To be frank any repeal of Net Neutrality would completely break the internet in its current form. The entire purpose of its existence is the free flow of information. To allow corporations to decide what information or content a person receives is patently ridiculous. It would, among other things, completely ruin the viability of most small businesses, thus making this policy an absolutely ridiculous move from an economic standpoint.

For this and many reasons, Net Neutrality must be preserved. To do otherwise is to, effectively, ruin it.
