

The decision by the FCC to repeal Net Neutrality is an affront to democracy and the principles this nation was built upon. To make such a decision that so obviously benefits corporate entities while simultaneously harming average citizens and users of the internet is obviously a hypocritical mistake that flies directly in the face of our country's commitment to democracy. The FCC, as a representative organization of the entire country, should be ashamed of itself for ignoring its responsibilities and pledges of allegiance to the people of this country. As a member of the overwhelmingly majority of citizens of this country who believe in keeping Net Neutrality, I hereby join the growing chorus of calls for the FCC to reverse its decision to repeal Net Neutrality.
