To Whom-it-may-concern,

As an American citizen and media consumer, I absolutely support Net-Neutrality Regulations and deeply oppose any attempt to change, remove, or circumvent such regulations that protect citizens and small businesses from monopolistic tendencies within the internet media landscape. It is absolutely unconscionable to allow large internet providers to speed up or slow down the speed of one site or another based on it's ability to pay. As of now, huge corporations already have a strangle hold on internet providers and we see the results daily. Americans are already provided with the slowest internet connections among developed nations and any further power or market concentration by such corporations is unfair and unAmerican! I will fight such attempts at media deregulation in any capacity I can and so will all of my friends and family. Therefore I oppose the "Restoring Internet Freedom" act as you call it, and I will be writing my members of congress about this as well.

Good day to you,

Kevin G. Vecchione
