

I am writing to express my unequivocal support, as net neutrality and for the strong oversight of ISPs provided by the Communications Act. Preserving an open internet is essential for equal access to information, and the overall health of our economy. Doing away with net neutrality will allow large corporations and websites and groups have access to the Internet, and they can alter and dictate the flow of information to users. This is the possibility of the further marginalization of various groups, including those of color. It would also allow for large corporations like Comcast, and Verizon to unfairly crush their smaller competitors. These things are at odds with the values of free speech and the free flow of information that U.S. citizens consider to be fundamental to our democracy. I am dismayed that the FCC is even considering repealing net neutrality, and I cannot more strongly urge the FCC to maintain its position on this critical issue.
