

To remove net neutrality rules will allow a few corporations to exploit the internet for personal gain and stifle out small business and competition in an utterly un-American and anti- jobs way. The internet was created through tax payer money the same as highways, national parks, and numerous advancements of the human race in the last 100 plus years. Corporations did NOT create the internet; the people did and we deserve unrestricted access to the single most powerful technology ever created by the hand of man. Nobody wants these rules removed except those who wish to do the most harm. Voters are vehemently against allowing providers (who overall already enjoy a quite sullied reputation) to determine what we see and at what speed. Moving blatantly against the wishes of the electorate will end the careers of everyone who votes for it and cost an unacceptable amount of resources to be poured into the already overburdened court system. Every single American relies on the internet in one way or another and will be immediately impacted by any change to an already accepted and reasonable set of rules. Leave net neutrality alone, or the people will never forget- every day as they wait for their favorite website to load they will be reminded who and what party pushed for this destruction of our most powerful and influential platform. I implore the FCC to Look beyond today and understand the gravity of what's at stake.
