

Please do not do away with net neutrality. As an entrepreneur and independent contractor my web presence is a crucial component of your success. Allowing ISPs to charge for faster web speed and access would limit my ability to reach my audience. I'm an educator as well and there's no room in budgets today for institutions to pay more for the premium web services our students. The current, egalitarian model also allows an even playing field for the next generation of internet innovators, those like my students who will drive the future economy. Please consider the long game. Limiting speed and access limits innovation and commerce, and puts us at a disadvantage for the future. In this case regulation breeds confidence in the continuing vitality of American invention and development.
