RE: Net Neutrality

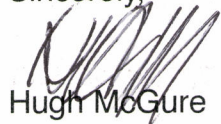

Dear Sir/Madam:

Concerning your decision regarding net neutrality, I hope I can implore you to keep the Internet free and equal for everybody. I realize that the conservative political right believes in radical individualism, but the Internet has become a vital source for education, research and investigation, as well as low cost efforts at entrepreneurial endeavors. If the Internet is seen solely a means for economic marketing and advertising, then all the people that use the Internet will abandon it to a large extent, and that would put the United States behind most of the rest of the world. In a time of globalization and intense international economic competition, the American people need every tool available to engage with that competition.

I hope you will allow the Internet to remain free and equal for everyone.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Hugh McGuire
