Dear FCC,

I strongly believe that the current Net Neutrality regulations need to remain in place.

There has been almost no technology more democratizing than the internet and the equal access to information is key to its power. If companies can warp that access according to create differing products that the democratizing power of the internet is much less potent.

Transparency is not enough. In an environment that is becoming more and more weighted in favor of the wealthy, with undue influence in our political system, it is extra critical to protect the equal and open web.

Please reconsider removing these regulations.

Willy
