrality and at the very least stop this blatant privatization of public rights and access to the much needed media access.
—Angelique Nixon, Storrs Mansfield, CT

The Internet does not belong to anyone. It's community property and no provider should be allowed to throttle it for their profit.
—Jeffery Biss, Elgin, IL

The Internet ISPs must become common carriers to protect NetNeutrality and keep the Internet open.
—MC Hagerty, Carlsbad, CA

I dont like being taken advantage of by all these big companies like AT&T and Comcast and Verizon, and its not right that youre proposed plans are setting them up to do just about anything they want. especially since these companies really are our largest internet providers, and nowadays people need a reliable internet connection to get jobs or better yet keep their jobs, most companies require you to submit an application over the web, or better yet they require you to have a connection to complete work at home that you could not complete otherwise AT work. and now you propose all of this when i dont think you realize you could very possibly be playing it fast and loose with peoples lively hoods, so really i just hope you actually read these and you come to the right decision and reimpose Net Neutrality. really please do what is right for the people and not just these large scale corporations.
—Matthew McCoy, Spokane, WA

Living in a depressed rural area is tough enough but losing net neutrality would undermine a genuine chance to conduct business online and overcome the local economic dearth of opportunities. I implore you to enforce net neutrality for all and prevent it's dominance by the wealthy.
—Jeff S, Ogdensburg, NY

Because no one should slow down the internet for profits.
—Ms. Ericka Cero Wood, Scottsdale, AZ

As a disabled, yet self employed, citizen, I am FULLY dependent on my access to the internet to be able to work remotely and independently. I barely make enough to make ends meet and have difficulty even paying the high rate I already pay for internet access. Net Neutrality is CRITICAL to me and thousands of other people who, like me, can't get full time employment for any number of reasons (this DEPRESSION, physical abilities/disabilities, age, lack of available jobs, lack of available jobs that pay a living wage, etc.). This is the ultimate commons and the corporations have NO RIGHT to control it even further than they already do!
—Pamela Overholtzer, Moscow, ID

A two tiered internet is not fair. AT&T, Comcast and Verizon should not be allowed to have faster access.
—Kathy Miller, Port Hueneme, CA

Access to information and communication is a human right. The internet belongs to everyone, not just those who can pay.
—Karolina Holmqvist, ,

Freedom. This country was born on the grounds of freedom. By allowing big companies to determine what speed a person can view the internet is killing a persons freedom. In what country is it okay to force people to pay more money for faster internet? Not in America that's for sure. By forcing and giving the reins of the internet to big companies you're ruining the internet and people will not stand for that. I urge you to reconsider and give us back net neutrality. real net neutrality.
—C, Appleton, WI

Information should be freely available . Just like we don't allow publishers to pay for better shelf locations in public libraries, we shouldn't allow a ISPs to charge for access to specific online resources.
—Tommy Rosettie, Windsor, CA

Net Neutrality is important to not just me, but my family,city, and world. We depend on fast reliable internet to go anywhere. If this is taken away the world world in the USA would collapse.
—Kwang, Los Angeles, CA

If You had to Pay a Telco/Cable Bill like all of us do, then you would know why we are so Angry!!!!! Stop Taking Bribes; and Do Something For us Rate Payers!!!
—Gerard F Gaudin, Metairie, LA

Classify the ISPs as common carriers! The internet is our greatest democracy, please keep it that way and don't sell out the people of this country.
—Patrick Stone, Irvine, CA

IT'S HARD ENOUGH BEING ON SOCIAL SECURITY AND TRYING TO PAY ALL THE BILLS AND EAT. WE NEED TO BE ABLE TO DEPEND ON THE FACT THAT ALL PEOPLE, REGARDLESS OF THEIR WEALTH, WILL BE ABLE TO ACCESS THE INTERNET WITHOUT HAVING TO DO SO AT THE EXPENSE OF OTHER BILLS.
—Edna Anderson, beloit, WI

If you enact this proposed set of rules, you are basically letting big business own the internet. The internet is the last true form of freedom and you're proposing to take that away from us. The internet is not something that should be owned by big business, it should be owned by the people which it currently is. Any form of discrimination set in place to the way that it runs, such as by money grubbing big businesses will destroy that notion. AT&T, Comcast, and Verizon are the direct reason I guarantee there's pressure to put these rules in place because it will benefit them and only them. This will do nothing but hurt the average person while gaining these corporations more absurd profits than they already have by sucking more money out of consumers. Do not fold to these pressures and sell out like so many organizations have in the past. You are the only organization able to keep our constitutional right of internet freedom intact for our country's citizens. Please get rid of these proposed rules and leave the internet in peace. The internet is free now if and only if these rules are discarded. Your organization will single handedly kill this freedom if you continue with the rules that you have tried to put in motion. The internet's fate is in your hands, so please do the right thing and keep it the way that it is, FREE.
—Michael Crossett, Buffalo, NY

Small businesses like mine are being forced to compete for an Internet that is becoming less responsive as Internet providers work to control both the flow and the content of my Internet access. This is unreasonable and the FCC has the ability and the power to put a stop to this. Please make Net Neutrality the law by making the Internet a public utility and give small businesses like mine a chance to have equal footing and equal access to the Internet. Thank you for your consideration on this very important issue for all Americans.
—Patrick Williams, Sunnyvale, CA

The Internet as it exists now is due entirely to the ability of every provider of online content to have equal footing in presenting their content to Internet users. Net Neutrality is what should prevent mega-corporations from squeezing the life out of the Internet by diminishing the individual experiences of users from many websites. If it weren't for this content being available in equal quality to all users, the Internet as it is today would simply not exist. To limit it in any way will hinder future innovation and development. Please preserve Net Neutrality. Thank you.
—Tim McElroy, Philadelphia, PA

The Internet is the most efficient way for Americans and businesses to interact. ISP's should be reclassified as common carriers, just as telecomm services are. ALL Americans deserve the right to access all Internet services, without discrimination as to income level. The Internet must not be allowed to be broken into tiers according to consumer's ability to pay.
—Maria Lambert, Marshfield, MA

Bandwidth providers should be just that, and not arbiters of content. This industry has an extremely high cost to enter, which discourages real competition. The only way to ensure the internet we want is to regulate it to be open and as inexpensive as possible to access.
—James Ofsink, Portland, OR

All the world's a stage, and new is just more entertainment? Keep the fools in the dark? Is that it? Is that you?
—Brian T Donovan, vancouver, WA

As a consumer, I've directly benefitted from the disruptive effect that Internet-age companies such as YouTube and Netflix have been able to have on entrenched telecom industries due to the low barrier for entry. I've been able to go from having a single, pricy option for cable TV in the Bryan/College Station, TX area, to having hundreds of viable, low-cost, legal sources for media content online. But, as we saw with the recent Netflix-Comcast spat, Netflix becomes much less compelling when it was pushed into the "slow lane", limiting its ability to compete as a viable alternative until it paid the fees for the fast lane. We wouldn't have the vibrant, competitive content market we have today if that barrier had been in place from the start. As a software developer, I love the fact that the Internet allows good ideas to bubble to the surface and succeed on their own merit, simply because the only thing standing in your way are the technological challenges of scaling up to reach millions of people. But if I were needing to pay fees to the companies I was competing against because they happened to have a conflict of interest and also own the wires I needed to use to reach my site's visitors, I couldn't possibly afford to compete. YouTube was started by three software developers in a garage, but they never would have been able to have succeeded against the behemoths they were facing at the time were they required to shell out the cash to get into the fast lane. Google was founded by two guys in a garage. Facebook was one guy. Can you imagine any of them succeeding today against companies that can afford the fast lanes? Moreover, the mere existence of a fast lane means that my ISP is either artificially slowing down the traffic that I've paid them to deliver to me so that they can make room for the fast lane traffic, or they are extorting fees from companies like Netflix before they'll provide me with the level of service that I have already paid for. Either way, I find it personally offensive that someone is having to grease the wheels with cash to get the promised level of service. After all, as you're well aware, it's a technological impossibility to create a "fast lane" without first slowing down the existing traffic that we have now, meaning that I'm losing the service I currently have until the sites I visit pay these extortionate fees. None of this should even be up for debate, since it's clearly not in the best interests of consumers. Classify these companies as common carriers. End this nonsense. Please.
—Bradley Sattem, Bryan, TX

The level playing field of the internet is a major driver of growth, innovation, and entrepreneurship. If the ISPs are allowed to create a two tiered internet this would kill that growth. Also it is preposterous for ISPs to be allowed to charge internet users to access the internet and simultaneously charge websites to be available to the users.
—Robert Maier, Carmichael, CA

Prioritization is a form of discrimination. Discrimination of data, even in cases of high volume traffic, is unfair and undermines the idea of a free and open Internet. Companies should not have to pay ISPs to get to their users any faster, nor should customers EVER have to pay their ISPs a toll just to use the Internet outside of more prominent content providers. Please do not allow either of these things, or any form of interment censorship to happen.
—Peter G. Salathe, Indianapolis, IN

Hate to use the slippery slope argument, but . . .
—Kyle Ruark Hoinville, Lansing, MI

DEMOCRACY. DEMOCRACY. DEMOCRACY. LOGIC. LOGIC. LOGIC. We, the people, NOT we, the corporations. Why is it even necessary to explain this to anyone in this country who appreciates living in a democracy?????
—Ms. Roslyn E. Walker, Marina del Rey,, CA

Help the public and not these corporate interest that are already overcharging for the services they provide.
—Tc Chat, Garland, TX

Every provider should have an equal opportunity to provide internet services. No company should have special privileges.
—Nancy Meyers, Higganum, CT

This is just wrong. We need a free internet in this country now, more than ever. The internet should NEVER be owned solely by a select few. It is no longer just a medium to access entertainment, it can be, but that is just a part of it. It is utilized on a professional level by Millions of people around our nation as a communication tool by our Cities, Government, Schools, basically every aspect of life. It has become a basic human need. Big corporations shouldn't be allowed to pick and choose who gets what level of access to what traffic. We need Net Neutrality.
—Christopher Samuelson, Bethel, AK

The Internet is one of the last truly egalitarian avenues of free speech left in this nation and for some in the world, it is the only avenue of free speech! Do not allow corporate greed and political corruption to create the haves and the have nots. There is enough disparity in our nation as it is! Corporations and Internet service providers are not hurting with the profits they have now! Reclassify the ISPs as common carriers so the common good is served as should be. Thank you.
—Terri Guerra, Bakersfield, CA

Dear FCC- Please keep net neutrality just as it is as it leaves an equal playing field for all people and for those who could not afford to pay for the change if it were to occure.
—Loyd Benetti, portland, OR

Net neutrality is the means of protecting the global freedom of the Internet against the ravages of corporate greed, monopoly and control. Internet Corporations would themselves not exist but for the presence - and original freedom of the world wide web.
—Keith Harris, ,

It's really important that service providers not be able to profit from extra charges for "fast" service. If some online content is given the privilege of being in the "fast" lane, then automatically everything else is slowed by definition. This is discrimination, not net neutrality. I depend upon net neutrality to access the information I need. I cannot stomach the thought of being directed instead to content provided largely by well-heeled corporations with lots of cash. This is not the content I need.
—Gerald Ottone, Milwaukee, WI

There are already too many two tiered systems in this country, one that benefits the wealthy and leftovers for those who are not. It is about time the government began to ensure fair and equal access for all, regardless of how many lobbyists they have or contribute monetarily.
—Frank J Hopkins, Bronx, NY

Simply, there should not be any discrimination between the type of data being served by the provider or accessed by the user. If I have availed a service why someone should give me better bandwidth of accessing videos or poor when i am just checking my mails or growing a news article. I should get the same privilege and speed irrespective what i watch...
—Anil Dubey, Brandon, FL

The net is an important place for freedom, which no corporation or government should own or regulate in favor of one party. The current proposal does not prevent this. The people who use the Internet create most of its content - don't charge us for it.
—Luke Vuksta, Pottsville, PA

Open internet means open communication and ideas. It should not be better access for those who can pay the most money for their content to reach people. It will discriminate against start-ups and small groups who cannot compete against big money. We need Net Neutrality!! Internet ISPs are common carriers, and should be classified as such.
—Jaklin Hunt, Beaverton, OR

Unrestricted access to the means of information and communication is crucial for democratic societies.
—Steffen Fuchs, Cologne,

Make the world a fairer place. There is no excuse for making the internet as sickeningly unequal as everything.
—Dr. Barry Eshkol Adelman, Vero Beach, FL

Internet access is one of the few forces for social equality left in our country. Allowing it to be effectively "zoned" creates yet another class divide based on huge income inequalities. If you care about the middle class and the working poor, you will keep the internet open.
—Heather R. Godsey, Knoxville, TN

The single private internet user pays the most fees per data volume. Why should she or he not have the same rights like big companies?
—Frank Peter, Erfurt,

The open Internet is fine as it is. Please do not change it, especially in favor of corporate monsters that only seek more control and favoritism.
—Sensei Bill Handel, Red Bluff, CA

I think Net Neutrality is important for everybody not just for the big Corporations.
—Linda Kane, Mesa, AZ

My job requires that I have a fast and reliable internet connection. I pay a premium for this and my bill is at the peak of what I can afford now. A 2 tier internet could possibly kill my business and I demand that the FCC do the right and correct thing and reject this 2 tier proposal and to protect Net Neutrality! Stand up and protect the millions of citizens that pay your salaries from the corporate pirates. Thank you for your time.
—Brad Goss, Cedartown, GA

I am a computer science major. My life has always been about computers and the internet. I don't want the internet that I grew up with to be different from the one I graduate college with.
—Joe, Baldwin, NY

I am 97! My home is on the coast of Oregon. I communicate with family and friends daily. Just, often, to let them know I'm still alive. I cannot do that if the costs go up. I already have trouble with AT&T 's phone signal being weak. They do cater to those who can pay more already. Please don't let them price me out of communication.
—Carol Povey, Nehalem, OR

Dear whoever is reading this, Please keep net neutrality. Every bit of data on the internet should be treated equally. By letting people pay to have their data treated with priority, you are essentially opening up an entire new world of discrimination. The poor person trying to set up a blog to speak about social injustice should have an equal footing against the big business causing the injustice. With a two tiered internet system, the big business would be able to pay money to have their data show up instead of the people who need to be heard.
—Adam Binford, Bellevue, WA

There are many reasons to keep the Internet neutral. "Free market" means a level playing field. Look at the incredible innovation and productivity network neutrality has produced so far. Big business already owns the mobile network. Don't let them have it all.
—Walter Sargent, Huntington Station, NY

This is a blow to civil liberties and the first amendment. By charging people extra to use certain websites, you are restricting one of the only real open forums for discourse in this country. Please do not do this. I don't want to be at the mercy of my ISP and my wallet.
—Rick Mynatt, Overland Park, KS

Treating all data equally improves competition.
—Jb Badcoe, ,

The FCC NEEDS to throw out its rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. It is unfair that people with financial issues, or medical issues that require high finance maintenance to be slowed down, or be pushed to a lower tier service speed! It's ridiculous and is just another way to promote a communistic type of mentality due to the control that seems to be desired by these actions. If approved, these rules would mean the end of Net Neutrality, which seems to be the only thing that american people have these days. Cut this crap, because that's what it is.
—Joshua Paredes, Wind Gap, PA

FCC CHAIRMAN WHEELER: IT IS OBVIOUS THAT OBAMA IS PAYING OFF THE TELECOMMUNICATIONS INDUSTRY WITH YOUR APPOINTMENT. IF YOU DON'T RECLASSIFY THE INTERNET AS A UTILITY (WHICH IT IS) YOU WILL BE ONE THE MOST HATED INDIVIDUALS IN AMERICAN HISTORY.
—Bruce Stroud, Ranchos de Taos, NM

The American public own the air waves and the FCC administers it and sells spectrum... This is for the public good, not for some greedy corporate wonk to hog all of the information and spectrum.... Do your job and classify ISP's what they are - common carriers... Do Your Job!!!
—Gerald and Mary Lou DeVane, Palm Coast, FL

Internet providers must be reclassified as common carriers. Net neutrality is our right! Don't you invade our privacy enough on a regular basis? Enough is enough, listen to the people, or deal with an unsatisfied populous that outnumbers you significantly. A concerned citizens ready to finish school and make a difference. Benjamin Mortensen
—Benjamin Mortensen, Albuquerque, NM

In order for the internet to continue being the massive resource for learning, education, communication, and entertainment that it currently is, we need to ensure that it remains open and unrestricted to everyone. Doing away with Net Neutrality effectively puts internet users at the mercy of ISPs, and the past has shown us that these huge corporations do not have the interest of the users in mind. You, the FCC, needs to throw out these rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers, to allow for more competition and better service for consumers.
—Anthony Muniz, Comstock Park, MI

It's becoming clear that the greedy corporate mobsters own the FCC along with the FDA, USDA, and all of the other organizations that have been put into place under the pretense of protecting the American people. Is there any integrity left anywhere amongst all the corruption?
—Debra Koich, Sequim, WA

ISPs are a common carrier and much like any utility. Try living without the Internet, most counties in North Carolina have eliminated newspaper announcements for voting changes, bankrupcies and we need to be able to access the Internet. Just like elecricity, we can not live properly without it.
—John Peterson, Mebane, NC

An open internet with equal access for everyone is the only answer for myself and millions of other Americans.
—Joe Dixon, New York, NY

The internet is a place where creativity can bloom! It won't stay that way if its neutrality isn't protected.
—Sarah G, Glendale, CA

I depend on net neutrality and demand for the FCC to protect the open internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers! Thank you!!
—Angie Pappas, Appleton, WI

Net neutrality is essential to keeping the Internet the an open and creative channel. Just look back at the history of the Internet and imagine all the services that started as little projects that someone just thought would be a neat idea. And look at what they've become today. Please keep the Internet open and equal, you are the only hope we have for net neutrality to succeed.
—George Hernandez, Dallas, TX

GET OUT OF THE INTERNET...LEAVE IT NEUTRAL
—Pat Metsinger, LENEXA, KS

It should be free for everyone.
—Judi Poulson, Fairmont, MN

Reclassify ISPs as common carriers. No one should be allowed to "own" the internet and that's what would happen in a two (or more) tier system. Don't let big money destroy net neutrality.
—Eileen Gottschalk, Rochester, NY

A neutral internet is indispensable for academic research.
—Patrick Leland, Baltimore, MD

I feel all websites deserve equal footing and you shouldn't have to pay to get good bandwidth. Charities and non commercial sites will suffer if other sites are given fast lane status.
—Tim Sauers, Marysville, WA

This is a terrible idea which will kill any semblance of freedom on the internet and create a chilling of business creation. End these ideas now.
—Michael Dietz, Beachwood, OH

Freedom of internet is as important as freedom of speech. Freedom of internet IS freedom of speach.
—Maciek Gorecki, Portland, OR

I have to make my living by working on the Internet. Strangling or censoring the net is a protection racket that will hurt my business. I already pay far more in this country than my partners do overseas and the pay for service net you propose would broaden the gap between what US customers pay and what the rest of the world pays. This will move us backwards faster and faster, destroying democracy, business and only transfer wealth to a very few at the top. The Internet has worked well because it is not censored by fast lanes, slow lanes, pay as you go schemes. Any move against the open nature of the net will backfire and move towards a class structured communications system where the wealthy and already entrenched have all the privileges and the new or "equal" will merely be pawns giving up their cash to Comcast and other large scale censor masters.
—Michael Forster, Portland, OR

Please do not cave to the power of big money corporations. They chose to enter the game with the rules that existed. Now they are trying to change the rules to make even more money. Our society is currently built on abilities that the internet provides. Its stability is foundational to the long term success of the economy of our country.
—Mr. Alan Mason, Portland, OR

I pay a monthly fee to Comcast and that should guarantee that I have equal access to the Internet for anything I want: research, looking up the news, planning a trip, etc. No one should have to be a second-class citizen as far as the Internedt is concerned. No one should be able to pay more money in order to get faster service. If you are already paying for the Internet, you should have full access to it. The Internet should not qualify as some having 1% service while the vast majority of people have second-rate service, especially while they are still paying for it each month.
—Jean Toles, Portland, OR

It's time for the FCC to prove whether it still serves the people, or if it's a slave to the rich few. The people are decidedly for Net Neutrality, but is the FCC really for people?
—Daniel Hewlett, Hammond, IN

I am old enough to remember when public service meant something, for instance during the Kennedy administration. In light of that I simply cannot see these rules proposed by Chairman Wheeler as anything but his shilling for the telecomm industry just like Michael Power before him. The message from the circuit Court was clear - The FCC has been given the authority to declare the internet providers as 'common carriers'. How about being a real public servant and ruling for the public interest rather than just padding a resume.
—Mr Christopher A Carman, Silver Spring, MD

We need ISPs to be reclassified as common carriers! We also need faster speeds, more bandwidth though. The ISPs have been making a lot of money of "high" speed internet already, follow Google's lead. Push the market, install Fiber. Destroying Net Neutrality will destroy the competition on the Net.
—Joseph Kent Craig, Newnan, GA

The Age of the Internet has brought untold benefits, innovation, and prosperity. Such benefits are possible because there has always been a sort of "gentlemen's agreement" that the ISPs are neutral when it comes to who is sending data to them. Data from a tiny startup is treated the same as data from giants like Microsoft. People providing services using the Internet pay their providers for the Internet service they need, and subscribers do likewise. However, large ISPs want an end to this 'Net Neutrality. Not content with record profits from large and small providers alike, these ISPs want to charge again for "fast lane" access to the homes and offices of their subscribers. Businesses will pass these increased costs to consumers, and small organizations will have find themselves with greatly increased barriers to serving their potential customers. Our lack of effective last-mile provider competition has already made the US struggle to compete with Europe and Asia; allowing ISPs to dispense with network neutrality will only pump their profits--without significant benefit to consumers, and with harm to small innovators. The FCC should be acting to preserve network neutrality, thus continuing to protect the fertile environment for Internet innovation. Instead, the chairman is proposing rules that will undermine it.
—Darren Meyer, Saint Paul, MN

Please do what's fair. Keep it free and open to all or stifle innovation and set us all back!
—Elizabeth Forston, San Diego, CA

The internet is a place where ideas can be freely shared and helps shape the future of the world. Please don't impede progress.
—David Oguni, Atlanta, GA

WOW ANOTHER FEE WE HAVE TO PAY.THE RICH GET RICHER AND THE POOR PAY FOR THEM.
—David Gardner, PASADENA, MD

Why are you not putting the customers first? We already pay a lot for this service to begin with, why do they get a chance to screw us over again? Help us!
—Barbara Kantola, Niles, MI

An open and free internet for all equally is critical to the webs development in this country. I live in a very rural area, heavily treed, the only internet service available is via cable. The internet should be treated no differently than the phone company or electric company. If it were not for rural electric coops we might still live in the dark. But thanks to enlightened government regulations our electric rates are very competitive with excellent service. This should be the model for an open and free TO ALL internet.
—Paul & Natalie Cornez, Stoystown, PA

The loss of Net Neutrality is unacceptable in this age of technology. Please ensure an open internet.
—Linda Mullaney, Lyndhurst, NJ

The proposed rule changes amount to nothing less than censorship for corporate profitability. That's precisely what a democracy DOES NOT need! Bring back net neutrality!
—David Zabriskie, Hawley, PA

It's un-American to allow the emergence of a pay to win marketplace on the internet with tiered fast and slow lanes.
—Mark Bridgeman, ,

Think ahead. We predict there soon will be need for real-time Internet-carried data transmission and control for consumer medical devices. Pay-to-play will never provide adequate access for such safety-critical applications. A utility would be regulated to assure differentiation that guarantees support for critical services.
—David and Helen Gill, SPRINGFIELD, VA

I watch a lot of content from independent entertainers on YouTube and other video sharing websites. If this plan goes through, they will lose viewers and revenue because many of their fans can't afford to pay additional fees for faster internet. This is a classic case of screwing over the many to benefit the few. It is my firm belief that the internet is the last true place where everyone has freedom to do as they please. To let that be destroyed by corporate greed is among the most appalling things I can think of. These internet service providers are supposed to increase their profits by offering better service and better prices than their competition, thus attracting new customers rather than making a deal that would either decrease the quality of the service or increase the prices for the ones they already have. I understand that they are businesses and they always want to do what is best for their bottom line. However, this goes beyond business strategy and infringes on the rights of the consumer. It is a greedy, underhanded attack on the freedom that this country preaches to its dying breath and this sort of behavior on the part of these money-grubbing corporations will not go unnoticed or unchallenged.
—James Dietrich, Manchester Township, NJ

I help small businesses have a presence online. Neither they nor I can afford the faster connections being set aside for large corporations, meaning that my business and those of my clients will have a harder time competing with those larger corporations. For marketplace diversity, we need Net Neutrality!
—Christina Gilman, Seattle, WA

Because if changed it will only benefit the large ISP companies, leaving the rest behind,
—Roberto Toscano, Las Vegas, NV

As an Internet professional for the past 17 years, I know firsthand how critical true net neutrality has been to the development of my sector of the economy. FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would effectively shut out the young, entrepreneurial innovators we need to keep our economy strong. Please do not create a two-tiered Internet and stifle the engine of our nation's economic growth.
—Michael Evans, Oakland, CA

9-digit CEO salaries for ISPs with a struggling broadband infrastructure is ludicrous. If these rules are not accepted, the ISPs will finally be forced to do what they should have since their inception. Employ people to rebuild, grow and maintain a larger infrastructure. Easy, cheap, and good for the country.
—Bryant Richardson, Brunswick, ME

We now live in a world where we depend on the internet like we depend on electricity and gas. These other delivery services are regulated, why not the internet. Allowing ISP's to control and discriminate service based on how much a company can pay will kill the internet and turn it into a portal that only the wealthy can access. We need to maintain and support a neutral internet.
—David Terrell, Batavia, IL

Dear FCC, We know that conglomerates have had their way with our economy, the middle class, and the working poor. We don't need more areas where the wealthy can buy basic services that the rest of us can't afford. As a teacher, I see the difference money can make in education. The internet has been one place where students can begin to level the playing field. Please help protect an open internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. Sincerely, Kathy Doran
—Kathy, Sebastopol, CA

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Andrew S., Dumas, AR

This is a "no brainer." Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers!
—Sandra Perkins, Seattle, WA

Without Net Neutrality, large isp's can decide whether any other internet based service or store succeeds or fails.
—Samantha Sartoris, Round Lake, IL

The FCC can demonstrate its fairness by reclassifying ISP's as common carriers. A free and open internet is now more important than telephone service. There is already to little competition for broadband service and if you allow the big corporations and lobbyists to have their way here, the consumer will suffer both financially and intellectually. Do not allow them to control or limit content in any way.
—Mickey Soltys, Carbondale, IL

U S A has the slowest and the most expensive internet service in the world, if we don't go to a common carriers it will get much worse.
—Erik Jirgens, Deming, NM

Online discrimination is unjust to the highest degree. These companies already make record-breaking profits from their advertisements and providing internet as it is. It's equivalent to making people pay twice for the same service which is complete robbery. No one owns the internet, much like no one owns the air we breathe or water we drink. It is an infinite-sized resource that must be treated as such and available to all - freely.
—Korbin Uhlman, south brookfield,

The internet should be open for all citizens in a democracy and it's content determined by them not controlled by corporate interests.
—Dennis Murphy, Cambridge, MA

America is nearly 100% owned by wealth and its power. Seems pointless and unnecessary to give big money complete and total power with the addition of the control information and speech.
—Sharon Conn, sandy, OR

For the good of American Internet Equality-- which is what Net Neutrality really is, no special privileges for anyone online -- please reconsider your rules, and instead, reclassify ISPs as common carriers. That is the ONLY way to protect real Net Neutrality. Thank you.
—ML Polak, philadelphia, PA

Please reclassify internet service providers as common carriers! This is the ONLY way to protect REAL NET NEUTRALITY. Thank you!
Stephen B. Elliott
—Steve elliott, Jacksonville, NC

No offense but, have you lost your mind? Do you realize if this continu's it would be a step back instead of forward, making life worse for millions of people, jus think about it, 1 out of 1000 is really rich and can afford this, the rest can't, so one person that has already got the luck of being rich with all its privileges now gets another privilege which the other 999 people are suffering from, this would be terrible, i hope i talked some sense into you, please make the right decision and protect the REAL net neutrality, not this fake bullshit.
—Laurens de mos, ,

Reclassify ISP as Common Carriers. Protect the interest of consumers not the corporation!
—Tom F Headley, Erwin, TN

Free speech, a free press and a free internet is crucial to a democracy.
—Linda Jackson, Pensacola, FL

I know the FCC Chairman is a former lobbyist for the telcom industry but the people of the US demand net neutrality. For a change give the citizens what they deserve!
—Alan Benefield, Spring Hill, TN

This isn't fair. Keep it the way it is. There aren't any problems, so why change it?
—Chris Orr, Fruita, CO

Internet service providers neither own the content that is being transferred on the internet nor personally store hardly any of content that customers access daily. It should not be under the authority of service to regulate the user's ability to access this open content.
—Marshall Mucasey, Bellaire, TX

I am already paying quite much for my Internet access to my ISP. Please make sure my internet traffic is not throttled down because Netflix pays more to ISP for my neighbor to watch their movies. Please restore net neutrality as it should be regulated as a utility. Thanks!
—Victor, Atlanta, GA

Innovation often starts will individual inventors and small start-up companies. Letting ISPs set different tiers of service for big companies vs everyone else will stifle innovation because it'll make it much harder for small inventors (like myself) to get started with any project that requires bandwidth. Giving that kind of control to ISPs will erode the egalitarian nature of the internet that's made it able to evolve so effectively until now. ISPs say that fast lanes are necessary to let them pay for reinvestment in their infrastructure, but that won't happen, they'll just pocket the new revenue. Please reclassify them as common carriers.
—Greg Abbas, Menlo Park, CA

As a gay American, I am VERY concerned about sites I depend on being shut out!
—Mitchell Orman, Chicago, IL

Everything cannot be a monopoly
—Craig Cavanaugh, Manchester, NH

Listen to the technical people who run the internet (like myself). They think it's a terrible idea.
—Alexandre Emelianov, Campbell, CA

I depend on the Internet for nearly everything I do; I use it to learn, teach, communicate, create, and share. Many of the sites I use, especially for my art, would die if net neutrality were to be destroyed. Having the ability to access all of the amazing, varied resources that are on the Net is essential to me.
—Ruth Frick, Doylestown, PA

I need and use the net just as I do electricity, gas and water. the Net needs to be another utility.
—Harold Goldman, Rohnert Park, CA

Please allow the FCC to throw out its rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. This is the ONLY way to protect real Net Neutrality.
—Elaine Waldron, London,

Please stand up for the PUBLIC GOOD. Have principals, ethics, morals and remember who you are there to serve - not the corporations which are composed of people BUT ARE NOT HUMAN BEINGS Do your duty - serve the good of the people - the common as well as not common people everywhere.
—Peggy Salas, Stillwater, OK

The cable companies have us over a barrel now and you plan on giving them more power to rob us of our access to the internet at a reasonable speed!they keep promising faster internet but prices go up speed is same or lower in some areas. Let's keep the internet neutral we don't want a 2 or more tere system. Thank you
—Ronnie kolb, Cato, NY

We need a policy that helps small business, not giant business.
—David Degling, Granby, CT

The net needs to be open to all! There are enough fees as it is!
—Marie Leven, Flushing, MI

With the already heafty fees that can be charged for internet it is imperative that ISPs be classified as common carriers. I work from home and, though I would probably classified as a simple residential user, that would hurt my business and ability to make money. If I can't make money I can't spend it on things that the top tier users make or the services they provide.
—Amanda P Mobley, Louisville, KY

It is highly disconcerting that we, the people, must constantly fight for internet freedom. You know what we, the people, want. We want an open, free internet; the kind of place where a real democracy can exist. Instead, the FCC wants to turn it into the too-far-gone U.S. model of democracy, where the deepest pockets have the loudest voice. Stop this nonsense, please. The internet may have been invented in the U.S., but it belongs to the people of the world. The people of the world deserve an open, free internet.
—Luke Weese, Longview, TX

I am sik of the big comapnies always trying to take everything away, its time for us to rise up against the machinations of these companys —Travis J. Zolnierek, Alpena, MI

First Amendment anyone?
—Bebe McCarthy, Ridgefield, CT

Please, do not let the internet providers do this...it is senseless!, and utterly unwarranted from any perspective, other than perhaps that a chairman with former ties to this industry. Please, reclassify ISPs as common carriers, for the good of the Vast Majority, not a handful of lobbyists and CEO's. Enough is enough! Thank you.
—Eugene Resler, Brooklyn, NY

We need the free and honest flow of information on the internet to remain uninhibited. We cannot allow these corporations to continue to buy what happens in this country. This is a dangerous time in world history and if our flow of unbiased information is interrupted because it's inconvenient to Comcasts business interests, we're going to find ourselves in a much more dangerous place very quickly. Do not allow for a fast and slow lane on the Internet; you'll be paving the way too censorship of you do.
—James Kellogg, Los Angeles, CA

The internet has always been the place where everyone is equal. On the internet people tend not to discriminate based on looks or age since you don't always know who you are talking to. The internet is the only place where this exists, so please don't take this away from us. Freedom is an American right.
—Amelia Myers, Severn, MD

Frankly, I visit a lot of very niche sites that wouldn't be able to afford the fast lanes. That, and the ISPs are already screwing us over in every other way possible, do NOT let them give us this final "Fuck You".
—Beau Leslie, Daphne, AL

If there is no neutrality the net loses half of its sense.
—Montserrat Costa Jou, 35100,

If the Internet slows down, I'll just stop using it. You will have killed the goose laying the golden eggs.
—Mason Taylor, Seattle, WA

throw out its rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. This is the ONLY way to protect real Net Neutrality.
—Jared, Marietta, GA

I live in a rural area of Montana, where the internet is one of the few ways to connect to the rest of the world. Increasing the cost of true high-speed internet would have a major negative impact on my quality of life. Everything from entertainment to sharing of medical diagnosis and treatment, to education would be impacted. Please reject tiered fast lanes on the internet.
—Stephen Zettel, Libby, MT

This entire thread on Etsy represents what my comments are: https://www.etsy.com/teams/771 8/questions/discuss/14566549/p age/1
—Heather Doyle, Saint Augustine, FL

THERE ARE DOZENS IF NOT HUNDREDS OF IMPORTANT CHOICES THAT HAVE TO BE MADE EACH YEAR THAT WE HAVE TO WORK TOGETHER ON EACH COMBINING OUR TIME AND EXPERTIZE TO BE ABLE TO REACH THE BEST CHOICES AND CORRECT PAST ERRORS MORE QUICKLY. THE MOST EFFICIENT AND EFFECTIVE WAY WE CAN EVOLVE OUR REPRESENTATIVE SYSTEM OF SOCIETAL INSTITUTIONS MANAGEMENT TO GOVERNMENT OF, BY AND FOR THE PEOPLE IS BY ONE 6 YEAR TERM LIMITS FOR ALL OF OUR REPRESENTATIVES/MANAGERS WORLDWIDE STARTING WITH THE U.S. CONGRESS. EVEN THE POWERS THAT BE WILL BE BETTER OFF BECAUSE FREE PEOPLE, ON A LEVEL PLAYING FIELD, PRODUCE MORE, KEEP MORE AND SHARE MORE. WWW.ONE6YEARTERMLIMITS.ORG
—Mr. Bill Vom Weg, COVINGTON, LA

As a self-employed, single-mom that relies on the Internet professionally net neutrality is very important to me.
—Rachel Cullar, Oakley, CA

Eric Ercanbrack
—Eric Ercanbrack, Portland, OR

Certain things should stay in the "public domain", open for all to use and not subjected to private, for-profit corporate control. The Internet is one of those things. The amazing success of the Internet is based on that fact. It should be declared an "common carrier".
—CHarles R Irwin, Austin, TX

I do not want large companies like Verizon, Comcast, and AT&T deciding what is most important to me on the web. That is MY decision. Mr. Wheeler you should be ashamed of yourself. What are those companies promising you? Full disclosure now!
—Randall Johnson, Charleston, SC

I not only use the Internet for work on a daily basis, but I also use the Internet at home, for both personal and work purposes. If I were not able to utilize the Internet properly to access my work VPN (due to being in the "slow lane" package of a major ISP), it would affect my ability to work from home when required. In addition, I play a lot of online video games at home, and watch a lot of streaming media. Being put into the "slow lane' would affect the majority of my entertainment options at home, affecting my enjoyment of my media. From a business standpoint, I would be less likely to give my business to streaming companies and game developers due to these poor experiences.
—Josh D, Raleigh, NC

The internet should be open to all and should be treated as a utility. Preferential treatment to content providers and discrimination against others is not fair and doesn't promote an open and free internet.
—Adam bland, Presque Isle, ME

Without Net Neutrality, the barrier to entry for startup web services will be dramatically raised, and growth will be severely stunted.
—Jesse Tipton, Fort Worth, TX

Killing Net Neutrality ensures the creation of monopolies in every industry, making innovation nearly impossible. These so-called "fast lanes" and "slow lanes" are an attempt by internet service providers to legalize bribery and censorship for the purpose of making a profit. I am disgusted that the FCC is even considering this.
—Sumayah, Garden Grove, CA

I am not in favor of this multitier internet. I believe that it would birth an internet where I would lose out. Although it might allow for more infrastructure, it would stifle innovation. In fact, I believe that the current isps have enough capital to provide the infrastructure we need.
—Mr. W Lim, Prattville, AL

Everyone deserves the same access to the Internet. Everyone!
—Anne and John Hedberg, Golden, CO

Stop listening to the oligarchs in the industry. They care nothing for the public interest. They are legally required to care only about increasing the return to their stockholders. Your job is to blunt that crass strategy that destroys freedom and democracy. THAT is YOUR legal duty--no matter how impressed you are with the oligarchs. Moneyed people reinterpret everything to get more money.
—Benita Campbell, Burgettstown, PA

A level playing field for worldwide communications is more important than entertainment and the protection of the overwhelming advantage that large companies will enjoy without Net Neutrality.
—William Spaniol, Richmond, VA

In its earliest periods we recognized that certain media have to be available in a neutral manner to ensure the education of our society. We regulate radio and TV. What happened when we allowed those industries to carve off parts of our public airways for commercial gain? They sold it to the highest bidders and effectively made it a situation in which you have to pay to play. I am unable to afford radio and TV provided under these conditions even though I am a college educator. I understand the financial reality that motivates a cable provider to want to charge more to carry content from a company streaming TV and movies, but the same will happen to providers of education material in online degree programs. They will have to pay more and will eventually be priced out of the marketplace for the Internet--and the free exchange of ideas. And the ultimate payer will be the consumer. Again, we will see many Americans shut out of use of what was a national asset until it was chopped up and sold to businesses. Please do not propose or adopt regulations that end net neutrality. The federal government is not a Wall Street company that must sell what it has at the expense of the long-term interests of shareholders so that analysts will be happy with quarterly returns. Make decisions that are in the best interests of everyone now and in the future. Act now to prevent rampant discrimination against citizens who still dream of brighter futures because of America's commitment to liberty for all!
—Cheryl Kettler, Chcicago, IL

High speed digital communications are and will continue to be the backbone (no pun intended) of the 21st century world economy and beyond. The Internet should be a level playing field open to all with equal cost, access and treatment. All packets should be treated equally regardless of their source or destination at the same cost. Net neutrality must be the rule of the Internet. True high-speed switched broadband, 100Mbit or more throughput, must be and should have already been made pervasive in the USA. Over time technology has provided and will continue to provide increases in bandwidth with decreases in total cost per bit. Internet service should be and should remain flat rate. Internet service at current throughput rates should cost significantly less than it does today. Internet service does not cost significantly less today due to the profit motives of the large monopolies allowed control of the infrastructure. The for-profit monopolies routinely attempt to eliminate flat rate pricing. Reference the bandwidth usage caps on so called "unlimited" service. The Internet is an infrastructure "utility public common carrier" service absolutely necessary for a healthy growing 21st century economy. The Internet should not be a for-profit business interest impeding the growth of the economy to extract huge profits from it and certainly not to create privileged service and unprivileged service based upon perceived or actual economic power, influence or importance or the ability to pay a lot more.
—James Zarbock, Lake Forest, CA

As a content creator and aspiring entrepreneur, I depend on a free and open internet to create a living for myself and future employees. Not to mention the obvious cultural and intellectual benefit a free and open internet provides to people worldwide. The internet is one of our most precious resources in the 21st century, and I sincerely believe that it's preservation as an open platform is of utmost importance to ALL of our futures. Regards, Alexander Gohorel
—Alex Gohorel, Delhi, NY

If Net Neutrality is not upheld, kiss the Internet goodbye. It will no longer be useful. It will even be disastrous for commerce. Think about the consequences!!
—William O'Toole, Buckeystown, MD

Because everyone deserves to have the same access to information and knowledge is not something to be reserved for only the upper class!
—Merrill H, Harrisonburg, VA

Because I don't want sites that I might visit to be incredibly slow. In addition, big media and telecom companies should not have the power to control what we as the public sees online.
—Adam Nickle, Lakewood, WA

What I love about the Internet most of all is the way ordinary people can speak to each other, about medical information, about restaurants we like, about sports we love. Giving a fast lane to big corporations will make this interactive space disappear. Please do the right thing.
—Debbie Notkin, Oakland, CA

It is ridiculous to kill Net Neutrality. This is America, not China, and every American should have equal access to the internet.
—Julie Jumonville, San Francisco, CA

Because Internet fast lanes should be open to everyone, regardless of whether or not they can afford the extra fees. Moreover, giant corporations should not be given extra power of any kind over American citizens.
—Julia DeNiro, Columbus, OH

This is ridiculous! with these absurd proposed rules I'd expect you're taking a fat bribe! If this bill passes you'll go down as the most hated man on the internet and throw out any chance of me re-electing you! For gods sake please throw out this horrendous bill and do what's right!
—Jakob Prater, Houston, TX

Net neutrality is EXTREMELY IMPORTANT!!! Listen to the people! It's the people's country, not the governments...
—Tawnee Livingston, Golden, CO

You MUST stand up for the citizens of the US. All other countries make sure broadband is equal and FAIR for their citizens. Some even make it free. They recognize it as a necessary component to stimulate the economy and creativity. Know that we are watching to see if you are favoring your old employers or the citizens you were appointed to PROTECT!!
—Vivian Donahue, Charlottesville, VA

Access to the internet in the United States should not be subject to the whims of corporations whose interests are largely in conflict with those of its customers (e.g., Comcast after its recent purchase of NBC/Universal).
—Colin Teal, Yakima, WA

In my opinion the internet is one of the last things that is free to use without having to pay for it. . I'm tired of big corporations bulling their way in all in the name money. This has got to stop! Mr. Chairman please do the right thing and allow the internet to remain open. Please do this for the little guy. Thank you.
—C Anthony Avalos, Alpine, CA

To keep individual costs down.
—Khloe Praski, Raleigh, NC

Same as telephone lines back in the day, the Internet is used to help people connect to each other. Because the telephone industry has gotten so big, common carrier laws was created in order to ensure that all phone calls were connected and did not discriminate against others. Same should apply for the Internet.
—Charlie Lor, Madison, WI

Neither companies nor individuals should not face speed restrictions on internet access. All information should be available at the highest speed possible. Please consider making internet service a public utility!
—Nicholas Overmire, Cary, NC

Net Neutrality is vastly important to democracy, equality, and the social uplift of each and every person in the world -- not just this nation. Corporations must not be allowed to turn the internet into cable television. That's backwards, unfair, and will do nothing to benefit the world or this nation. Fight for neutrality!
—Leyte Jefferson, Waterbury, CT

This is completely unacceptable plan for the internet. An ISP should be classified just like the telecoms and subject to the same rules. Allowing ISP's to separate fast and slow lanes. This is greedy corporate America at it's finest. We pay for internet access as individuals or businesses. That doesn't mean that the ISP's can now start charging at both ends of the pipe to make more money. Grow a backbone Tom Wheeler and stand up for the American people instead of being a spineless corporate puppet. Do the right thing. Make America better, don't contribute to it's downfall. Our political arena's are all ready so corrupt and dysfunctional. DO THE RIGHT THING PLEASE!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! Stand up for the American population and not you're wallet! or you're friend's wallet.
—Sean Adams, Renton, WA

Net Neutrality is crucial to a fair, open and viable Internet for all. Please reconsider Mr. Wheeler's plan to create a two-tiered rate and fee structure which cannot help but favor the big players and put the little guys at a distinct disadvantage. Is that really the American way, now I ask you? Please don't let it happen!! Thank you.
—Dennis Jackson, Norco, CA

I get my internet through Verizon wires, and during peak times (the Winter Olympics, for example) I have trouble getting access even now. Allowing companies like Verizon to charge extra for a "fast lane" would simply shut a lot of us out. Please keep the net neutral!
—Paul Wannamaker, Glendora, CA

Without Net Neutrality I simply will not be able to compete with larger businesses online. As a consumer I will be forced to pay more for a service that is already comparitavely sub-standard.
—Dustin Boston, Scottsdale, AZ

Why two tiers other than advantage to the already well advantaged entities? Reclassifying ISPs as common carriers is a straight forward response to retain a free and open Internet.
—Amelia Kroeger, Bloomington, MN

It is fair just the way it is. Do not touch it. for once dont let the rich d____ win. Regards
—Hans T. Pottinger, Lawrenceville, GA

I use the net for information, not just entertainment. I do not wish to have my access to information restricted so that entertainment firms can have more banwidth.
—Paul Goldschmid, Binghamton, NY

The internet is the modern version of freedom. Do not enslave us citizens to tiered systems controlled by large corporations.
—Brandon Arana, Miami, FL

As parts of the net become commercialized they lose their innovation and the power of people to people communication unmediated by corporate interests. I don't want my carrier prioritizing who I can communicate with.or how fast I can do it. The net providers should be like my phone, a common carrier they should not be in the content business or making side deals with content providers that cut me out. We already get screwed by the cable companies and their bundling of channels so I can just get what I want. Is that where the FCC is trying to take the net.
—Gordon Quinn, Chicago, IL

Small businesses will get crushed by large corporations willing and able to pay to play for priority service and greater bandwidth.
—Chris Morrow, Fredericksburg, VA

Expressing myself on the internet is one of the most important things in my life.
—Mary J. Wood, San Luis Obispo, CA

It's really pretty simple: let yourselves cave in to the narrow interests of ISPs; or reclassify ISPs as common carriers and, in doing so, ensure that the Internet will remain a level playing field for all.
—John Brooks, Memphis, TN

If these rules are approved it will put the US even further behind in Internet services then we all ready are. We should be #1 but what are we 12th, 13th or worse..
—Connie Godin, Barre, VT

Just like the telephone was to the 20th century, the internet is the communication technology of the 21st century! Like telephones, water, electricity, sewer and roads, the internet is a modern a public utility, and must be classified as a common carrier! These few powerful corporations want to govern and filter all digital communication. It is worse than thought police. They seek nothing less than to give themselves a total monopoly on thought and ideas-- the gatekeepers to everyone's business and communication-- the ultimate arbiters of innovation and discourse worldwide. This is happening now, in Mexico. It will happen here if you let it. There was a time when the FCC stood for the people of this country. Your forebears regulated against foreign ownership of 20th century media on the basis of national security. Today, the companies and billionaires who stand to benefit from controlling content on the web are more powerful than most governments on Earth and hold no allegiance to anything but themselves. Allowing them to monopolize discourse on the single most important commerce and communications network of all time is dangerously unAmerican. Shame on you, Mr. Wheeler, for even considering these rules you've proposed!!
—Jon Bogdanove, Los Angeles, CA

The bay area, California, is responsible for billions and billions of revenue in the US. Net Neutrality is critical to this, and critical to innovation and growth of the US economy. This is one of the last places we are a definitive leader, and heel dragging by telecom giants is costing us what lead we do have. Stop exacerbating the problem and start defending our lead!
—Jim Erickson, Santa Clara, CA

Net neutrality means EQUAL treatment, everyone mus have access to everything without having to pay more for it! The prices are already too high! This new set of rules will only make it worse. Please, stop this nonsense!
—Hudson César T. Ribeiro, Recife,

Consumers don't need higher cost Internet.
—Paul Rosenberger, Decatur, IL

Losing net neutrality will be costly for consumers like myself. I can't afford to pay the fees that internet providers like AT&T will charge for its use. In addition, other services, like Netflix streaming will cost more. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Keiko Ishida, Saint Louis, MO

The flow of information is important for social, economic and intellectual growth. Look at the printing press created by Gutenberg. With net neutrality in place and the flow of information stunted, it will it turn stunt our nation's growth as well. Please stop before there is a monopoly on the internet business that could be compared to the consolidation of rail road companies in the 1800's. Please discontinue any thought of ruining net neutrality.
—Christopher Hannon, Kennebunk, ME

Net Neutrality is extremely important to me because, as a programmer, I get a lot of help and ideas for programming solutions from free sites like stack overflow. If the internet becomes regulated, my job would become much harder. Not to much how much harder studying for school would become as well
—Michael Berg, Oswego, IL

The Internet should be a public utility like telephone or electric service - available equally to everyone.
—Barbara and Jim Dale, Decorah, IA

This is an awful plan! The internet should be treated just like telephone service.
—Joseph and Marian Rudigier, Tucson, AZ

Allowing a 2-tiered internet is like allowing FedEx, DHL, and UPS to have their own high-speed, well-maintained lanes on our country's highways, while the rest of us drive on pothole-ridden gravel roads. Is ending Net Neutrality really the best thinking that America has to offer on this subject?
—K Martine Smith, Norman, OK

First of all, I don't have television and we don't get radio here without a cable or something. My only source of news and information is the internet which YOU have advocated for high/slow transfer speeds based on whether or not the site has enough money to be blackmailed into paying it. WHY should I be funneled somewhere I don't want to go because some greedy companies want to make more money off of something that belongs to ALL of us? I am really, really angry about this.
—Sherry L. Meddick, Silverado, CA

Not being able to use the Internet and Facebook freely would destroy my 'job' as part of God's ministry. Also, not being able to contact my family and friends on-line would be immensely sad, as this has been the best way to keep up with those who live far away. PLEASE, FCC, do throw out the rules, instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Patricia & Gary Schneider, Pittsburgh, PA

The Internet was developed in America and was enabled by US taxpayer support. The incredible success of American companies online is very strongly related to the ability of these companies to access a level playing field online. Anything that enables regulated telecommunications companies to discriminate against small players jeopardizes the incredible creativity unleashed by the Internet. I do not want to cede this vital public good to the control of communications companies interested only in their own short-term gain.
—Jonathan Moretz, Norfolk, VA

What does this mean? "I'm a strong supporter of the Open Internet, and I will fight to keep the internet open. Thanks again for sharing your views with me. Tom Wheeler Chairman Federal Communications Commission Sounds like a blatant lie.
—Mr Steven J Olenski, Phoenix, AZ

Until we have true competition in ISP's, net neutrality is critical to my use of the internet.
—William Alan Dishman, San Rafael, CA

Look FCC, just stop with this corrupt nonsense and loopholes and grow a back bone. Stand up and protect the people, not give in and cave to whichever company is making the biggest donation that week. The last thing this world needs is ISPs charging extra for two speeds because it will catch on in other countries and thus we, the consumers, get screwed yet again. Do the right and moral thing for the people.
—Paul Bowden, ,

The internet is my contact with the outside world since I am full-time caregiver for my invalid husband. I cannot abide the loss of freedom and access you are about to allow through this new plan. There is far too much control being given to corporations that can price-fix and truly destroy what the internet is all about for people like me, for school children who use it for research, and the bottom line is that this is simply WRONG for Americans.
—Nancy Burleson, Birmingham, AL

A free and open internet is a basic right in society. There should be no fast lane for companies. It is time to regulate the internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. David English, MBA, DBA
—David English, Tillamook, OR

Net neutrality is too important to be left in the hands of large corporations whose only loyalty is to their shareholders, and whose motives are focused on profits, rather than the public good. Reclassify the internet as what it truly is: a telecommunications utility that many Americans rely on for access to vital information. I rely on the internet for access to records and scholarship, as an academic researcher - and I can guarantee that research libraries don't have the funds to compete with corporations like Netflix or Apple to stay in "the fast lane". The proposed rules do not do enough to protect ALL Americans' access to the internet, and I would love to see the FCC reconsider its proposals and put the public good at the heart of its decisions.
—Rachael Vorberg-Rugh, Vancouver, WA

The need to protect equal access is so elementary that it boggles the mind to think that proposals to the contrary will not be met with increasing opposition!
—Hugh Ballem, Cincinnati, OH

Americans should continue to enjoy and benefit from a free internet that doesn't discriminate between ISPs and those who create content but aren't backed by high-profile distributors. Don't create a two-tiered system.
—Lisa Liebman, New York, NY

Without net neutrality new innovation would be stiffled. American broadband costs 10x as much as European services for much lower speeds.
—Adam Silva-Miramon, Rochester, NY

Keine zwei-Klassen Gesellschaft! Auch nicht im Netz.
—Lorenz Veit, ,

The internet was created by the Federal Government NOT Comcast, Verizon and the other ISP's. Thus, the internet belongs to ALL of the people, not just the ISP's. Hence, there should be equal access to the entire internet to ALL people, not just the ones who can afford it. Comcast and the rest of the ISP's trying to shut down Net Neutrality are too lazy and cheap to build out the internet as is being done in much of the rest of the developed world like Europe and Asia. It is embarrassing that Google is building its own Gigabit internet service here in America because the big guys won't. What is worse, Comcast and Company do not want others who are willing to build out the internet to do just that, just so they can maintain control and a monopoly over it. Well if the big ISP's won't invest in the internet infrastructure, then don't stop local governments and others from doing it and do NOT eliminate Net Neutrality. You people at the FCC should be ashamed of yourselves for doing the bidding of Comcast, Verizon et al. Your job is to do the bidding of the people and protect them, not a couple of special interests. You really need to think about the long term effects of allowing these big ISP's to have their way and eliminating Net Neutrality. To do that will have a very negative impact on the internet, free expression and creation of jobs. There is an entire industry that has been created because of the low barrier of entry into business created by Net Neutrality. Billions of dollars have been generated and hundreds of thousands, if not millions of people are able to work because of Net Neutrality. Without such Net Neutrality, many of the businesses that are a success today would not exist and those that will try to start and grow in the future will not have a chance because they or their customers cannot AFFORD the FAST lane access fees Comcast and the others want to charge. So again, I implore you to think long and hard about doing the bidding of those who ask you to eliminate Net Neutrality and look to the type of future you will be creating if Net Neutrality is abolished.
—John, Alexandria, VA

Freedom of information is so important to our democracy. Letting service providers deter people from getting information from lesser-known sources (who can't pay extra fees) handicaps consumers. Service providers already profit from the Internet, which was built by TAXPAYERS, THANK YOU - at no cost to them. Don't give into their greed or give them this kind of power over our information.
—Kim Buck, Arlington Heights, IL

As a teacher I see how much my students depend on the internet for research and information. To make a 2-tiered system that is expensive will disenfranchise many of my students. Don't further the second class citizen nature of lower income people by stealing their chance for equal access to education!
—Sydney Wallace, Ellicott City, MD

I own a small business which cannot compete with larger companies on paying for better internet access to my site. Please do not allow the gatekeepers to decide which content deserves the best access.
—William Conrad, CORSICANA, TX

Please do not let these big business gatekeepers hijack the people's internet. This is an issue of the utmost importance to a free and democratic America. Honor President Obama's promise to keep a free and open internet unencumbered by unnecessary tiers for those who can afford to pay more. Sincerely, Janice Berg
—Janice Berg, Redmond, WA

The free and open internet is good for accessing knowledge unrestricted. Competition is good and a closed or 'fast/slow' lane gives and unfair advantage to the wealthy companies, hurts small business
—Tony Hamilton, Seattle, WA

Net Neutrality is important to me because it means I can run an app on any network without concern that the ISP is going to block the app from working on their network, and I will not have to pay more to get a higher tiered network speed, they charge enough all ready. What happened with the telephone company is happening with the likes of AT&T and Comcast, they are monopolies and there are laws to protect the users from these companies from controlling a market and forcing unfair practices on us.
—Bob Edwards, elk grove village, IL

Free means free. These proposals do not allow the Internet to be free.
—Jack Parsons, ,

I am one of those who will be a "loser" if Tom Wheeler's plan goes through. I use the internet on and off most of the day. I am a volunteer for two different non-profits and need access to update their websites, to send and receive emails, and to do research. Slowing my access will be disastrous to me and to the very worthy organizations I work for. And I'm just one person. Think of me -- and all the others who will not be able to pay to be "on the fast track." Please protect net neutrality for all! Thank you.
—David S & Lisa, OAKLAND, CA

I'm so tired of the double standards of the afluenza.
—Gloria Morrison, Pecos, TX

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Michael Khalifeh, Mclean, VA

The internet is not the playground of the wealthy and powerful, nor should it be. It must continue to remain as easy and equal for rich and poor alike to access information at speed. We already pay -- dearly -- for access. There is no reason to give these corporations more money, and the chance to bleed us dry.
—Jennifer Cyr, Waterbury, CT

According to your recent comments what you call "net neutrality" is anything but that. It calls for preferential fast lanes for those who pay. This guarantees that this two tier result will trash the open net as we know it and will certainly result in poorer performance for the common user and also higher fees. The only sensible solution is to abandon the current proposal and reclassify the ISPs as common carriers. This has a chance of being regulated in a fair way.
—Joseph Hueser, Longmont, CO

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers
—Rick Hart, Austin, TX

I communicate with many of my friends through the internet. If I did not have a free internet, I would not be able to interact with them. This is very important to me.
—Ana Keenum, Haltom City, TX

Internet Service Providers should be regulated as Common Carriers provide the same high-speed service to all users.
—Paul J Eichten, Syracuse, NY

I am a retired librarian who worked in a technical/community college librarian. Our students are NOT wealthy people yet they deserve access to information on an even footing with wealthy people - democracy in action -yes!!!
—Cary Lafaye, Columbia, SC

Too much of television media is controlled by large corporations, thereby allowing for the bias of news programs that are necessary for a free and democratic society. The internet has filled in this gap and should be allowed to function as it to allow for free and equal access to information.
—David Mayer, Olympia, WA

The taxpayers of the U.S. paid for the construction of the internet through their military tax dollars. As such, We The People own it; and We The People shouldn't become second-rate users of the system just be We The Greedy Telecomm Corporations think that their money makes them "special": it doesn't.
—Jim McElroy, Austin, TX

Treat the Internet as a public Utility with equal public access for all users large corporate or human-being small. Thank you.
—John Hogue, Langley, WA

The Net is to important to be a tool for Verizon to make money.
—Charlie Llewellin, Austin, TX

The Internet should not privilege one group over another. The Internet must remain open and equal to all of us. Reclassify as a common carrier.
—Linda Bolduan, Lake Oswego, OR

Freedom of speech, freedom of choice, and freedom of press. Why should there not be a freedom of net? An open internet is an open world! Don't end net neutrality!
—Nick Brady, Topeka, KS

The internet has become an essential service for the public and one of the last bastions of free speech
—Dustin Downs, Victoria,

The internet was developed by the American government and therefore belongs to the American people, not corporations. The internet is a public utility even if service providers refuse to acknowledge it as such. Do not allow service providers to hijack our utility to increase their profits. America was built by individuals looking for equal justice and opportunity not by corporations seeking a profit.
—Jeannette Selan, Chesapeake, VA

Dear FCC, The internet is one of our most important resources in the world today, allowing easy world-wide economic competition, the ability to quickly and easily organize large groups of like-minded people and access to a vast wealth of knowledge. It is essential that the internet be classified as utility such as to ensure equal access to all peoples and to beat back the tremendous power corporations hold in governmental affairs. Ensure that America stays the land of the free, not the land of the paid, and classify the internet as a utility to ensure universal equal access. Sincerely, Michael Schramm
—Michael Schramm, Ithaca, NY

The Internet works fine as it is. Please don't change it!
—Donovan McCall, Wichita, KS

The internet has become a necessity for everyone to be able to access. It is a utility, not optional entertainment.
—Robin L Moore, Seattle, WA

Dear Mr. Wheeler: A two-tiered internet would economically devastate small businesses and destroy the last truly democratic venue for the free exchange of information in this country. Implement these new measures and you will be partially responsible for hammering the final coffin nail into American democracy. Search your conscience. Stand up to greedy monopolies like Comcast, Verizon and AT&T and protect American freedom. Don't end net neutrality. Sincerely, Curt Chiarelli —Curt Chiarelli, McMinnville, OR one speed for everyone. Cablevision just sent me a ad for faster speed for five dollars more. What a rip off. Repeal the monopoly for these carriers and enable ala carte selections without the bundling.

—Paul Bliss, VALHALLA, NY

Internet neutrality is freedom of speech, the right for all parties to communicate regardless of where they stand with corporate gatekeepers. The right to assemble openly in a digital space. Upholding neutrality is upholding the Bill of Rights.
—Earl Rexrode, Charlottesville, VA

The internet needs to remain a public resource....not for profit
—Elizabeth Cross, Rancho Mirage, CA

This proposal would kill the open internet and essentially eradicates the liberty our country was founded upon. Please end any further projects or discussions that only benefit Plutocrats as well as Mega-corporations like these. It's bad enough raising a child in a single-income home and being overcharged for internet and basic cable services simply because Comcast has no competitors in my district. When does the FCC get back to its mission of protecting our democratic voice?
—Christopher Lippa, Sandwich, MA

The Internet has proven itself to be an open medium for both people's voices and for technological development. Providing easier access for those who already have greater resources and access, and thereby making it more difficult for those who have less, is unnecessary and unfair, and undermines the open nature that the Internet has always had. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Ivan Rhudick, San Francisco, CA

If FCC ends Net Neutrality, it will signal a new normal to ISPs that allows them to neglect lower speed networks and invest only in higher speed premium networks. It will be like a frog in water that is being heated gradually. FCC is the frog.
—John Walling, Seattle, WA

Leave the internet alone we like free internet not controled internet, are we in the usa or china? one wonders with the way the gov trying to push a one world gov.
—Robert Splittorff, elkhart, IN the so-called government is using tactics that totalitarian governments and "leaders" have always used to steal rights and freedoms from their "subjects" and that includes you chairman tom wheeler, if you would take some time to think about it, and America is getting tired of this assault on out way of life. these criminals are scared to death that their days in power are numbered {and they are}. their fall will happen and it will be accomplished as peacefully as possible but right will prevail

—Randy Gleason, Penn Yan, NY

Apparently money is freedom of speech but internet access isn't.
—Timothy Biel, Chicago, IL

As an American citizen and taxpayer I need full access to the internet to make informed decisions and allowing a two-tiered internet will destroy that!!
—Dr. Mha Atma S. Khalsa, Los Angeles, CA

This country is a republic with democratic ideals...NOT a plutocracy!
—Eric Andresen, Olney, MD

I'm a small web development business owner. Please don't make it more difficult for my clients to launch a successful web presence.
—Larry Holish, Bartlett, IL

Reclassify ISPs as common carriers because that's what they are!
—B Gelinas, Fitchburg, MA

We are all cyber-users, and should be treated equally. We should not be able to buy into faster speed! Just make the whole Internet faster for all! STOP FAVORING THE TOP ONE PERCENT OF CORPORATIONS,
—Joel I. Friedman, Davis, CA

I want to be able to see and find things on the internet that are of my choosing. Not the choice of those with enough money to influence the speed of delivery.
—Joanne Fetting, whitefish bay, WI

The public is becoming increasingly aggravated with the control that corporations are asserting over our daily lives and the internet will be the last straw. The internet is a far too important and useful commodity for it to be run and controlled by a select few. It's sad to admit that many other countries have better internet access than we do. If this issue is not resolved, I believe the public will revolt since internet is so deeply ingrained into our everyday lives. Privacy has already been taken away. Do not allow more to be taken away as well.
—Michael Perna, River Forest, IL

I want net neutrality. Does it really matter why? You exist to serve the American people, not corporations. I want ISP's reclassified as title 2 common carriers.
—Jonathan Wayman, Salt Lake City, UT

Give the people and nation you nominally serve the public services required for new businesses and individuals to prosper, communicate, and educate. That is the just thing to do.
—Mark Goold, San Francisco, CA

We need net neutrality because democracy can't function without the free exchange of ideas. In today's America, a significant portion of the way we learn and communicate is Internet-based. We all have the right to access a free and open Internet.
—Chelsea Williamson, Omaha, NE

ISPs already screw over consumers enough, letting connections throttle as internet traffic tries to get through congested pathways. They make billions, but can't upgrade their infrastructure to deliver the speeds consumers pay for already. Don't give them another way to stop customers from getting what they pay for!
—Jacob, Pittsfield, MA

This cannot pass! Keep the net neutral!
—Patrick Cicere, Chicago, IL

ISPs must be reclassified as common carriers!!
—Franz Oppacher, Almonte,

I remember the slow speed of the dial-up modem. I like the speed of today's Internet. I do not want to be relegated to the 1990s by cable companies or ISP. Please retain a democratic 'Net.
—George Maslyar, Washington, DC

Net Neutrality is one of the great equalizers in the world wide web. Without it free speech is greatly impeded. Creativity and innovation benefit greatly from its existence. So please...keep net neutrality. The majority of people all around the world do not want a 2 class society so do not make another step into one.
—Robin Talke, Dortmund,

Internet should not be sold or held hostage by big companies. I would keep protesting and will encourage everyone to protest and keep calling our senators and congressmen till this new proposed laws are discarded.
—Irfan, Gainesville, VA

Without Net Neutrality, you're basically pushing more and more issues up to you. These companies would basically ruin anything we could do on the internet, and when did things go so far that old men have to control and profit from everything?! Enough is damned enough! As a teen, I already have limited privacy and control, let me keep this one thing!
—Jenn Haggerty, Purcellville, VA

The Internet is a vehicle to promote new ideas and intrapreneurship. If you give away that neutrality of the Internet to big companies only the corporations with Deep pockets will be able to spread their message
—Andrés M Salguero, Reston, VA

this is a public UTILITY and should remain so..
—Melanie Dupre, Providence, RI

The primary position of the US in the world internet is already badly shaken. The internet should be declared no different than TV or radio as a medium of communication that must not offer fast track service to those who can pay the most. This is important for our overall economy although some extremely rich executives and stockholders will not be able to get yet richer if you do the right thing. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers. My work-related use of the internet depends on it not being slower for the sake of streaming movies faster to the enrichment of those already unfairly and exhorbitantly rich!
—Melanie Ehrlich, New Orleans, LA

allowing this kind of internet discrimination will kill grassroots commerce and give way too much control to the ISPs. Their are many people who have lost their jobs and had to resort to entrepreneurship to simply to make an honest living and survive the recession that the BIG MONEY companies have created in the first place! Please stop stepping on our ability to start up and maintain small online business. Its unamerican to not let everyone have a fair chance on the internet.
—Jackie Cleveland Cleveland, Valencia, CA

Get rid of the current rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers!
—Johanna Cummings, Rochester, NY

The people of this country can't afford yet another setback.
—Steve Bianchi, Newcastle, CA

Do you even care about what you do any more? You've given so much power to these companies already. Now you want to give them more? The internet was not created by any of the companies that control its access and accessibility. They only have one thing on their mind and that is profits. Those profits come at a cost and that cost will be beared SOLELY by small consumers.
—Andrew Ciszczon, NORTH RIDGEVILLE, OH

An open internet is integral to democracy. We must have the ability to load all websites at the same speed.
—Amy Birdwell, Garland, TX

I dont see the benefits of franchising the domain, were already thousands of businesses exist. Small online businesses, and some of my favourite websites wont be able to afford these fees to support their websites. I dont agree with these purposed rules.
—Nadia Luis, Houston, TX

Please protect the average American by classifying ISP's as common carriers. Please do not turn control of this wonderful resource over to the big ISP's as there is NO reason to think they will act in the best interest of users.
—Mark Freeman, Green Ridge, MO

Net Neutrality made the internet what it is today. Abandoning it now would fundamentally change the shape of the internet for the worse.
—Nicholas Lane, Whitmore Lake, MI

Dear Federal Communications Commission: FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Ian C Tanttari, Saint Paul, MN

I have already commentated that a two tier system won't work for me. I won't be able to afford the fast lane the I need. Your going to put a lot of people's computers rendered useless because there will be no reason to have a fast computer. Not to mention the whole computer industry will be shaken up.
—Rodney Nelson, Aberdeen, ID

I run a graphics freelance business and rely almost exclusively on my website to sell my services. Needless to say my site must load large photos quickly especially with today's large boardroom wall monitors. If I have to compete with corporate giants for speed I will be blown off the playing field.
—Carolyn Dean, Morristown, TN

Everyone should have equal access and speed on the Internet. It is shameful that many countries have faster and cheaper service than we do in this country. The Internet should bepart of the commons.
—Vicki Price, Arlington, TX

Net Neutrality strengthens our democracy.
—Derek Allen Young, Charlottesville, VA

Net Neutrality keeps the Internet democratic. Please keep the Internet democratic. It's what we believe in.
—Thomas Trevorrow, Orlando, FL

This is just another way to separate the haves and the have- nots.
—Sondra Boes, Campbell, CA

Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. These companies would have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. And no one would be able to do anything about it.
—Ravikant Singh, Floral Park, NY

If this plan goes through, it helps no one but the higher ups of bigger companies. It also makes the system flawed as these companies could be bribed to put high prices on certain pages against the client. This helps no one that needs help and should be stopped right away.
—Kegan Huntley, Dubuque, IA

Internet access is the most important and unregulated utility. There is no excuse for this lack of government regulation of broadband providers as common carriers except for corruption and influence pedaling. I will be spending my money to fight this any way I can. If you fail to regulate broadband providers I will be on the streets of Washington protesting along with thousands of other people.
—Patrick McMaster, Athens, GA

The little guys who do not have much money would have to go to the end of the line, and get vastly inferior service. It is not fair.
—Cecilia Seabrook, crest hill, IL

Why have a semantic argument? The internet is a common carrier de facto. Now we just need the proper regulation.
—John Dorsey, Baltimore, MD

A Two Tier paying internet would be highly unfair to the vast majority of people and increase the inequality and injustice in an already highly unfair world. Already the poor ,in fact , have more need of the internet than the better off and have less access to it through the price of computers and gaining the skills necessary to use them and this further complication would really be very damaging indeed,
—Alexander Cunningham, EDINBURGH,

The free flow of information is essential to a functioning democracy - as essential as water and electricity are to a functioning community. In my opinion, the democratizing influence of having a free and open internet may be the last thing standing between the United States and oligarchy. I cannot overstate the importance of preserving Net Neutrality.
—Andrea Metzger, Denver, CO

Virtually all media in America is currently controlled by large corporate entities. There is no longer a reliable source of uncensored news in this country. The internet is the last bastion of unencumbered communication, which is why the aforementioned corporate entities wish to rein it in. We are the people government is allegedly by, for and of. You are the government. Please do your job.
—Thom Trunnell, Knoxville, TN

Please keep the internet free. Our country needs to keep our internet neutral and accessible to everyone.
—Eric Steffen, Richmond, CA

Please dump the idea of allowing Internet Providers to charge for speeding up certain sites. This gives large companies with more funds an unreasonable advantage over small businesses. It also has the potential to kill the innovation that equal access has created on the Internet. I have no use for an Internet dominated by a few old players that have nothing new to offer. Keep the Internet open by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. The Internet belongs to all of us and we must keep it that way or we'll lose the most important benefits of it. Thank you.
—Lynn Ross, Denver, CO

Without unfettered and unlimited access to the Internet, our ability to keep ourselves informed will be greatly compromised! The big providers will have the ability to stifle innovation and information by giving preferential treatment to those willing to pay the most to the detriment of those that can't afford to compete.
—David Caligiuri, Buffalo, NY

FCC reclassified internet (from common carrier, ie. telecommunications) to information carrier back in 2005. It was this terrible mistake practically giving the net to private corporate interests that opened the door for even further degradation of what's supposed to be a free / open internet. This is not what our evolving democracy / internet is sop posed to be. Now, U'r even considering enabling these corporate giants (anathema to a true capitalist system, for they should've never been able to merge into these behemoths that they've become - if only the Sherman antitrust laws were enforced) to create a two tiered system and pick winners and losers, not to mention put a great deal of businesses out of business. Then there's our (the very same taxpayers that funded the devopement of internet to begin with) access to the internet that will now be decided upon who's willing to pay these behemoths. This is not a free / open internet. THE FCC CAN / SHOULD DO ITS JOB BY SIMPLY RECLASSIFYING THE INTERNET AS A COMMON CARRIER , TELECOMMUNICATION SERVICE - BECAUSE THIS IS WHAT THE INTERNET HAS MORPHED TO IN OUR NEW HI-TECH / EVOLVING WORLD. THE FCC HAS THE POWER TO ACT ON BEHALF OF THE COMMON GOOD AND UNDO THEIR MISTAKE OF 2005 AND RECLASSIFY INTERNET. THE QUESTION IS WHETHER THE FCC IS BEHOLDEN TO THE PEOPLE AND A FREE AND OPEN INTERNET FOR ALL, OR THE MONEYED / CIRPORATE INTERSTS - THAT ARE / WILL ALWAYS BE CINTRARY TO THE COMMON GOOD.
—Harry Kondiles, Las Vegas, NV

If this passes then we all may as well live in China or some other country that censors the internet! I believe the only reason this would pass is because this is no longer a democracy with free speech. I don't want someone else to decide what I need to be able to read or not read. At this point I see that the only people who will benefit is the people who will make money off of it. As far as I know, the government is not supposed to be run by the corporations, but that is what is happening. The "people" don't approve of your actions.
—Kristy Johnson, Mount Shasta, CA

Please throw out your rules and reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers. This is the ONLY way to protect real Net Neutrality.
—Judy Epstein, Minneapolis, MN world communications should not be shed like a snakeskin on the threshold of greed.

—Andrew Lenz, Leverett, MA

I cannot believe in our democracy (do we really have a democracy these days with greed being the power and those with money getting the power to change laws and rights to make more money?) that the FCC would allow these companies to have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. And no one would be able to do anything about it.
—Michael Bilecki, brookhaven, NY

We have enough divisions in this country-don't let the internet become another one. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—John Champine, Sarasota, FL

Without net neutrality, how are new businesses going to start up with a slow speed.
—Bede Nigatu, Minneapolis, MN

Net Neutrality is good for the economy.
—Daniel Pollman, Shelbyville, IN

I want the government to stop censoring.
—John Kramer, Marshfield, MA

Because is there any real freedom in the world beside internet?
—Vladimir, ,

Net neutrality is vital to maintaining the freedoms of the average American.
—Madeline Craig, Bethesda, MD

Your job is to protect the Net for ALL Americans, not just the wealthy, or the corporations. Do your job.
—Paul Carrigan Jr, Seattle, WA

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. An open internet is the one reliable way I have of keeping in touch with people and is a learning resource that I need to improve my life. An unbalanced internet would take away opportunities from thousands of people.
—Suzy Rickard, ,

The internet is a freeway for the common man. It must be classified as a common carrier.
—Douglas A Pickarts, Wichita, KS

The internet is vital to my livelihood and business. Don't discriminate against small businesses by introducing laws that favour big corporations!
—Kate Holden, ,

nf2458@gmail.com
—Nathanael Fernandez, New York, NY

Please don't destroy the Internet as we know it. Don't mess with success, don't kowtow to the super-moneyed few. Your job is to protect the public's interest, right? I'm counting on you to do just that. Tom Surowicz
—Tom Surowicz, Minneapolis, MN

Keep the internet democratic, reject these two tier rules.
—Craig Schaffer, Dothan, AL

The restriction of data restricts our countries greatest asset in this day and age. Innovation through freedom creates oppritunity for all.
—Nick Smiley, Santa Cruz, CA

The Big Com companies didn't pay for the development of it. It benefits all Americans and should remain open, not a cash cow for big business to suck dry.
—Bill Roseberry, Levittown, PA

I spend over 10,000 times the amount of time I use my cell phone in a month. The Internet is a utility just like phone service and should be treated like a phone.
—Charles Smith, Blaine, WA

Net Neutrality is essential and it must be free.
—Martha W D Bushnell, Boulder, CO

If I pay for 40Megabit internet, I want to use that for whatever I want. A bit is a bit is a bit. It should not matter who it's going to or what company sent it.
—Ian T Grinde, Minneapolis, MN

FCC throw out your rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. This is the ONLY way to protect real Net Neutrality.
—Asbjørn Frisvold, ,

Net neutrality is important to me because information should not be impeded in any way.
—Cory Carte, Crestview, FL

I'm the owner of a small business, and we build web software applications for other small businesses and startups. Your new rules put our company and the businesses of our clients at risk by making it really challenging to compete as a new business. These new rules favor big businesses and encourage monopoly, which is directly in conflict with your mission. Additionally, your rules favor the gentrification of information. The poor and middle class will have less access to information and education than the wealthy, which will increase the gap and hurt our nation's economy. Please reconsider these terrible rules. Thank you.
—Lauren Russell, Eugene, OR

I am involved in animal rescue. Verizon blocks my service for 24 hours at times now because they say I send too much email. (I send only to animal rescues and individual rescuers.) What will happen when these companies control all facets of my use? When these emails don't go out, animals DIE!!
—Kathleen Eaton, Middletown, DE

Your proposed rules stink. They add privilege for the overprivileged. They let the wires pick what they carry. Your rules make democracy even more difficult. Internet Service Providers are indeed common carriers, and should have no say in what messages they deliver. Wise up!
—John McPeek, Fairfax, VA

The internet has been an incredibly important game-changer in human history. We cannot allow short-sighted profit-seeking to kill off this amazing source of innovation. We need to reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Kenneth Koski, Minneapolis, MN

Big corporations like AT&T, Comcast, Verizon need to compete fair, with an open internet for EVERYONE, not just those that can pay for it.
—Kiera Beddes, Nephi, UT

I do not want certain parties to have a "fast lane" when it comes to internet communications. The net result of that policy will be control of the internet by the rich--hardly something anyone who believes in democracy would accept.
—Mr. Richard Fidler, Traverse City, MI

It is the job of our elected officials to protect the people and their rights not the interests of big corporations. Do the right thing and protect true net neutrality. Please.
—Jared Caruso, Denver, CO

Currently the internet is a great equalizer. With a minimal barrier to entry, almost anyone can be heard. Those who were once voiceless can now have a voice. Net neutrality ensures that. Ending net neutrality would give money more power than it already has online. Real barriers to entry could - and very likely would - develop that would prevent those less financially fortunate from having a voice. A net-neutral internet is the epitome of freedom of expression, and a crowning achievement of democracy. Opinions and information flow freely through it, allowing people access to everything they might need to make their own informed decisions. But you would have us cast aside all of this for nothing more than greed. We stand to gain NOTHING from the loss of net neutrality! The rich will get richer, and the voices of the poor will be drowned under their mountains of money.
—Jordan Bridgman, San Luis Obispo, CA

giant corporations shouldn't be allowed to charge folks for what was once and always free to all. Whats next, air we breathe
—Jason Trentlyon, New York, NY

I believe it is important for their to be democratic equality on the internet. Unless Net Neutrality is available to everyone, corporate power will again squash people power.
—Mr. Mark Gannett, Tacoma, WA

Absolutely not - the internet (like the elections) should NOT be for sale.
—Christina Maris, Albuquerque, NM

a blatant double-standard such as what has been proposed should not even be on the table! Lets get serious about protecting the internet which is the foundation of our future economy (if not the present) ComCast/Verizon/etc make plenty of money for their shareholders as it is. They need no additional favors!
—Jame Mackson, St. Paul, MN

Net Neutrality is important to everyone, not just me. Even if it isn't admitted, net neutrality is important to us all because it ensures freedom of speech [on the internet]. You probably fall on the wrong side of the argument but, to the "little people" it is more important than ever to preserve a space, an entity, where we are all equal and treated as such. I honestly just hope enough people speak up and make as big a deal about this as they should so that you have to listen because, at the rate we're going, it's clear that you have no interest in doing so now. The voices you are listening to resound with "ca-chings." You hold the answer, the power, to relieve this entire situation. To ensure that the freedoms we founded this country on are preserved for future generations. Seriously, just think about it. Just do the right thing.
—Jessica perry, Somerville, NJ

We already give these greedy companies enough money, this would ruin low income household who can barely afford they're already high bill for lousy service.
—Curtis Hart, Tarzana, CA

This would basically allow for a form of corporate censorship, more then already exists, and that's unacceptable.
—Darren O'Tell, Worcester, MA

It is a level playing field at this time, and that is the way it should be, not according to how much money one has to pay for these services.
—Edie Hanahan, Castle Rock, CO

A free and unfettered internet is vital to the FREE exchange of ideas. It is not for the use of wealthy corporations to restrict those ideas for a profit.
—Steven Mondel, Farmingdale, NJ

Net Neutrality is an important facility that enables free and relatively open to discussion, essential for any democratic society. Destructive corporate greed and control should not be considered at all.
—Terry Morton, Korumburra,

Please don't allow the monopolization of the internet.
—Alexi, Ellicott City, MD

This proposal which you want to make big internet providers forcing users to pay extra fees for people who can afford it and make the internet slower for the rest of the people who can't afford it which it's a bad idea because it will damage the economy of this country for people who going to start their own businesses and the companies are keeping their businesses going and providing jobs. Including, it will destroy another way of communication to talk with friends, aquitaincs and family members. Also, people won't access in the internet for educational purposes and hobby purposes if this happens. So, please I suggest to keep the internet open and free including reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Edward, Queens Village, NY

the current structure of the Internet has enabled an incredible explosion of innovation. Killing net neutrality and enabling some large companies to have most of the share of the band width of a lable will mean the small newcomers can no longer take advantage of the facilities that in open net enables.
—Carsten R Dreesbach, Alexandria, VA

The internet is for everyone, not just the rich! Don't let them segregate what we've all come to rely on!
—Nick Dickerson, Parma, ID

I am trying to think of how to say this so that you will hear my words, but all I can say is that we have had a great equalizer in terms of gaining information with the Internet. Take that away and make it dependent upon having money, and you have lost the opportunity to be fair and impartial. And that unfairness and pandering to corporate money will be your legacy.
—Susan Stutz, Cherry Valley, MA

The internet should be controlled as a telecommunications resource. It is as important to our lives as a telephone. To allow select companies to dominate and do there own selection of who get access and who does not will greatly restrict our ability to utilize a resource that has always had universal access since the days of ARPANET.
—John Gustafson, Mooresville, NC

The internet is where I spend most of my free time, and without protecting equality of service and accessibility on the internet, you are effectively discriminating against those like myself, who go online in order to find a less biased and free form of communication, or who simply wish to enjoy services which are not well represented well in mainstream media. You will be choking off the freedom of expression and information that the internet is so beloved for by many. The idea of any action against net neutrality is repulsive to myself and many others, and I would consider it akin to the removal of one of my fundamental rights.
—Di Gillham, St. Thomas,

I urge you to scrap the plan to create a two tiered Internet. I don't want ISPs like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon to have fast track privileges.
—James Holland, San Diego, CA

Why create discrimination where it doesn't exist? Our culture often exposes individual accomplishment & hard work, but time and again, we vote to favor positions of privilege. Why? Let us just allow equal access to all those that wish to reach others via the Internet protect net neutrality. Please.
—Courtney Tolbert, Washington, DC

The internet was created to help people share and exchange ideas. Your 'plan' will create an environment that does the exact opposite. Please don't proceed with this proposal.
—Brodi Cole, Chicago, IL

Because I am a poor person and I believe I am as worthy as anyone else of quality of life. I am handicapped and disabled, live on Social Security and this proposal discriminates against the poor.
—Gloriamarie Amalfitano, San Diego, CA

I don't want corporations ruling the internet world. The internet is the most open and the freest place that exists today. Net Neutrality matters!
—Lee Marriott, Moclips, WA

There is NO way that the average American can have the same clout that Comcast, Verizon, etc have, the internet must remain free and neutral.
—Vern Maresh, Albuquerque, NM

Please nullify the current rules concerning "open internet" and instate stringent protection. Reclassify Broadband under Title 2, regulate ISP's like Telecommuncations common carriers. Create a law that will not allow the current Oligopoly to continue to extort Amerixan citizens and violate our first amendment right to free speech and press. I clarify: the current rules are unconstitutional and ISP's are acting in blatant violation of the First Amendment. Everyone has the right to be heard, and everyone has the right to hear what is being said. Not faster or slower depending on how much someone can pay; every American citizen has equal rights to free speech, press and assembly. Wether in physical locations or digital, on the ground or in the cloud, like 1st amendment right apply.
—Oskar Johansson-Theiss, Girdwood, AK

ISPs should be common carriers. The internet is as close to a necessity in the modern world as any other of our needs. Stop catering to big business and at least try to keep the facade of democracy up.
—Juan Madrid, Catskill, NY

Net neutrality is the only way to guarantee a level playing field on the internet. Without it, startups stand to be stifled, and with them, innovation.
—Vince Rosalia, Bedford, NH

For the reasons already stated above!!!
—Diane Frank, Scottsdale, AZ

Another way to shaft the middle class! It seems like corporations with all their money & power will be favored once again. My internet & cable fees are high enough as it is. If your plan is enacted, they may increase beyond our means.
—Priscilla Kinnick, Stillwater, OK

I'm already on a slow dirt road because I'm a rural resident with crappy satellite service (Hughes Net) that I pay an exorbitant fee for and get snail speed. No other options are available. I hate that the rich and powerful get their way and the rest of us can "go pound sand".
—William Budge, Huson, MT

The nation is watching. Will you represent your constituents or the wealthy/corporate America?
—Carol Romie, Centerville, OH

Figuratively speaking, I want to have my cake and eat it, too. If this bill is passed, you're making us decide which is more important, having no internet or having only select internet websites.
—Francis Kelly Sales IV, Pflugerville, TX

The internet is for everyone, plain & simple, and is one of the most equal playing fields for common folk & businesses alike that exists where everyone can benefit and grow with the resources it provides. Please ensure that Net Neutrality is a mainstay forever.
—Tom Keys, Gresham, OR

We all know that a two-tiered internet will result in additional costs being passed along to consumers. I am retired and living on a fixed income. My costs already exceed the COLAs that are provided. Don't make me pay for another cost increase.
—James A. Kline, Bayfield, CO

I think you're moving to favoritism for large corporate interest and taking freedom of the Internet from small businesses. Please classify ISPs as common carriers.
—James Verberkmoes, Roseburg, OR

There are only six media content providers/conglomerates in the United States today that control the majority of what we consume. Gifting them the internet would monopolize information. That isn't democracy. That isn't the free market. That's tyranny. The open internet matters. To disregard it is to disregard everyone who experiences it, and it treats us like the enemy.
—Ross Funderburke, Tallahassee, FL

We should ALL have the fastest lane possible.
—Robert Lehan, Westfield, MA

If it's not open, then it's not the Internet. The free flow of thought regardless of economic clout is fundamental to other freedoms. Don't usher America into a corporate dark age.
—Jeff Miller, Springfield, MO

The internet has been such an amazing tool to foster democracy by giving ordinary people access to valuable information. Everyone should have equal access and service with no winners and losers. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Thank you —Ms. DebbieAiona Aiona, Portland, OR

Net Neutrality is crucial to modern life. Besides potentially opening dangerous doors for other countries' internet policies, the loss of Net Neutrality will stifle creation, innovation, and progress in all areas, from art to STEM fields. It will also be detrimental to anyone who works their job remotely and can't access a "fast lane" connection. Not to mention that internet discrimination will cut off much-needed lifelines for people who are homebound, ill, or in abusive situations, where online activity may be the only thing keeping them afloat. Protect Net Neutrality and prove that America is still a great nation, committed to freedom.
—Lk, Conway, AR

Please remember that the government is meant to serve all Americans, not just corporate lobbyists.
—Adam Anderson, Edina, MN

Access to information should not be restricted to only those with big bucks. Much information that I get is sponsored by individuals' support of the website not corporations with deep pockets, some of whose money comes from my pockets.
—Virginia Brown-Nolan, Silver Spring, MD

Freedom of information !
—Dennis Branse, Tamarac, FL

We need net neutrality now and always.
—Karen Spradlin, Jacksonville, AL

Net Neutrality is absolutely essential if America is to be a democracy.
—Charles Paul Becker, LITCHFIELD, CT

The people don't want. Neither side of Congress wants it. Kind of leaves us wondering why you want it ...
—Jesse Reisman, Fort Washington, MD

An open Internet without corporate bias is critical to the very foundation of our current country. So much of life goes on across the Internet this day and age, it is a vital part now of our First Amendment right. Allowing for profit corporations decide which voices should be heard by boosting their speed over others will begin a process of degrading American values on the Internet. Right now it is a place open and free to all, no one group given an unfair advantage over another. Loosing Net Neutrality will be a tremendous loss for the American people and their spirit.
—James A Roberts, Arlington, VA

Aside from greed, there is virtually no reason not to classify the internet as a utility. More than ever, it is a basic necessity to everyday life and business, and this will only increase with time. Rather than carve it up amongst a handful of monopolistic companies, you must instead reclassify the internet as a public utility, and ISPs as common carriers. This is truly a 'must' in order to preserve Net Neutrality for those like me that depend on it in both work and personal life.
—Zach Goist, Seattle, WA

Let's see... 340,000,000 common, everyday folks want Net Neutrality, while 5 billionares don't. Who do you stand with? Yeah, I thought so.
—Jackson Hawk, Rogue River, OR

The internet is one of the greatest achievements in the history of the human race. It connects the entire plant in ways that would have been mind blowing to sci-fi writers mere decades ago. Net neutrality is a large part of its success and shouldn't be cast aside just to make a quick buck.
—Robert Ries, Grosse Pointe, MI

(415) 567-1444
—Ron Rattner, San Francisoc, CA

Please keep the Net neutral. It makes a big difference to the millions of us little users.
—Kathryn L. Hardy, Petaluma, CA

The internet must remain free and neutral. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. Merlin Pendray, Grants Pass, OR —Merlin Pendray, Grants Pass, OR

The Internet is the most important resource of the 21st century and this resource is being sold for a profit by non-competeing companies. I am currently studying for the CPA exam and constant internet outages mix testing very difficult. The USA has some of the highest prices yet ranks 36 on overall speed even after the American taxpayers have spent hundreds of billions of dollars on Internet infrastructure. Now fast lanes I have to worry getting even slower service due to a false "scarcity of internets".
—James Frazier, Milford, MI

High speed on the internet should be available to everyone, not just the well-heeled!
—Jeffrey Irvine, SHAKER HEIGHTS, OH

The internet is a world that was made for research, and entertainment purposes. To charge more people for the entertainment would actually cause the companies to go bankrupt. Also, what's to stop these ISP's from blocking the websites we can go on? Stop this, or the country will truly react. Remember the Rodney King Riots? Well, the next riot in response to this will be a whole lot worse.
—Erick Herring, Miami Gardens, FL

The large wallets of large corporations already grant them privileged access to consumers on other media. The internet is a public utility.
—Richard Henighan, Seymour, TN

I do not want my internet to be controlled by any large corporation. Create Net Neutrality so that use of the internet is fair to all citizens. Stop messing with us common folk.
—Kale Starbird, Ojai, CA

don't muck with it. give the rest of us a break for christssake
—Marcus Riker, Harwood, TX

well for me the open and free internet should be what matters and not about big business's interests in making money.
—Cssey Huff, Abilene, TX

Taking away Ned neutrality will hurt small business that can't afford to pay extra for internet. It eventually cripple our economy by hurting our ability to innovate.
—Jorge Diaz, Atlanta, GA

As a software development student, I feel like ending net neutrality would put my future career at risk. The internet is an ongoing fountain of knowledge that needs to be accessible by anybody and needs to be a platform for everybody. Charging content creators for the "fast lane" would put a priority on websites that barely get used anyway. A majority of the best things the internet has to offer are free. Whether it is a community, a resource, an outreach or a chance to learn something that can change the world, the internet has a lot to offer and the only thing that will come from ending net neutrality is the oppression of progress.
—Stephen Levy, Pinellas Park, FL

I consider the open internet to be one of the only, if not THE only, place where you are truly free to express yourself in any way you see fit.
—Matt Fournier, Apopka, FL

The Internet should be free of any limitations. Corporations should not be able to mould it so easily.
—Ajenthan Ramanathan, ,

It poses to give an unfair advantage to developed countries, and harm technological development as business processes masquerade as solutions to problems!
—Patrick McMorran, Deep River, CT

The internet is the pinnacle of information exchange: the medium that makes it easiest for an ordinary person to express his views, or spread knowledge that would otherwise go un-noticed, to anyone with a computer and a connection. It is also the last medium that is not dominated by those with money and influence, which the FCC's proposal would change. Too few voices monopolise what we are able to hear and allowing discrimination by ISPs would exacerbate this by giving some greater control over the internet, eliminating the last bastion of truly free dissemination of information.
—Jonathan Knowles, Northfield, MN

Killing net neutrality is another instance of the government favoring corporations over citizen consumers. We're used to getting the shaft from corrupt officials.
—Philip Ratcliff, Salem, OR

A two- tiered internet is a step backwards for freedom of speech and communication. It undermines one of the fundamental great things about the internet, that it is an equal opportunity communication tool.
—Rob Bowles, ,

This was supposed to be a government of, by and for PEOPLE, not of, by and for business -- especially mammoth business.
—Kaye Fissinger, Longmont, CO

Pay for play will only benefit the one-percent. Please rule in favor of the majority and keep the internet free and open.
—James French, Seattle, WA

There will be lawsuits involving you for the rest of your lives if you don't use the common carrier designation.
—WH Mckay, Williamsburg, VA

If you do this, you will clearly be the FCSC. The Federal Communications Stifling Commisars.
—Diane Libman, chicago, IL

I believe in Net Neutrality and I believe he proposal would be discriminatory.
—Sandy Humphreys, Angier, NC

I adamantly oppose the two tier system. All should be furnished the fastest and best internet available. Internet service should not be dependent on how much anyone can pay.
—Michael Mastronardi, Mililani, HI

Wow, this is a travesty!!
—Roger Olowski, Montecito, CA

Throw out your current plans and reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers. Net Neutrality needs to be protected to maintain a sense of equality on the internet, so that small websites have a chance at becoming something huge, and large websites don't get unfair advantages.
—Wayne Sturdivant, Mesquite, TX

Corporations are psychopathic by nature, their behaviour is anti-human and anti-nature, giving them an unfair advantage on the internet is insane.
—Roger Hymas, Southsea,

The Internet is a public utility and the FCC must regulate Internet providers as common carriers. Tom Wheeler spoke passionately about the open Internet, but his rousing rhetoric doesn’t match the reality of his proposal. The only way to accomplish the chairman’s goals is to reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers. Michael Copps, an FCC commissioner from 2001 to 2011 (and acting chairman for several months in 2009), is "calling upon the commission to "reclassify broadband as 'telecommunications' under Title II of the Communications Act." The effect of that move would be to designate Internet service providers as "common carriers," making them subject to increased FCC regulation." "The good news is that the solution is pretty simple," Copps wrote. "It doesn’t require a new telecommunications statute replete with time-consuming years of legislative horse-trading and special interest lobbying. All it requires is an FCC big enough to own up to its previous mistakes and courageous enough to put our communications future back on track."
—Bruce Burns, Santa Cruz, CA

It's the only way to guarantee free speech and democracy.
—Gail Yborra, Wilmington, DE

Tom Wheeler's plan marginalizes people who are already underrepresented in this country. Please ensure our right to true net neutrality.
—Barbara Federman, Santa Barbara, CA

My town is suffering the loss of tv channels because ComCast wants more money. They are not getting it from CableOne. This is bad enough BUT they have now blocked their internet sites for everyone who gets their internet from CableOne. The internet is becoming less free already. Please put a stop to this! Net Neutrality is essential to U.S. citizens. We don't want to be like China and India where the interned is censored by the government. If we can't hold on to this freedom, I fear we may lose others. Keep us free. Keep our information free. Keep the Net neutral and open to all.
—Eugena F. Williams, Altus, OK

We need a free and open internet, it's what President Obama promised us. Please reclassify ISP's as common carriers, it's the right thing to do .
—Linda and Gregg S F Gridley, Saint Paul, MN

The Internet was created for the free and open exchange of information, images , and ideas first and for commerce second. Keep it that way, for EVERYONE, and don't capitulate to greedy interests that believe EVERYTHING should be monetized.
—JA Fludd, Albany, NY

It allows for a fair environment politically, economically and socially.
—Eli Schroeder, Glen Carbon, IL

We need net neutrality for capitalism to work properly. Having these giant corporations as gatekeepers is basically allowing them to misuse their monopoly power.
—Craig Howland, Fremont, CA

We the people will end up paying for this one way or another. It is important that at least the internet remain as a level playing field for all.
—Joan Unterweger, Beacon, NY

I dont want ISPs deciding what comes through the internet to me!
—James Benson, Silver Spring, MD

Don't Let America suffer the internet is the last bastion of true equality and freedom
—Jesus Arce, Richmond, VA

The internet is now the biggest communications network ever constructed. I will never buy a local phone line again, I use the internet for phone services. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Philip Anderson, South San Francisco, CA

I do not want a fast lane or pay for play system. We have the right to EQUAL access to ALL websites. PLEASE reclassify as common carriers!!!! I want Net Neutrality.
—Thomas Lopez, Kalamazoo, MI

All I want is decent performance. That is just not possible with the ISPs selling off huge chucks of bandwidth. They need to be classified as a common carrier.
—Doug Parker, Karnack, TX

Do the right thing!!!
—Maurice Williams Sr, Jackson, TN

Innovation, fair competition, and simple timely communication depend on net neutrality. Too much depends on FCC's action to allow net neutrality to perish.
—Ronald Lockwood, White Plains, MD

I want a free internet and not one controlled by the service providers
—Paul Gold, Merrick, NY

As Tim Wu documented in "The Master Switch" these systems will continue to be abused by their owners. The only way to solve this is to make them common carriers. Do the right thing.
—John Kaster, Santa Cruz, CA

To Tom Wheeler, The internet is a public entity, and should remain a level playing field for everyone who uses it. As a leader in the government of the United States I would hope that you will do what's right for the citizens of the United States (and the world) and keep the internet neutral. Removing net neutrality would give a very small number of private companies a death grip on access to the internet. Private companies historically don't have the best interests of users in mind. What motivates them? Money. Faster lanes will not be created as they have no interest or incentive for doing so as they can instead charge extra for existing lanes. Competition won't change this as the few ISPs have practically a monopoly on the internet infrastructure. There's no way for a small startup company to try and compete with the bigger companies. If net neutrality ends, the internet as we know it today will be dead. Do you want this to be the legacy of the FCC during your term? Killing the internet. I hope you will do what's right for the people of the United States and save net neutrality. Prove that the United States government still has the guts to do what's right for its people. Kip
—Kip Nicol, Cupertino, CA

I am on a fixed income and rely on the Internet extensively for communication, research and more. It is incredibly important to have Net Neutrality!
—Beth McCammon, Columbus, OH america for the people. the internet is a necessary utility for me to do my job. please recognize the little guy here.

—Michael Rababy, los angeles, CA

ISPs have a virtual monopoly on internet traffic in the U.S. - they should be classified as common carriers and regulated as such. We are already far behind many countries in our internet speeds, and allowing massive cable companies to slow our internet communication even more - for profit! - will further cripple America's technological abilities.
—Andrew Dunne, Kula, HI

I depend on freely choosing the communications I use and do not believe the big providers should have advantages that benefit the wealthy few who can pay extra fees. ISPs should be classified as common carriers.
—Helen Curtis, Spokane, WA

August 2012 my wife left her appointment as senior pastor in a local church, to be the un-paid advocate for people with disabilities. November 2012 our son lost his job in a staff reduction. He has not found work as all the other employers in his industry (computer animation) are still reducing staff, canceling or delaying projects. We have been supporting him, paying vehicle registration and insurance and providing money for gas and food. In June 2013 after 37 years and just 34 mounts before retirement my employer after reporting in the employee quarterly status meeting that they were setting new sales records, and had a profit in the millions eliminated my position (z/OS Systems Programmer, IBM zEnterprise System servers Systems Engineer) along with three others in a department reorganization. As IBM zEnterprise System servers are declining in usage in my county there have been no employment possibilities. How was your year? Write if you get work. WE ALL VOTE!! My wife currently is: Facilitator, Cal-Pac DisAbility Ministries Task Force and Chair, Committee on DisAbility Ministries United Methodist Church * * * Four friends brought their friend to Christ, tearing a hole in a roof they wanted so badly for his life to be changed! What would you do to change a friend's life?
—Dale McCart, Irvone, CA

I am a small business owner. I rely on the internet to spread news of my products and services economically. The internet should be a Title II telecommunications service, just like state highways should not be toll roads.
—KGH Nicholes, Martinsdale, MT

What would be so wrong with the internet simply being there for everyone at the same price. Yes I know that opportunities most often are more available to those who can afford them. But that doesn't have to be the model for the internet. It was after all, the US government that paid for the basic research, which produced the internet. The Federal Communications Commission was created for a reason. The commission is a part of this government of and for the people, not special interests who happen to have more money. I think net neutral internet is likely one of the most important and fundamental features of our developing world. The world generally has moved away from the unsupportable division of people into classes. It is important that we, especially in the United States support the concept of equal opportunity.
—Reuben Wade, Philadelphia, PA

Aside from the reality of multitudes of unintended consequences from this proposed action, the vast, vast majority of Americans and people the world over undeniably, without any doubt at all, want to preserve an open internet that is accessible to innovators - such as Mark Zukerberg - with no limits on their size or wealth. It is pure greed that drives this push against the will of millions for the desires of the few. I respectively implore you to DO THE RIGHT THING! Allow yourself to sleep well at night knowing you did.
—Karen Peterman, Austin, TX

This is the exact kind of corporate bullshit that threatens our rights as free citizens. I remember when the constitution actually meant something, but now you make me sick to my stomach. If this rule dare passed then I am done. I rather move to Canada than stay any longer in this corrupted shithole you called a country!
—Kenneth, San Francisco, CA

Net neutrality is an investment in our future. Adam Smith would agree: ensure net neutrality so we can empower the next generation of innovators and Entrapaneurs.
—Gina Griffith, St. Albans, WV

I'm retired and not able to afford another hike in the outrageous rate$ I'm already paying. Thanks --Charlie
—Charles Gray, Rochester, NY

As it is I can barely afford what they're charging now. AT&T keeps raising fees and the fee is slower . I barely ever watch movies anymore because it keeps rebuffing, so not worth it.
—Breezy Perez, Houston, TX

Net neutrality is about as democratic as it gets. Do not sell out to corporate greed.
—Lawrence Crowley, Louisville, CO

Do the right thing for the people, not the corporate elite.
—Andrew John Kaszynski, Spring Valley, IL

Net Neutrality rises about money greed! It is a way for ordinary people to share with the world the insight, wisdom, and values they hold dear! It's a live line to Human Communication, which, ironically, gets pushed farther into the background with every alleged advancement toward that goal. Net Neutrality is a sand- rock trying to hold up the weight of tittering individual rights and responsibilities across the globe. Undergird it. support it. Improve it. BUT, please, don't destroy it through your neglect. It's emblematic of individual freedom, communication, and accomplishment. Raise its flag; support its growth; advance its freedom. It may well be the last human freedom we can claim in our selfish human world. Ken Minor
—Ken D. Minor, North Port, FL

I would like the FCC to define the internet as a telecommunications service to preserve network neutrality. The internet is the most powerful democratic tool invented in my lifetime, but it will only stay that way if all data traffic moves at the same speed. If providers can prioritize bandwidth, the internet will be just another "pay-to-play" mouthpiece for the wealthy, much as television is today. We must not let the internet become like television!
—David Lindenbach, Binghamton, NY

END CORPORATE GREED AND FAVORABLE TREATMENT FOR THE RICH! WE ARE THE 99% —Charlie, Angleton, TX

The Internet is easily one of the most important fixtures in modern civilization. Allowing greedy last-mile carriers to arbitrarily extort technology companies undermines the Internet's foundation of reliable transport, impedes innovation, and leaves society poorer at large.
—Jonathan Balsam, Cypress, CA

you guys should stop your make yourself stupid this wrong what you are doing.
—Mechlin, Mc Kees Rocks, PA

To end net neutrality ends what average people have (in my opinion) as the last true vestige of freedom. This is nothing more than another attempt at SOPA and it is wrong. I'm sick of these constant unnecessary attacks on the internet by these idiotic want to be fascists! These people seem to forget how they got their money and power to begin with or what country they live in. All of this sounds to me like a bunch of out dated, greed obsessed curmudgeons, trying to take control of something they can't, and don't want to fully understand. They care nothing about the consequences or the impact this will have on actual people and don't like that it give actual people a voice. I will not and refuse to accept an internet ran entirely by corporations, the one percent parasites and the people who suck them off. This ridiculousness needs to stop and these people all need to come to their senses. A free internet is a profitable, stable and progressive society. To take it away out of greed is chaos waiting to happen.
—Edward Olis, Staten Island, NY

Please throw out these rules and reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Dalyce Williams, Noble, LA

I believe freedom of information is the future. Giving people the ability to censor and restrain the free flow of information is restricting not only the future, but also basic human rights. If this goes through the only thing bigger and "better" will not be the internet or our freedoms, but the pockets of those who sold themselves at the cost of others.
—Freddy Dempsey, Mundelein, IL

FROM YOUR WEBSITE: > Promoting competition, innovation and investment in broadband services and facilities > Supporting the nation's economy by ensuring an appropriate competitive framework for the unfolding of the communications revolution NOW LIVE UP TO IT! Your so-called "FAST LANE" would be the death of Democracy in this country and severely inhibit "fair" competition. Do what's right for America - not corporate interests.
—John Grieco, Simi Valley, CA

Internet service providers are already paid by their customers for their service. They have to always provide the best possible service to their customer.
—Christian Couder, Colombes,

The internet is the most powerful tool for research and communication ever created. Please don't let it go to waste!
—Andrew Heath, Rockport, ME

The internet is the TRUE common carrier before all the others.
—Dixie Brooke, Williamstown, MA

It's time to listen to the public! Net neutrality is in the public's best interests. Corporations already control too much of this country--they don't need to also buy and sell our internet access!
—Susan D., Lafayette, CA

Consulting the internet is a vital daily need for me. Please protect this commons.
—Sandra Rasich, Santa Fe, NM

The internet is a glorious democrat forum filled with lots of information. I truly believe that it should be classified as a public utility.
—Donald Di Di Russo, Hyde Park, MA

If the Internet isn't a public utility, I don't know what is.
—Geoff Duton, Belmont, MA

In a country that, at least superficially, holds free speech to be paramount to freedom and democracy, it is terrifying that the number one medium of speech is not getting the protection we need. I expect net neutrality to be protected. I will strongly support those who will help us hold those accountable for destroying it if it is not.
—Lance Bodily, Pittsburgh, PA

You are mandated by the Constitution to aid in the flow of information, not the channeling of it for profit. WAKE UP read your mandate. We will not sit by and allow this buyout by the FCC.
—Ann Simonton, Santa Cruz, CA

the air ways must remain the property of the people AND CORPORATIONS ARE NOT PEOPLE
—Frank Graves, Deerfield Beach, FL

The internet needs to be free. Without net neutrality, free wi-fi at coffee shops, libraries, and schools will NO longer exist. Many websites won't be able to compete with those with faster paid access, so only the biggest, financially able sites will survive. Further, accessing many websites (or internet access at all) will become complicated and expensive, limiting access to only those who can afford it. There is NO good reason for creating a fast lane for consumers - only for big companies to get a business advantage... and this will have a HUGE, NEGATIVE impact on consumers! Please keep net neutrality. It's so important.
—Ashley Frick, Bloomfield Hills, MI

Giving corporate control of the internet is NOT net neutrality !!! I am a voter and will make sure you pay if this is allowed to move forward.
—Mark Sniegoski, Rockville, MD

A free and open internet is essential both to future innovation, but it already has an immediate benefit to the everyday lives of those who use it. Allowing corporations to discriminate between traffic may not have the effect of limiting free speech -- at least, not in America -- but it would limit future innovation, in some cases of forums where this speech would take place. Existing properties would continue to exist, but increased costs in maintaining their infrastructure would be passed on to the consumer. In summary, internet discrimination is taking from the many to line the pockets of the few (who have reneged on their promises to improve infrastructure at nearly every turn), and at the further cost of our future benefit.
—Christopher E Douglass, Saint Petersburg, FL

It should be freely available to all!!
—Kyle L Peterson, Sterling Heights, MI

Internet has to be free. Nobody can tell me what information to read and nobody can take money just to allow me to know this and not to know that.
—Maria Shevchuk, Staten Island, NY

Our freedoms are shrinking by the minute, if we stop at the worlds last fully, free medium for information and speech, who's to say this won't become another heavily censored and unjustly enforced commodity. The noose is tightening, lets fight back before we're all silenced.
—Owen Sheppard, ,

I am a blogger, a mom with kids in school who need internet access for research purposes, and a warranty administrator who relies on internet speed to do my job. I'm also low-income- how do the poor afford the fast lane??? Level the playing field- ISPs should be classified as common carriers. Otherwise, you're literally making it impossible for those of us below the poverty line to ever, ever get a leg up, leaving us to have to take hand-outs, instead of a hand UP.
—Heather Rodman, Boise, ID

Net Neutrality is one of the very few barriers to a complete oligarchy in the US. Your rules do not protect it. Lable the internet as a utility.
—Tara Tabatabaie, Edmond, OK

True freedom and open knowledge sharing is that matters!
—Pekka Parviainen, Kauniainen,

The internet needs to continue and always be open for all. A two-tiered system is not an option, especially when the system in place already doesn't allow for competition with internet companies.
—Amanda Ellexson, Phoenix, AZ

This is important to me because many, many people would be unable to afford the fast-internet and there are so many families living in poor homes who may be unable to afford quick internet. The upper class citizens get so many perks because they have more money than the other 99%. Rich people can influence politics unlike anyone else can. DO NOT let them influence this in any way, everyone should have equal opportunities when it comes to the internet.
—Tommy, South Point, OH

More and more divisiveness...
—Jason Brody, Escondido, CA

The big companies have all the profits and most of the rights these days. Let us humans at least keep what we've got this time. Don't give away our access to the internet!
—Susan Hayward, Bronxville, NY

It is important to keep the internet absolutely an equal opportunity for all. Don't stifle the little guy!
—Jenepher Hajian, Watertown, MA

I believe that no one company should be favored for better speed over another simply because they paid more money for better speeds. This is clearly unfair and the FCC should not be afraid to take a stand for the people of this country.
—Morgan, Argyle, MN

The internet is vital for education. Schools, students, teachers, scientists, researchers, etc. are already short on funds and the internet needs to remain fast and accessable for a low price. Don't jeopardize education and science by making it cost more.
—Virginia Parks, Bastrop, TX

The internet should be reclassified as a common carrier. We are losing our choices in radio with huge consolidation and it is not right that we lose the internet too. The public owns the airwaves and should own the internet.
—Jeanette Weis, Glendale, AZ

Net neutrality is one of the the cornerstones of a well functioning internet. We'd be really thankful and appreciative for you to stand up for this important matter, leading us towards a beautiful future for everyone. Thank you in advance. I trust in you for doing the best for yourself and us :)
—Tarjei Christoffer Smith, Oslo, NJ

The internet is one of the only remaining large, non-governmental institutions where free speech is actually still free! The interference of corporate entities is not only unwelcome and unnecessary, but would severely impact the one area of this economy that has remained relatively healthy throughout the global recession. The corporate monoliths, in their mindless quest for control and monopoly, will not only squelch the exercise of free speech, but will ultimately decide for themselves what is most profitable for them irrespective of the wants and needs of the citizens of the United States of America! This kind of control and restriction is precisely what will kill the goose that is laying these golden economic eggs. The major reason for the success of internet-based commerce is the freedom and openness that the internet has afforded e-businesses! The greed-mongering corporate entities will provide many smokescreens for their efforts to control and manipulate the internet, but make no mistake: their own bloated bottom line is the one and only thing their objections are predicated on. In closing, I cannot emphasize how much I and everyone I know wants to keep the internet neutral and free of greed-based corporate meddling. We cannot and will not stand for anything less!
—Francis Schilling, Vail, AZ

This must not become yet another two tiered system: one for the rich and one for the rest of us. The wealthy must not get special treatment just because they have more money. The internet should be free and fair for ALL!
—Connie Schuett, Reno, NV

This reiterate my attempted message minutes ago, that may not have transmitted successfully: Whether communication are sent thru air (e-m waves) or under public streets or under/over public rivers --- the public and public interest has primary jurisdiction. Sadly, that contradicts FCC behavior in the last 12 years, and Pres. Obama, sadly, continue to put 'the worst of Wall St.' before 'Main St.' contradicting his campaign commitment to the extreme. Thus, for the next 3 years, at least, such wording as 'Utility' or whatever it takes -- should be declared, to keep the Internet at the same speed for all -- and re-examine the issue again after 3 years. It is super-tragic that after the 2007 meltdown, the government ripped the public off to give the the worst of Wall St. a free super-junket, without even putting a real consumer/public advocate on the Fed. Reserve Board. And similarly regarding the FCC chairman and likely, I fear, the majority of its directors.
—Carl Littmann, Wyncote, PA

The open Internet has flourished under the present regime where all traffic and all protocols are treated the same and no carrier makes any economic distinction regarding the value of the traffic. Increasingly more and more content traditionally served by the old-world telcos such as phone, radio (audio), TV (video), music, commerece etc. is carried on the IP internet. Eventually most, if not all, of the traffic will be IP and related protoocols. Classifying all internet carriers as common carriers and applying those rules and restrictions to them is the only course that makes sense.
—Jay Unger, Gaithersburg, MD

What's the difference between a corrupt democracy and any other form of corrupt government? Obama: "The rest of the world (God's: pop 7.0 billion (198 countries)) isn't stupid!" After all, isn't approximately one-third of that world already Microsoft free? 2008-04-03: Brazil, India, and China, which together count for more than a third of the world's population, all voted against Office Open XML last week. Address : <http://www.informationweek.co m/news/software/productivity_a pps/207001577?_requestid=11818 1> Patriotism begins with knowledge, not lies and propaganda. Most of society, including the majority of all the world's Christianity, prefers the knowledge. -Ron Wike Vietnam veteran
—Ronald Wike, Annville, PA

With the de facto monopoly that internet carriers currently have, allowing them to create fastlanes for specific content providers would allow them to control what content I have access to and allow large corporations to prevent new startup companies from getting a foothold. This has got to stop, broadband internet should be classified as a utility the same where it is in most other countries. Not only should they not be able to control the speed at which I access content, but I should have a choice in ISP even if I have to use their cable.
—BRandon Neill, Arvada, CO

It is perhaps more important than who we elect for President. It could eventually be used in such a fascistic. way, that the power of what we see, hear, or even read, will be decided by one or two corporations. Let's not foget, corporations are PEOPLE.
—Helmut Zitzwitz, Ponte Vedra Beach, FL

The internet is far too important to everyone. Like water and electricity it should be regulated as a common carrier service
—Luis Alvarado, Saint Albans, NY

The internet is my source of information about the world around me. Without net neutrality, monied interests will be able to control and influence the flow of information. Don't allow monied interests to control the internet.
—Kenneth Hawkins, Denver, CO

The Internet is one of the greatest inventions in human history. To squander this creation with a greedy iron fist spits on the memories of its creators and pioneers, upon all those who value freedom of expression and our own future generations who will, if these plans go ahead, inherit a bastardized wreck. Just think what your plans' effects will be in the long run, what limiting the creativity and power of the Internet, which has created a borderless world beyond the imaginings of anyone in history, will do.
—Sean Hill, Tallaght,

Internet should be like electricity and not discriminate between bits. Important for small businesses and innovation, please stop this!
—Max Baccouche, Ottawa,

In the long term (and perhaps even in the near term) there is no reason to expect the FCC to be able to properly manage the internet under the new rules.
—David Rogg, Oakton, VA

I live in an area with 1 cable internet provider and 1 dsl option.The dsl is only available because it was REQUIRED as a condition of the baby bells reassembling & ATT can't wait to get rid of dsl.This will leave my cable company as my only internet choice;what will stop them from doing whatever they please ?? The FCC can make the internet work or make it a vague memory for all except those rich enough to pay the tolls.
—Elena Lemmo, Massillon, OH

Everyone should have equal access to the internet. Knowledge is not proprietary. And no one has the right to choose what others can read/learn. Equal access for all is the only response that makes sense!
—Carolyn, Madison, TN

STOP this merger!! No good for consumers.
—Don MO Bernstein, Valley Village, CA

Only true net neutrality is acceptable. Having the FCC run committees to decide what discrimination is just and what is unjust is not practical. Democrats will reject it as weak neutrality, and Republicans will reject it as government meddling.
—Ryan Cummings, Elkton, MD

If ISPs can pick and choose among users, they could put all anti-corporate sites and sentiments on the slow lane. This amounts to corporate censorship of free speech.
—Christopher Walker, Benton, AR

I don't want to end up in a slow lane on the web.
—Joni Solis, Kentwood, LA

Freedom! Down with dictatorship of corporations!
—Psühho Punk, ,

The next YouTube, Vimeo, Spotify or Pandora might never come to be, simply because the company's founders were unable to secure funding in a world where the little guy can get squeezed out by big companies ready and willing to pay for faster connections.
—Eric Brown, Fargo, ND

An open internet is the cornerstone of American innovation in the 21st century. Thank you.
—Al Charak, Roslyn Heights, NY

Quit procrastinating and classify the Internet for what it is, a communication vehicle just like the Telephone is one. Wake up, this is the 21st century not the 19th Century! Regulate don't procrastinate or abdicate!
—Paul Horne, Boynton Beach, FL

The Internet will DIE if ISP's are given any more power than they already have. They are motivated by none of the same values that created the Internet. Don't let this happen!
—Kelcey Parker, Los Angeles, CA

The internet is a place where everyone has equal access to the same amount of information. Do not take away this freedom from the people!
—Casey Alcantar, Oakland, CA

Some people are not more important than others, even if they have more money. The internet should be equal for all.
—Helen Dickey, El Cerrito, CA

I NEED MY INTERNET, SO DON'T MESS WITH IT!!!!!!!!!
—Marc McGuire, Venice, LA

You're killing the Internet for money. Sick bastards.
—Michael Goodwin, ,

This wonderful, miraculous platform for instantly spreading news and information should be destroyed (like everything else) for green paper!? Jesus would be so happy.
—Christian Kunig, Smyrna, DE

I don't want my options for what I can view online to be up to these massive corporate companies. Will they also slow traffic to blogs or websites that might disagree with their particular brand or political stances? This is way too much control for companies only out for a profit. How would we get anything new and exciting online if it'll first have to build up a profit and get noticed by these massive companies? This is everything that is messed up with our music industry and more.
—Nicole, Seattle, WA

The access and choice of information that the Internet offers to us is changing our culture for the better. We need Net Neutrality to keep access equal for all income levels. I know families living below the poverty level who have grown stronger families and practiced better parenting because of programs and information they've accessed on the Internet. That has to continue, for our future's sake.
—Amy Carpenter-Leugs, Grand Rapids, MI

We all depend on an open internet in our daily lives. The internet is our tool for communication as most of my calls and mail gets routed through the internet. The internet has become the number one tool to exercise our First Amendment and to create a multi-tired internet would be the first step to censorship of those who cannot pay and allow their users fast access.
—Sergey Shevchuk, Staten Island, NY

The Internet should be available equally to all who wish to use it. It ought to be a public good, not a source of private profit.
—Patricia Frederick, Ashburnham, MA

Net Neutrality is ridiculously important for so many people - small businesses, individual entrepeneurs, and even regular joes who just want to browse the web and check their email. The only way America can compete in the global marketplace is with proper internet regulation... and the ONLY proper regulation is to classify internet as a public utility.
—Patryk K. Braganza-Gallagher, Rockaway Beach, NY

A major consideration in my decision to vote for Barack Obana was his pledge to maintain net neutrality. He appoints the FCC chairman--and then this? The protector of net neutrality is a Trojan Horse?
—Karen Collins, Yakima, WA

The internet is like water, electricity, natural gas, telephone, insurance. It is a utility depended on by everyone at some level. Freedom of access must be protected.
—Robert Thompson, Moorpark, CA

Enough corporate rule! You work for the citizens, not AT&T !!!!!!!!
—Craig Sulouff, Sunbury, PA

The communication companies already have so much control over our abilities to communicate and I can't financially afford to pay them even more money then I already do. I appreciate public freedom of speech in the real world and want that in the virtual world too.
—Liza Bender, Berkeley, CA

Internet availability should not be limited to the 1%; net neutrality is one of the last few ways those of us who can't afford to learn about and communicate with much of the world.
—Sara L, Geneva, IL

It seems that "free market" big business wants freedom only for themselves. I use the Internet every day and do not want to be pushed around by those who do not really care about real freedom.
—James M Elmore, CHARLOTTE, NC

Please ignore your obviously corrupt chairman and reclassify the ISPs as common carriers. Please do not undermine our democracy any further. We desperately need you to fulfill your oath!
—Mr. Reuben Yancey, Olympia, WA

As a former industry insider, the current trend is bad for business and bad for consumers. Net Neutrality is of paramount importance to our democracy. Please reclassify ISP as the telecommunication companies they already are.
—Chris kendell, Pioneer, CA

The internet is the very last place where everything is actually, literally possible. It is the greatest hub of creativity on our planet. It's the largest source of information available. Your current plans would throw all of that into the farthest reaches of outer space. I myself, like thousand others, implore you, beseech you, to keep the internet neutral. It is our home, our greatest achievement, and our hope for the future. Ending net neutrality will be the end of us all.
—Lambert Muis, ,

Net neutrality is important because keeping the internet open is the main driver of information dissemination in our society. Turning the internet into a different kind of service purely to increase the profits of corporations means killing the ease of communication we have today.
—Jose A Olvera-Perez, Des Moines, IA

It is a modern utility and treating it otherwise will be detrimental to our American Society.
—Andre Danylevich, Los Angeles, CA

This will ruin so many start-ups.
—Greg Moots, detroit, MI

We are known as "The Free World", and this is one of the purposes of that title. Let's keep it that way, so we can STILL BE FREE!!!
—Beverly Smith, Cottonwood, AZ

We're already falling behind relative to other counties. Eliminating the open internet will only ensure our country falls further behind in innovation. Slow web speeds stifle progress.
—Karlie, Burlington, VT

Every one deserves a fair system.
—H Kirk, ,

Net Neutrality is equivalent to Freedom of Speech. We can't let Big Cable discriminate on what message they want their customers to hear! The FCC created these Monopolies and the for-profit companies have shown time and time again they can't be good stewards of the services they provide. We must preserve Net Neutrality at ALL COSTS and mandate competition: Open the Cable Lines so that 3rd party resellers can compete DIRECTLY with Comcast and their ilk. Only THEN will proper market pressure be applied to Comcast, when they are faced with extinction will they improve their services.
—James More, Brunswick, GA simply put, this is wrong. allowing corporate entities to decide what is right for the consumer and citizen is wholly backwards. listen to the voice of the people

—Luke Karamol, oakland, CA

I run a small business online. I can't possibly afford to pay "fast lane" prices to big businesses. Not only that, but all extra money would go to my mortgage & bills! I enjoy full use of my internet to market my business, pay my bills, and keep in touch with my family that lives all over the country! This is not fair in any way, shape, or form! I STAND UP FOR NET NEUTRALITY!
—Janna English, Aurora, CO

Let's keep information neutral, even and fair - same speed for all.
—Eileen Bill, Santa Rosa, CA

I am fearful of all of these huge companies merging. That will mean less choices for consumers and more control of the content and speed at which the consumers can access any content they may want. I feel that those who have choices now continue to have the services they are paying for and not be discriminated against because the powerplayers are allowed to call the shots.
—Shirley Hermelin, Tampa, FL

Net neutrality is important to uphold so that people can be held on an equal level of access to information. Education has always been the great equalizer in the U.S. Not having net neutrality would hinder this equalization and further separate economic classes in this nation in an unjust way. DO NOT enable ISPs to create a two tiered internet service. Thank you.
—Doug Chunglo, Prescott, AZ

Cause the internet should be free and open to everyone.
—Felicity Hohenshelt, Jacksonville, FL

You will kill any remaining innovation! Seriously you need to reclassify this. People will not be able to compete for jobs on a level playing field.
—Ms. Julia Page, Austin, TX

The internet should be a resource for all, a representation of the freedom and equality that the United States should stand for rather than the oligarchy we are becoming.
—Bonnie Sizer, Boulder, CO

Net Neutrality allows me to share and obtain information necessary for my education, work, and everyday tasks. Under the current rule, visits to many websites will be greatly restricted. Please throw out its rules and reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Walter Wen, Houston, TX

A close family member lives overseas. Through the miracle of technology, we are able to visit with each other as though we were sitting in the living room having a chat. I fear your proposal will sever connections that are so important to so many of us. Additionally, with an open internet we have the opportunity to hear many different viewpoints, supporting the diversity our nation represents with people from so many sectors of the world. Without this, I fear the polarization we are now experiencing in our country will only become worse. Also, I am reinventing myself in retirement as a writer. With your proposal and the high prices that will ensue, I will not be able to adequately market my writing. That will be true for other independent entrepreneurs, like therapists, what I did before retirement. Please protect the open internet. Thank you.
—Linda A Marshall, Dayton, OH

I'm really concerned about big business control of the Internet. There will be unintended consequences here.
—Nathan Thomas, Windsor, CT

Internet bandwidth is already being paid for by all who use it. Allowing corporate giants to add additional tolls will not grow the economy but rather slow it even more.
—Kevin Rockhill, Anderson, IN

To not let fat cat to control the internet.
—Andres Pola, Fort Lauderdale, FL

We must reject these ridiculous rules and instead move to protect real Net Neutrality. Please, let's get rid of these rules and protect Net Neutrality for good. We are America and our "FREEDOM", of every kind, is of utmost importance!!!!!!!
—Pat Kormanik, Anna, OH

The internet is the last stand. They have bought politicians, the supreme court, and the press. They sold our democracy to the highest bidder. The internet should remain free so we can have a fighting chance at getting our democracy back from Oligarchy. You are destroying the very government you work for, eventually they'll come after your position as not needed! They don't want government to work, get that into your head. Do not help them destroy America. Democracy is on life support, don't suffocate it even more. You say you want net neutrality but you haven't stood up for it yet! Please search your conscience, have some integrity, represent the people, have a legacy you can be proud to tell your grand kids about, not be ashamed for in the future.
—Marie Fuentes, Albuquerque, NM

I already pay a small fortune each month for internet service, which, because I'm almost 80 years old, I use for bill paying, purchases, and staying in touch with my family. Please do not allow AT&T, Comcast and Verizon to make even bigger profits while ruining the internet for all Americans.
—Mona Locke, Napa, CA

Everybody, regardless of ability to pay, has a right to access to the internet!
—Orna Robinson, La Nucía,

Information should not be privatized!
—Lucas Völker, ,

Do you want to create monopoles? If so, let this bill pass and let all of us suffer due to their greed, they have never cared about the quality of their products, only how much it makes. Do what is right and stop these companies from ruining America and every other county that gets internet from us!
—Matthew Rerick, Rosemount, MN

We neet net neutrality because it keeps information available to everyone - on a level playing field. Don't make this a class issue.
—Carly Barker, Berkeley, CA

Really disappointed in the decision to move forward with your terrible proposal.
—Justin Briscoe, Salida, CO

ISPs are not something that can be divvied up between haves and have-not-as-much groups. The idea is un-American, plain and simple.
—Karen Cooper, Milwaukie, OR

A level playing field for global communications is more important for people and for all businesses, not just those businesses that can afford to flex their political muscle. Fair competition, not preferences, is what we need.
—Hugh S McElwain, North Chesterfield, VA

I think FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan to allow a two-tiered Internet is a bad plan. It is time to reclassify internet service providers as common carriers.
—Monica Wyatt, Santa Monica, CA

The Internet should NOT be in the hands of private corporations to exploit. It SHOULD be a public access utility.
—Emlen Evans, Montpelier, VT

Consumers already pay for internet access, and content providers already pay for servers, hosting and bandwidth to present said content. Access to content must not, and cannot be tiered, this is the biggest scam and will benefit NO ONE except the greedy few who are already making plenty of money. Just like power or water, the internet is a utility. Charging different rates based on what you use your electricity for or what you are using the water for is insane, just the same for the internet.
—Kevin Taylor, Fort Lauderdale, FL

I want to have a choice, not fast lanes for some companies.
—Virginia Good, Saratoga, CA

Dear Chairman Wheeler, Net Neutrality is vital for innovation and for freedom of speech. New websites that can't afford expensive fees for better service will face unfair barriers to success, leaving users with ever fewer options and a less diverse internet.
—Chandler Evans, Venice, CA

The Internet is perhaps the most democratic of human institutions, and its openness and equality allow unprecedented experimentation and creativity, along with free communication between citizens of the world. Disrupting the delicate balance of the free Internet by allowing corporate interests to do anything they please will destroy the very openness that makes the Internet important in the first place. Not only would this be a tragic cultural loss, and a destruction of innovation; it would also lessen the value of the Internet itself, and in my opinion would lead to its demise. The corporate powers at large do not realize that, paradoxically, as they try to reap more profits from the treasure that is the Internet, they will ultimately destroy it and lose everything. I hope you will fight for what is right and defend the neutrality of this precious utility of the 21st century.
—Travis Geis, Louisville, KY

Because the Internet can't be owned! If they want to create rules so bad why don't they create their own internet service; I MEAN OWN NOT BOUGHT
—Tomi Sheares, Altanta, GA

I urge you to throw out this ridiculous set of rules. Net neutrality is important to us all because if we allow bandwidth throttling and pay-for-speed access in any way shape or form, this will inevitably lead to corporate controlled communication. That would be completely unacceptable. Thank you.
—Karl Buchwald, San marcos, CA

I have been overcharged by Comcast for too long and if you allow them to discriminate against online content and applications it will only get worse! They were charging me an extra $10/month for a so-called "blast" which they said was a higher speed when in reality it was not any faster than their normal speeds. They cannot be trusted to do the right thing as their greed knows no bounds. They must be regulated or else they will ruin the open internet, even though it was developed with our tax dollars (e.g. DARPA) and constitutes the public airwaves, which the FCC is supposed to regulate for the common good, not for the profit of giant telecommunication companies, like Comcast, AT&T, et al. Thank you for listening, PLEASE do the right thing!
—Christopher G. Walker, San Francisco, CA

This is a critical matter for our freedom and future.
—Charles Maney, Ottawa, IL

Open internet with open access and broadband speeds is my life both socially and financially. Do not let corporate greed take over the people's internet.
—Michael Deen, Alpharetta, GA

I run a small business around internet radio. If the proposed rules go into effect, larger companies in the internet radio business would be able to suppress small businesses like mine merely by paying exorbitant fast lane fees that the smaller businesses can't afford. It would effectively squelch segments of the tech startup industry. Please keep the internet opened and reclassify the ISPs as common carriers.
—Judah Gabriel Himango, Savage, MN

Net Neutrality is an important aspect for a democracy. We need to make sure that big companies aren't given the edge to dominate what we see and search for and how we fast we see them on the internet! I urge you to fight for Net Neutrality!
—Stacy Levin, Madison, WI

The Net should be open to all on a level playing field.
—Mike Evans, Leominster,

Just like the telephone was to the 20th century, the internet is the communication technology of the 21st century! Like telephones, water, electricity, sewer and roads, the internet is a modern public utility, and must be classified as a COMMON CARRIER. These few powerful corporations want to govern and filter all digital communication. It is worse than thought police. They seek nothing less than to give themselves a total monopoly on what ideas live or die. They are trying to make themselves the gatekeepers to everyone's business and communication-- the ultimate arbiters of innovation and discourse worldwide. This is happening now, in Mexico. It will happen here if you let it. There was a time when the FCC stood for the people of this country. Your forebears regulated against foreign ownership of 20th century media on the basis of national security. Today, the companies and billionaires who stand to benefit from controlling content on the web are more powerful than most governments on Earth and hold no allegiance to anything but themselves. Allowing them to monopolize discourse on the single most important commerce and communications network of all time is dangerously unAmerican. Shame on you, Mr. Wheeler, for even considering these rules you've proposed!!
—Chris Faiella, Los Angeles, CA

The Internet has become a Public Utility, just like the telephone. If corporations are to be treated as people the big telecoms only get one comment each regarding Net Neutrality. Count up your comments fairly. How many people are for Net Neutrality and how many are against? It looks like millions against three telecoms. In fact, if the telecoms get their way I'll be blocked from sending you my comments.
—Robert Rowe, Kissimmee, FL

I value the freedom of the citizen
—Thomas Coughlan, ,

The internet is not merely a commercial service now; it has become democracy in action - we the people depend on open access for information in order to make decisions that matter, whether political, social or commercial. All people need equal access regardless of usage volume, nature of usage or money.
—Gary Allan, Pembroke,

Let's keep internet away from class warfare - we already have enough rich and poor and nothing in between. Keep net neutrality is it is!!!! No change. No to FCC prop!
—nara Rasnavad, Overland Park, KS

Net neutrality is important to me, because I'm an engineer and a Ham, and I don't want to spend dozens of hours hacking an improvised darknet. I'd rather be watching my libertarian and seditious videos over ATT or Comcast. But I'll have liberty at any cost, or death.
—Scott Stephens, Hoffman Estates, IL

The FCC proposal for tiering to the Internet is a proposal to codify discrimination on the internet. Only those who can afford the best will get the time and care of ISPs; everyone else will have to make due with what the ISPs can spare after taking care of the better customers. The Digital Divide isn't bad enough that a bit of federally approved discrimination can't make worse. Pushing this proposal forward means the FCC and the federal government is open to the risk of a class action suit of discrimination against it. What's the risk tolerance there? The safe bet is to exercise federal muscle and reclassify ISPs as common carriers. The risk tolerance for legal action will be a lot less then.
—Larry Wentzel, Ann Arbor, MI

we built this. we own it
—Enrique Baloyra, Biscayne Park, FL

There's nothing fair about the "pay-to-play" model. Keep the net fair and equal for everyone! It is clear where public opinion stands on this issue. Do not cave to corporate pressure! The American people is counting on you to do the right thing. Please rise to the occasion.
—R Bergmann, Brooklyn, NY

Net Neutrality matters because everyone deserves the right to equal and unregulated internet, regardless.
—George Johnson, ,

Everyone deserves fair access to the internet, not just those who can afford to shell out extra dollars for it.
—Alicia Brosterhous, Sacramento, CA

Net neutrality is extremely important because companies can throttle speeds in order to make companies pay huge contact deals that get passed to the consumer eventually. This is bad for everyone that pays and only good for people accepting money from the lobbyists. You may not care but we do. People that are ignorant to pass these bills should be thrown out of office and in prison.
—Gustavo Escobedo Jr, Klondike, TX

Communication must be open to all of us.
—Gerald Houska, ,

Allowing ISP's to start charging 3rd party entities to have their content put in "the fast lane" will do nothing but hurt the consumer. This will drive up prices for almost everything we use. For once, please take the side of the people and not the side of big business and do what is right.
—Matthew Moore, Chicago, IL

Throw out those rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Tons of smaller websites would get swept to the side with this new proposal.
—Jared Boudreaux, Belle Rose, LA

We don't want discrimination against content and applications, and don't want a two tier internet.
—Paul Barlow, Fanwood, NJ

Quit playing games with a resource that belongs to the AMERICAN PEOPLE, not AMERICAN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH. Or have the payoffs and kickbacks been too good?
—Aloysius Wald, Columbus, OH

Fast lanes and back end deals are exactly what will come from your new net neutrality rules. We don't need greedy, money hungry corporations running the internet. The internet needs to be free and open and the new FCC rules don't protect that.
—Michael Guindon, Monroe, MI

Breaking net neutrality into two separate lanes isn't necessary or productive on an equal level at all for businesses, colleges and schools across the globe, or people using it at home. It's criminal to change something just to get more money when it should just stay the same.
—Mac Repman, Camano Island, WA

For parelli conect
—Matt Poltonavage, Palmyra, PA

The internet should be able to be accessed equally by all.
—Brandon Tai, Staten Island, NY

The internet is a free place to be and there should be NO reason the FCC to tinker with it. Net Neutrality is good for everyone because there shouldn't be any reason why we should have to sit there and pay more for fees that SHOULD be free to begin with. Who gives you the right to bill me for what I have an interest in? The way this is made out to be IT'S EXACTLY LIKE THIS! If you stop at a stop sign, you used that stop sign so it's going to be an extra 5 Dollars. Driving on the road is another 10 dollars. Switching lanes will be another 20 dollars. Stopping at the traffic light will be 5 dollars, proceeding to go after the light turns green will be another 5 dollars. That's exactly how your allowing the internet to be. If you REALLY want it to be that way so badly, then allow me to send you my bill and pay for it out of your pockets. Don't like the idea of that? Then don't try to screw us over. Your job is to protect the internet of what it is, not make it worse and try to kill it. Stop the madness. Leave the internet alone.
—Dillon Ventura, Warwick, RI

I believe the FCC should ONLY accept New Neutrality to avoid discrimination and marginalizing of online services. The internet should be treated as a utility which provides a service for everyone just like our telephone, water, and electricity. Too often there is only one cable TV and internet provider for an area; this does not allow for options of service. The current providers have already said they want to show preference to their big paying customers. This will only squeeze out the ones that can't afford their services to leave them with nothing. Net Neutrality is the ONLY acceptable action.
—Debra Daniels, Saint Augustine, FL

If you need to ask you don't belong where you are.
—Richard Blakemore, Mariposa, CA

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Ronald Kestler, Louisville, KY

Everyone should have equal access to the internet.
—Penny Moyer, Littleton, CO

This seems like common sense, information should be available to the people easily. By dividing the internet up you are opening the door for people to make access to certain information harder than other information. The impact it would have on small businesses alone should be reason enough to keep the internet neutral. This is not an issue to be taken lightly and could have drastic and terrible effects on our lives and our economy. Keep the internet neutral and available without discrimination for all.
—Jessica Northrup, Ava, NY

I am an associate professor and together with my students, using an open and neutral internet is essential for higher education.
—William Cline, Strongsville, OH

I don't like being considered a second class citizen
—Barbara Weinbaum, Corrales, NM

I pay enough for my internet services as it is I am retired and my income does not increase as yours does, all this does is hurt the little guys, with the rich it doesn't as they have endless income, PLEASE DO NOT DO THIS. These internet providers charge to much already, this is good for them but not individuals Tell the FCC to throw out its rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. PLEASE!!!!!!!!!!!!!
—Marie Lingerfelt, Madison, GA

The internet is the great equalizer. Equal access also helps mitigate the undo influence of big doners in our election process
—Phil Shephard, Round Rock, TX

The internet is an open world of information and knowledge where everyone can access it. This puts us on a more equal level, and that is how it should stay. There should be at least one place where profit isn't allowing one group to step on others.
—James Forbes, Shamokin, PA

The internet was conceived and built with public funds and is OWNED by the public!!!!!!
—Al Cohen, hummelstown, PA

True net neutrality is essential for the continued existence of even a semblance of a level playing field.
—Marguerite boyens, Stone Mountain, GA

All content should be equal. The youtuber with his home webcam should have the same opportunity to spread an idea as the big video distributer. No fast track. No preference. Equal right for all Internet users.
—Carter, Raleigh, NC

I am DESPERATE to have a decision be made to keep selfish mega corporations hands off a free and independent Internet.
—Dan Lara, Chicago, IL

Please do not make changes to the Internet Neutrality. Big business and big money already have too much power. American citizens need to be heard as part of free speech.
—Julie Heveran, FRIENDSWOOD, TX

If for no other reason, it's time to stand up for honesty and fairness. Do you want to go down in history as the person who sold out the 99% and changed the internet accessibily and affordability. Have a backbone and stand up to big business. You'll probably be rewarded by sleeping well at night!
—Susan Donnelly, Boston, MA

Net Neutrality is important to me because it supports a level playing field of access for all Internet users. Letting ISPs reserve faster speeds and more Internet content for the highest bidder is a decision that borderlines on censorship. The FCC needs to reclassify ISPs as common carriers. This is the only way to protect real Net Neutrality.
—Nick Dollinger, Bellflower, CA

Its an open wire service that has gotten out of control on how much can be charged. Lets keep some of this cost neutral
—Katie Launderville, South Saint Paul, MN

Without Net Neutrality we are not free.
—Tim Neunzig, Roxbury, MA

A free and open internet is a good internet. Don't spoil it with greed. Thank you.
—Kevin Oldham, Shirley, NY

I want net neutrality. The internet should be a public utility with equal access for all.
—Steve Stuart, Klamath Falls, OR

It's important because it's my window to the world outside of my small town, if you do this than the sites I go to might be driven out of business because of fees that the ISPs will tack on just so they can work. Also, I would most likely loose touch with family and friends, because i'm a heavy user of skype, and it's the only way that we can all talk. Please reconsider this, the internet is so tied into everything we do, letting the big ISP's prioritize traffic will ultimately monetize this form of communication, and therefor the free exchange of ideas..making a smaller world a whole lot bigger again and I don't think as Humanity we can afford to take a step back when we have been doing nothing but moving forward since the internet was created. Thank you For your Time, Melissa Dangreau
—Melissa Dangreau, Lompoc, CA

My small web-hosting business depends on net neutrality so my small-business clients can provide an online experience to their customers that can compete with the large companies. I already pay for the bandwidth I use, why should I have to also pay Comcast (and AT&T, and Verizon, etc) for the privilege of my client's content being able to reach their customers at full speed?
—Patrick Collins, Ypsilanti, MI

Just as computers went from novelties to a necessary large part of daily life, so has the Internet. It is used as a utility as must be regarded as such; as a necessity, if monetized, it would be extremely vulnerable - pay what is demanded or do without.
—James Soares, Everson, WA

Net Neutrality guarantees human rights such as fredoom of speech and access to information!
—Giovanna Salazar, ,

Keep net neutrality! America want made for one entity to rule everything! We need fair and unbiased internet speed for everyone.
—Daniel, Greenville, NC

The Internet is more than simply a way for big companies to channel money from taxpayers to your re-election campaigns via lobbyists. It is a platform for creativity, expression, entrepreneurship and likely many things we have not yet discovered. Please don't let the few big players in our "competitive" market for last-mile Internet connectivity lock down the future of the Internet as a platform for ever-increasing profits.
—William Albert Bedard, Fort Washington, MD

The internet is already expensive and way too slow compared to other countries!
—Jim Bowne, Ashland, OR

Freedom of speech. Ability to share info fairly quickly and create change. The status quo doesn't like net neutrality because info about their deeds reach the masses faster; promoting public outcry.
—Joan Chandley, Ashby, MA

I do not believe should use undemocratic means like bureaucratic regulation to create a 'class system' of internet usage in the United States. Creating a class system online will limit the ability of Americans use of unlimited internet in their quest to attain upward mobility.
—Geoffrey B. Davis, Norfolk, VA

Aside from feeding the powerful, net non-neutrality would benefit only the corporations.
—Donald Rubin, Plympton, MA

Please keep the internet free and open and equally accessible to all!
—Brett Cripe, Elkhart, IN

Most Americans have only one choice for high speed broadband service (10mbs down or faster). We are already paying too much for it. There can be no doubt that without common carrier status we will have to pay a lot more or do without the Internet services we need.
—Phillip Cripps, Cathedral City, CA

I depend on Net Neutrality
—Ron Dossey, Hurricane, UT

As a student, I and my colleagues cannot afford to have costs passed on to us as end users, and we'll suffer as a result, our work will suffer, and innovation will be stifled. Please keep Net Neutrality!
—Meghan Dabkowski, Columbus, OH

I am already stuck with terrible choices for some necessary household services. I don't want to have to pay a lot more to experience the sort of internet connectivity I currently enjoy. The current mergers are making giant monopolies of some services, and if they can get their hands on it, the internet will be next. Don't let that happen! ISPs should be classified as "common carriers."
—Maradel Gale, Bainbridge Island, WA

I have little money. I depend on net neutrality to survive.
—B Leved, Baltimore, MD

Tom, your definition of what's commercially reasonable will allow ISPs to sell services with general speeds and prioritized internet options. This would create two lanes and destroy the very core concepts of net neutrality and an open internet as anyone who doesn't have the funds for the fast lane will be left in the dust, which is censorship via traffic prioritization. This is a fact that cannot be argued with. ISPs must be dealt with, especially in the wake of big mergers on the horizon like Comcast+Time Warner, where they are already talking about enforcing caps and charging for usage, akin to common carrier behavior, yet they don't want to be defined as such. It's time to hold them accountable and redefine isps as common carriers to protect the best interest of the people and entrepreneurs. Creating a fast lane will prevent internet start ups that could have a great impact and economic benefit on society from ever getting off the ground. Protect the people, protect the enconomy, and encourage new ideas that will help the US to continue to lead the way in the technology sector. Protect Net Neutrality by defining ISPS as Common Carriers. Do not give them a free pass to introduce their anti-consumerist measures that you will have no authority to defend against as stated by the courts, The only way you can protect us from the abuse of power is by redefining them as common carriers under Title II. It must be done. There are no alternatives that you have recommended up to this point that would safeguard us from the abuse of these very few powerful corporations who only seek to squeeze the people for more money, without offering improved service.
—Gustavo Vargas, Ontario, CA

Equal access to information is a basic American right. Considering the micro monopolies Comcast, ATT, etc have, allowing a Fast Track removes any incentive to maintain quality internet speeds at all. This does not protect consumers, but creates still another opportunity for telecom providers to bleed the American public dry.
—David Kianmahd, Los Angeles, CA

The internet should remain open to all users at the same speed.
—Bruce Macko, Brandon, MS

We need net neutrality. Do not let big corporations control the internet. It is a valuable business tool like a truck or a tool box.
—Carl Gann, Fox Island, WA

Without net neutrality innovation will be stifled. The cable companies already have a track record of opposing innovation - please don't let them add to it.
—Ben Middleton, Brooklyn, NY

DO. YOUR. DAMN. JOB. and defend American innovation and freedom rather than undermining it.
—Richard Rittenhouse, Colchester, IL

There is no need to further polarize the middle and lower classes from the wealthier class. The proposed changes will be drastic to those who can't afford the faster connections. In a world where information sharing is vital to the economy, the results could be disastrous.
—Erik Nielsen, Salt Lake City, UT

In a nation with something approaching democracy the importance of net neutrality would be obvious. In a nation of oligarchy or fascism such as the United States, the importance of net neutrality may be obvious only to the 99 percent of the people who have no importance in governing.
—Forrest Jewell, lock haven, PA

Me & my wife operate an on-line store and it would directly effect our familys income to the negative!
—Bruce Harris, Springfield, MO

The net should serve us all equally -- common carrier.
—Antonia Wood, Rainier, WA

reclassify ISPs as common carriers
—Helgaleena Healingline, Monona, WI

As a student looking at majoring in Computer Engineering, net neutrality is of utmost importance to my future and my life. Please don't harm my future, ensure true net neutrality.
—Alejandro Ruiz, Hollywood, FL

Everyone deserves the right to equal, fair, and nondiscriminatory internet. And no one has the right to the power to take that away.
—Andrew Field, ,

With Net Neutrality, I will have personal freedom as the internet in an important part of my life.
—Ronald Le, San Jose, CA

As a former shop steward, I would like to advise you that a surprising number of Americans have the feeling that all-is-not-going- well. In this affair we are, perhaps, mainly dealing with the younger ones. They become easily frustrated. Please do something simple, direct, and to the point that they can celebrate. Go for the common carrier classification. And please try and stay in touch with the people.
—Charles Broggi, ,

I live in a rural, low income area. Affordable internet is absolutely crucial to the education of our young people, because they must take many High School classes and college classes online. Obtaining an education is a way out of poverty for them. Please don't keep them in poverty by ending net neutrality.
—Donna Porterfield, Norton, VA

The FCC led by Wheeler has now openly declared itself to be the servant of nothing less than greedy corporations who's profit-margins are already at obscene levels. No good! Totally unacceptable.
—Henry Hagins, Queens Village, NY

The decision to NOT classify them as common carriers was and remains a HUGE mistake, a total giveaway to unelected corporations, unworthy of the American People or any agency of government. Reverse the mistake now and classify them properly- the way they always SHOULD HAVE been.
—Brian Waak, Aurora, IL

Every day the concept that we live in a free country is disappearing, and I'm afraid the internet will soon be no different than the rest of the overpriced trash we are fed by the people who claim to stand for freedom. The internet is a essential resource just as vital to many as clean air or water, it is not just a giant phone-book.
—John Reszetylo, Grand Rapids, MN

AS the United States, the UK and the EU take away our rights under International Humanitarian Law we humans need a neutral internet, the new way humans interact across million of miles more than ever in an atomically war-like world. We huamns need one another that is why we have existed and grown for over three million years. Muzzling our speech could make us extinct.
—Miss SM Majo De Kuyper, Amsterdam,

Discrimination comes in many forms.
—Evelyn Palder, Rockport, TX

Please don't kill Net Neutrality. The creative expression and last bastion of true entrepreneurship and independent start-up businesses that is the internet should be protected, not reduced to a pipeline for providers to decide what is important to know. This will limit the freedom of speech, the freedom of expression, the ability to be heard. This will censor, by default, anyone without enough income to purchase a bigger platform. Please don't allow this to happen!
—Ms. Lindsay B., Mesa, AZ

without net neutrality, competition for streaming videos (such as netflix, amazon) would be stifled while monopolies like the cable company (I say company instead of companies because we have no choice who our cable company or local phone company are) will only get bigger and our choices smaller. Without Net beutrality, small upstarts will have a hard time competing with the big boys (who can afford to pay the ransom ISP demand) ISP need to be clasified as common carriers. The phone companies cannot charge us extra rates to to receive calls withut the worry of dropped calls , libraries do not charge extra rates to check out books from one section verses another and the ISP's should not be able to charge more for access to certain sites (which may or may not compete with their own services).
—Harold Welsh, San Bernardino, CA

It's bad enough that my internet connection moves at a snail's pace. I don't want any fast or slow lanes. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Paul Baker, Eagle Point, OR

This proposal is anti-democratic and favors the wealthy. We need TRUE net neutrality.
—Robert Odess, Buskirk, NY

The last bastion of truly free speech in the world and you are going to sell it to the people who routinely say Science is wrong....
—Jybian Lawinde, Syracuse, NY

As an entrepreneur and self-employed software and web developer, allowing large corporations to throw their money into strong-arming small businesses off the Internet would destroy my livelihood, and the livelihoods of countless others like me. It would be the destruction of the American dream for modern small business owners and freelancers.
—Timothy Scott Barnes, Ruther Glen, VA

Here again the Wealthy get what they want. The Government let them do what they want and the middle and the poor have to live with it. What happen to the Government standing up for the American People. We so call voted for those in Government and this again show the Wealthy People run Government . We need open internet.
—Jeff Waters, Ocala, FL

Stop trying to control things you know nothing about. This will just end badly for you.
—Jasmine Hebel, Kentland, IN

The free exchange of news and ideas is crucial in a democracy. This requires a level playing field and equal access for all.
—Elise Power, Pittsburgh, PA

Without proper protection of network neutrality, the internet will be on the same course as so many other things in our society...those that can afford to pay will have much better services while those that can't or are just starting out will have a gigantic barrier to entry erected which will essentially lock them out of competing. Do you think Google or Facebook would even exist without network neutrality? Extremely doubtful considering Microsoft and MySpace would have bought into the "fast lane" of the internet and blocked everyone else to entry because their services would have been so much better and VC would not have invested in something so risky. Consider all of the tiny internet startups that are now multi-million or billion dollar companies - consider them all still born without network neutrality. The current proposal being discussed will be the death knell to so many ideas that it's hard to fathom how anyone claiming to be a protector of customer rights would propose such ideas. It's obvious that broadband has always been, currently is and will always be a common carrier and they need to be treated and regulated as such. In fact, the US is so far behind the rest of the world with broadband speeds and their associated costs that the government should already be stepping in to regulate prices to much lower levels. These carriers have been taking advantage of the lack of competition to charge exorbitant prices like the monopolist they are, but until there is at least 10 different options for broadband services in all large metro areas the prices should be set similar to they are elsewhere in the world. 1-2 options is not competition. Everyone uses the same networking equipment, so capital investment should be similar and thus costs for providing the services. Look to Europe for ways to make this happen by forcing the monopolies which own all the cables to provide local loop unbundling in the broadband space at cost+a bit of profit so other companies can provide competition without having to lay their own cable. Remove barriers of entry, don't make new ones! For all our sakes, come up with some original ideas and stop trying to kill future internet investments. For example, an excerpt from: http://oti.newamerica.net/publ ications/policy/the_cost_of_co nnectivity_2013 This is a sad state of affairs, but it's to be expected when regulators protect and allow monopolies to expand through further acquisitions and change regulations to favor them against would-be disruptors. Over the past year, more advances were made internationally than domestically both for mobile and wireline offerings. Although international service providers now generally offer higher speeds at much lower prices, prices and speeds have stayed about the same in the United States. It is worth noting that in places such as Hong Kong, where higher speeds (100- 1000 Mbps) were previously available, prices and speed offerings have remained relatively similar. However, cities where such high speeds were previously unavailable now offer cheaper plans and significantly higher speeds (100-300 Mbps). For example, in 2012, consumers in Paris could pay around $40/month for a maximum download speed of 100 Mbps. This year, speeds of 100, 200 and 300 Mbps are available in Paris for around $30/month. Prices and offerings have remained static in a few international cities, but in those cases, we found that there are fewer data caps in 2013 than there were in 2012. The United States saw modest changes in broadband offerings from last year to this year. Some Comcast plans are slightly cheaper, and Comcast also increased speeds on broadband services in some domestic markets.[3] But for cities included in our study, broadband speeds listed as available online did not change significantly. In July 2013 Verizon announced a new 500 Mbps service (with 100 Mbps upload speeds) available in selected areas of its FiOS service. [4] However, this new 500 Mbps service costs around $300 a month. In Amsterdam, a symmetrical 500 Mbps broadband plan (with 500 Mbps download and upload speeds) costs just over $86.
—Craig Schultz, Littleton, CO

Maintaining net neutrality is an important means to keep control of our lives OUT of corporate hands.
—Thomas Knecht, SLC, UT

I'm sick of you, the government, trying to destroy and free liberties that we have left. Killing the net neutrality ruling does not give gains to the small mom and pop shop trying to make a living on the internet. Instead it puts them in the bottom of the pile where they will never be noticed because of the slow and fast lanes that will transpire if this ruling goes into affect. I don't want to pay for an internet service that charges everyone else to pay for content that I see. NO, its stupid, unfair, and unjust. Just another way big companies can charge another buck to make billions more on top of what they already make. ISPs are common carries and thats how they need to be classified as. Listen to the American people and what they have to say. Stop being belligerent fools on this matter. Sheesh!
—Ash S., Frisco, TX

I plan on owning an online start up one day, with your proposed plan I could be further behind then I already am. Classify ISPs as common carriers so that small business owners stand an equal chance of breaking through in the online marketplace.
—Griffin Kean, Rockville, MD

ISPs should be classified as common carriers t avoid more inequality and discrimination based on ability to ay. Why are you changing something that has worked so well for so long. What's in it for you Mr. Wheeler? What do you get out of this - cash, or a nice cushy job with Comcasr, Verizon or AT&T?
—Mike Walter, San Diego, CA

The internet is for everyone. That needs to happen now.
—Alexander Baggett, Euless, TX

Don't let the powerful telecom monopolise the internet anymore than they already have. Shame on you.
—Aeron Miles, ,

This proposal which seeks to end net neutrality would be disastrous for the rise of new businesses and would only aid those already successful who could afford these extra, unnecessary fees. These proposed rules are entirely unnecessary. There is nothing that needs to be 'fixed'.
—Nicholas Mason, Vicksburg, MS

all consumers and business should have equal access to the internet. This will allow small busineses to compete on equal terms with bigger existing companies. I don't want to pay extra for internet to enable it to work s it alreadh does.
—Robert Hatt, Forest Grove, OR

The internet has reached a point where it is a necessity in modern life, like water and electricity. It should be treated as such. Support REAL Net Neutrality!
—Andrew Saier, Redwood City, CA

The great thing about the net is that everyone has an equal voice. Please support real net neutrality to keep ISPs from destroying their competitors by holding their speed for random.
—Wesley Davis, Conyers, GA

I already pay for Internet. I pay for Internet because I want to watch Netflix and HULU and YouTube and whatever else. Please reclasify ISPs as common carriers!!! Facebook, Google, video providers and other internet startups should not pay to provide me with fast access.
—Delyan Raychev, Mountain View, CA

This proposal would kill the open Internet.
—Cameron Jones, Saratoga Springs, UT

Equal internet access is essential to our democracy.
—Michelle Hensley, Minneapolis, MN

The Internet is a public resource that should be freely available to all citizens, regardless of their income level. It is not fair to turn it into a "pay for play" private enterprise. The Internet should be reclassified as a public utility, and ISPs as common carriers in the best interest of the American people.
—Paul Tabili, Racine, WI

What will happen is that those who can't afford higher fees will be stuck with very slow Internet access.
—Michael Maynard, Stow, MA

My father was a computer engineer for NASA since the 70s and worked for the Army beforehand in the beginning days of the art. I myself have went, along with my older brother, have went into the field of working with computers due to the love of them my father gave to us of them. The Internet that me and millions of Americans has given us the opportunity beyond my fathers dreams when he started. I urge you to reclassify ISPs as common carriers because if you go down this path...I fear quit a bit the ramifications.
—Jason Caudle, Merritt Island, FL

As an aspiring independent video game designer, I have the same right to enterprise as anyone else, and that includes using the Internet as a tool for marketing and reaching out to potential players of my games. If I am forced to accept slower service than larger competitors, I will have no effective way to pursue my own entrepreneurial goals.
—Matthew Cleveland, Fort Bragg, NC

The Internet is a powerful tool that should be available to EVERYONE. We should not have a technology gap for those people who want to be life long learners. Please reclassify all ISPs as common carriers.
—Jose G. Flores, Oak Park, IL

The small company that I work for depends on neutral networks. As well as the my own business that I plan to start in the future. Please don't sail/sell us down the river just for some near-term gains.
—John Posten, Fort Collins, CO

Freedom of Information should always remain free.
—Lisabeth Harper, Monroe, MI

A wise man once said: Why fix what is not broken. No one has complained about the current internet status and for a good reason. Please don't change anything, this decision will affect everyone in a bad way.
—Sebastian Weiner, ,

Do not sell us!
—Max tzinman, NY, NY

I love my internet, please Don,t destroy this diverse universal open source open for all to see and learn from.
—Strawbs Duncan Campbell, ,

Net neutrality is important to me and my business, as I run a software consulting shop that works with startup businesses and entrepreneurs. For entrepreneurs, the last decade has seen a huge drop in the cost of starting a new business; these business owners will not be able to compete with established companies who pay for better/faster/any access to millions of potential customers.
—Mike Dalessio, Madison, NJ

Just who does Tom Wheeler work for? The American people? Or the big internet providers? I always thought it was for we, the American people, who use and rely on the internet's availability! Apparently I was misinformed. Or was I just duped?
—John Andes, Mount Juliet, TN

I have worked in IT since 1978, specialising in data / voice communications since 1985 - eventually, prior to retirement, being responsible for all global data / voice networking for a major multinational (~ 120 countries, ~ 600 sites) with responsiblility for multi-million $ annual conracts with AT&T, Verizon, etc. And my personally owned company was responsible for much pioneering activity on the Internet. Space does not allow to elucidate all the reasons but its clear to me that these proposals are completely flawed in the long term for both corporates and individuals - ISPs MUST BE CLASSIFIED AS COMMON CARRIERS!
—Tony Jilings, ,

First of all.. "If it ain't broke, don't fix it. Second, my job requires high speed internet.
—Judy, Yucca Valley, CA

You are trying to take and sell what is not yours. The Internet is the absolute last place on earth where equality actually exists and it is obvious how much this has benefited the human race. If you create a multi-tiered system the rich will get the best and the fastest and those with less will have a near-useless system. We all know it's a completely unacceptable and unearned gift to the rich and so do you. The fact that you are pushing ahead with this shows that you and your rich friends feel superior to most of the world which is an attitude that should cause you to lose your position. Justify yourself.
—Matthew Widdowson, ,

Protect Free Speech. Classify ISPs as carriers, not content providers. They do not produce content. They have never produced content. They only provide access to the information that needs to be free.
—Steve O'Brien, Silver Spring, MD

Net neutrality is the only democratic choice.
—Ainslie Gilligan, Brattleboro, VT

I am disabled and the internet is my window on the world. Net neutrality is what makes it possible to explore it, as I like, how I like. It's the biggest library on Earth and if it closes even some of those windows, I and my family will be devastated. Keep the internet free and open: declare it to be a common carrier NOW!
—Allie D. Pappano, Mattawamkeag, ME

I want to make sure the internet stays free, so it is unbiased and uncensored.
—Tracy Feldman, Durham, NC

Over the years people have been slowly eased into a corporate internet. First there were ad's that were tailored to the user based off of what their browsing history is. Then there were ads at the beginning of videos which were passed as a means for the site or youtube channel "star" to create revenue without passing costs onto the consumer. And the final nudge into normality for data throttling came though the use enhanced transfer speeds of data coming from ads or big business networks like Vevo and NBC. The use of money being able to determine whos content is seen at what speed is a complete violation of the 1st amendment and is media censorship in its most shady, underhanded, roundabout form. Anyone who can stand up for the proposed plan from the FCC chairman Tom Wheeler should be ashamed to call themselves an American.
—Robert Bruce Cameron, Damon, TX

I will object strongly to anything but fair and equal treatment for all Internet users. No fast lane, no slow lane. Same bandwidth access for all users, regardless of their ability to pay.
—F Corr, Montague, MA

Ending Net Neutrality would be disastrous for the consumer, and for the small business owner alike. Small businesses will surely be relegated to the slow lane which will in turn cut into their earnings. Consumers will feel the pain of the fast lane when companies start passing those added expenses onto the pricetag of the product they provide. This bad behavior by corporations should be severely punished, not encouraged. Use your head, and do your job. If you are incapable of wrapping your head around the big picture, then step down and let somebody who can make the proper decision. That is, reclassify ISPs as common carriers AS THEY SHOULD BE.
—John R Evans, Hilo, HI

Don't shut out individuals, start ups, non profits!!!!
—Elena Campbell, Los Angeles, CA

reclassify ISPs as common carriers
—Seth Lubin, Jersey City, NJ

It helps me research about my passion. The climate.
—Dave King, Portland, OR

The Net should definitely be open to all who wish to use it, regardless of income or other exclusionary factors!
—Garrett Murphy, Oakland, CA

I want to be able to communicate with other across the world at a reasonable pace. I don't want to have to pay $50 a month for slower then 30mps. If isps have this kind of authority what kind reproggresiion would be made?
—Colin hewett, Iowa City, IA

We need more competition not less —Sharon Sue Brayman, Shelby Township, MI

I can barely afford the normal fees I pay now, and I need the net as is for research for my writing. Please show us all that you are NOT in the pocket of the big (pig) money telecom companies and preserve net neutrality!
—Fred Waiss, Prairie du Chien, WI

These companies would have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. This is nothing more than class warfare, allowing communication giants to redline
—Charles R Welty, Carlsbad, CA

this arrangement would only benefit those with the power to abuse it. Creating a privilege based internet would stifle creativity and self expression. This opens the door for corporations to control the flow of information.
—Connie Ambridge, Philadelphia, PA

I don't have a lot of time and I'm too poor to pay for a faster lane.
—Doris Kelsey, fort scott, KS

True Net Neutrality is as important as protection for Public Utilities and Airwaves. Any attempt to give preferential traffic rights to wealthy interests is naked corporate welfare. Imagine a road where corporate vehicles get to drive double the speed limit while the rest of us cram into the slow lane at 10 under. It sounds ludicrous. Why is the digital equivalent any less foolish?
—B Kal-El Kal-El Bogdanove, Los Angeles, CA

Net neutrality is the only way to preserve some semblance of a democracy....we already live in a country where you usually have to "pay to play", and information should be free and accessible to everyone!!!
—Ann Hendrie, Chamisal, NM

I want rules to protect consumers and small startups. Innovation can't compete with giant firms who are able to pay for the fast lane direct to customers. A two-tiered speed system is just wrong and changes the fundamental aspects of the internet. It's a level playing field online, don't let cash rich corporations control it.
—Travis Scales, Jersey City, NJ

Allowing fast/slow lanes for Internet service would be one more nail in the coffin for the middle class. Please stand up to big business for a change and protect Net Neutrality.
—Irene Gurley, Gardnerville, NV

I edit a monthly newsletter for the Portland branch of Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. It is very important that women's voices are given equal access at this critical time when humanity is facing problems that can only be resolved by cooperation and communication among all the world's peoples.
—Celeste M Howard, Hillsboro, OR

It is vitally important that Chairman Wheeler reclassify internet service providers as common carriers. The Internet has become as important to the dissemination of news and information as broadcast television and radio. It is paramount the Internet remain a free and open platform, and a truly 'neutral' entity.
—Benjamin Waggoner, St Louis, MO

I want an open internet for everyone because I believe that the American people have already paid for the internet through our taxes. I also believe that every website should have equal opportunity to be seen by anyone. The vast majority of Americans want a neutral internet! Do what is best for the American people, not big businesses.
—Samantha Overstreet, Tulsa, OK

taking away net neutrality would crush small people trying to start up and contribute to businesses on line, which is growing as You know. if everything is shut down then who will support the big businesses. also freedom of speech ? would be shut off on the internet.
—Beowulf Gilbert, Central Village, CT

Dear Federal Communications Commission, I believe that allowing ISPs to decide what information is prioritized for fast delivery is a major threat to both the free enterprise system and to free speech. It would allow ISPs to effectively pick winners in the economy and to have a disproportionate control over what voices are heard in our democracy. It would mean that only large, already wealthy interests would be able to compete, and this is the antithesis of the American way. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Thank you for listening to voices like mine. Sincerely, Lucas Bender Taos, NM
—Lucas Bender, Somerville, MA

It promotes competition in the marketplace.
—Abraham Close, Boiling Springs, SC

Net nuetrality is key to protecting small business and trying to fight ignorance and special interests through allowing the general populace to decide which web content they will consume instead of large businesses.
—Nicolas Anzalone, East Ryegate, VT

Net Neutrality is the only possible way for people to freely communicate. Big business is not a person. I am. Don't let my freedom, and millions of others be handed to ANY corporation.
—Annelie Klein, Athens, GA

An even playing field is absolutely vital for the creation and growth of the next generation of tech industries. If that even playing field does not exist in the USA, then it will grow elsewhere. To be more technical, as the tech industry grows so will the bandwidth requirements for the new tech. Under the rules proposed, the ISPs will keep the already existing slow lanes at the same speed which means that anyone wanting to provide future tech services will be at a disadvantage if they don't pay the toll. Do not sell out America's future for the 30 pieces of silver that the big media conglomerates are offering.
—Charles Capko, Charlotte, NC

Net Neutrality is true democracy. If you kill it, you will also kill profits for big corporations, I GUARANTEE IT!
—Robert Hernandez, Brooklyn, NY

We are supposed to be a democracy not an oligarchy.
—Rolf Radicke, Bristol, PA

I have no television, haven't for years. I have no landline phone, haven't for years. I get news from lots of sources online. I talk to my son in the Air Force and the rest of my family over the internet. Everyday the internet is my link to the world. Times change. But the rules should change with the times. The internet is a public utility and ISPs should be common carriers.
—Nan Clancy, Saint Marys, OH

The internet is the only truly meaningful voice for Americans who can't afford to buy big media. PLEASE KEEP IT AS IT IS.
—Jeffrey Ellenberger, New York, NY

In my subdivision, Comcast is the only broadband internet provider. There are no other options. In dealing with their customer service in the past, they made it very clear they are aware of their monopoly power and have no incentive to provide quality service or reasonable pricing (compared to areas with competition). Reclassifying them as a common carrier is the only way to give Comcast incentive to provide reliable service and offer price competitiveness. Reclassifying ISPs as common carriers will bring the free market back to internet service in the US. Please help!
—Kendall Thrapp, Champaign, IL

Net Neutrality offers a form of democracy that could never exist in any country. The ability to speak to anyone in the world with equal weight, regardless of money, race, sexuality, gender, or creed is not something that should be tampered with. Trusting anyone to decide the flow of traffic is the same as letting them decide the speed for who is speaking. The idea is beyond sickening, and I don't want to see that happen. We've had net neutrality before. We know it works, and we know it's vital. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Mr. Caleb Niederer, Seattle, WA

If the ISP's are allowed to slow down or speed up traffic from certain sites, they could make some sites unusable for any reason they wish. This is far too close to censorship, and dangerously close to violating freedoms.
—Chris Schoonmaker, Attleboro, MA

The internet should be treated as a public utility. It is important to all of us who use it daily and it effects most of the aspects of our lives.
—Patricia E Troxell, Olalla, WA

The Internet is not a commodity to be sold. It is a service that should be open to all.
—John ODriscoll, Randolph, MA

Do not give more advantages to corporations. We need net neutrality.
—Eileen Grant, Tempe, AZ

Because regulating what media I have access to violates my right to freedom of speech.
—Sonia Diaz, Cape Coral, FL

We want free Internet not monoply of carriers.
—Christopher Dziurzynski, Chicago, IL

Internet service providers are actually in the same class as common carriers and public utilities, and should be treated and regulated as such. The internet has indeed become our most important form on communication. To treat it otherwise would be a very wrong.
—Richard Ruth, Durango, CO

No companies or people should have the power to discriminate online.
—Lynette Spillman, South Bend, IN

Big money gets votes, bog money gets fast service, people get dreck.
—Lewis Murdock, Winston, OR

The only way to keep innovation alive on the internet is to protect Net Neutrality and the ONLY way to do that is to reclassify ISPs as Common Carriers. The Internet has opened new doors for people to use their First Amendment Rights to try to make our country, and the world a better place. Allowing a two tiered Internet would allow companies to trample our rights to free speech and free expression. I implore you to not allow this to happen. Thank You.
—Rev Thomas W Leary, Chicopee, MA

Increasing my productivity when investigating - idle response times would throw me back not tolerable.
—Fritz Kanzok, Bedburg-Hau,

I have neurological disorders and severe anxiety disorders which impair my ability to interact socially in person. The internet is my primary method of social contact with other people. Equal access to all content on the internet is vital for me, because discriminating in favor of certain sites would have a negative effect on my ability to interact with other people.
—Joshua Williams, Birmingham, AL

I believe this sets a very dangerous precedent for suppressing freedom of speech and the ability of less-wealthy people and organisations (i.e. almost everyone) to use the Internet, and that if these rules pass in America it will open the door for governments in other countries to introduce similarly small-minded measures.
—Megan Tait, ,

I am physically disabled and on a fixed (read: small) income. I depend on the net for everything from healthcare management, to rapid and secure banking. It is my only source for entertainment, education and family connection. The net is the mobility I have lost and an integral, vital part of my life at the pace I want to live it. There is absolutely NO reason besides GREED for the proposal you have offered! Cheryl Smith
—Cheryl Smith, Sutherlin, OR

Please stop trying to change what isn't broken. The Internet was fine how it was. Net Neutrality is the path to a better brighter future for the world! Do not let Internet service providers discriminate on which sites get a better connection speed, everything should be equal! Our country was founded on principles of equality and this should apply to equality from one website to another. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Kevin Zeigler, Pacoima, CA

As a relatively low-income, disabled person, I can say that the 'Net is my world. My loved ones live far away, and I depend upon email or social media for communication. I also use it for medical and emotional support. Not only that, but I have used the 'Net in the past for my livelihood and even later on for volunteer work. If I had to pay extra fees, this microcosmic universe would be shattered, for me. Thanks.
—Linette Schreiber, Ardmore, PA

How much of a payoff are you getting to rape the public? Don't allow this. Do the right thing. Art OShea
—Arthur William O'Shea, Seattle, WA

The proposal is pure robber baron economics.
—Russell K Hallberg Jr, Oregon City, OR

Stop messing around with the internet, pay attention to what really matters and leave the internet alone.
—Sofia Caballero, Hamersville, OH

I want to watch what i want anywhere on the Internet with out having gates or other service providers for a fee.
—Steve McGee, Denver, CO

This fast lane/slow lane business is absurd. First of all, it's a damn lie, faster lanes will not be created. Existing bandwidth will just be reprioritized and those with lower priorities will be made slower, which is just shameful. The thing that really troubles me, is that everything is already paid for (or at least in theory.) If I were to send a parcel via good old US Postal service, I have to pay as sender. Not only that, I have to pay more or less depending on the size and weight of my parcel. the recipient doesn't pay anything in this model. When the Postal service starts to get in financial troubles, they raise the postage rates. I may not like higher rates, but it's fair. And if the Postal Service has competitors in Fedex and UPS, well, that competition keeps prices honest. Sure, competition might bring the downfall of one of those services (and it would be sad if the USPS went away) but that is how it works. So why is it that when it comes to the internet, EVERYBODY pays? and it still is not enough? why? If Netflix wants to send a very large "parcel" they have to pay to send that. Oddly, In order to receive "parcels" from Netflix, I too need to pay on the receiving end. Not only that... but because I know I like to consume big "parcels" I pay for fat pipe access to the internet. I am a computer programmer and I work from home, my entire livelihood depends on internet access. In addition, I get my entertainment over the internet. I have dropped TV subscriptions, in favor of internet based providers like Netflix and Hulu and Amazon. I have paid my fair share. If that is not enough to keep the system afloat, then let them raise the rates until they are solvent, throw in a little competition and we'll find the balancing point all right. But this bogus business of charging depending on the content is just not right. I should not pay higher postal rates for sending a wedding invitation over the postal service than I do for sending a business invoice. I pay for the size and the weight of the parcel, NOT THE CONTENT. The Internet service providers are there to move packets of data around, and they deserve to be paid for doing so. But they have no business in wasting time sniffing around for types of content and then charging different rates for different levels of service based on content. The ISPs like to blame Netflix for being a network hog. Sure, Netflix uses a lot of resources and is widely popular. I'm sure a large percentage of total bandwidth is consumed by it. But guess what? that bandwidth has been paid for. I make monthly payments for a service the promises me some amount of bandwidth. I do not exceed this bandwidth. So what is the problem? the problem is that the ISP really expect me to use far less than what I have paid for. They know that on average, the population will use x amount of bandwidth and they come up with a plan that covers those costs and advertise it not as x amount, but several times more than x. Knowing that people will still only use what they use. But Netflix changes that. People actually start using more bandwidth. Is this Netflix fault? NO. I paid for my bandwidth already. If they are having trouble with meeting their costs, then let them be upfront and come with REAL rates where the price is really tied to the bandwidth used and not some marketing fairy tale. What the ISPs want to do is keep their distorted package bundles so that consumer keep thinking they are getting a good deal, charge more from big providers like Netflix by holding bandwidth hostage. Eventually the likes of Netflix will pass those new costs back to the consumers and it will all seem like it was Netflix doing. And in the process, creating an uneven internet, with uneven quality of service and unnecessary overhead of content sniffing for the sake of "speed boosts" Keep Net Neutrality. Let the ISPs charge for each packet they deliver, not for some bogus level of "quality" that really involves crippling of regular services. Keep things honest and simple.
—Jose Vazquez, Vienna, VA

This proposal will raise consumer and non-ISP publisher costs and stifle innovation. It's a clear example that a handful of giant ISPs are puppeting the FCC and making a mockery of its charter to protect the public interest.
—Trevor Robinson, Austin, TX

The internet is a medium of communication that was developed with public funds. It has become the standard means of communication in our society. For democracy to function properly, all Americans must have equal access.
—Lonnie Fairchild, Plattsburgh, NY

The rich people in the USA have too many perks already —Walter Birdwell, Port Isabel, TX

We the customers of the internet are the ones who pay for Internet access. We pay for equal access to all legal online content and expect it to be delivered to us without regard to content type and source.
—Jason Byrer, Lubbock, TX

Internet connections should be regulated as common carriers. It makes sense - for example, I only have an internet connection at my house. On-demand video (such as Netflix and Amazon Prime) and telephone, not to mention data transfer are all used over a single internet connection. How can that be anything other than a "common carrier". The entire telecom industry is in the midst of transition to a completely IP based system, so it only makes sense for all ISP and Internet carriers to be classes as "common" carriers, which will keep the internet open and access protected for all. This will ensure future innovation and business growth. Allowing a "fastlane" will setup a toll-booth like limited access which will turn shoehorn the internet into just another content delievery service, ala Cable- an aging behemoth grasping at the straws of it's monopoly powers to keep competition out.
—Arvonn Tully, vancouver, WA

There is only one option. Control the greedy gatekeepers and reclassify them as common carriers.
—Glenn Swanson, Marysville, WA

Hopefully, you will have already received many of thousands of comments from small business owners, YouTube providers and internet users at large telling you how destructive this proposal would be for technological innovation and competitive free-market business. As important as those things are to the world as a whole, I fear that the seriously detrimental effects on the academic and research communities are being overlooked in the controversy. Nearly every modern biologist, physicist, astronomer and economist depends heavily on the ability to share and access tremendously large amounts of data quickly. The ability to access and share data sets of truly astronomical size, almost instantly, has directly contributed to many major advancements in numerous subjects. The vast and highly accessible resource of data has literally created whole new fields of research in biology, economics and mathematics. However, most of these data are stored on servers paid for by institution who are already working on shoestring budgets that could not suffer the extra cost of needing to make deals with telecoms for fast-lane services. The subsequent loss of bandwidth for these data streams would make a surprisingly large number of research projects untenable. Another major threat chairman Wheeler's plan poses is to the newly founded notion of the "Citizen Scientist". A free and open internet has also made it possible to for hundreds of thousands of people to share ideas, data and most amazingly, actual computing power, which has democratized scientific research in ways that where undreamed of 15 years ago. One no longer needs special access to huge supercomputers to create extremely accurate statistical and physical models, as anyone can use free open source projects to build virtual supercomputers on the web. However, these networks rely on tens of thousands of regular people, with regular computers, to have fast and reliable internet services to be feasible for serious research. For as much impact as the notion of crowd sourced science has had in the past few years, it is a movement in its infancy and as such stands to be blotted out should this plan be moved forward. What I find to be most frightening about this plan is the impact it would have on the burgeoning educational resource now available. For the first time in human history, baccalaureate, master and doctoral level education is freely available to anyone with an internet connection. On sites like Corsera and OpenCourseware students of all ages and backgrounds can virtually attend classes at the best collegiate institutions in the world. They can view lectures, interact with classmates, get books, take tests and in some cases even earn certificates from the associated school at little or no cost. In my eyes this is the single greatest achievement of our age, and it could be completely undone by allowing telecom companies to act as gatekeepers to what has become the entire wealth of human knowledge. As many have already said, moving forward with this proposal will have real and seriously negative impact on the vibrancy of innovation within the world of technology and business, but the adverse impact it could have on research and education absolutely mind boggling. Do not let the greed of a handful of corporations stop what promises to be the next golden age of mankind. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Kevin J Harris, San Diego, CA

I'm disabled. Only connection to out of state family is email. Already pay for cheap service which is terrible!
—Donna Brooks, Charlotte, NC

Net neutrality is of extreme importance for doing research on important matters of the day. It is important for businesses that can not absorb the cost , it is IMPORTANT for DEMOCRACY !!!!!!!!
—Douglas Waldroop, Landover, MD

WE NEED OPEN INTERNET TO CONTINUE SHARING OUR LIVES. STOP CONTROLLING OUR LIVE AND GET INNOVATIVE. I DEPEND ON NET NEUTRALITY AND DEMAND FCC PROTECT OPENNINTERNET AND RECLASSIFY THE ISPs AS COMMON CARRIERS.
—Ezzeldin Rafat, ,

Net neutrality is extremely important to me and many others I know with small businesses etc. Please ensure that FCC rules clearly and strongly maintain Net Neutrality.
—Anthony Phillipson, San Rafael, CA

Since the FCC is too captured by industry to force competition on the monopolistic ISPs, the only answer left is to regulate the ISPs to do their jobs properly by reclassifying them all as Common Carriers under Title II of the Telecommunications Act of 1996. This is necessary because without this change AT&T, Comcast, Verizon, etc will use their monopoly position to extort edge providers for fast connections to their customers and they will extort their own ISPs as is happening right now with Comcast vs. Level 3. These are connections that should already be fast and responsive because the customers already paid their local ISP to do just that but are instead getting slowed down due to intentional congestion on the ISP's networks so they can start up their new extortion racket. It is unacceptable that ISPs will take unto themselves the right to crush companies and silence individuals who do not pay their extortion rates. This is about the future. Great things can happen on the internet if these companies are brought to heel under Common Carriage, but until then we can only look forward to an internet that gets slower, more expensive and with fewer companies/individuals willing to put out the content that makes an internet connection worth having. So label the ISPs common carriers and get it over with. This is too important to a free and open society to be left to a small group of people who only have profit and control on their minds. Thank you.
—Edward McClaugherty, Germantown, MD

One of the ways I keep in touch with my family and friends is through the internet. If this plan is implemented my time will be severely impacted. Please stop this horrible change.
—Ruth E. Stemper, Boise, ID

Net neutrality on the internet is freedom. Would you take away our freedom? Of course you would. The Internet is a free place where people can speak out their beliefs and values, why would you change that?
—Danny Stephan, ,

It is extremely anticompetitive to allow large, established companies pay extra fees for better service. In order for small, new companies to have a fair chance of success, the standard of data transmission quality and speed must be the same for all participants. Remember that small, new companies tend to be the real innovators in the tech marketplace. The giants would have you believe that their inability to collect ruinous fees for higher throughput threatens the future of research into the technologies which underlie the internet. This is patently false. Small companies invented almost every important internet standard. Protect them.
—Caleb Cullen, Houston, TX

Why screw up the only place where Democracy truly exists in America?
—Beth Heller, Boylston, MA

Without Net Neutrality, Americans who don't own large corporations will have the equivalent of 1995 dial-up internet. And worst of all, we will have allowed a bought-off FCC chairman to put another nail in the coffin-lid of democracy. Please sell off Tom Wheeler, not our Internet, to whoever wants to bid on him. I'm sure he'd make a fine board member in one of the international communication corporations that wants to rule America.
—James M. Reaume Jr., Munising, MI

I need NET Neutrality to do my work efficiently and effectively. Do not corrupt a public system that so many people depend upon. The FCC should protect the PUBLIC INTEREST, not corporate interests.
—Jane Cramer, Eugene, OR

We are all equal!
—David Hilkes, Christiansted, VI

Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers. We ordinary citizens and small business owners are counting on you to protect the real Net Neutrality that we need.
—Neil Swanson, Warrenton, VA

The internet has been one of the few free and truly democratic communications forums in our great nation. I would hate to see that taken away by a handful of ISPs who are truly common carriers. You have the opportunity to stand up for freedom and equality for all instead of giving in to the corporate interests of a select few. The FCC does not need to be bought and paid for like other branches of our government. I implore you to uphold the spirit of a government by the people and for the people.
—Joshua Coccoluto, Delano, MN

We need to be treated fairly, if we are not treated fairly, then we will take our business elsewhere, and or another country. Our opinions need to be heard, all people need to be treated fairly, as well as equal.
—Roland Manosh, Montgomery Center, VT

Keep the internet discrimination free. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Allen Tiller, Fort Myers, FL

The internet is more important then the phone now for communication. To allow a company to control that, it's disturbing on an apocalyptic level.
—Rebecca Culp, Naperville, IL

Net Neutrality is what protects our ongoing innovation and helps anybody protect their way of freedom of speech. I don't need oligopolies on who gets to control what we see on the internet. I don't want corporations to control how I communicate to others, to how I complete my online homework activities, or to how I enjoy my time with others.
—Josh Velazquez, Littleton, CO

There is no reason why ISPs should not be classified as common carriers, or that the internet should not be classified an information service. I increasingly suspect a 'tracert' of economics and social conditions local to the FCC might yield interesting results, as I suspect a 'tracert' of my internet packets in a year or so under these new rules to show my packets bouncing across the states more times than a ping-pong ball in professional table tennis.
—Brian Hildebrandt, Mercer Island, WA

Access to information is an equal right!
—Kathy Hart, Succasunna, NJ

Keeps the internet and fair place for all; the very principles it is based on. Don't bow down to corporate greed. Net neutrality is crucial.
—Adam dempster, Bowral,

Because we shouldn't be paying greedy corrupt people more for something we all have to survive on.
—Shawn Meeker, altoona, PA

Please protect Net Neutrality.
—Dallas DeKeyrel, Novato, CA

Free speech needs an open internet!
—Rachel Micija, Conway, PA

I am a creative freelancer who relies on a web presence to attract clients and content consumers. The FCC's current stance of wholly corporatizing net neutrality will affect my own individual enterprise and I find that unacceptable. For example, If my web domain host cannot afford to run my website as fast as it currently does because the FCC permits privatization of the information "roads" and infrastructure, then it can adversely affect my own business prospects. Keep in mind that I'm just one guy who is trying to pursue a dream, here. I assure you there are many, many more like me out there. Please, FCC, protect our dreams and don't thoughtlessly crush them underfoot.
—Paul Hanna, Somerville, MA

I'm tired of corporations creating these various inequality gaps while the government idly stands by. The Internet does not belong to Verizon, Comcast, AT&T, Time Warner, etc. They do NOT deserve to control and shape the traffic to their heart's content.
—John Jensen, Sparks, MD

As a programmer, I have seen what the power of an equal internet can do. Resources for anything and everything you can think of, and there is more innovation happening every day, thanks to start ups and the investors that support them. But if this plan goes into action, fewer investors will support start ups- especially ideas that would require faster internet speeds. If you move forward with this plan, you will seriously hurt the computer science industry, which affects pretty much every other industry in our economy. Not only will it suppress the progressive innovation that the internet has given us, but it will affect our economy and employment rates as well. If this bill passes, all it will do is allow large corporations that already have too much power to make more money. Don't let this happen.
—Britney Lyons, Chicago, IL

Keep the Internet
—Donald Doug Taylor, /Fairfield, CT

This asset should be a public utility rather than the property of evil, greed-machine corporations. They will do the same thing the goog-for-nothing Wall Street banks did - rape the American people.
—Brian Brian St. John, Spicewood, TX

Net Neutrality = freedom of speech. ALL speech online should be treated equally, and not like Animal Farm, where some are more equal than others.)
—Charles Albritton, Pascagoula, MS

Keep the internet discrimination free. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Carole Tiller, Fort Myers, FL

I pay for the last mile of my internet but without Net Neutrality I only get Mbps service when I access Kbps data. Excuse me? What planet is this? The reason the internet works is everyone pays for THEIR OWN CONNECTION to it. That's what makes it special. What's next? Funding based policy? Oh wait.... that's too much data for this communication.
—George Georgalis, Mountain View, CA

I think the internet should be a place for everyone to do whatever they want, othervise it will slowly become a censured bad place.
—Jesper Andreasson, Dundee, KY

I do not want my ISP prioritizing my content for me. I pay them to transfer data, not to make decisions about that data for me. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Daniel Frazier, Fort Collins, CO

please do not belittle the consumer in favor of big business.
—Deborah Kavruck, Washington, DC

I have a small business and my website will be impacted.
—Phillip Schwartz, Ghent, NY

I AM. HERE AND NOW. YOUR TIME IS OVER PREPARE TO MEET MY JUDGEMENT. ALF
—Mark Steven Filby, Coffs Harbour,

Small business will greatly suffer without the open Internet. Do not help choke off innovation and succumb to the big business influence so prevalent in our lives.
—John Burr, North Las Vegas, NV

AT&T, Comcast and Verizon are already three of the most hated companies in the US. Why on Earth does it seem like a good idea to let them control which bits of my data are most important? Ridiculous!!
—Tim Culler, Walnut Creek, CA

The Internet isn't just some entertainment avenue like TV anymore. You can live without TV, but how much of our lives now depend on some component of the Internet? Too much for you to let ISPs rake everyone that uses the Internet in the USA over hot coals! We need Net Neutrality! It's not just the fairness factor, because life isn't fair. This is the right thing to do, the best thing for everyone involved! Who really benefits with your plan?
—Becca Muick, Terre Haute, IN

We should all have access to the internet. In the United States of America, this should not even be a question.
—Meg Duffy, Haverhill, MA

I have a small business and this would be extremely unfair to my customers who can't reach my website all because of a rule that would allow these providers to discriminate (directly or indirectly) and can basically choose who can be accessed easily and who can't. This this plan by Tom Wheeler is absolutely wrong.
—Julius Cirwithian, New Castle, DE

I'm tired of dinosaurs who couldn't point to the URL bar on a browser trying to control how my generation accesses information.
—Christine Kay, Strongsville, OH

There really isn't anyway to disguise this move. Opening special access to some traffic is only done at the expense of the remaining traffic. Stifling the rest of the traffic is restricting our freedom to use the internet for communication - our speech. This is not only a bad idea, I am quite certain it is unconstitutional. Take the easy road. You don't need to invent anything. Reclassify the internet as telecommunications (well, duh, it is) and the rules are already setup quite well.
—Ross S. Heitkamp, Mountain View, CA

ISP's must be "common carriers"!
—Judith Salzman, Tucson, AZ

This is going to be as bad as Citizen's United. Stand up to Regular People, not the Corporations!
—Helene Rosen, Ivyland, PA

Dear Chairman Wheeler, Having a higher Internet tier is a policy that is too easily abused. Providers would be slow to improve service for the lower tier and it would create an unfair marketplace for smaller or newer Internet content providers trying to compete on the quality of their product alone. Best regards, Miles Stoudenmire —Miles Stoudenmire, Johns Creek, GA

It's a no-brainer. The internet is the only free-speech forum left in this world.
—Kevin McLaughlin, New Providence, NJ

Net Neutrality is what can ensure the future of the internet as guided by the people, not the corporate providers who often have very narrow or specific interests.
—Khalila Brown, Washington, DC

This is the age of information. These changes would give private companies the ability to control of information. Knowledge is power. By allowing them this control, you are affording them nearly unlimited power. In addition, this gives ISP's the ability to have a direct fiscal impact on businesses in which they hold no ownership interest. Think of how many companies depend on the internet for their business to survive. Now they're going to have to work out deals with these providers and pay more fees to make sure their content is readily available at speeds consistent with industry standards? That sounds a lot like extortion to me. How is that any different than the mafia in NY charging protection money to local business owners? The only difference is the protection in this case is the guarantee of a speedy delivery of information rather than from bodily harm. Lastly, consumer already pay ISP's a premium for faster speeds. I for example spend $60 a month for the fastest broadband I can get. If I am already paying the ISP a premium to be able to receive data faster, why do they get to double dip and charge the sender a premium to send this information. In a one way transmission of data, a premium for expedited speed should only be charged one time. We the people are dependent upon our bureaucrats to do the right thing. Please, do the right thing.
—Chris Booth, Fair Oaks, CA

ISP = Common Carriers
—Todd Templeton, Sunland, CA

Equal opportunity for all!
—Gene Smirnov, Abington, PA

I submit my comment because this country was founded on the premise that all "men" are created equal. Over the years since the invention of television, computers, and other means of communication, things have eroded so that the common "man" in this country no longer has equal say about their destiny, beliefs, education, etc. This country is the envy of other less democratic nations and yet we are falling down on the list of accomplishments because competition is thwarted in the corporate world. Please do not let the top 10%ers continue to buy with their billions what we think, see, hear or say. Allene
—Allene Schooler, San Jose, CA

Otherwise I wouldn't be able to afford broadband internet.
—Raf Barco-Calderon, Jeffersonton, VA

The Internet has become a vital part of American lifestyle. We use to conduct business, communicate with clients, solve problems and search for help. Why would we want this taken away and given to big business to run and control. The only fair way is to have Net Neutrality for all of us not just the chosen few. Steve Core, American Born, American raised and American proud. Help us save the Internet from Tom Wheeler Chairman of the FCC and providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon.
—Steve Core, DENVER, CO

The proposed rules will kill internet innovation and small start-ups in favor of large established internet businesses! We need real net neutrality!
—Steve Pratt, Buffalo Grove, IL

The Internet removed communication barriers, equalizing things between huge companies and one-person operations. This turns that on its head, and puts more power and money into the hands of ISPs that already wield too much power and provide too poor a service for the money they rake in. Call a spade a spade, and reclassify them.
—Ray Shaw, Parkville, MD

Throw out your rules and reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers. This is the ONLY way to protect real Net Neutrality.
—Norman Black, Marietta, GA

I am a list manager for a website serving cancer patients and survivors (non-profit organization). It's critical for us to share information in a timely manner with one another. We deserve should not have our information slowed down in favor of commercial interests.
—Ronald Goldsmith, Albuquerque, NM

The internet is as much infrastructure as roads, power, gas, water, education or any number of other things. It is not a private good but a public good and as such needs full protection not exploitation by rapacious corporates.
—Nicholas Seaman, ,

AT&T, Comcast, and Verizon have too much power. Under the current system and the recently proposed one, the FCC doesn't really have much power to regulate Verizon, Comcast, and AT&T. I value the free flow of ideas, innovation, and low cost. In Europe people enjoy much better access at lower cost because they haven't given the foxes control over the chicken coop.
—Patricia Egenberger, Modesto, CA

No speeding up. No slowing down. No preferential treatment for ISP's or web sites. No censorship. No corporate stranglehold nor greed should ever touch the internet.
—Gura Lashlee, McKinleyville, CA

Free communication is at risk here!
—Obie Goodman, denver, CO

Please make the Internet open and free for everyone. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers and let everyone compete and participate in an open internet.
—Jacob Moran, leander, TX

The internet is public domain and must remain available -in its entirety and equitably- to EVERYONE regardless of their ability to pay high use fees. I am a former public employee who, after 30 years of public service, had to retire so I can provide 24 hour care for my 19 year-old physically/developmentally disabled son. We use the internet to receive information regarding our health care, education and other vital services, to pay utility bills and to purchase items/services we need. The ability to use the internet for these things helps me reduce the amount of time I have to leave my son with a (paid) care provider and avoid leaving him at home alone. If internet providers are allowed to set up a two or multi-tiered system for internet access, millions of people like me will be given access that will move at a speed which inhibits our ability to reasonably access information and services. Please remember that the majority of us, the people you represent, are counting on you to protect our rights and equal access to services. Thank you.
—Renee L. McTeer-Ramirez, Chino Hills, CA

Information should be free to all. Not just people who can afford in. This would low income students and would affect our education system. We might as well return to the dark ages when only the rich could afford education. You Mr. Wheel are a disgrace to the nation for even wanting to do something like this. I hope you are forced out of your job for even wanting to limit the rights of Americans. Right such as freedom of speech and education. Being able to accuse information to vote, learn, research, you are limiting all this. You are a sell out to big corporations and need to be dismissed.
—R Christopher Vara, Houston, TX

We must protect the open Internet. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Thank you.
—Alma Shaffer, albemarle, NC

I have ZERO interest in any of the content provided by Comcast, Verizon, or other ISP, I want them only as a "pipe". I have little interest in most of the major content providers, as I find that my needs and interests are better served by smaller sites. I want NEUTRAL Internet, where all bits are treated equally, and not have my needs relegated to second class citizen status. ISP's should be treated as common carriers, as the primary service they provide is that of a data pipe, and pipes should not discriminate.
—Arthur Torrey, North Billerica, MA

i feel its important so i can save money from going into your pocket because tom wheeler was the CEO of the Cellular Telecommunications & Internet Association. which is why the fcc is doing this. hes just a corrupt person looking out for his buddies pockets and not the people he has to look out for. the people that help him get a paycheck, me and the rest of the middle class.
—Colin Asip, San Mateo, CA

ISPs are clearly Common Carriers. Declare them such and end this mess. The Internet is way too important to risk. Anything other than a single tier Internet will destroy it, at least in the USA.
—Bruce Watson, Raleigh, NC

what makes them more than common carriers?
—Stephen and Constance Caruso, Pataskala, OH

The internet was created for everyone, not for corporate enterprise. It must remain free and equal for all of its users as a tremendous source of information and communication. Big business must not be allowed to dictate usage to others.
—Ann McGarry, rye brook, NY

No, please don't mess with net neutrality.
—Tom Elder, Boise, ID

I have friends that work in internet startups that do content delivery. This bill will kill thier chances to compete. Internet delivery agents should be defined as common carriers, not allowed to charge end users and content delivery. And don't even get me started on how many are content providers as well. For those of us that don't have a choice in ISPs, please, please do not do this!
—Steven strange, Round Rock, TX

Unless the internet is truly neutral, corporate interests will continue to try to take control of both content and delivery.
—Robert J. Kuzma, Oakland, CA

Net neutrality is essential to democracy!
—Kay O'Laughlin, Gloucester, MA

I am a twenty year old musician, and my career depends upon Net Neutrality. I strongly urge you to rethink your plans and have some humanity for those who may not have chosen the same path as yourselves.
—Sara Kochanski, Westfield, MA

I use streaming video service as my main method of television watching and I don't those services to have to kow tow to ISPs in order for them to deliver my programming. Please reject Chairman Wheeler's plan. Thank you.
—Clayton Helme, Salt Lake City, UT

I DO NOT support a two-tiered internet system. The best thing about the internet is that there aren't obstacles to putting out ideas. Your rules will destroy this equality. This is not right or fair to people and businesses that are not rich. Do not do this to us.
—Jennifer Cousineau, Albuquerque, NM

Because it allows for new an innovative industries.
—Stephen Brikiatis, Windham, NH

Really, I feel as though the govt already meddles in enough as it is. With all that is going on these days the net is the only place I feel real freedom of speech and news in preserved. Getting more govt involvement in the matter will only mess things up.
—Benjamin Walker, Tempe, AZ

I want an open, non-discriminatory internet!!! Don't throw away Net Neutrality. I mean it!! PLEASE!!!
—Lesly Van Dame, Houston, TX

THE CORRUPTION AND CORPORATE PSYCHOPATHY FELLED A ONCE DECENT REPUBLIC - WE ARE NOW MORE ENSLAVED THAN HITLER'S GERMANY.
—Carol A. Russell, Saratoga Springs, NY

Stop this plan and leave the Internet as it is. There is too much potential for corruption in this plan. Stop!
—B. Kaufmann, Appleton, WI

Net Neutrality should continue. Reconsider your rules that would end Net Neutrality. The big companies should not be able to charge extra fees for a faster Internet. It should be available to all at the same speed and cost.
—Patricia Peters, Seattle, WA

Please allow the internet to stay neutral. There does not need to be a premium speed for the biggest, riches companies operating online. Leave the internet open and a level playing feel for all, both big and small.
—Josh Aiman, Moscow, ID

i wish to be able to have the same speed available as the big boys without paying extra.
—Fred Kleindenst, Paradise, CA

Are you kidding me, it is insane to not make isps common carriers. Did you get a bribe for coming out with this ruling?
—Richard Schulte, fraser, CO

I use the Internet daily for all types of information I need in my daily life. There is no reason I should have to pay extra for big companies to make more money off something that should be free for everyone to access.
—Angelia Akers, Bristol, VA

When only money matters, then we have lost our decency a society.
—Carol Dodson, elgin, SC

Maintain net neutrality!
—Paul Cameron, Carrollton, TX

Stop the madness of this proposal now.
—Jeremy Granger, Mandeville, LA

Telecoms cannot have it both ways. They MUST be classified as common carriers! They have been given far too much power already. The American People need their internet service providers to treat us all fairly and equally. The regulations in place need to be rewritten, with FAR less favoritism for ISPs. We need rules to protect AGAINST predatory practices by conglomerates, NOT rules PROTECTING multinational corporation's predatory practices (and "the internet fast lane" is absolutely 100% predatory).
—Michael Parcels, Center Ossipee, NH

I just got high speed internet, and it wasn't from Verizon, who for fifteen years couldn't even provide a reliable telephone connection. I had to wait for a local telephone coop to invest in fiber. I don't see how giving Verizon and AT&T more control of the internet after the way they have behaved in the past can be good for rural customers like me.
—Bernard Lisner, Westfield, WI

Net Neutrality means those individuals less.fortunate will still have access to being educated; it is tool that allows those in remote locations or the underprivileged a fair playing field in the game of life.
—Joel Gillum, Jacksboro, TN

I want a free and open internet.
—Jordana Amato, Florence, MA

Why must we have more and more situations where more money means better access?
—Don Palsgaard, Bishop, GA

The proposed rules will absolutely kill the economy as smaller companies will no longer be able to compete with larger companies.
—Ebben Feagan, Park Hill, OK

Net neutrality is important to me because my husband depends on it for his work, and my nieces and nephews depend on it for their education and to enrich their learning.
—Kendra Dunlap, Denair, CA

Reclassify ISPs as common carriers and protect net neutrality! You are hired as a voice of the people. The people who actually understand this problem and are without conflicts of interest are unanimously opposed to these new rules. Do the right thing, for once.
—Daniel Hipp, Binghamton, NY

Where is your empathy? How can you look yourself in the mirror and fell good about yourself. Is your ego more important then peoples freedom of speech? We live on a pale blue dot in this enormous Universe. Start looking up and not into yourself and your lust for power. The open internet is one of the best things ever to happen to the human race. Dont let big corporations kill it. There is enough inequality in the world. Ask yourself the question: What matters?
—Alexander Parker, ,

The Internet is as essential as electricity and should be regulated in a similar manner, as a public utility.
—Sharon Wright, Stillwater, OK

These days it is essential to have good internet connections. It will hamper small businesses, charities and all the rest of us without huge bank accounts, if money will determine who gets the good service.
—Gisela S. Ray, Gresham, OR

Dear Federal Communications Commission: FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Amy Lyons, RALEIGH, NC

I am a web developer and a huge "consumer" of online services. Discrimination of said services is incredibly wrong. Keep the market free to individuals, not corporations!!!
—V Jones, Highland, UT

It would be nice if just once a federal agency worked for the people it represented and not big business.
—Laraine Winn, Clearwater, FL

Allowing the ISPs to charge higher rates for better service is opening the door to exploitation, not innovation. You say that you will prevent peferential treatment of some content, but allowing some content providers to have faster and more reliable service than others is preferential treatment, pure and simple. Please reverse your position on these proposed rule changes, and get back to making the case for regulating Internet provision as a common carrier service. Than you.
—John Fay, Santa Cruz, CA

Ik ben afhankelijk van netneutraliteit en eisen dat de FCC de bescherming van het open internet door herclassificatie van ISP's als common carriers.
—Walter Botteldoorne, Kortrijk-Heule, NJ

Creativity and progress, technical or artistic, will be stifled if net neutrality dies. Please, keep net neutrality alive and let our younger generations experience the freedom of the net!
—Nico P., Valencia, CA

America has already become a culture of forced advertisement in all walks of life. Losing Net Neutrality would be the final nail in the coffin of American free thought.
—James, Orlando, FL

The internet is a space for sharing ideas and getting information. Restricting that, or trying to monopolize it is awful. In this day and age people need the internet to get ahead and it will make life more difficult for everyone.
—M Lyn, Sunderland, MA

Trying to privatize the Internet is just wrong. Privatization doesn't work with utilities or government services. Never ever.
—Ronda Evans, Kennewick, WA

TELL US HOW "FAST LANES" PROTECTS NET NEUTRALITY. WE HAVE ALREADY TOLD YOU HOW IT DOES NOT, AND PROVIDED EXAMPLES. ALL YOU PROVIDE IS STATEMENTS AND DECLARATIONS. LET US KNOW WHAT THE PLAN IS THAT DEFINES "FAST LANE" DISTRIBUTION AS NET NEUTRAL. I DARE YOU TO TRY.
—Rick Nixon, McCloud, CA

Don't be stupid. There's no up side.
—Arthur Krakowsky, Livermore, CA

You cannot let the rich take over the Internet. It MUST remain open and available to all.
—Michael Kenney, LOS ANGELES, CA

Who ever controls information controls the world.
—Norman W Kolody, binghamton, NY

The end result of your current course will be the transformation of the internet into a new form of cable tv. I cannot think of an end sadder than that for a forum that holds as much potential as the internet to bring the world together.
—Thomas Moore, Philadelphia, PA

Discrimination. I missed the old CEO...
—Gabriel Nieves, Miami, FL

I want the internet to be a common good everybody can afford. Net Neutrality means equal opportunities means the best will prevail. If we let providers limit the accessibility, quality content will diminish.
—Rafael Schamilow, ,

My family can barely affort basic DSL now, if we loose connection because we can't afford certain sites we will not be able to survive.
—Kevin Toney, Richmond, CA

This represents the last bastion of freedom of expression, something our forebears fought to achieve over many generations.
—Martin Strube, Northampton,

Don't fck with the internet.
—Marc Burbank, Spring, TX

I would like to start an online business, but without net neutrality nobody would be able to find out about me
—Conal Duffy, Oak Park, IL

We, the people demand that the FCC reign in the profiteers that have hijacked the internet in the name of greed. When the rest of the public learns what is going on, they will join us in demanding that the FCC not abandon net neutrality! We already pay outrageous prices for internet access. Comcast, Verizon and the others will drive the cost out of reach for hard working middle class Americans. We will not let that happen!
—John Pizzulo, Kernersville, NC

We all have said "NO"! Net Neutrality must be protected at all costs. That's billions of people against all corporate and government collusion to control internet by way of content censorship, services, monitoring and corporate profit.
—Antonio White, District Heights, MD

Really? After everything that has happened you are going to just say no to the ever expanding list of companies and people who would be affected by your stupid decisions. What about the economy, what about the companies that play a major role in the US economy. I don't think you guys care, or you are being corrupted by AT&T, Comcast, or worst of all, Verizon who all are corporations out to make a profit and nothing else. Answer our damn questions and justify why you guys are making such stupid decisions.
—Ben Saltz, Lafayette, CO

Without net neutrality, we are giving the big media companies the theoretical power to censor our access to the internet by making it difficult to get to sites they don't want us to see.
—Michael Holler, Plainfield, IL

Access to information and the ability to be fully engaged in communication should be an equal right in this country. A two-tiered system will undermine this greatly. I am especially concerned that people with less sophisticated technical access and financial resources will be unable to participate in dialogue, commerce, and democracy. Please keep the internet open to all!
—Michael Porter, Robbinsdale, MN

I think tat I should be able to get information from any source connected to the internet, regardless of whether they are large enough or rich enough to pay for extra speed or capacity. I should get the same speed from my ISP regardless of whether I want to watch Netflix, or acess some tiny site in another country, etc.
—Mark Goldfield, Brooklyn, NY

The same reason the USA opposes monopolies is why the Internet should remain neutral, Competition. When the ISP I buy Internet service from has the right to dictate what services I use through them you have a monopoly. It will kill competition. I am a registered vote and I do vote for the person that is looking out for my interested and not big businesses interest. That probably rings true for everyone else that takes the time to write you. Strike done this noticing that only benefits big business. The little guys deserve to win one every now and again.
—Brian Garland, Minden, LA

The Internet has been the last universally accessible bastion of free speech. Please don't sell it.
—Eric Bonnett, Powell, OH

I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Marcos Arguello, Las Vegas, NV

An open free Internet is a last bastion of democracy-- we need to preserve it!
—Tony Giordano, Howell, NJ

Keep our internet the same.
—Christopher Minich, Lewis Run, PA

Net Neutrality is important to The People of the World (Remember them?) as an equal playing field communications network. We don't want or need a two-tiered system of "haves" and "almost haves".
—Douglas Newman, Winnipeg,

Net neutrality is very important to me and my family, as we are completely self-employed. My husband and I make custom jewellery and the vast majority of our sales occur online. If net neutrality is gone, I understand that our sales will suffer (we are already living in the edge) due to less/slower access to our online store. If this happens my family will be unable to support ourselves, including our two children aged 6 & 3. Please do not sentence my family to a choice between poverty or missing our children grow up while we waste away in a call centre or some equally depressing job. Please take action for the sake of families in America.
—Nancy Power, Williamswood,

We do not need to create a class system of internet users!
—Gregory N. Shrader, Phoenix, AZ

The state of Internet access in the United States is a perfect example of the disaster that results from applying free market "light touch" regulation to a market that isn't truly free due to "natural monopolies." Quick and decisive action is necessary to prevent the large ISPs - whose only innovations are in coming up with new ways to charge more money for the same or less service - from snuffing out real innovation on the Internet. The future of digital distribution and streaming video are at stake because they threaten existing business models.
—Cory Pendergraft, Richardson, TX

We don't need a two-tiered internet. Those that can afford it are not more equal than the rest of us.
—Norman Pugliese, Califon, NJ

I believe that classifying ISPs as common carriers is fundamental to our prosperity, and most importantly, to the fair and free functioning of our democratic form of government.
—John Seakwood, New Lebanon, NY

The internet is a resource which everyone should have access to no matter the amount of money we have. Restricting peoples access will rid some of us of information, leaving the world a less informed place.
—Rachael Stott, Kendal,

I believe that the internet needs to continue to be free for all consumers because it should be easily and equally accessible to all whether rich or poor, old or young. It should be regulated as all other utilities, not given to giants in the industry. Thank you.
—Susan Mueller, Carpinteria, CA

The general public barely makes enough to clothe, feed, and house themselves. Why take more from our pockets? In our digital age the Internet is vital to everyone. Don't discriminate the majority, underpaid working class citizens.
—Benjamin Dylan Prescott, CHICHESTER, NH

Net neutrality is important because too many other aspects of American life are already skewed in favor of corporate interest, and, given the opportunity, providers will find loopholes in these newly-proposed rules. Many of the largest already intentionally avoid performing important infrastructure upgrades in an attempt to exact fees from content providers (see: http://blog.level3.com/global- connectivity/chicken-game-play ed-child-isps-internet/), and these new proposed rules give them more opportunities and excuses to demand more money from both providers and consumers, while continuing to let their infrastructure languish.
—N Rusch, Santa, CA

Access to affordable, competitive, and genuine high speed internet access is essential to our livelihood, since I work from home 3 days a week. The status quo leaves me with one overpriced option. Broadband internet is as much of a utility as water/electricity and it needs to be treated in the same way.
—John Coursen, Cambridge, MD

It's unfair to everyone to have to pay more for something that should have the same speed for everyone paying for that speed. No fast lanes. Just bet neutrality
—Nikola Hamilton, Le Roy, MN

We must keep the internet a free and open public space.
—Suzanne Regalado, Americus, GA

Democracy is one man one vote. Keep the internet democratic. Stand on the right side of history. Your actions will be remembered.
—Wolf Thandoy, San Francisco, CA

We are already a two-tier society! Leave the internet alone!
—Elizabeth Rabinowitz, Ashland, MA

Our democracy depends on the free spread of information, and our economy depends on competition. Both require net neutrality.
—Warren E Shull, Decatur, GA

The net is the last place for new ideas and innovation to have a chance to grow from individuals. Without neutrality, a heavy toll will end up being levied for any individuals who would use it as a platform for research and the free exchange of ideas that cultivates innovation. Inevitably, it will not be the heavy users/corporations that pay the added price of greater bandwidth, but will be the individuals how have limited to no say in how they are charged for their ever limiting share of the bandwidth pie, while the big users of bandwidth will pay a fraction of the cost for the lion's share of bandwidth pie. Don't tell me it won't happen, with the corporate gatekeepers, that has historically ALWAYS been the result of private control over what was a publicly founded national asset and treasure. It will be manipulated like every other privatized asset to gain the maximum profit from the people who can least afford to protest, the individual public. Net Neutrality must continue to be a key cornerstone of the Internet. Without it, we are at the total mercy of the corporations!
—Lawrence Menasco Jr., Port Hueneme, CA

We need net neutrality so everyone has equal access to the Internet.
—Emma Bartholomew, Seattle, WA

I desire net neutrality, both for selfish reasons like wanting my internet to remain the same speed at the same cost, and for more practical, sensible reasons like not wanting companies to be able to edge out any competition they might have. It just makes sense to me to keep the net neutral.
—Daniel Haigh, Massapequa Park, NY

Net Neutrality is important to because it protects the people keeping an even playing field! With out it, the well that is our freedom will be poisoned.
—Ryan O'Dwyer, Delran, NJ

Mr Wheeler, you have stated: "I'm a strong supporter of the Open Internet, and I will fight to keep the internet open." Then may I suggest that you classify ISPs as common carriers. Thanks.
—Steven W Gaylord, Barstow, CA

I'm a professor, and my colleagues and I have been making websites that share our research with the world community. These are not sponsored by any large company, and often they are not even on "official" university web servers. This intellectual property is something we think people can benefit from, and increasingly we are using 3D visualization and technologies that make load speed important. My understanding of these proposed regulations is that corporate sponsored sites would load faster and be more accessible than our years of research and work. That seems like a really bad idea as it would stifle (or make hugely expensive) both research and innovation. Please reclassify ISPs as common carriers, which they are. Thank you, Lynn Ramey Associate Professor Vanderbilt University, Nashville TN
—Lynn Ramey, Nolensville, TN

It is crushing to think that the Net which has done so much to foster democracy in tyrannized countries would be turned into a platform for inequality in America. There is no justification for this corrupt kowtowing to the commercial interests of gigantic corporations. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers!
—Mrs. Vanessa Genens, Tillamook, OR

Freedom.
—Juan, ,

This is a free speech and equal access issue.
—Mark Peterson, Lauderdale, MN

Why isn't the will of the majority of people winning ,over the FCC?
—Tom Hendricks, Dallas, TX

These purposed changes are pure folly. It would be detrimental to digital ecosystem that is the internet. It would restrict the flow of ideas and communication. It would give priority to major corporations that can afford to pay the obscene amounts of money for faster internet speeds that should be available to all equally. Don't make the mistake of alienating the majority- in one way or another you will pay dearly for it.
—Anthony Francis, Chicago, IL

The Internet is a basic 21st century resource. It MUST be classified as a common carrier in order to keep information free and keep US society innovative.
—Mark Jared, Eugene, OR

First of all Comcast or AT&T doesn't get to just buy our internet. If Mr. Wheeler really represented the people and not media companies then this would be a simple decision. Just on the subject of education alone the FCC will be putting millions of school children at a serious disadvantage if net neutrality is indeed killed. With a pay to play internet the FCC will be cutting school children's ability to learn and grow in the classroom and with at home school work. Those children who don't have wealthy parents won't be exposed to a fast equal lane internet at home and eventually will be years behind educationally to those who can pay. This decision also doesn't promote free market competition, or democracy. It will stifle an already stagnant economy and make worse the inequality gap between the rich and poor. All the while continuing to shrink what is left of America's middle class.
—Thomas Wilmoth, Elmwood Park, IL

This proposal is only going to hurt the consumer. It;s a bad idea all around and should have never seen the light of day. I urge the FCC to kill this proposal!
—Steven Waltman, Rochester, NY

Do not allow the corporations to take over our internet. It was created for the equal benefit of everyone,not the AT&Ts and Comcasts
—Dennis Hall, Citrus Springs, FL

Don't let discrimination happen. Without Net Neutrality, the little guy suffers AGAIN. These big companies would have the power to pick winners and losers online and discriminate against online content and applications. And no one would be able to do anything about it. I don't want that to happen. Why would you?
—Georgia Bellas, Somerville, MA

Without net neutrality, the Internet as we know it will end -- there is a reason why the phrase "don't fix what isn't broken" exists. Put things back the way they were, for the sake of the Internet,
—Jay Cross, Burnt Hills, NY

The internet is an amazing tool for knowledge, people are able to use it to learn about all sorts of wonderful and useful knowledge. Breaking the internet will not only harm businesses and consumers now, but it will also harm future generations. Do not break what isn't broken.
—Stephen Demeter, Fishers, IN

Restore/Maintain Net Neutrality Please.
—Rex R Culbertson, Medford, OR

please throw out the rules and reclassify ISP's as common carriers.
—Ms. Renee Klein, Marina del Rey, CA

New ideas, new innovations, change for the better often comes from those with little financial or political clout. Net neutrality allows the voices of all to be on an equal playing field, not just those who have the funding.
—Jeffrey Hedquist, libertyville, IA

As an avid user of the internet, I know that free and unimpeded access to all content is cruc
—Bethany Calhoun, Edmond, OK

The way education is taught in these days requires the student to have a good internet connection and a computer available. If this plan proceeds many students won't be able to afford the extra charges and it will take them even longer to complete assignments than it does now, this will lead to students missing sleep and/or meals to complete assignments. Lack of sleep has been seen to lead to severe depression and a weakened immune system. If the current plan is put in placed it will only create a worse society than that which we live in currently.
—Cayenne Evensen, Riverton, UT

Please don't vote against the citizens. The corporate takeover of the government has gone too far already. Let us have this one well functioning avenue. Keep Net Neutrality!
—Tammy Causey, Jefferson, OR

My internet access is through a smaller ISP, not Comcast, TimeWarner, Verizon, or ATT. So if there is going to be a fast lane, I will not have access to it at all. Net neutrality is critical for fairness.
—William Thomas, Minneapolis, MN

We need net neutrality to keep the internet open for all and to keep online business fair.
—Stephanie Martinez, Katy, TX

I strongly believe that the service ISPs provide is telecommunications. Communication is the main use of the internet in my household; video-chatting friends in other states and even countries is my hobby. Not classifying ISPs as common carriers would mean Netflix, Youtube, and anyone else ISPs could sell 'fast lane' service to get better and faster transmission than my communication data. I pay for internet, just like everyone else, I should be able to use in any manner that I wish without the ISPs deeming my data 'non-priority.'
—Gary S Moore Jr, Sylvania, OH

A democratic society cannot tolerate the commodification of free speech ...
—Gilia Humrich, FORESTVILLE, CA

Since when is the United States of America content to be so very far behind other countries in any area, let alone in internet access? We claim that intellectual progress is the key to economic progress and yet we are making it financially harder and harder to get a good education and now we won't (if this plan is implemented) even have competitive internet access! You should be setting the goal of outperforming all other countries including South Korea in speed for ALL sites. ISP stands for internet SERVICE provider and should be classified as such - as SERVICE providers. I can not fathom why consideration would even be given to these proposed rules. Quoted from wikipedia: "South Korea is the world leader in Internet connectivity, having the world's fastest internet connection speed.[1][2] The government established policies and programs that facilitated a rapid expansion and use of broadband. As of 2013, South Korea has the fastest internet connection in the world at 21.0 Mbit/s according to the report State of the Internet published by Akamai Technologies,[3] which is over 40% faster than the next fastest country, Japan, which clocked in at a distant second with 12.9 Mbit/s. South Korea's speed is almost six times faster than the world average of 3.8 Mbit/s, and more than twice as fast as the United States at 10 Mbit/s. It is important to note that 100 Mbit/s services are the average standard in urban South Korean homes and the country is rapidly rolling out 1Gbit/s connections or 1,000 Mbit/s, at $20 per month,[4] which is roughly 263 times faster than the world average and 100 times faster than the average speed in the United States.[5]") As a traveler I have experinced a great variety of internet access speeds and reliabilty and I tell you now - limited access hurts commerce, Period.
—Robn Diekow, Sequim, WA

Net neutrality is the only reason I have been able to practice my profession of online marketing for small businesses. Without net neutrality there is no level playing field.
—Cameron Miller, lake worth, FL

Putting corporate profits before the needs of the clients. Typical USA! Disgusting discriminatory and totally unfair. Do not destropy Net Neutrality.
—John Rogers, Sayre, PA

Please maintain Net Neutrality by reclassifying ISPS as common carriers. To follow proposed new rules is an assault on democracy. Thank you.
—Hazel Witte, Bremerton, WA

As a person on disability, I rely heavily on an open & unrestrained internet. Net Neutrality is the only thing safe guarding this The net should be treated as an utility not a privilege.
—John Teague, Poteau, OK

You continue to push a your current plan, and you will guarantee business failure on the internet. If you can't understand that concept, then either you are an idiot, or you ignore common sense because of the bribes you are collecting.
—Brent Shifley, Beebe, AR

Please protect the public by revising these proposals
—Scott Rower, Portland, OR

Net neutrality is a holy grail of democracy and social transparency. SAVE IT!
—Ken Lauter, Nacogdoches, TX

I think of the internet in the classroom. It can only become more central to education.
—Carol Mock, Fremont, CA

Do you really think it's fair for you to give cooperations another way to make more money on common people like me? The entire problem with our country are people like you who allow these company's to run our beloved America. I wonder what our founding fathers would have done if these people would have approached them with such a horrendous proposition. Do you think they'd have the same position as you? You people should be ashamed to call your selves representatives of the people and that goes for 99% of the men and women currently run this country. Have some respect for the common populous and for once do something that benefits us and not multi-billion dollar companies. I hope you enjoy your position because sooner or later we're all gonna get tired of this and it's not gonna end well for people like you, enjoy the rest of your day.
—Josh Cortright, Hollister, MO

These new rules for internet regulation make the playing field for competition uneven. The big-name companies given preferential treatment will become the only such companies if no others are able to build up enough of a user base to rival them. Such a system will hurt innovation and competition, which will only hurt the industry as users are gouged by non-competitive practices.
—Roz Sawyer, Culver City, CA

This medium is a way for democracy to flourish. Keep the money out of it! Dr. Brendon Boot
—Brendon Boot, Somerville, MA

The internet was developed by the U. S. Government and paid for by the U. S. Taxpayers. why would we Citizens wish to have someone or some company charging whatever they wish to "allow" internet access and giving us poor service to top it off? This type of behavior is already evident in the manner that cable TV is dispensed: It is expensive, the service is poor, and the content is poor and/ or inane. I do not want some faceless corporation answering to no-one metering the internet. It should be treated in the same manner as the airwaves.
—Roger Hancock, Aurora, IL

Do what's best for the entire nation. The people. Do the right thing. Not the short term, short sighted money thing, the long term money thing. Lift all boats and raise net neutrality to the status of common carrier.
—Paul Ratz, New Rochelle, NY

Letting people pay for faster speed is the same as slowing down those that don't pay.
—Nicholas Stein, Bellevue, OH

A free internet is important to our small "d" democracy
—Andrea Bonnett, Altadena, CA

Killing the open internet appears to be the FCC's mission. Disgusting.
—Barbara Kepley, Graham, NC

Net neutrality ensures fair and equal use of this important resource. Access to the internet and internet services should be considered and regulated as a utility.
—Kevin Koczela, Oakland, CA

I feel passionately that NO entity should have a faster lane on the internet. That would in reality make everyone else slower in comparison, taking away opportunity for innovators and creative thinkers who do not have a huge bank balance. Even if no one is technically "slowed down", giving rich entities a faster lane does, in FACT, make everyone else slower. It does create a system of winners and losers, where money equals advantage. This goes against American values, of having the chance to pull oneself up by one's bootstraps. It goes against the spirit of America.
—Grey Larsen, Bloomington, IN

You are killing America! The FCC is supposed to work for American's, not corporations.
—Harold Anderson, seattle, WA

The internet must be treated as the public utility it is.
—Richard Knablin, North Bend, OR

The last mile internet service providers are monoplies (Telephone and cable companies). The FCC needs to classify the last mile ISP's as common carriers to avoid the ISP's controlling the internet via fast and slow lanes.
—Kurt Miller, Port Washington, NY

Why shouldn't ISPs be reclassified as common carriers? Are the new internet rules part of some agenda to silence the voice of the people who are on the verge of overthrowing the rule of the capitalist fat cats? Because if so, I'm standing up for Net Neutrality.
—Ned Riley, Melbourne,

I know Tom Wheeler has his instructions from the Wall Street owned Obama administration. People are not stupid. Obama will go down in history for the corrupt traitor he is. The FCC members do not have to go down with him, unless they want too be known forever as the individuals who gave Wall Street control of the Internet. That will of course haunt their families for as long as the Internet is under control of Corporate America. If the people are ever successful in taking back this once great country, I hope the FCC traitors are the first sent to a dark site forever. They will deserve no less. Hopefully chairman Wheeler will realize what he is doing and stop this madness before he commits a huge act of treason.
—John Gallagher, Minnetonka, MN

Protecting a free and open Internet is critical to maintaining American freedoms and prosperity in the next century.
—Kyle Metcalfe, Santa Rosa, CA

Without true Net Neautrality, you open the doors to discrimination of more important matters as well as other types of discrimination. By allowing this, you're allowing extreme prejudice on future and current websites, streaming, uploading, and viewing of content that should be as free on the internet as everything else. This is wrong and unjust to those who can't afford these extra bills, especially for small buisness owners who are just as professional as any other large company such as Google or Yahoo.
—Jordan Arsenault, Encinitas, CA

I am a professional artist and I market my work, and for this I use the internet to some degree. Aside from that I am a person with many interests. The internet is invaluable to me for both. I cannot understand why there is an issue with net neutrality. AT&T, Comcast and Verizon charge everyone a lot for their services and most of us use them, as there really is not a lot of true competition. To end net neutrality is a true crime against the people. And these people who have come up with this should be ashamed of themselves....they are thieves. We all deserve equal opportunity, whether we are small business people, housewives, or corporate giants. Get real Tom Wheeler and all you people "in charge". Suppose you were a small business person, or not a business person at all, but just a regular guy who enjoyed using the internet. This world is full of many people and few of us are wealthy. But all of us are humans who enjoy and deserve equality.
—Virginia Wood, Boulde, CO

No faster internet service for those who can pay more for it!
—Ms. Laurie Rubin, Sebastopol, CA

Please, do not change the internet as we know it just to stuff your pockets with cash. Stop helping these companies pick apart the USA for extra dollars
—Trevor King, Lakewood, CA

I can barely afford the internet as it is and having a two tiered system would force me to be able to only afford slow internet, which amounts to frustration and me probably giving it up out of that frustration. The internet is more than just facebook and twitter. It's education, connection and informational. I use it to get my news, to read books, to connect with family and friends in other states and to even watch movies and television programs. With the cost of living skyrocketing I've had to make cuts from my life. If the internet that I can afford is extremely slow than no one will pay for it and internet Use will go down in general. And stop taking away our rights, forcing us to pay more money for things and letting these companies pick and choose and get rich off the American people who are struggling to make their dreams happen and enjoy a happy life. Doing shit like this is how Revolutions start! And while I support capitalism and the right and ability to make money to support yourself, when is it too much? There is only so much the government take away from the people and give to the big corporations before it all comes crashing down. We are not all sheep! People will not think this is a good idea!
—Carina Wells, Seattle, WA

Net Neutrality is important to me because the Internet is the most important tool we have, and digital innovation thrives on competition. Please reclassify broadband as the common carrier that it clearly is.
—Jeffry Hoffman, Dubuque, IA

I am only an individual. I don't have a lot of money, although when you pool me with all the other Comcast Subscribers, we are a substantial block. We need access to the internet as much as any major corporation. That is why I think it's a great idea to reclassify Internet Service Providers as common carriers, so we can continue to have access to the information we need. If you don't, we'll be cut off, and I probably won't continue to pay for the internet, since it won't be of much use to me any more. That would be a huge drop in internet use.
—Rory & Dee Pierce, Wheat Ridge, CO

I DEFEND NET NEUTRALITY AND DEMAND THAT THE FCC WILL PROTECT AND KEEP THE INTERNET OPEN AND FREE BY RECLASSIFYING ISP'S AS COMMON CARRIERS!!!!!!!!!
—Theresa Manfreda, San Diego, CA

What are you thinking? Your new rules are unbelievably terrible! We must have Net Neutrality to protect a democratic way of life. Discrimination against small companies, non-profits, financially strapped companies, start-ups, blogs, etc. is unconscionable. Large corporations have entirely too much clout in this country. First the horrific SCOTUS decisions, giving them political control, and now this. What happened to fairness and equality? This will discourage innovation, creativity, different points of view and all manner of freedom. Do we want to become more like China where those in power control and suppress internet content?! These rules must be trashed and reclassification of ISPs as common carriers is the ONLY sane decision. This country and its citizens deserve better. Don't destroy democracy!
—Pat P., Baltimore, MD

Net Neutrality is essential for a strong democracy.
—P Horter, Portland, OR

If access to information is controlled by private businesses, democracy is doomed. The people will not govern; the politicians will not govern; the most important power in the world - knowledge - will be controlled by CEOs.
—Daleth Horst, St Helens,

We should not be allowing corporations to limit and control internet access for those who cannot afford to pay. Slowing down and allowing control of the internet to corporations so they can get richer is not right!
—Amy Levin, North Bend, OR

Net Neutrality is as important as a Free Press is to Democracy.
—Marian Soriano, Annapolis, MD

There is enough inequality around today without imposing it on the internet too!
—Justin Frewen, ,

We need to maintain an unbiased and unregulated internet. It has worked for years and will continue to work. I demand net neutrality.
—Ck, San Jose, CA

net neutrality is important so the net can thrive, and not just survive.
—Art Gray, Matawan, NJ

free thinking is critical. don't limit access to only those who serve greed and apathy.
—Olivia de Javelina, Tucson, AZ

This is of deep importance to me as I use the internet to do my travel nowadays -- seeing the world that I used to travel from my house -- it could be crippled like me....
—Fred O Rourke, LAFAYETTE, LA

Small businesses who use the Internet would be hurt by tiered services. Protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Susan Tilley, Rogue River, OR

The internet is something that should not be controlled in such a way as the FCC wants to. It goes against the constitution by violating our right to freedom of speech and how we use our own resources. We should have a right to use the internet as we please without paying unnecessary fees. Because issuing these rules against net neutrality is horrible, and no better than what North Korea does it it's people
—Derek Shea, Burbank, CA

Freedom of speech must be protected. Not just for those who can buy special access, but for everyone from the small time blogger to the start up entrepreneur if we are to have a vital and free nation. It is bad enough that a activist Supreme Court has equated money with speech , but now the FCC threatens to do the same.
—Brian Cheverie, Buffalo, NY

In order to keep innovation alive and well, there needs to be few obstacles in between the innovation and the masses. Without net neutrality it would be near impossible for new Internet services to compete and provide innovation that could possibly change the world.
—Brittany Griffin, Madison, AL

It's important that every one has equal access to free speech.
—Greg Wallen, Utica, NY

The Internet should be a place for free expression. We shouldn't allow corporate giants to use this power to bully and control information for money. If the government has a job in regulating anything, it should be this.
—Olga Slobodyanyuk, Berkeley, CA

Open access to information and resources as I need them is very important to me. I also run a small internet based business which would be drastically affected by the proposed changes. Internet should be for the people, bringing people together and offering access to information they might not otherwise be able to access to. Net Neutrality makes his possible. Handing control of the Internet over to large corporations is unacceptable and unethical. People have a right to use the Internet as they will, without extra charges and censorship.
—Eirene Zolotas, ,

Net neutrality is crucial to a democracy. So is a government that at least presents rationally. It is not rational, by even the slenderest standards, to not classify ISPs as common carriers. Fail to do this and thinking people will then ask themselves, what is driving this irrational decision? They will then ask, is this twisted logic coming from our centuries-old Democratic values or the capture of the state by Corporatist interests? Help the more intelligent, rational members of our Great Republic answer this question by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers. Let us not go full-tilt Orwellian here, OK? Thanks for hearing my views on this important matter. TH
—Terrence Higgins, Fairfax, CA

There is no Net Neutrality when ISP's can determine what traffic on the Internet has the highest priority.
—Mark Creighton, E Greenbush, NY

NO ONE OWNS THE NET!
—Peter Curia, Scottsdale, AZ

The Internet is the only true Democracy on Earth, please help preserve it and ensure the freedom of speech.
—Dan Kail West, Columbus, OH

The internet at large must remain neutral and impartial, without catering to any one party, company, or private interest.
—Sean Fairchild, Seattle, WA

So the FCC works for giant corporations and spits on the American public. What's new?
—James C. Fuller, Minneapolis, MN

The Internet is a vital part of our lives in this modern age. You should be doing everything you can to make the Internet more accessible, not less.
—Rita Carlin, San Diego, CA

Our internet providers have allowed our service to sink to 28th in the world. Since the ISPs essentially have regional monopolies I think it would better serve the American people for the FCC to tell the ISPs to improve service for everyone and spend more to provide service throughout the country or they can give up their monopolies. Since Congress has seen fit to cripple the US Postal Service perhaps internet service can be awarded to them. The USPS has done a sterling job providing excellent service in the face of congress created imminent disaster. Personally I'm sick and tired of watching the Federal Government hand our lives over to corporations. If this is to be our future can we all agree to drop the charade and just rename our country The Corporate States of America?
—John Fran, New York, NY

Eliminating net neutrality would lead to even more monopolization. Not good for consumers!
—Armin Hinterwirth, Portland, OR

It is 2014. Businesses and individuals now depend on the internet. It is unconscionable to limit, hinder, or restrict usage.
—Deborah W. Harris, Floyd, VA

The reality is there isn't a fast lane -- it's all the same wire. The bandwidth is set by the physical properties of the wire. That means ISPs are actually hindering traffic artificially and extorting to remove them. If this wasn't criminal enough, they can control the free market by giving preference to some and not others. This impacts freedom of the press, politics, business, and end consumers. Compared to other countries, America has greatly fallen behind, and now it's been made worse. Reclassifying ISPs as the common carriers that they are will resolve this. The internet is a resource like any other utility, and unmanaged preferential treatment opens pandora's box.
—Walt Stoneburner, Ashburn, VA

The internet is an important utility for work, communication, information and entertainment. Do not allow it to be "privatized", even parts of it.
—Tay Cooper, Carlsbad, CA

Don't sell out to big money. Keep the internet free and neutral. ISPs need to be reclassified as common carriers to protect net neutrality.
—David Bolman, Leipsic, OH

Dear Federal Communications Commission: FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Sam Mercer, Okemos, MI

Free internet is a democratic ideal, and should be affordably accessible to all.
—Mark Grotzke, Tinley Park, IL

Ending net neutrality would be a big step backwards in how far we have come technologically, and as a society. Please stop this plan and let everyone, small or big business have the same opportunities with a free and open internet.
—Jason Guymon, Lincoln, CA

Internet access has become a necessary utility in our modern society. As such, the Internet should be open to all and access should never be restricted because a business or person cannot pay fees to "upgrade" their route on the Internet. Equal access for all is paramount for the modern and future Internet.
—Theo D Williams, Buffalo, NY

The Internet is the only tool left for citizens to make an "end run" against media manipulation by BIG CORPORATE influence. Another Two-Tiered system is not acceptable. Americans are NOT Second class citizens who must PAY Extra Fees in order to have Openness and Truth Available. The internet must be a public utility: reclassify ISPs as Common Carriers. Our System of Representative Democracy is at stake; the internet is the 21st century "Town Hall" And what Local News and Honest Reporting used to be. The internet must be kept available to ALL EQUALLY.
—Ms. Elaine Wilson, Torrnce, CA

As a senior I cannot afford any more $$$ for the internet!
—Charlotte Koons, Northport, NY

Net neutrality matters because I live in an area with limited access to different carriers (ISPs). Without competition, I can be price gouged and also lose access to any of my services because of lack of competition and these new rules.
—Travis Baron, Long Beach, CA

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Chris Green, Mooresboro, NC

The freedom of the internet, and the ability for new ideas to grow, is predicated on the idea that the internet is equal. All traffic is the same, and should never be discriminated against. In this day and age, access to the internet is an almost essential element of everyday life. It is an essential service, and must be treated as such.
—Cody Marbach, ,

We cannot afford- as a country- for the government to favor certain companies. This will favor those companies that are conglomerates/institutions which can sway public ability to choose freely. We supposedly have freedom but slowly this freedom is being dictated by those that control or are trying to control most of our day to day needs. The government needs to stop catering to companies, esp. those that are or are trying to have a monopoly on the public systems.
—Jennifer S, aurora, IL

Net neutrality is important to me because it levels the playing field on the internet.
—Geoff, Columbia, SC

The Net is for the people. Corporations are NOT people. They can use is just as easily as we can without 'owning' it.
—Frank Tonhazy, New York, NY

If you allow others to start dictating internet usage it will become a tool of the wealthy and leave the rest of us ever further behind.
—Kat Haeber, Philadelphia, PA

Corporations have taken over every aspect of life; they dictate what we wear, listen to, eat - everything. We cannot allow this, the internet is beautiful thing simply because it allows all a fair chance for their voices to be heard. Not only would this destroy that grandeur but by law allow for classist, despicable discrimination once more at the hand of corporations.
—Isabella Ramos, Richardson, TX

No company control of the internet. Keep it NEUTRAL!
—Phyl Morello, White Pine, TN

to have people competing for internet speed furthers the neoliberal agenda driving wealth inequality driving most social ills. It would be an irresponsible step for you to take.
—Nick Drury, ,

IT'S IS WHAT IS BEST FOR ALL. THE RICH DON'T NEED ANYMORE.
—Jeff Beesley, NORTH FOND DU LAC, WI

This is discriminatory and unfair. Net Neutrality is important to small business owners like me.
—Karena Kilcoin, Athens, OH

There is no reason why internet providers should not be classified as common carriers. That is what they are, just as railroads and telephone providers are. And they should be regulated as such. Bruce Palmer
—Bruce Palmer, Houston, TX

I communicate to a friend in china, its bad enough the connection to china is bad. having bottlenecks in the USA will make my web cam connection even worse. Bottleneck the web. you bottle neck communication. both 1.0 and 2.0 web.
—Luke Solis, Rockland, WI

The internet is really a utility and should be managed like one. Our country will even farther behind culturally if all our citizens do not have equally quick access to information via this piece of world communication infrastructure.
—Sharon Coombs, Shoreview, MN

Keep the internet free and equal!
—Andrew Judd, Berkeley, CA

I work from home via a virtual office/call center. If I do not have access to affordable fast internet connections I will be unemployed as will the 300 plus people I work with.
—Mary Wood, Long Beach, CA

Keep Net Neutrality! ISPs should be classified common carriers.
—Fred Wellington, delray beach, FL

I DEPEND ON NET NEUTRALITY AND DEMAND THAT THE FCC WILL PROTECT AND KEEP THE INTERNET OPEN AND FREE!!! ALSO BY RECLASSIFYING ISP'S AS COMMON CARRIERS!!!!!
—Jonathan Apone, San Diego, CA

you are supposed to represent ALL of us not just the BIG money
—Carol Hanson, Lewistown, MT

As a person who does research and does depend on the internet to ferret out fact from fiction; I depend on equal access to every site. A tiered system would be detrimental to the free flow of information. I urge you to once and for all define ISP's as common carriers.
—Sandra Blankenship, Killeen, TX

Small businesses and non-profits should not be penalized by having to compete with large corporations.
—Susan Miller, Tucson, AZ are you guys seriously going on with this? This is exactly why programs like the FCC shouldn't exist or should be restrained in terms of power.

—Bryan Salazar, norcross, GA

Start with that it allows free exchanges of ideas.And Net Neutrality keeps the internet from being taken over by Verizon,Comcast,etc,.In contrast the "fast lane" for customers of Verizon,etc,will become a speed bump for the rest of us.
—Rob Keenan, Mukilteo, WA

Clearly, in the current age of instant, mass communication at the same time our human rights are under direct threat by an encroaching surveillance state, the very idea that the general public's access to a maximally free internet is absolutely critical. Any other issues that we may individually hold dear are potentially under serious threat if the internet that we have thus far known is subjected to an unfair, short-sighted, two-track segregation of services. The latest attempt by vested corporate interests to harness --and effectively hamper-- the people's access to critically important channels of information is unacceptable. Support real Net Neutrality, and scrap Tom Wheeler's half-baked plan for a two-tiered Internet. The people will be watching this one closely.
—Mr. Willliam Kool, Hudsonville, MI fair access for all!

—L Wong, Riverbank, CA

It is a fact that America has been and is in a state of decline. Our economy is weakening, our education lags behind many other countries in most metrics and our infrastucture has not improved significantly in decades. What has saved our country has been innovation whether it be the internet, iphone or any other number of technological innovations all this despite rampant government inefficiencies, and political cronyism. How does all this relate to net neutrality? The way I see it with the loss of net neutrality how can tomorrows facebook compete with today's facebook? How can capitalism thrive in a world of monopolies? How can the American citizen not have disdain for their own government when they are constantly being abused or spied by them? Net neutrality is essential to the future of America's economy and position in the country. Don't jeopordize our great but hurting country for the benefit of the few. Have the courage to do what is best. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Duy Bui, Iowa City, IA

By allowing a system that delivers two tiers of service, a form of censorship is created favoring those who can afford quality streaming content. Further, it puts control of that censorship into the hands of the isp. Other risks include unfavorable content throttling against competitive content providers. This all adds up to a very bad decision and not at all in line with protecting consumers.
—Robert Herion, Newtown, PA

Corporations with their own financial interests at heart should have no say in which internet services should get preferential treatment. A free and open internet is necessary in today's society.
—David Mansfield, Boulder, CO

Almost all U.S. businesses, regardless of size, have an Internet presence, and many of them depend on the Internet to conduct most or even all of their business. Allowing large telecom companies to squeeze out small business owners in favor of big corporations who can pay hefty fees will stifle our economic recovery. The proposed "Open Internet" rules would also mean higher costs for consumers, because businesses pass on the costs of the fees they're required to pay. These proposed rules are terrible for everyone except huge telecom companies who stand to rake in record profits. Higher prices, reduced content, and bigger hurdles for small businesses and startups are wrong for our country. It's time for the FCC to stand up for the people it's meant to protect and represent: average Americans, not billionaire corporations. Classifying ISPs as common carriers is neither revolutionary nor difficult. Telephone companies are already required to abide by these rules, which means the groundwork has been laid and there is precedent. The only remaining question is whether the FCC cares more about the American people and the future of our economy or about furious billionaires who don't care who gets hurt in their quest for profit and control at any cost. We're counting on you. Don't let us down.
—Heather Owen, Champaign, IL

The Net is a utility for everyone in the country. If it is allowed to discriminate free enterprise will be destroyed. No one owns the Internet we all do. Working America has paid for it and all should benefit equally. Keep the Net neutral for free enterprise, free speech and freedom of the press.
—Kenneth Nyberg, Franklin, MA

The internet is a cpmmon carrier, not a place where those can afford the price of the fast lane get special benefits. Students, seniors, educators and others need equal access.
—Sandra L. Herndon, Shelton, WA

As a web developer an open internet is a major influence on my work. To allow for the creation of fast lanes would be detrimental to my self and the millions of internet users in this country. I hope, as a citizen, you reject the proposed rules made by Chairman Wheeler and instead implement a plan that would reclassify ISPs as as common carriers under Title II of the telecommunications act of 1996. I will continue to contact and express my views and concerns to both my representatives and the FCC. Thank you for your time and consideration on these important matters.
—Kelly Gibbens, Tonganoxie, KS

I want the internet to remain a free communication channel where people can freely share ideas and media without bandwidth restrictions or anti-competitive practices such as ISPs blocking sites that content providers want them to.
—Micah Wittkopf, River Falls, WI

Please, I can't afford to pay more for my Internet service!
—Mrs. Valerie Klauscher, Crescent, PA

Leave our internet alone. I thought we decided this was to be left alone a long time ago, and here it is back again. Some of us this is all we have. so fix it and let it be. Thanks. Bob
—Bob Watland, paso Robles, CA

Wasn't this country founded on freedom and equality? This does not seem to be the America that was promised.
—John Frederick, Orlando, FL

The Internet should not be a service that discriminates against people with lower incomes.
—Benita Smith, Berkeley, CA

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeleris pushing a plan which would allow discrimination online. I want the FCC to toss out its rules and reclassify ISPs as common carriers Malcolm Yeates.
—Malcolm Yeates, Wellington,

As an IT professional, creations of "fast" and "slow" lanes on the internet would negatively affect my career and ability to earn money to feed my family significantly- it would end working from home and freelancing, staples of the IT industry.
—James Hudson, Boulder, CO

N.N. is very important to keep a level playing field, if you will, and enable ALL communication to operate freely and without restraint, as it should be!
—Mr. Thomas Moldenhauer, Saint Paul, MN

Discrimination is bad, if it exists, you will just create problems.
—James Woltz, Salem, VA

The Internet is the largest, most democratic communication medium in contemporary society. ISPs should be classified as common carriers to keep access open.
—Mark H. Sullivan, Indian Trail, NC

Dear FCC. Net neutrality is important to me, and everyone else I know, because it allows the freedom of speech that our constitution demands. It prevents discrimination on a national and international scale that fosters the intellectual space that is the internet. When you threaten that, you not only threaten the freedoms that people have enjoyed since the inception of the internet, but also the entire scientific community for whom the arpanet and internet's were originally created for. Reclassify ISP's as common carriers. Failing to do so will have disastrous repercussions throughout the entire scientific, and global, community.
—Ethan Eldridge, Burlington, VT

In my small business I depend on open public access to maintain efficient communication, graphic content and data transfer with my data base of both current and prospective consumers. A two-tiered system would benefit corporate IS Provider profits at the expense of diminished public access, thus producing biased special interest controls and greatly impair small businesses. In addition this radical change to the national digital backbone would have a drastic negative impact on our future national economic GDP.
—Henry S. Garvey, Alameda, CA

Throw out your rules that allow online discrimination and reclassify Internet service providers as common carriers. This is the ONLY way to protect real Net Neutrality!
—Levi White, Lakeland, GA

This plan is appalling! ISPs must be classified as common carriers. Net neutrality is vital, and as an Australian is offends and deeply concerns me that these changes are being made with no option for internet users like me to have our interests and needs considered. Big corporations already control too much of our lives. They must not be allowed to influence the way the internet works as well.
—Yvette Watt Watt, ,

We need the Internet to stay free, and NOT dominated by a bunch of greedy, heartless telelcoms like Comcast, Verizon and AT&T. Please, throw out your current rules and plan and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers. Keep Net Neutrality. Thank you. Sincerely yours, Regenia Johnson
—Regenia G Johnson, Wentzville, MO

The FCC's job is to protect the public. The proposed rules before you are terrible and will harm the public and the competitive landscape. What is before you is exactly the situation this nation faced in the late 1800's with railroad and oil. Since railroads owned the only means of efficient transportation they were able to control nearly every aspect of business. Completion? You didn't secure a deal with the railroad Barron's, your business failed. The FTC and FCC were created to stop such abuse. As it is under the current rules, the large tel com's make it very difficult for new ISP's to start up to challenge their near monopoly status. Now handing over the rights to pick and chose whose internet packet gets priority to large tel com's is like having the fox guard the hen house. The have already proven they are poor citizens and cannot be trusted. Once enacted, if they violate the rules, and they will, it will take YEARS to change them. They cannot be trusted and their prior behavior proves it. I understand we as the public stand no chance against the lobbiest, large tel com lawyers, and corrupt public officials. As soon as you crack that door to allow such rules there it will difficult to turn back. As it is Comcast has DECREASING cable subscribers, but increasing revenues. They are bordering on price gouging. Where I live there is no alternative for high speed internet except Comcast. AT&T DSL is so slow and unreliable, partly due to the distance from the main switching station, and partly because of poor 50 year-old wires that get water logged every time it rains. Advancing the internet to ALL people means increasing COMPETION. The proposed rules will dimish competion, not improve it. This is a very serious issue.
—John Cushman, Wauconda, IL

I run a small entertainment company that depends on the internet to not only distribute our content, because we don't have the billions of dollars our Hollywood counterparts do, but we also depend on the internet to livestream events for clients. Instituting a "fast lane" will cost me more money than we can currently afford and put us out of business. Brent Dow McCort Entertainment
—Brent Dow, Arlington, TX

Freedom of speech is one of the cornerstones of our democracy. If we don't protect net neutrality, the corporations get to censor what THEY don't like and can prevent free and open flow of information. Don't allow the corporations to have this power!
—Jan Harris, Sebastopol, CA

We do not have sufficient competition to allow market forces to keep corporate greed in check. We need oversite to protect the consumer and THIS latest action by you the FCC smells like graft and corruption. We need you to reverse this and we need the judiciary branch to investgate!
—Walter Hewitt, Uncasville, CT

We all have the right to the internet as it is now and not allow these corporations charge extra money to give is fastvor slowblane crap. It violates the agreement with my carrier as I agreed to receive the services I pay for.
—Jeff Scooler, Portland, OR

Communication should be at a level playing speed.
—Mrs. Lenora Michelle Chavez, San Diego, CA

True Net Neutrality is vital to the livelyhood of many content creator, as well as the preservation of the internet's founding principles. The very innovation that birthed it and brought it to this point would be stifled and ground to a halt as the companies already lobbying for content discrimination become free to hide behind 'commercially reasonable' practices and hinder competing innovative content.
—Nahuel Deamelio, ,

Your current proposal would irreparably harm the growth of the internet, the single most important advancement we as a people have in our daily lives. It is not yours to sell off or kill in the name of greed. A two-tiered Internet is bad for those who matter most. The people. Please listen to the outpour of disagreement to what you are currently putting forth as a viable plan. You have the time and power to make this right.
—Nolan Mates, Cleveland, OH

Net Neutrality IS THE ONLY FAIR WAY TO TREAT EVERYONE WHO USES THE INTERNET EQUALLY!
—Mrs. and Roger Erbe, Lansing, MI

The internets must be neutral. Students, teachers, doctors, patients, everyone should have equal access. This country can only stay a great country when creativity flows freely. Without access to information not only will we fall behind other countries, we won't be a free people. Keep the things that make us stand out. Do not cave to "big interests". Be a hero. Protect the rights of all to have access to vital information. You will be revered for generations for keeping the internets open to all.
—Margaret Comfort, portland, OR

The internet is for everyone. With all the advertisements, I'm sure there's enough money coming in to make it available to everyone.
—Elmone Kissling, Eureka, CA

Putting any form of communication in the hands of a company that has the ability to interfer with that communication is wrong. The possiblity for abuse is huge. Why is the FCC even considering this? I thought you were supposed to protect us--not sell us to the highest bidder.
—Kathy DeWispelare, Omaha, NE

I am a US citizen, registered voter, and taxpayer, & I like the internet free & clear, the way it is now. I don't think that big companies should be able to buy faster speeds, it should all be equal. I use the internet for practically everything I do, from balancing my checkbook to surfing Facebook, and I support "Net Neutrality" 100%.
—Jacqueline Luongo, Ocala, FL

Scrap this plan now!!! We want real net neutrality or someone will be fired Tom —Matthew C. Simpson, Portland, OR

I am at a loss to understand why anyone would want to loose their freedom of access to information. Information is freedom after all. Democracy is about making informed decisions from the widest possible source s. Having my internet service provider censor my access would be a gross breach of that freedom. Please do not take a giant leap backwards like Putin's Russia or Communist China, and keep Net Neutrality intact!!!
—John Schmitt, Palm Springs, CA

Equal access to information for everybody makes real democracy possible. And we want real democracy, don't we?
—Hans Berggren, ,

A free world depends on net neutrality.
—James Melloh, Portland, ME

As a self-employed web developer, I use the Internet to make all my money. Without free and fair access to all the internet at an affordable rate, my small business my close. I made $21,000 last year. How much did AT&T, Comcast, and Verizon make?
—Gus Watkins, Minneapolis, MN

An open internet is a necessary element to the free and open exchange of ideas, and the last bastion of democratic communication for people and organizations of modest means. Allowing ISPs to extract additional fees for preferential access will shut out even more people from the free flow of information and exacerbate the already gross inequities of our society. Don't do this!
—Jeff Klotz, Houston, TX

NO TOLL ROADS ON THE INTERNET...JUST ONE FAST INTERNET SYSTEM FOR ALL!!!
—Mrs. & Terry Cadwallader, St. Louis, MO

A free internet is more important than corporate profits.
—Mark Nielson, Bend, OR

Rich people don't deserve faster speed (Koch bros. rich particularly) so they can propagandize and destroy democracy. Get with it Wheeler! Obama! You campaigned on net neutrality, we elected you in part because of that - do it dammit!
—Robert Price, Urbandale, IA

I am so disappointed by the recent developments with the FCC and the move to dismantle Net Neutrality. I have a master's degree in Mass Communication, where we examined the socioeconomic impact access to the internet has on people's lives. As a researcher at the University of Illinois, we studied how people rely on libraries to get government information to access services they need to survive in our world. We've already strip-mined libraries' budgets for books--now how are they going to pay to provide the type of internet service their patrons need? I've seen first hand the difference between the information haves and have-nots, and by implementing Mr. Wheeler's rules, the FCC will widen that gulf. That is not the America I want to live in--where corporate greed dictates who has access to information and who doesn't. Shame on you if you think Wheeler's rules are anything else than that.
—Lauren C. Teffeau, Albquerque, NM

Our content and speed should never be dictated by corporations. They do not own the internet!
—Michelle Sanville-Seebold, Fond du Lac, WI

FCC Chairman Tom Wheeler's plan would let Internet service providers like AT&T, Comcast and Verizon create a two-tiered Internet, with fast lanes for those who can afford the extra fees and a slow dirt road for the rest of us. This proposal would kill the open Internet. I depend on Net Neutrality and demand that the FCC protect the open Internet by reclassifying ISPs as common carriers.
—Nelson Yester, miami, FL

I am not a second class citizen and second class internet is not acceptable.
—Bill Entrekin, Lahaina, HI

I am looking forward to the next Google, Microsoft, or other new company to put forward new and innovative ideas an services on the internet. Your plan makes it virtually impossible for these new startups to innovate. You must reclassify internet access as common carrier services. Nothing else will be acceptable to the citizens of our country.
—James J. Walsh M.D., Morganton, NC

I depend on Net Neutrality for my freelance business. Higher fees just to access what is now available to me will probably put me out of business. It will be bad for lots of small businesses and start ups. More important, though, is the chilling effect that killing the open internet would have on our democracy. That has me worried. Reclassify ISPs as common carriers, as if your own well being and access to opportunities and your voice in the political process depended on it.
—Nancy Michon, Houston, TX

I simply don't understand why the FCC is reluctant to reclassify the ISPs as common carriers. In terms of social/economic/cultural impact, the Internet completely blows away the telephone. The telephone absolutely revolutionized society. That was (using today's terms) voice data only, but nevertheless the US government recognized the astonishing importance of that technology and took steps to ensure access to it with its common carrier regulations. The internet carries voice data for telephony services, which alone ought to (arguably) be enough to classify ISPs as common carriers - many people don't have land lines any longer, and telephone companies themselves use the Internet for voice data transmission. When you consider that it also carries data ranging from text messages to movies to Wall Street securities buy/sell orders to corner store gasoline pump transactions, the Internet completely demolishes the telephone in terms of its comparative effects on and use by society and, in turn, society's reliance upon it. The fact that the FCC is even considering - yes, "considering", "contemplating," "mulling over," or any other non-decisive verb you want to use - the fact that there's any uncertainty whatsoever as to whether or not there ought to be equal access for all (or whether there ought to be put into place regulations that have any likelihood other than zero of being interpreted so as to permit unequal access), or whether the ISPs provide a service that is, at the absolute barest minimum, exponentially more important and revolutionary than the telephone technology that resulted in the common carrier designation in the first place, completely astonishes me. If this actually gets read, thanks for your time. If you're an intern/screener, please make sure that this perspective - not even necessarily this comment itself - also gets passed along. You will get a (metric) tonne of emails respecting regulatory capture, partisanship, corporate malfeasance and the like, which may be instructive but which also may not be useful in building a consensus at the FCC, and I think that a simple comparison between the service the ISPs provide and the (by Internet standards) relatively simple and unidimensional technology that was, nevertheless, so important that it prompted the common carrier designation in the first place, has the potential to be overlooked. Best regards, Norm Schindler Edmonton, Alberta, Canada
—Norm Schindler, ,

I can barely afford Internet, yet alone extra fees.
—James Purtue, Columbus, OH

throw out these rules and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers.
—Justin white, Aberdeen, MD

Our primary source information and commerce must remain neutral and deserves protection. The FCC is faced with a choice between serving for the good of the American public, or for the private interests of Comcast et al. So, exactly which interests does today's FCC serve: your fellow Americans, or just Comcast?
—Gabriel Reed, Cotati, CA

The web is a learning resource for the entire world. It must be protected as much as our public schools and libraries. Making it all about profits and money will silence the independent average joes who provide 75% of the valuable information that is available on the web.
—Denise Domlesky, Hollywood, FL

Since the Internet is how many people communicate today, it should be regulated like telephone services.
—Dan Wicht, Fridley, MN

I run a small business that depends on open Internet access. Why should my business be hurt, just to make things easier for the big providers?
—Jeff Dee, Pflugerville, TX

as above
—Marilyn Black, Wilmette, IL

Net neutrality encourages fairness, diversity, and equality. Threatening that basis not only is a danger to equal net usage, but also encourages the divide between high-income individuals vs. low-income individuals.
—Beckie Betcha, Anaheim, CA

Equal opportunity for web-based businesses, especially small/startup businesses
—Kevin Frazier, Bremerton, WA

The internet is a utility no different in service than cable, electricity or water. Treating access to it any differently amounts to an affront to the 1st amendment of the US constitution.
—Michael Hanebutt, Sacramento, CA

The speed of internet access is very important to everyone and should be the same for all at the cost. Otherwise an advantage would be given only to those able to pay more for faster information. This could also affect stock market transactions, essentially rigging the stock market. Service providers could slow access at will, encouraging subscribers to pay more or endure the slow lane. Keep net neutrality.
—Eugene Ekaitis, monongahela, PA

The internet is and should be a collective, communal resource, and should not be allowed to be co-opted by corporate interests. Please do the right thing, and protect this civil treasure.
—Noka Agnew, Somerville, MA

It's important to have equal rights for all internet users. Creators, consumers, and other internet users use the internet everyday. I've condemmed starting, and promotion of sensorship as unconstitutional. Without open internet, our freedom of using internet won't be easy.
—Aaron Johnson, Salina, KS

This is disgusting. I am just trying to survive.
—Donna Sonnenberg, Edmonds, WA

As a librarian, we rely on the internet for so many of aspects of the job; from researching programming, to looking up readalikes, to suggesting quality content for everyone who comes in to the library--be it for jobs, leisure, or education. Stop trying to make this about your wallet and the bottom line, and think about every one else this affects--like those of us serving the public. Keep ISPs as common carriers.
—Molly, Southington, CT

Once again the rich want to exploit those of us with less money by taking over the internet. Please keep the net open to all. We need it!
—Ms. Beverly Dahlen, San Francisco, CA

I don't want my choice of traffic to be held price hostage by my provider, or any company. Any fast lane charges are sure to be passed on to me as the consumer if you let Tom Wheeler, who is obviously still a cable lobbyist, push his horrible rules through. FCC; throw out you horrid rules and instead reclassify ISP's as common carriers, just like a FCC that had a chairman that actually cared about net neutrality, would.
—William Peyton White, Rock Hill, SC

I'd rather not have my internet throttled based on what ISP's that are for net-neutrality say should be throttled. I'd rather not pay more for services I use than I already do.
—Robert Fryling, Waldo, FL

The internet is a wonderful to get unbiased information and meet people and play games without having someone in the room with you.
—James Arrell, Medford, OR

I am writing to express my support for designating ISPs as common carriers. The internet is more than an entertainment venue. It is a vital conduit to a free market and the free expression of ideas. Internet service providers must not be allowed undue influence over the exchange of ideas and commerce.
—Matthew Cook, moore, OK

I oppose Chairman Tom Wheeler's proposal, which would essentially gut net neutrality by creating a "fast lane" for internet traffic. The proposal is bad for businesses, bad for consumers, and bad for this country.
—Mr. Matt Sayler, Vancouver, WA

Just like the telephone was to the 20th century, the internet is the communication technology of the 21st century! Like telephones, water, electricity, sewer and roads, the internet is a modern public utility, and must be classified as a COMMON CARRIER. These few powerful corporations want to govern and filter all digital communication. It is worse than thought police. They seek nothing less than to give themselves a total monopoly on what ideas live or die. They are trying to make themselves the gatekeepers to everyone's business and communication-- the ultimate arbiters of innovation and discourse worldwide. This is happening now, in Mexico. It will happen here if you let it. There was a time when the FCC stood for the people of this country. Your forebears regulated against foreign ownership of 20th century media on the basis of national security. Today, the companies and billionaires who stand to benefit from controlling content on the web are more powerful than most governments on Earth and hold no allegiance to anything but themselves. Allowing them to monopolize discourse on the single most important commerce and communications network of all time is dangerously unAmerican. Shame on you, Mr. Wheeler, for even considering these rules you've proposed!!
—Mike Quilligan, Silver Spring, MD

Stop the constant give away to corporate interest; do your jobs and protect the public's.
—Amy Quartermain, Austin, TX

It is a matter of basic Constitutional Civil Rights.
—Ms Margarita Louzi, ,

The Internet is the only free place left on this planet and it should remain as such.
—Sašo Jovanovič, ,

I am a man of modest means and i can not afford higher internet prices!
—Donald M. Anderson, ESTACADA, OR

I don't want internet providers controlling which sites we can visit.
—George Graham, Milwaukee, WI

It is just ba!!
—Peter Meyer, Loveland, CO

People deserve a free and open internet. Killing net neutrality kills jobs!! AT&T, Comcast, and Verizon must pay their fair share of taxes!! Let's create a Net Neutrality bill that increases taxes with these three corporations!!
—Darren Skotnes, Delmar, NY

The Internet should not be treated as a cable or satellite tv provider type of business. It's a window of information and interaction to connect us all. The implications of these new rules would set a very bad precedent and would established a masked type of censorship. It would be absurd for these providers to tell me if I want access to Yahoo and Ebay I would have to pay a certain price. But If I want access to Google and Amazon I'd have to pay extra money. And the worst case scenario would be If I want access to services like Netflix and Xbox Live I would have to subscribe to some kind of premium package like HBO on cable and pay a ridiculous amount of money. This scheme is totally discriminatory against us the home computer and personal smartphone users. The Internet was made as a tool to connect humanity together. It was never designed for big corporations to profit off of it.
—Johnny Rodriguez, Yauco, PR

Why mess w/perfection for a few greedy corporations???? Please don't allow this to happen.
—Sheridan Sonne Rice, Wrightwood, CA

As important a tool and communications service the internet has become, it merits the same protections and restrictions placed upon radio and television access! Protect net neutrality!
—Mr. Korey Chappell, Bronx, NY

