Dear Members of the Federal Communications Commission:

The Colorado River Indian Tribes (CRIT or Tribes) submit the following comments on the Federal Communication Commission's proposed rulemaking Accelerating Wireless Broadband Deployment by Removing Barriers to Infrastructure Investment (Docket No. 17-79).

The Colorado River Indian Tribes is a federally recognized Indian tribe comprised of over 4,200 members from four distinct tribes—the Mohave, Chemehuevi, Hopi, and Navajo. The approximately 300,000-acre Colorado River Indian Reservation sits astride the Colorado River between Blythe, California and Parker, Arizona. The ancestral homelands of the Tribes' members, however, extend far beyond the Reservation boundaries. Significant portions of public and private lands in California, Arizona, and Nevada were occupied by the ancestors of the Colorado River Indian Tribes' Mohave and Chemehuevi members since time immemorial. These landscapes remain imbued with substantial cultural, spiritual, and religious significance for the Tribes' current members and future generations. For this reason, CRIT has a strong interest in maintaining a voice in land management decisions in the region, including in the siting of wireless broadband facilities and other infrastructure.

As a preliminary matter, the Tribes are deeply concerned that one of this administration's first rulemaking actions appears poised to significantly reduce tribal involvement in federal infrastructure decisions contrary to the tribal trust relationship, government-to-government consultation requirements, federal law, and bedrock principles of tribal sovereignty. Specifically, it is apparent to us that the Commission is pursuing this rulemaking at the behest of wireless providers who complain that Section 106's tribal component is too cumbersome and costly. This approach places the economic concerns of individual companies and corporations over the sovereignty of all tribal governments and the protection of irreplaceable cultural resources. As such, it is unacceptable. The Tribes urge the Federal Communications Commission and the current administration to reconsider this approach and instead work to build better relationships with federally recognized tribes.

The Tribes have seen firsthand the direct and irreparable harm that can occur when federal agencies attempt to shortcut the Section 106 consultation process. As a result, CRIT recently adopted a government-to-government consultation policy to guide all consultation activities between the CRIT Tribal Council and federal agency decisionmakers. Relying on federal laws and other guidance, the consultation policy establishes the minimum requirements for adequate and lawful government-to-government consultation. A copy of this policy is attached.

Many of the proposals to reduce the regulatory impediments to wireless network infrastructure investment and deployment contained in the proposed rulemaking directly conflict with the federal law requirements highlighted in CRIT's consultation policy. For instance:

- Geographic Areas of Interest: Under the existing project review approach, tribes are given the opportunity to identify geographic areas of interest in which they will be consulted regarding proposed projects. The proposed rulemaking raises a concern that this system has created areas of geographic overlap, where the Commission must consult with multiple tribes. The proposed rulemaking also states that the Commission now seeks to “mitigate the burden” for applicants created by this overlap, including by requiring tribes to make narrower geographic requests or to certify such requests. CRIT objects to the very idea that tribes should consider actions to lessen the “burden” on applicants. Tribes are involved in Section 106 consultation to protect their cultural heritages, which are not confined to the boundaries of modern day reservations. Moreover, the particular proposals are extremely problematic. As noted in CRIT's consultation policy, “government-to-government consultation must respect tribal sovereignty,” including the right of the Tribes to decide when its involvement is necessary. CRIT urges the Commission to reject any proposals to limit or discourage tribal participation in areas considered by the tribes to be part of their ancestral homeland.
- “Duplicative” Review. CRIT rejects any proposals to allow one tribe to speak for other tribes with connections to the area in which a proposed project is located. Specifically, the proposed rulemaking requests comments on “whether there are mechanisms to gain efficiencies to ensure that duplicative review is not conducted by each Tribal Nation.” This statement suggests a fundamental misunderstanding about the nature of tribal sovereignty. Federally recognized tribes are each distinct, sovereign nations. Individual tribes have no automatic authority to speak for other tribes, just like the United States has no automatic authority to speak for Canada or Mexico. As explained further in CRIT's consultation policy, “meetings held with representatives from multiple tribes do not constitute consultation with CRIT.” Instead, consultation must recognize the distinct sovereign status of each tribe.
- Lack of Response. The proposed rulemaking suggests that “advances in communication during the past decade, particularly with respect to communications via the Internet” may have decreased the amount of time required to respond to requests for consultation. This statement does not consider that these same advances in communication have also increased the number of requests received by tribes. CRIT invests significant tribal resources in cultural resource protection and has dedicated staff to respond to such requests. Nevertheless, tribal staff is frequently overwhelmed by the volume of consultation requests. As explained further in CRIT's consultation policy, “federal agencies must recognize that government-to-government consultation consumes scarce tribal resources,” and therefore must be willing to “explore funding sources to remunerate the Tribes for participating in consultation.” CRIT urges the Commission to reject any proposals to further expedite government-to-government consultation or to penalize Tribes for requesting additional time.

- Self-Certification. The proposed rulemaking suggest that applicants might “self-certify” their compliance with the Commission’s Section 106 process, without requiring Commission involvement. This proposal fundamentally misconstrues the nature of Section 106 consultation. As explained further in CRIT’s consultation policy, “communications between CRIT and project applicants or proponents (where such applicants or proponents are not federal entities) are not government-to-government consultation.” CRIT urges the Commission to reject any proposals in which applicants are ultimately responsible for the Commission’s obligations under Section 106 and other government-to-government consultation requirements.
- Consultation on the Proposed Rulemaking. To CRIT’s knowledge, the Commission has failed to initiate government-to-government consultation on the proposed rulemaking. As explained in CRIT’s consultation policy, “the United States must engage in government-to-government consultation with the Tribes whenever actions or decisions of the United States have the potential to impact the Tribes, its government, tribal land, or cultural resources.” The propose rulemaking has the potential to both impact the ability of the Tribes to engage in lawful government-to-government consultation on wireless broadband projects and to negatively impact cultural resources. CRIT urges the Commission to halt further action on the proposed rulemaking until after engaging in government-to-government consultation with tribes that will be affected by this proposed rulemaking, including the Colorado River Indian Tribes.

In addition to these specific comments, the Tribes also join and reiterate the comments submitted by the National Congress of the American Indians, the United South and Eastern Tribes Sovereignty Protection Fund, and the National Association of Tribal Historic Preservation Officers on the draft notice of proposed rulemaking (ID 1041817980571).

Respectfully,

Dennis Patch
Chairman
Colorado River Indian Tribes

Government-to-Government Consultation Policy of the Colorado River Indian Tribes

The federally recognized Colorado River Indian Tribes (CRIT or the Tribes) have over 4,000 active members from four distinct tribes – the Mohave, Chemehuevi, Hopi, and Navajo. The Tribes' reservation, which encompasses nearly 300,000 acres, straddles the Colorado River in both Arizona and California. The Tribes' ancestral homelands, however, extend far beyond the current reservation boundaries, into what is now public and private land in Arizona, California, and Nevada. As a result, the Tribes' cultural resources, including sacred sites, trails, and artifacts, are found beyond the reservation boundaries as well. The Tribes are deeply committed to the ongoing protection of such resources located both on- and off-reservation.

Federal law recognizes that CRIT is a sovereign government distinct from the United States. As a result of this status, the United States must engage in government-to-government consultation with the Tribes when actions or decisions of the United States have the potential to impact the Tribes, its government, tribal land, or cultural resources. This consultation must occur before the momentum toward any particular outcome becomes too great. The purpose of this government-to-government consultation must be to obtain CRIT's free, prior, and informed consent for such actions.¹ Desired outcomes include an ongoing, mutually beneficial relationship between federal agencies and the CRIT Tribal Council, deference to tribal sovereignty, and informed decision-making by both the United States and the Tribes. Federal agency staff and decision-makers must view consultation as more than listening and learning sessions with Tribal Council. Instead, there must be an ongoing, dynamic relationship between federal agencies and the Tribes that is built upon the agencies' concerted effort to understand the Tribes' history, culture, and government.

The Tribes have developed this policy paper to guide future government-to-government consultation with the United States and its administrative agencies.² This paper outlines CRIT's consultation rights and the specific characteristics that comprise minimally adequate consultation under federal law. This paper also offers additional suggestions to ensure that consultation is effective and mutually respectful.³ If federal agencies do not follow this policy, CRIT does not consider the communications from the agencies to meet the consultation requirements of tribal or federal law. Acknowledgement of this policy is required before an agency schedules a government-to-government meeting with Tribal Council. CRIT is committed to seeking recourse

Why A Formal Process is Needed

Federal agencies (including the Department of the Interior, Bureau of Land Management, and Bureau of Indian Affairs) have consistently failed to engage in adequate government-to-government consultation with CRIT and other tribes. The United States recently recognized this troubled history in suggesting needed modifications to the consultation process.⁴ In CRIT's experience, agencies have asked for substantive tribal comments on project and policy documents after those projects and policies have already been approved or implemented. Agency staff and decision-makers have attended meetings with Tribal Council without adequate information or authority to meaningfully respond to the Tribes' concerns. Agencies have repeatedly refused to provide responses to CRIT's comments, including any explanation for why CRIT's requests cannot be accommodated. These failures have resulted in direct harm to CRIT, its members, and cultural resources of great importance to the Tribes.

As one example, BLM authorized construction of the nearly 2,000-acre Genesis Solar Energy Project on land once occupied by the ancestors of CRIT's Mohave members. The project involved significant grading along the shoreline of Ford Dry Lake, resulting in the removal of over 3,000 cultural resources over the vehement objections of the Tribes. These artifacts are now stored at the San Bernardino County Museum with no access for CRIT members. In accordance with cultural, spiritual, and religious practices, CRIT has repeatedly asked BLM to permit reburial of the Genesis artifacts, as well as any other artifacts that are inadvertently disturbed within the ancestral homeland. Yet, BLM has refused to engage in government-to-government consultation on this critical topic. Letters have been left unanswered, harmful agency policies have been issued without advance notice or consultation, and BLM officials have been unprepared to discuss their position when in-person meetings have occurred. These consultation failures have resulted in severe and ongoing harm to CRIT and its members.

Basis of Consultation Right

The fundamental principle underlying CRIT's right to meaningful consultation with the United States is the Indian trust doctrine. Pursuant to this doctrine, the United States has a fiduciary duty over tribal lands and resources as Indian trust assets.⁵ As part of this duty, the United States has an obligation to consult with CRIT about federal actions that have the potential to impact these assets or other attributes of tribal sovereignty. For CRIT, tribal sovereignty includes an obligation to protect tribal and cultural resources that are located in the ancestral homelands of CRIT members.

This fundamental consultation right is engendered in federal statutes,⁶ executive orders,⁷ and agency policies.⁸ These laws help implement and explain the consultation right that stems from the Indian trust doctrine, but do not diminish it.⁹ Where appropriate, CRIT relies on these laws to support its definition of adequate consultation.

Characteristics of Adequate Consultation

Tribal Sovereignty. Government-to-government consultation must respect tribal sovereignty.¹⁰ The federal government shall not treat consultation as a “box to be checked,” but as a meaningful dialogue intended to result in consensus between the United States and the Tribes.

Addressing Tribal Concerns. The federal government shall timely seek and review CRIT’s written and oral comments and provide comprehensive responses to Tribal concerns and requests.¹¹ Responses to written comments should generally be provided before any in-person government-to-government consultation. Prior to reaching its final decision, a federal agency must explain how that decision addresses CRIT’s concerns.¹² Where an agency is unable to fully address CRIT’s concerns, the agency shall clearly explain its reasoning based on the legal, practical, or policy constraints on its decision-making.¹³ If CRIT has articulated its concerns in writing, this explanation should be in writing as well.

Involved Parties. Government-to-government consultation requires an in-person meeting between CRIT Tribal Council and the agency decision-maker with ultimate authority for a proposed project or action.¹⁴ This decision-maker must be prepared with sufficient details about the proposed project or action, the Tribes’ history, culture and government, and the Tribes’ anticipated or specific concerns with respect to the proposed project or action.¹⁵ This decision-maker should also have formal training regarding tribal sovereignty, the Indian trust doctrine, and other aspects of federal Indian law. The agency should use its staff to communicate project information to CRIT and its staff and to prepare the agency decision-maker for the government-to-government consultation. For example, prior to meeting with CRIT Tribal Council, it is the Tribes' expectation that agency staff will have provided baseline information about the project and its potential impacts to Tribal staff, such as survey results and ethnographic reports. However, CRIT does not recognize staff-to-staff discussions or communications as fulfilling the federal government's consultation responsibility.¹⁶

In addition, communications between CRIT and project applicants or proponents (where such applicants or proponents are not federal entities) are not government-to-government consultation. Such communications, however, can help to convey information and reduce conflict. Unless requested by CRIT, federal agencies shall not interfere with such communications. Finally, meetings held with representatives from multiple tribes do not constitute consultation with CRIT unless CRIT expressly agrees that consultation format.¹⁷

Timing. Government-to-government consultation must occur as early as practicable, so that tribal concerns can be taken into account before the momentum toward a particular project or action is too great.¹⁸ Federal agencies should provide basic information about a project or action and its potential impacts to CRIT as soon as the agency begins initial planning for a project or action or a private entity approaches the agency to submit an application.¹⁹ Federal agencies should keep CRIT apprised of the decision-making timeline so that the Tribes can participate at appropriate junctures. Federal agencies shall continue to consult with Tribes until they make a decision on the proposed project or action, and if requested by the Tribes or required by law, until construction or implementation of the project or action is complete.

¹⁹ Improving Tribal Consultation, Key Principle 3.

Scope of Consultation. Federal agencies must be willing to engage in consultation on any potential impacts of a proposed project or action to CRIT, its members, its land, or its cultural resources.²⁰ Consultation shall not be limited to potential impacts to properties eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places²¹ or equivalent state registers, or protected by the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act. If federal approval is needed for only a portion of a proposed project or action, the agency shall nevertheless consult on potential impacts from the whole of the project or action. Federal agencies should not expect CRIT to provide information about impacts to cultural resources in scientific terms and should weigh the Tribe's cultural, spiritual, historical, and anthropological input with the respect and deference that it is due.²²

Confidentiality. Information obtained via government-to-government consultation shall be kept confidential, except to the extent that CRIT provides information in a public forum (such as via a letter submitted during a comment period or comments made at a hearing) and to the extent such information must be revealed pursuant to federal or other applicable law.²³ If a federal agency determines that confidential information obtained from CRIT must be revealed, the agency shall inform CRIT prior to the release and make all reasonable attempts to limit its scope. Federal agencies shall acknowledge that confidential information is not limited to the location of sites eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places²⁴ or protected by the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act, but includes any information about sensitive resources, culture, or religious beliefs, obtained through consultation.

Resources. Federal agencies must recognize that government-to-government consultation consumes scarce tribal resources. Agencies should minimize costs to CRIT by conducting government-to-government consultation meetings in Parker, Arizona²⁵; providing clear and succinct information about proposed projects or actions and their potential impacts; and ensuring that agency staff document CRIT's interests and concerns. CRIT should not be required to repeatedly provide the same information to an agency because of agency staff turnover. Agencies should explore funding sources to remunerate the Tribes for participating in consultation.

Key Requirements

To aid in implementation of this policy, agency officials shall ensure their government-to-government consultation efforts comport with this summary of key requirements:

- Initiate consultation as early as practicable.
- Timely seek and review CRIT's written and oral comments.

²⁰ Executive Order 13175, § 1(a).

²¹ 36 C.F.R. § 800.4(c)(2)(ii).

²² See, e.g., BLM Manual Handbook B-8120-1 at II-5.

²³ See 36 C.F.R. §§ 800.4(a)(4), 800.11(c); see also BLM Manual 8120 at .06(G).

²⁴ 36 C.F.R. § 800.4(c)(2)(ii)(A); see also BLM Manual Handbook H-8120-1 at V-1.

²⁵ Improving Tribal Consultation, Key Principle 4.

- Provide comprehensive responses to Tribal concerns and requests in the same format as such concerns and requests were provided to the agency.
- Explain agency decisions based on legal, practical, and policy constraints on decision-making.
- Involve agency decision-makers with ultimate authority in in-person consultation meetings.
- Sufficiently prepare for in-person consultation meetings with Tribal Council to be able to respond to and address the Tribes' concerns.
- Do not claim that communication with CRIT staff, between CRIT and project applicants, or in the presence of multiple tribes is government-to-government consultation.
- Consult on any potential impacts of a proposed project or action on CRIT, its members, its land, or its cultural resources.
- Keep information obtained via government-to-government consultation confidential.
