RE: Net Neutrality

Dear FCC:

A Net Neutral Internet has helped my life in many ways: Youtube content creators have led to an interest in a film career and how to improve upon my hobbies. Ebay and other shopping websites have allowed me to pursue my modelling hobby by purchasing parts cheaply from 3rd party sellers rather than having to purchase whole boxes of miniatures from the retailer, thus improving my creativity with my hobby and helping improve my outlook on life. Chatting services such as Skype and Discord have helped me reach out to a wider circle of friends beyond my immediate ones in real life, allowing a broader perspective and exchange in ideas. Websites such as DeviantART have allowed me to tap into a beautifully artistic and expressive culture online, improving my outlook on media and self-expression. These many influences have also helped me to get through some of the bleaker parts in my life and to look forwards to a better tomorrow.

Ending Net Neutrality would only hamper and impede all these sources of online self-expression and the sense of community, and would have further reaching effects than just affecting my life alone, but tens of thousands of people like me.

Sincerely

Ryan J. Magryta
