

Dear FCC,

It is of vital importance to me that the internet remain as accessible for as many different types of people looking for as many different types of content as possible.

I urge you not to repeal the net neutrality laws passed in 2015, I feel they are a step in the right direction for the freedom of our internet in the U.S.A. Let's think about this carefully: if we value free speech, and the inherent worth of every idea expressed by the people of this country, then we must also value equitable access to every type of content on the internet.

I believe the internet actually needs to be classified as a public utility, in the way that electricity, water, and phone lines are, because the internet has become that important to all of our lives. Economically and socially, equal access to the internet is critical for humans to prosper and survive in today's world.

If we lose Net Neutrality, it's possible that ISP's could slow down or block content that they disagree with politically; this cannot be allowed to happen. Dissenting political opinions are not a weakness or something to be corrected about the U.S.A., our right to express whatever opinion we have is our country's greatest strength.

I am not worried about over-regulation of the internet. Because it is vital to my life and the lives of hundreds of millions of other Americans, I am worried about under-regulation. Do not repeal net neutrality laws.

Thank you,
Tony Domenick
