Re: Accelerating Wireline Broadband Deployment by Removing Barriers to Infrastructure Investment Report and Order, Declaratory Ruling, and Further Notice of Proposed Rulemaking – WC Docket No. 17-84

Dear Ms. Dortch:

On Wednesday, November 8, 2017, Jonathan Spalter and I met with Commissioner Clyburn and her legal advisor Claude Aiken. We discussed the importance of this item to modernizing our broadband networks and further closing the digital divide. By removing unnecessary regulatory burdens to retiring outmoded copper networks, and streamlining other processes, the item will incent investment in upgraded broadband facilities and make possible further extensions of modern broadband networks to communities that currently lack access to those networks and the essential services that they deliver. We noted that a recent study prepared for Corning found that, conservatively, “copper retirement can result in savings of $45-50 per home passed per year.”¹ At the end of the year 2016, only about 16% of households subscribed to traditional POTS phone service provided over copper networks.² This puts the cost of maintaining the copper network for POTS service at over $300 per household taking the service, with that number climbing rapidly as households continue to move away from traditional voice service.
