

I am writing, again, in support strong Net Neutrality backed by title 2 oversight of ISPs, as it currently exists.

In the information age ANY potential reduction or restriction to information via an ubiquitous communication medium is tantamount to a violation of the First Amendment. No one should be granted the ability to assert any degree of control over who can access information over shared resources.

The Internet does not exist because of corporate investment, corporations chose to invest in a shared resource because they saw an opportunity to profit. Profits are wonderful, but should not come at the cost of censorship.
