

To Whom it May Concern,

I am a registered Republican and Conservative writing today to urge the FCC to keep the internet free by keeping Net Neutrality in place. There are few sacred cows in politics that have this sort of bipartisan support, and few issues will cause more severe and long-term harm to the Republican Party than repealing Net Neutrality. The close association between the Chairman of the FCC and Verizon, a player in the market who stands to greatly benefit from this repeal, does not create confidence in the neutrality of the Chairman in this matter, nor does it create confidence that the matter is being undertaken with the protection of consumers in mind. There are few companies I trust as little as my internet service provider, and I believe this is one of the few areas that truly merit Government intervention. Please consider keeping Net Neutrality in place for the good of the Party, but more than that for the good of the Country.

Very Best,

Cayman Clevenger