

Dear FCC,

Please do not roll back on Net Neutrality regulations. This is a blatant attack on equality of information. Rolling back on regulations of Net Neutrality such as Title II of the Communications Act and Telecommunications Act would create a disparity of public access to information based on who pays the most for broadband. Ajit Pai does not seem to be able to address the fact that without these regulations, internet service providers not only could, but would tamper with broadband speed based on self interest and whatever entity pays them the most, not the interest of the consumer. As a previous Verizon lawyer, he knows well that internet service providers have to be classified under Title II to prevent the tampering of the equality of information. He claims that this will not be the case, but companies such as Comcast have already been caught in the act of doing just that to their competition, such as Google Wallet. So please, if you're listening to anyone in the general public who cares about the internet, do not repeal our Net Neutrality regulations, especially considering the fact that companies like Comcast, Verizon, and Spectrum have nearly a monopoly on the market.
