

I am very disappointed in how this matter has become an issue again. It seems petty and greedy for the neutrality of the internet to be endangered every time someone gets a new chance to do it. I'm sure that everyone involved relies on the internet in their work and their daily lives. The fact that the internet is open to everyone is vital to its value for commerce, for innovation, and for the open exchange of information. I ask you to keep service providers from being allowed to exploit their position in the market to selectively hinder download and/or upload speeds I ask you to make sure that everyone can use the same internet, at the same price, and at the same speed.
