

My name is Joey Burnett and I work as an architect in a small town outside of Asheville, NC. As a local small business, we survive on the level playing field the internet provides when people search for a local architect. Removing this playing field by revoking Title II oversight of ISPs will mean playing on whatever field the only ISP in our area deems most profitable and spells disaster for small businesses like my office.

Politicians love to tout that "small businesses are the backbone of the American economy" so I would love to see some decision-making that starts to think about us and not the multi-billion ISPs that have gone soft and inept from enjoying a competition-deprived environment for the last couple decades.

Please keep Title II oversight of these ISPs.
