

Federal Communications Commission

To Whom it May Concern:

Please do not end Net Neutrality. I am currently a college student studying Technology and Information Management, and if Net Neutrality ends, I may discontinue my involvement in this industry that I cherish. Internet Service Providers (ISPs) are critical to everything I do-- from coding to online classes to studying in general. If ISPs gain the right to decide what websites I can and cannot visit, I will have to disengage from the internet and I will urge all of my peers to do so as well. The internet is such a powerful tool, and limiting what we can and cannot do on it will only harm the data you gain and make it less valuable for research and the development of technology. I strongly urge you not to end Net Neutrality, as it is nearly in the First Amendment to allow us to do as we please online-- freedom of speech, freedom of religion (expression), and freedom of the press. Thank you for taking your time to read this letter and please call me if you want a better argument, I am an engineer so I am not very good with my words.

Sincerely,
Madison Fishtrom
