

To Whom it May Concern:

I stand utterly against your effort to revoke Net Neutrality regulations.

As an industry professional and a small business owner, the notion that an ISP could charge me more for access to the internet is unacceptable.

As a consumer, that notion is despicable.

That you are willing to ignore credible accounts of bots posting in support of your intentions is utterly unimaginable.

The only parties who benefit from this are the ISPs (like your former employer, Mr. Pai), who will be free to charge whatever they want, who will absolutely use the market to declare winners and losers. We already have a totally non-competitive internet access environment (one cable provider, one DSL provider) in any given market.

Now you want to give them the power to charge us more to decide winners and losers to the sole benefit of their bottom line. Have you lost your minds?

Let users decide. Maintain Net Neutrality regulations as written.
