

I whole-heartedly support the Obama-era "net neutrality" regulation. I was born in Wichita, Kansas on April 16, 1996. I am an American Citizen. The "net neutrality" regulations must stay in place to prevent the collapse of an already weakened democratic system currently in place in this country. The "net neutrality" regulations must stay in place to prevent the demise of small businesses. There is a very small collection of Internet service providers in this country; each one, a large corporation. By de-regulating the Internet, you will give the few Internet service providers complete control of an economic landscape. The Internet is an economic landscape. It is a medium for innovation and commerce, and it should remain outside the whims of the ISP to charge unfair fees. With that aside, the majority of the American People want "net neutrality" to stay as it is. As an independent government entity that is funded by the American People, the FCC must reflect the will of the American People. That is how democracy works. The polls are clear. The FCC must represent the American People.

-Mark Ortleb
Applied Mathematics Major