

Whose interests are best served by eliminating net neutrality? Those of the rank and file citizenry or those of large corporations? “We the people,” via the Telecommunications Act of 1934, determined that telephone service was a public “good” that should be available to all, equally, without interference from any one gatekeeping company or companies.

Is our mode of thinking so antiquated or morally compromised, to not see how “net neutrality” in the 21st century is just like the old fashioned “AT&T Telephone”? Keep the playing field level for everyone FCC!! Keep the internet neutral, open, and equal.
