FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION
OFFICE OF SECRETARY

Please consider the following my official input into the debate on what to do about who gets the new tv stations.

The current pattern of ownership of the media in this country is overwhelmingly dominated by corporate interests. If the FCC is truly considering the appropriation of new TV stations, then it is only fair to set aside enough of them for those who can best serve the public (not private) interests. Providing TV voice to currently marginalized but legitimate voices of our increasingly heterogeneous society would provide much needed Executive leadership in a time when the Feds are growing more and more unpopular due in part to their complicity in maintaining information control through corporate monopoly tactics applied to the news media in particular, and the media in general.
