Subject: against Internet phone connectivity charges

It was communicated to me recently that major phone companies are currently petitioning the FCC for a charge to be placed on individuals connecting to the Internet, in addition to any charges incurred by their Internet Service Provider. I am writing to voice my support for any measures taken AGAINST the adoption of this proposal, for I do not feel that connecting to the Internet is substantially different from calling any other person or service, and the Internet Service Providers charge sufficiently for the service provided in allowing the consumer to connect to the Internet.

thank you for taking my views into account,
Anthony R. Thompson
