

Hello FCC,

Allowing companies to control access to sites via repeal of Net Neutrality, thereby allowing companies to provide different (even arbitrary) bandwidth to different websites based upon how much has been paid or other criteria is essentially a means of restricting free speech and is unconstitutional.

If one company interfered with the broadcast signal of another company, the company doing the interfering would be forced to cease the behavior by the FCC.

Net Neutrality needs to remain in place to protect consumer rights.

My Regards,

Ken Richardson
413 Labrador Trail
Mullica Hill, NJ 08062