

I stand against the FCC's plan to repeal "Title Two" net neutrality rules. There is a reason we refer to the internet as the "information highway," and attempting to control that information and communication is the first step to totalitarianism. We support the existing laws surrounding net neutrality, and we the people demand the FCC Chairman abandon his plan to gut them. The rising generations have already decided there are plenty of things that we do not need, as the "Millenials Are Killing" headlines love to inform us. Any action taken to hinder our access to information, communication, and the internet as a whole will only serve to remind us that we do not need the corporations that would restrict us.

Benjamin A. LaRiviere
Los Angeles, CA
2 December 2017