

Community Access TV (CAT) is an important component of television programming. It is not right or fair to insist that people pay for cable to view community-related programming or stay informed about local events. CAT provides for educational programming that is far more appropriate for viewing than much of what is seen on paid cable TV. Non-profit organizations should have the ability to use CAT to inform the public about their community programs and the benefits they bring to the community.