

i would like the fcc to review non-traditional forms of communications services such as apps that ride on top of other communications channels/networks/infrastructure (just as the internet, for example, rides on top of telephone and satellite infrastructure)

services, just to name a few, such as tinder, whatsapp, viber etc.. provide the public with a form of communication that fall under the purvey of the fcc and should also be beholden to some form of regulation to ensure fair service to the general public.

i further would like to make a specific complaint about tinder (Match Group, LLC) for limiting and cutting off communications of it's customers unfairly and unfairly retaining without option for release of communication between it's members.

i comment also that retaining and withholding these communications are a violation of the authors copyrights (although i acknowledge this particular aspect is not an issue for the fcc)
