

I'm calling on the FCC to stand up for net neutrality and safeguard Title II protections.

The FCC should reject Chairman Ajit Pai's proposal to give the ISP monopolies like AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast the authority to engage in data discrimination, stripping Internet users of the vital access and privacy rules we fought for and won just two years ago.

I'm concerned about ISPs being allowed to discriminate against certain types of data or websites because ISPs should not have the power to determine what I can do online.

Thankfully, the existing net neutrality rules ensure that ISP monopolies can't slow or block Internet users' ability to see certain websites or engage in data discrimination by charging online services and websites money to reach customers faster. That's exactly the right balance to ensure the Internet remains a level playing field that benefits small businesses and consumers as well as larger players. Chairman Pai's proposed repeal of the rules would help turn ISPs into gatekeepers with the ability to veto new innovation and expression. That's not the kind of Internet we want to pass on to future generations of technology users.

I urge you in the name of democratic values to keep the internet free.

Sincerely,

Eileen A Dyer
