Mr. Hundt,

The ability to access the internet has been invaluable for me. I started several years ago and had access through a university where I was adjunct instructor. Now, the community college that I teach at in Chicago, only has web access and we have not been "wired" yet for personal e-mail capabilities. Since the intellectual discussions, support, and contact was so vital to me, I use a commercial server. Everyday there are postings from people I would have never been able to learn from except that we can access on the internet. Even at national conferences one cannot duplicate the opportunity for in-depth, thoughtful discussion that the "electronic superhighway" provides. Please provide funding so that ALL institutions can access this powerful medium.

Dear Chairman Hundt,

The volume of valuable information available via telecommunications is constantly growing. Schools need access to this information to enhance educational delivery, develop class projects, and to stay abreast of current events. Schools and libraries need affordable universal access at discounted rates.

Thank you for your consideration.

Regards,

Barbara Wilson

Dear Chairman Hundt,

I am the managing editor for the National Network for Child Care newsletters(an educational and support tool for day care providers.) This letter is to encourage you to make sure that schools, libraries, and child care centers are able to obtain universal connectivity at discounted rates.

With more children than ever in day care, it is urgent that providers receive the education and support they need to make the day care they offer a quality experience. The internet presently provides a significant amount resources in the areas of support, discussion lists, research articles and provider organizations. Our newsletters are also on line along with other extension resources provided by our many extension specialists. Our site is the National Network for Child Care. How better to distribute timely and updated information and to provide a lot of education quickly than through an electronic media that reaches all corners or the globe (isolated or not)with a minimum amount of work for those providing this training and support?

I hope you will see the benefit of and the need for this universal connectivity and vote accordingly.

Thank you.
