

I strongly support net neutrality and demand the FCC take steps to support the regulations currently in place. Former commercial interests of some of the FCC board members need to be set aside and ignored. These people no longer represent those commercial interests but rather the interests of the public at large.

Also the FCC needs to fully investigate the apparent commercial and Russian interference in the critical issue. The FCC needs to cooperate with existing judicial investigations. We don't need another bogus election, no matter the issue.

Additionally, the FCC's comment system is horrid. Attempting to comment on a phone is fraught with problems, such as the name not being retained and as a result unable to comment. The desktop version is little better, as no text can be directly entered and people must first detail their thoughts in a separate file for attachment.

Use the federal regulations.gov site. It has its quirks but it is head and shoulders above this troublesome site the FCC uses.

Again, I fully support net neutrality and strongly object to the wrongheadedness of the FCC chairman who apparently seeks to advance commercial interests.
