

Chairman Pai is wrong; allowing ISPs to control access speeds on the internet will stifle competition and innovation. This is an obvious attempt to hand over control of the internet to corporate giants, like his former employer, for their own enrichment. Even the name "Restoring Internet Freedom" is a calculated deception. In order for free market forces to operate, there must be alternative choices available. I live in an area with only one ISP. I have no choice when it comes to broadband connectivity.

This is a travesty. I strongly oppose Chairman Pai's plan.
