When Accidents Happen -- Quick Steps Save Lives

by Louis Boyd James

The following copyrighted article is reprinted with permission from Farm Journal, January 1990. Copyright 1990, Farm Journal, Inc., Washington Square, Philadelphia, PA 19105.

It was his own farm accident at the age of 16 that prompted Larry Whetstone to become an emergency medical technician (EMT)--one of those people who know what to do when an accident or life threatening illness like a heart attack hits.

At the time, Whetstone's process of death, and of the technology to postpone it. Truly, many people have enjoyed many additional months or years of life, when they have been spared an untimely death by the skillful and knowledgeable hands of a well trained person in an emergency. Still, for another group of our citizens, this knowledge and skill have served only to prolong the pain and suffering by postponing an imminent death from terminal illness or old age. In these individuals, prolongation of life has, ironically, robbed them of the dignity with which they once lived.

No doubt, we have all been involved with the deaths of patients, friends or loved ones whose death was welcomed as an appropriate end to a full life, or the merciful end to the suffering from a terminal

EMTs--like Whetstone--and first responders carry pagers. When an emergency call comes from the Dewey County sheriff's office, those who are available respond. "We go in sweats, night clothes, high heels," says Peggy Cole, laughing. She and her husband Den farm and ranch eight miles southwest of Taloga. After Den's father suffered a stroke, the Coles decided that one of them should take some emergency training.

Peggy works three days a week. This order is good ONLY for that hospitalization, and ONLY for that current medical condition, which may be terminal. This order is issued only after consultation between the physician and the patient or the patient's family. It may be rescinded by the patient or family at any time, verbally or in writing. Many caring Physicians will discuss this with their Patients at the time of admission to a hospital or nursing home, even if the patient is not expected to be imminently terminal, as this avoids decision-making in "the heat of the moment," should the situation arise.

A second mechanism is that of the "Living Will." This legal document may be executed by the patient, whether or not they are critically ill. A "Living Will" states that the person does not want any cases where tractors had turned over and crushed the driver. "I [now] pay a lot more attention to the slope when I'm going on the side of a hill," says Pike, who has been an EMT since 1976.

His EMT training made him realize that the common idea that "jerk an injured person up and throwing 'em in a car or truck to take 'em to the hospital doesn't work. It's necessary to keep an injured person quiet, especially if there might be a chance of survival. Most will appreciate the opportunity to leave this life with the same dignity with which it was lived. Should you need any additional information, contact Beverly Rector at the S.P.E.M.S. office.
