

Dear Sir or Madam,

Public Access TV is important and valuable to me, my town, and to communities across the US. It has been a means of self-expression and community dialogue for so many people. For people living in cities it is often a vital means of getting to know about things happening in your community and others nearby, and for some of us it has been a way to feel less lonely and more a part of the cities we live in. It's a vital cultural resource that needs to be protected. I urge the FCC not to adopt rulemaking FNPRM 05-311.

Yours Sincerely,

Alex Waterman
