

I, Drake Drinnon, am in full support of Title II.

Myself and many others have come to rely on the free and open Internet that net neutrality provides to not only do work, but also to stay in contact with family and friends all across the globe. Despite this, Ajit Pai and two other members of the FCC have voted against the will of the people, attempting to remove net neutrality.

If the Internet as we have come to know it goes away, then you should expect not only for our economy to suffer, but also our 1st Amendment rights to be even further impinged upon. The Dec. 14 vote does anything but “restore freedom.” It would allow telecom companies to segment the Internet into fast lanes and slow lanes, the former reserved for only the companies with the deepest pockets.

I suggest that any and all members of Congress applicable should work together to utilize the Congressional Review Act (CRA) and pass a "resolution of disapproval" undoing the December 14th "Restoring Internet Freedom" vote against Title II net neutrality.
