FYI, KitKat update kills Foxfi (apparently) on the Verizon HTC One

Just completed the update on my phone. Upon reboot I got a notification warning me that someone could be spying on my Network Communication because I had the Foxfi credentials installed..

Upon Launched Foxfi it seems to work as usual until the end, I get the popups saying I need to subscribe to mobile Hotspot.

I removed the credentials and reinstalled, still the same thing.

Just a FYI to you folks if Foxfi is essential.

Well that sucks. I found this in the change log :
- Over The Air (OTA) Wi-Fi exclusivity is now implemented
I assume this is what is blocking FoxFi.

Is there a way to block 4.4.2 from downloading? If not, I may have to look into rooting.

Update 11/24: According to a number of our readers, plus a number of newly updated reviews on FoxFi's Google Play listing that confirm, FoxFi is back to working on Verizon. Enjoy that unlimited data, enjoy it, friends.

I hope this isn't the end, but it may be. FoxFi has

WiFi Tethering and the new "Verizon Plan"

09-17-2015 08:36 AM

I recently changed over to the new "The Verizon Plan" which is, in many cases, cheaper and more versatile than previous offerings (Thank you TMobile and Project Fi). I have been able to engage the WiFi hot-spot feature on the X Pure even though I don't have a subscription for it (previously required for unlimited plans and some others).

Using the hot-spot registers against my data allotment but I have not seen any effects on my plan billing (yet).

I'm curious if any other "Verizon Plan" X-Purists notice this behavior too. As always YMMV but it appears we may have caught at least a temporary break.

Ever since Verizon got rid of unlimited you are able to tether.

This helped me too

My previous plan was so old tethering did not appear to be an option at all - but it (mostly) fit my needs at the time. Glad to know I'm "legal" all the same. - Thanks

I am considering purchasing the Moto X Pure. I viewed a comparison of the Motorola Droid Turbo vs the Moto X Pure. The comparison said the Turbo had the Mobile Hotspot Tethering availability but the Moto X Pure did not. I still have Verizon's unlimited plan and the Hotspot is important to us since we travel alot.

So... is the Mobile Hotspot available on the Pure???
