

One of the things that causes me to feel hopeful about our shared future is widespread access to free information. The internet gives this to us. We have the ability to share ideas across vast distances. Today, I watched thousands of Israeli and Palestinian women march for peace, together. From my home in Iowa. Because of that short video, I can go to bed tonight feeling less alone. I know that there are other mothers who want peace for their children. We cannot let access to information be contingent upon who can pay for it. We cannot let access to information be controlled by corporations.
