Federal Communications Commission

Washington, D.C.

22 November 2017

Hello,

I am a native-born citizen of the United States, and I strongly support Net Neutrality regulations currently established. I have defended my position for over a year, to my government representatives, the FCC, and journalists at major media organizations. It is my opinion that the current regulations prevent Internet Service Providers (ISP) from providing preferred service to their customers accessing specific websites. Without net neutrality regulations, my ISP Comcast could throttle my bandwidth to websites that do not generate revenue for their NBC Universal media conglomerate. Chairman Ajit Pai's plan to eliminate net neutrality could allow Comcast to slow my connection to my friend's small internet media based company in California, or prevent other people from accessing the music and video content I have been creating for years.

These regulations will allow the current open internet to become a closed portal for media products that my ISP would like to sell to customers. Removing net neutrality would not be better for technological development, as the current FCC regulations have not been proven to have any negative effect on the economic or developmental well-being of ISP firms.

Net neutrality is what keeps the power of the internet technology in the hands of Americans, and balances the massively powerful interests of billion dollar companies like Comcast and Verizon. It is my request to the Federal Communications Commission to uphold Net Neutrality, and keep my internet access options out of the hands of internet service providers.

Thank You,

Jonathan M. Cabot
