

Federal Communications Commission

Proceeding: 17-108

Date of Complaint: 11/30/2017

Removing the regulations that have protected a dynamic sector of our economy and ensured competition and choice to internet customers is a terrible idea. The proposed “internet freedom” actions enshrine the rights of conglomerates to stamp out competition and consumer choice, and must be shut down.

I strongly object to an internet service provider being able to:

- Throttle internet speed based on source.
- “Tier” offerings based on destination, e.g., “if you want to go to site Y, you must buy this type of access.”

I strongly protest the anti-competitive and anti-consumer removal of net-neutrality. Calling such actions “internet freedom” is Orwellian, at best.

With protest,

Bruce J. Butler
