

I wholly support Title II net neutrality rules and if they are repealed then not only is the FCC failing the public, they are flagrantly ignoring the citizen's demands for a free and open internet. The current marketplace is not only a monopoly in its current form, but repealing these rules will make it a lop-sided in favor of "Big Corporations". Currently I am supposed to be receiving 200 Mb/s down and 100 up. At current testing I receive 25-50 Mb/s down, on average. I ask you, how much worse will it be if I now have to pay even more to get equal speed when it should be much higher? This is not what Americans are paying for, and gutting net neutrality rules will only worsen everything else. This is a matter of our right to freedom of speech even, so I ask you: how far are you willing to disregard the constitution and our rights in order to fill your pockets with money? And how much longer do you expect to keep your jobs?
