

After reviewing all of the evidence that has come against the FCC with allegations of falsified comments that were “supporting” their heinous ideas and then choosing to do absolutely nothing about it, just goes to show how far Comcast’s and Verizon’s reach are. How much money do they pay you guys (or are willing to pay) to keep the wrongdoings quiet? How much is enough? Whichever way the vote goes on December 14th, just know that the American public will never have faith in the FCC ever again.

The American public deserves internet freedom and should not have to pay for fast or slow lanes. The FOUNDERS of the internet have stated that they are against Pai’s proposal. I think they know more about how the internet works than anyone else and not a single one agrees with the proposal. Think about that and think about which side of history you guys are on.
