

The FCC is an organization dedicated to defending the rights of the American citizen, and Commissioner Pai's vote to dismantle the protections defending our digital right stands directly in opposition to the people his office was designed to serve. By handing the final rights of the people over to the regional monopolies that control the Internet, Commissioner Pai will have desecrated the very office he occupies, destroyed the economic heart of the nation, and given the power to control and censor speech to corporate bodies with little to no oversight. Enforcing the well-reasoned principles of Network Neutrality as a Title II Common Carrier is the only way to ensure the Internet remains viable as an avenue for free expression and economic liberty. Without these rules, the voices of the under-represented, the futures of the less-fortunate, and the sole-source of life blood for enumerable small businesses will be sucked dry and demolished.
