In your deliberations on proceeding 17-108, I request that you reject any modification to current Internet policy that would provide selected providers of information with preferential access over others.

The rise of the Internet itself to dominance in furnishing most U.S. citizens with the information they have about current events, domestic policies, and even the availability of goods and services makes it more urgent that the movement of such information be interfered with as little as possible. Impeding it could have disastrous effects on small businesses, local political campaigns, and other areas of discourse that are generally considered part of the healthy function of the nation.

Thank you for your time and consideration in this matter.

Regards,

Brian McCullough
