

The current regulations they Internet providers are under are exactly as I feel they should be. They are friendly to small businesses and ensure that in today's society all people have access to the told to succeed and thrive. The only people that benefit from the relaxing if these regulations are large Internet providers who likely need to be broken up under anti-trust laws anyways. The small bendy they these companies would see pale in comparison to the loss of small business and startup revenue not to mention the immeasurable value of the Internet as an equalizing tool and a forum for the freedom of speech we Americans hold one of our most precious rights. In short, don't cut the freedoms of the people for the small profits of a few oversized companies.
