

To whom it may concern:

Please uphold Net Neutrality. One of the great aspects of the Internet to date has been the ability of individuals to exercise free access and free speech within its boundaries.

Regardless of commercial pressure to package and control it, or for governments to see it as a taxable resource, I believe instead that it belongs as part of the “Commons”, and as such, Access should be neither regulated, nor taxed.

Very Sincerely Submitted,

William David Field