Re: In the Matter of Petition of USTelecom for Forbearance Pursuant to 47 U.S.C. Section 160(c); WC Docket No. 18-141; Category 1

Dear FCC,

Can you guys please stop the bad-suits from mucking up everything? Seriously. First the repeal of the Net Neutrality and now this -- this whole she-bang seems to be similar to how Nestle, one of the most morally corrupt companies in the world claim that water is a privilege as opposed to a basic human right. While I understand why 'clear water' takes effort and energy to produce, taking anything essential to ensure humanity continues to survive and progress stunts the betterment of our species.

Bad-suits are going to have to fight for a real long time to defend the encroaching feeling that network infrastructure is becoming more essential to human progress every day. If you need examples, you only need to look at how rapidly technology has progressed in the last 20 years, as opposed to the last 80 years prior. I'm a firm believer that the accessibility of network infrastructure has had a large hand in these progressions.

When the bad-suits make network infrastructure unreasonable to obtain through price gouging or general lack of incentive due to monopolization, not only do local communities suffer but so does the World Wide Web. Our business location previously was only connected via a microwave provider but through a provider that was forced to provide competitive services by local businesses, we now are connected with a reasonably priced fiber line that we had delivered to our business suite.

Please consider that the bad-suits are not looking out for the greater-good, and that they should not win this fight. It is entirely true that sometimes that are correct in what they say -- but this is not one of those times.

Thank you for your time.
