

I am writing in support of net neutrality and to petition the FCC to reverse the decision made earlier this year to gut protections of internet users to have full, unimpeded access to the internet. The policies and processes put in place by the Obama administration protects the rights and interests of all internet users, insuring unfettered access and denying the right of internet service providers like Comcast and Verizon (the former employer of the FCC chair) to limit internet speeds to the highest bidders and prevent access to all web sites. This decision was clearly a result of the successful lobbying by the ISPs and contrary to the charge of the FCC to serve the needs of American citizens.
